The provincial council resolves to offer at public sale, on the public account, 40 negroes, young and old, male and female, recently received from Curaçao, payment to be made for them in beavers or in beef, pork, wheat, or peas.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 228.

The burgomasters and schepens ask Pieter Tonnenman, the city schout, if he has received the fines from the bakers of the city, and he answers that he has. They thereupon decide "to divide" the same among "the justice [court] of the City, the Poor and the Church."—Rec. N. Am., III: 354.

Stuyvesant and the council by ordinance direct the inhabitants of certain towns or villages, among them those of Harlem, within three months, or at the latest by Jan. 1, 1662, to have all lands claimed by them, whether cultivated or uncultivated, surveyed by the sworn surveyor, "and set off or designated by survey marks, and on the exhibition of the Return of survey thereof, apply for and obtain a regular Patent as proof of property, on pain of being deprived of their right," and so that remaining land may be given to others.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 409.

The burgomasters inform Pieter Tonnenman, the city schout, that after the adjournment of their session they intend "to go with him and inspect the streets, whether anything lies there to prevent driving," and, if they find the owner, Tonnenman is to order him "to take it away or in case of refusal to do it at [the] owner's expense."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 106.

Pieter Tonnenman, the city schout, is directed by the burgomasters "to see that the privies emptying on the streets be removed, as it has been forbidden by Placaat that privies should empty on the street."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 106.

Hendrick Willemsen, baker, having been interrogated by the burgomasters as to the quality of bread baked in the city, about which complaints have reached them, says the main fault lies with the bakers, who allow their apprentices "to attend to the rising of the bread, who do not kneed it sufficiently, which makes the bread bake badly."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 106; Rec. N. Am., III:

22 Stuyvesant had been shown letters received "from London and Boston" by Capt. Thomas Willett, which revealed "designs upon the Province of New Netherland," and Willett had reported that not only was a rupture imminent between the mother countries,
"but also the King [Charles II], the Duke of York and Parliament" were "urgently asked for three or four frigates to take this capital [New Amsterdam] and whatever else belongs to the Company here," and that Charles II was urged "to grant this demand, by telling him, that the W. I. Company" claimed and held New Netherland "by unlawful title, because in 1623 King James had granted to the Company only a watering place on Staten Island and nothing more."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 506.
This alarm induces Stuyvesant and his council to draw up proposals for fortifying the city of New Amsterdam and for strengthening its fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 229. See also Oct. 13.

" Councillor Johan de Decker, in the provincial council, moves that the burgomasters of New Amsterdam be required to show cause why they assume the right to issue attachments without the consent of the superior authority.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 229.

Oct. 7 Jan Gillisen Koeck, upon his petition of Sept. 25, is given the office of gauger and brander for one year, subject to a renewal at his request, and his instructions are ordered to conform to those given to the former gauger, on Dec. 20, 1658.—*Min. of Orph.
Court*, II: 107, 109.

Pieter Schaaftbanck, the jailer at the city hall, is informed by the burgomasters that the city has great expenses, and is asked if he will consent to continue as jailer without a salary, "receiving only quarters and fuel" if he remains. He agrees to think it over.—*Min.
of Orph. Court*, II: 109. He took his time about it, and, meanwhile, on Nov. 11, was ordered "to take better care of the City Hall."—Ibid., II: 118. As he had not come to a decision by Jan. 12, 1662, the burgomasters put the question to him definitely, and he replied it was not possible "that he should receive no pay," so they allowed him a yearly salary of 50 florins.—Ibid., II: 123.

" Joost Guderus and Barent Jacobsen Cool, two of the porters at the weigh-house of New Amsterdam, report to the burgomasters that, as they have been "ordered to go and work on board ships" in the harbour, they are forced to neglect the work required by the burghers. They protest that they are not bound to work on the ships, but are informed, summarily, that if they will not do that work neither will they be allowed any longer to "work at the Company's Warehouse." Furthermore, they are advised "to hire others for the Burghers' service," whenever they are absent on the ships.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 109.

" The presiding burgomaster reports that, notwithstanding orders given to the contrary on July 8, the members of the rattle-watch are calling out at four in the morning "Rise up from bed etc.," but fail to call the hour at midnight. Their captain, Lodowick Pos, is ordered, therefore, to tell his men that they must abide by the former orders and rules, "to call the hours at all the corners prescribed and not to stop before reveille." For disobedience they are subject to a fine of a month's pay for each offense, "and besides arbitrary correction." Pos himself is threatened with the loss of his office if he fails to pay strict attention to his men.

These threatened penalties did not, however, lead to results;
so, on the 14th of this month, the burgomasters asked Pos again why his men were "still calling before day break" to the people to rise. The answer shows that the men feared ridicule by the people if they called "in the day time," because when reveille was beaten it was in fact day. The watchmen being summoned before the burgomasters finally promised to obey the rules in the matter, and Pos was ordered to inspect his men during the night, "without regard to hour."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 109-11.

11 As certain persons forestall the general interest of the city by securing what the Indians bring to sell, "such as venison, maize and fish," the burgomasters and schepens decide to enforce the provincial ordinance of July 21, 1660 (Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 383), against runners in the woods, and to provide that no Indian shall "bring any articles to any places except such as" shall be "ordered and appointed therefor."—Rec. N. Am., III: 379.

The provincial council, on the 13th, by an order authorized the burgomasters to adopt measures for preventing a monopoly (*Cal.
Hist. MSS.*, Dutch, 230), and, on the 21st, each burgomaster was asked to give his advice for putting an end to the "covetous engrossers" who intercept the Indians on their way "to market," and who sell "at enhanced prices to the poor people." The subject was fully discussed by the burgomasters, who decided "that two trading houses should be established for this purpose and the savages be charged to sell their goods at no other places, than these." It was "also ordered, that the planks lying before the house of Mr. Hans [Kierstede,—at Pearl and Whitehall Sts.] shall be removed, to erect there one trading house for the Indians."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 112-13.

The next step taken, so far as known from the records, was an interrogation of Adolph Pietersen by the burgomasters, on March 24, 1662, as to whether he could work eight or ten days for the city, in "putting up a little house, for the Indians to offer their wares." He replied that he was busy, but returned, presently, and said he would undertake the job, if the burgomasters could "wait a few days." They agreed.—Ibid., II: 133.

The presiding burgomaster of New Amsterdam proposes for the consideration of the city court "whether some means ought not to be taken to bring silver money here into circulation among the public and to keep seawant [wampum] only as an article of trade, and that the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General asks the advice of each one hereupon." The question being put and debated, it is "unanimously decided first to write to Fatherland and demand a mint, having that, to cry down the seawant and to fix the beaver at six guilders and the tobacco @ four and a half stivers per lb. and that the Lords Majores [directors at Amsterdam] should please to furnish some silver and silver coin for that purpose."—Rec. N. Am., III: 383. See Oct. 6, 1660.

On Oct. 4, the presiding burgomaster stated to the city court
"that the yachts or sloops trading up and down" the Hudson were "indebted for wharfage, for loading and unloading at the wharf," which, although quite as much bound to pay as the ships, they had not paid. He asked the court if it was not advisable to request from Stuyvesant and the council an order requiring "the yachts, in place of paying the wharfage," to "make each of them one or two voyages to Tappan and bring from there, for this City, their yachts full of stone in order to surround this City with a wall in course of time."—Rec. N. Am., III: 377. The burgomasters now ask the provincial council that yachts or sloops owned in the province be obliged to bring two or three cargoes of stone yearly to the city for the redoubts proposed to be constructed, in lieu of paying their wharfage; and the council empowers them, on the same day, to make an agreement with the captains of such sailing craft either to bring stone or pay the wharfage fee.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 230.

An order of the provincial council, on Oct. 13, empowered the burgomasters to make regulations for the assize of the bread baked in the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 230. At the same time, Stuyvesant and the council had confirmed the nomination, made by the burgomasters, of Hendrick Willemsen and Cristoffel Hooghaent as inspectors or "oversersers of the bread." They now accept these posts. Their business is to see that the bread is made of good materials, has the proper weight, and is well baked, and "to perform their duties for the welfare of the community and the inhabitants."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 113.

At the same time Schout Pieter Tonnenman seizes a loaf of coarse bread from Reynier Willemsen, a baker, and requests these newly-appointed "oversersers to express their opinion" about it.
They examine it and declare that it contains "honest material," but has not been worked properly or allowed to ferment enough; that it was baked badly and made by someone who either did not know how to bake or, knowing, had been in a hurry. Reynier Willemssen comes before the burgomasters and is shown the bread by the schout. The burgomasters ask for an explanation, and he replies that "he was out and had put the boys to work, meanwhile;
also that the people did not give him peace, constantly trying to pull the bread out of the oven, even when he said it was not done yet and must remain in the oven for another hour;" also that "the wheat was from Gravesend, which is not as good as the grain from elsewhere." He is released, "this time," with a warning "to bake good and fit bread" for the public.

On the same afternoon, the overseer, Hendrick Willemsen, who is also a baker in the city, comes again before the burgomasters

- 1661 and informs them "that the bakers cannot go on with their business, if they are to continue baking only for their wages," because they lose too much time "taking the grain to and from the mill." Oct. 21 He also reports that he has reproved Reynier Willemssen for having blamed "his boys," a thing "which would not be done in Holland."
- The city court forthwith establishes a new bread assize, and prohibits the baking of cakes (Koekjes), cracknels, or sweet cakes. The ordinance is at once "read out from the front [steps—see Jan. 12]" of the city hall, "after the usual ringing of the bell."—Ibid., II: 113-15; Rec. N. Am., I: 47-48; III: 378, 381-91.
- On Nov. 4, the burgomasters charged the schout "to direct all bakers . . . not to bake anything else, but coarse and white bread and always to keep coarse bread publicly for sale in the shops."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 116. The conditions were unfavourable to the bakers; so, on Nov. 18, they petitioned the burgomasters for "a raise of the price of white, wheat, and rye bread, and permission to bake little cakes, sweet cakes and cracknels once or twice a week." They were granted the cake privilege on condition of their keeping in their shops coarse bread "for public sale at the prescribed price and not dearer."—Ibid., II: 119. See also March 25 and Sept. 16 of this year; and Jan. 9, 1763.
- 22 An interesting anti-garnish ordinance is passed to protect the servants of the West India Co. from "some self-interested persons" who get assignments, "on the Company's books of account," against the servants for debts contracted for "trifles," and for which they charge "over 50  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent more than people could purchase them for Beaver."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 410-11.
- " On June 11 of this year, the deacons of the church at New Amsterdam petitioned the provincial council that each of their adjacent villages be obliged to make weekly contributions for their own poor.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226. They were led to make this demand because of "the many applications and great trouble" which they experienced daily "from persons residing in the outlying villages with whose characters and wants" they were wholly unacquainted, causing a depletion in their treasury to the disadvantage of the poor and needy of New Amsterdam. Stuyvesant and the council now (Oct. 22) pass the first poor law applicable to the province, in order, as they say, "that the Lazy and the Vagabond" may "as much as possible be rebuked, and the really Poor [be] the more assisted, and cared for." The deacons of New Amsterdam are not to give assistance to any persons not residents of the city, unless they bring a certificate showing "their character and poverty." Collections are ordered to be taken "in all Villages and Settlements" and to be "laid up for the Poor and Needy." This is to be done in every place, whether there is preaching there or not. In those places that have no preaching service, the magistrates thereof are required to "nominate and qualify two proper persons" to "go around every Sunday with a little bag among the congregation and collect the Alms for the support of the Poor of that place;" but, if they fall short in their needs, they may apply to the deacons of New Amsterdam in the manner specifically prescribed for such cases.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 411-12. That this ordinance did not solve the difficulty is evident from subsequent conditions, for which see Dec. 28.
- 27 At about this time a second school for the teaching of common branches and the catechism was opened "on the bouwery of the Director-General," under the charge of Harmanus van Hoboken (see Jan. 16, 1660), who had been replaced by Evert Pietersen in the older school, situated near the fort (see Feb. 2, 1662). Van Hoboken, unsuccessful, apparently, as a schoolmaster in the older school, had solicited employment "in one or other manner in the Company's service," and was made adelborst (signifying a sergeant or something above a common soldier), with an allowance of less than half what he had been receiving. To the order providing such employment is appended: "Nota: Whereas the aforesaid Harman is a person of irreproachable life and conduct, so shall he be employed on the bouwery of the Director General as schoolmaster and clerk, with this condition, that the Director General, whenever his service might be wanted for the Company as adelborst, shall replace him by another expert person."—N. Y. Col. MSS., IX: 869 (Albany); Eccles. Rec., I: 522; Pratt, Annals, op. cit., 17. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 66-67, 136. For a list of the "Elementary Schoolmasters in New Amsterdam," ending with Pietersen, see Kilpatrick, 70. The site of this bouwery school, which was intended for Stuyvesant's tenants and his negroes,
- was near the present corner of Sixth St. and Hall Place. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941.
- Jan Gillen Koeck is sworn in by the burgomasters as measurer or gauger of cans, ells, and weights in New Amsterdam, and is given particular instructions for the conduct of his office.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 116-17.
- Jacobus Gabry, in a Latin letter written from Holland to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, says that "the new teacher [Aegidius Luyc] of the children of the Director General" is about to sail and will be the bearer of this and other letters. He describes Luyc as "a youth, but very modest, a good reader, and well versed in languages." He predicts that he will become "teacher of the Latin school" at New Amsterdam, in the place of Dr. Curtius.—Abstract from the original Latin letter in Winthrop Papers, XIII: 79 (MSS. in Mass. Hist. Soc.). Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 105, 137.
- The burgomasters adopt "the following instructions for Master Evert Pietersen [see Aug. 1], the schoolmaster, to regulate himself thereby." These instructions and rules they have drawn up with the advice of Stuyvesant and the council.
- 1—He shall take good care that the children arrive at the regular hours of 8 A. M. and 1 P. M.
  - 2—Keep good discipline among his pupils.
  - 3—Teach the children and pupils "the Christian prayers, commandments, baptism, Lord's supper, and the questions with answers of the catechism, which are taught here every Sunday afternoon in the church."
  - 4—Before closing school "let the pupils sing some verses and a psalm."
  - 5—He shall receive, "besides his yearly salary," "from every pupil quarterly," as follows: Thirty stuivers for each child taught the alphabet, spelling and reading; fifty stuivers for instruction in reading and writing; sixty stuivers for teaching to read, write and cipher, and from those who came "in the evening and between times pro rata a fair sum; but "the poor and needy," who asked "to be taught for God's sake," he shall "teach for nothing."
  - 6—He is allowed "to demand and receive from every body" who makes "arrangements to come to his school before the first half of the quarter preceding the 1st of December next the school dues for the quarter, but nothing from those" who come "after the first half of the quarter."
  - 7—He is "not to take more from anybody" than herein specified.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 115-16. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 67-68.
- Conditions for the sale of a lot of negroes in New Amsterdam are issued by the provincial council, and, on the same day, the burgomasters ask the council for four able-bodied negroes as a gift for the use of the city. On Dec. 8, the council voted to give three of them to the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231.
- The burgomasters fix upon new wharfare rates, to be paid by the merchants of New Amsterdam for unloading and loading their goods.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 118.
- The city of New Amsterdam was at this time building a ship, called in the records "the City's ship" or "the City's barge." The burgomasters are now informed that the shipwrights are drawing "more than 1100 fl. in wampum from the Treasury for wages, at the rate of 16 fl. in beavers."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 118. From a record of a year later (Nov. 3, 1662), it is known that Jan Ariaanssen was one of the shipwrights who at that time asked the burgomasters for his pay "for making the City's barge."—Ibid., II: 163. On Aug. 25, 1662, Pieter Jansen from Langestraat engaged with the burgomasters to enter "the service of the City" and "to sail as skipper of the City's ship for the salary of 450 fl. in wampum and 50 fl. in beavers, including rations."—Ibid., II: 159. He made another contract, on March 9, 1663, "to sail as skipper of the City's ship, doing also all work, as discharging and taking in freight," at a monthly salary of "40 fl. in wampum and one beaver or the value thereof." A few days later (March 18), Gerrit Pietersen was engaged by the city to sail with Jansen, at a monthly salary of 50 florins.—Ibid., II: 170-71. A year later (March 17, 1664), Jansen entered into another contract as skipper for the city, this time for a salary of 800 florins, "and besides for each voyage," when he discharged at New Amsterdam "a full freight of the vessel, 4 fl. also in wampum." Andries Andriessen was engaged at the same time to work on the ship at a per diem salary.—Ibid., II: 194. (Langestraat was in Brabant.)

1661 The pillory of New Amsterdam is mentioned in a court sen-Nv.11 tence of this date.—Rec. N. Am., III: 410.

18 Reynier Rycker appears before the burgomasters and exhibits
 "a bill of Jacob Backer against the City for 237 fl. 18 st. for planks and nails delivered in 1655."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 118-19.
 These materials were used on the public works in that year.

Dec. A survey of the city of New Amsterdam by Jacques Cortelou (ordered on June 7, 1660, q. v.) having been finished (see Oct. 6, 1660), the data are now handed over to a draughtsman to make the finished plan. See the particulars under March 10, 1662. This was evidently a more elaborate drawing than the one made in the summer of 1660—the Castello Plan (q. v.).

2 Stuyvesant having decided "that the Farmer of the slaughter excise" should "not take more for excise than 1½ stivers of the florin," in such kind of pay as had been given for the animal, this is reported at a meeting of the burgomasters, who now send the farmer an order, in which they say that "many Burghers and inhabitants" of the city have complained that he has exacted
 "one stiver heavy money of the florin, without regard to the animals," whether "bought for wampum or beavers or wares, valuing them at his own pleasure." They order him not to "demand and take more than 1½ st. [i. e., per guildler, or 7½ p. ct.] for the animals reported to him, in such pay as the reported animal" has been "bought for."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 119-20. The farming of the revenue on slaughtered animals was confirmed by the provincial council, on Dec. 22.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231.
 Notwithstanding, on Jan. 17 following, Paulus vander Beek, the farmer, was ordered anew "not to rate the beaver higher or to take from anybody more, than the said conditions allow, figuring the beaver at 12 fl. in wampum," the established rate of "the general office" of the company at New Amsterdam.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 122; Rec. N. Am., IV: 12-13.

"The captain of the rattle-watch or night police reports to the burgomasters that his men have no firewood; so an allowance is granted of 14 pieces weekly or two pieces for each night, the weekly allotment to be delivered every Friday."—Min. of Orp. Court, II: 120-21.

"The burgomasters resolve to petition Stuyvesant and the council
 "for permission to collect from all ships 5 st. per last wharfage dues and for every hoghead exported 2 st., and other freight pro rata."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 121. On Jan. 12, 1662, they directed the secretary of the city "to help [in] remembering, that a report be made to the bench of Burgomasters and schepens on the charges, paid by ships, barks and merchants for discharging and taking in goods at the landing place, also on the port."—Ibid., II: 123. On Jan. 19, the city court petitioned Stuyvesant and the council for approval of the fees suggested to be paid by vessels unloading at the city wharf (present Pearl and Moore Sts.), and by sloops wintering in the recently constructed basin, which the council approved.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 233. The basin was formed by the pier or custom-house bridge and the piling erected on the made land before Stuyvesant's residence (present State and Whitehall Sts.). This basin was made some time in 1661.

6 "Oyster Island," now Ellis Island, is mentioned in a court record of this date.—Rec. N. Am., III: 420. A record of April 23, 1686 (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V), shows the island was then known as Dyre's Island.

9 In answer to a request by Cornelis Barenson, the burgomasters decide "that everybody is bound to have his grain measured, except what is grown on his own land."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 124.

"The porters of the weigh-house petition the burgomasters for "an increase of wages and to be exempted from paying Rattlewatch dues." The request is "for the present denied."—*Min.
 of Orph. Court*, II: 121.

22 The schout and schepens of the village of Bergen having granted provisional permission to Willem Jansen "to work a ferry between Bergen and the Island of Manhattans," his petition is now before Stuyvesant and the provincial council for ratification; they authorize the Bergen officials "to enter into a provisional agreement concerning the ferrage with the petitioner to the best advantage of the inhabitants . . . and until further orders."—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, XIII: 214. Jansen was the first authorized ferry-man of that territory to Manhattan Island. See, further, Dec. 28, 1662.

"The provincial council orders the burgomasters to pay the salary of the city schout."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 232.

A provincial poor law having been passed on Oct. 22 (q. v.), Dec.
 the presiding burgomaster now proposes to the city court "to 28 decree, whereas divers poor seek their support here from other towns, that the Deaconry of this City intend to permit a collection to be made every Sunday in each town from which the outside poor may be maintained—then inasmuch as such would tend rather to the prejudice than interest of this place—to resolve that such ought not to be undertaken before and until they communicate the same to the W<sup>c</sup> Court of this City, and to prefer acquainting the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and to speak to his Honor thereupon, and that a collection be made by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and Council throughout the entire land for this object, so as thus to be freed from the trouble."—Rec. N. Am., III: 430-31.
 See Jan. 26, 1662.

The burgomasters lay out an order for the members of the Jan.
 rattle-watch or night police to go on duty in pairs, and direct their 12 captain, Lodowyck Pos, to order them to walk less noisily and not presume to commit nuisances "on the steps of the City Hall."
 —Min. of Orph. Court, II: 123-24. See also April 13, 1663.

The earliest extant court record, as well as land trial, 13 of the village of New Haerlem is of a hearing on this date at an "extraordinary meeting" in the case of Nicolaes Meijer [de Meyer] against Sigesmoenis Luijckas [Lucas], in which the plaintiff demands the delivery of a house, barn, land, etc. that were sold to him by the defendant, together with the costs of the suit.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 3 (N. Y. Pub. Library). Both parties had lots at Van Keulen's Hook (ibid., I: 5), or Otterspoor (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967).

Translated in full this court record (reproduced as Pl. II, Vol.
 IV) is as follows:

"13 January 1662. Extraordinary meeting.

"Present Jan Piterszen

Daniel Turnuer

Jan Lamont

"Nicolaas Meijer, Plaintiff, against

"Sigesmoenis Luijckas, Defendant

"The Plaintiff demands the delivery of the House, Barn, land and the further appurtenances as they were sold to him;
 with the costs of suit accrued and yet to accrue.

"The Defendant acknowledges to have sold the land and the house to the plaintiff, but it was left to his consideration until the morning whether he would do it.

"The plaintiff replies and shows two attestations wherein it appears that the sale was so made; and also by the attestation of Evert Duijcker that the defendant has acknowledged to have sold the same, but did not think that the expences would amount to so much.

"The defendant appears before the Court and prays for evidence, because the declaration of Myndert Koerten is contradictory; denies that Margaret Provost was present at the sale, and requests that the conversations be sworn to, and sustains that Myndert Gerritsen cannot testify, he having rented Meyer's land.

"The Court orders the Plaintiff to have his witnesses sworn."
 —From the original Harlem Records, I: 3.

19 Walewyn vander Veer, who had, on Oct. 27, 1661, petitioned the provincial council for admission as a notary public, and had been ordered to be examined as to his fitness, is now sworn in.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231, 233.

20 Gabriel Carpey receives two ground-briefs for two small adjoining lots, on the south-east corner of William and Wall Sts., the ground now covered by the building of the National City Bank.—See Castello Plain, C. Pl. 82, 82c, II, and II: 324; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 406.

26 It is reported to the burgomasters that the consistency of the church at New Amsterdam deems it necessary, because many poor people come from the country, "to pass the plate for a general collection," and that Stuyvesant has written that, not only in the city but also outside of it, a collection is demanded "for the support of the poor coming from outside." But the burgomasters resolve "to send an order to the Deaconry" of New Amsterdam, "directing them not to give assistance to anybody, except to the poor" of the city, and "to provide these poor with clothing, food and a little money; also to make a note of to whom assistance is given."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 124-25.

- 1662 Marten Cregier, treasurer of the city of New Amsterdam, having been directed two days before to render an account of his stewardship of the city's funds, now delivers to the board of school, burgomasters, and schepens his accounts of the revenues and expenditures of the city, which being audited are found to be correct. On Feb. 5, he was succeeded in office by Allard Anthony, and the books and papers were handed over to the new treasurer.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 20; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 125.
- 31 Pieter, a negro, who has been engaged by the city as a public executioner of criminals, requests the city court for "payment for executing the sentence on one Mesack Martens and Marten van Weert" (Waart). Martens had confessed, "without torture and chains," to the theft of cabbages from a garden, and had been sentenced "to stand in the pillory with cabbages on his head" (see also Nov. 15, 1661), as an indication to the public of the nature of his thievery, and the latter had been condemned to be whipped at the whipping-post.—Rec. N. Am., III: 305-6, 409-10; IV: 24.
- Feb. Stuyvesant comes into the city court in order "to be present at the nomination of the succeeding Burgomasters and Schepens in place of those going out." These nominations are made by a plurality vote, in double number, and are presented to Stuyvesant and his council for a final choice and election of the requisite number. Such choice was made on the 2d, when their names were proclaimed to the burghers and inhabitants with the usual ceremony.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 25-29; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 233.
- 2 In a petition to Stuyvesant, the burgomasters state that it is their intention to "erect and to have built a suitable school [house]." They ask a second time (for the first, see Aug. 1, 1661) to be given a lot, this time "on Brouwer [Stone] Street." The answer of the director-general and council is that it is "more convenient that the school[house] be erected on a part of the present churchyard."—N. Y. Col. MSS., X(pt. 1): 39-40 (Albany). No further record appears. It is certain that a private house continued to be reared for the school near the fort, perhaps the house of Casper Steyemets on that same Brouwer St., at what would now be 10 Stone St. (Castello Plan, II: 260). This is known positively to have been the location three or four years later (see May 8, 1666).
- 17 Persons who are not residents of New Amsterdam, but who are in the city for a time, are obliged to pay the tax for the rattlesnake watch as long as they remain.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 126.
- " The burgomasters order Allard Anthony, the city treasurer, "to demand and collect from everybody, above 16 years old, without exception, the dues for the Rattlesnake watch."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 126-27.
- 18 The city court reëmits an ordonnance with respect to the attendance and tardiness of members of the bench.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 36.
- 20 Aegidius Luycq departs from New Amstel, on the Delaware, for New Amsterdam, "called for the private instruction of Stuyvesant's children."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 362; N. Y. Col. MSS., XXI: 257 (Albany). The Latin school, which had closed with the departure of Curtius (see July 21, 1661), was reopened under Luycq in the following May (q. v.).
- Mar. The provincial council orders the arrest of Solomon Lachair and Waraer Wessels, farmers of the excise, because they are in arrears with their funds. Wessels petitions to be released from imprisonment, which is granted to him through the intercession of several women on behalf of Wessels's wife. But a week later his bondsmen asked the council for security against loss by them of the bail and Wessels's property was ordered to be inventoried.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 234.
- " A dispute as to the right to collect fees from auction sales is considered in council. Timothy Gabry, the auctioneer, and Joannes Nevius, the city's secretary, are those whose conflicting claims are heard.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 234; and June 9, 1662.
- 3 Allard Anthony, the treasurer of New Amsterdam, reports to the burgomasters that there are still within the city "some houses with wooden and plastered chimneys," which might "cause great damages by fire;" particular mention is made of the house of David Wessels in the Marktvteld Steegh (Marketfield Alley), near the Heere Gracht (present Broad Street); the chimney of the house of Lambert Hendricksen van Campen in the same street is declared to be so low as to be even with the roof. The burgomasters direct the fire-wardens to go the rounds of inspection, accompanied by the city schout, and to condemn all wooden and plastered chimneys which they find.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 128-29.
- 3 The city treasurer, Allard Anthony, suggests to the burgomasters that Jan Gillisen Koeck, who served both the city and the court of orphan-masters, should be empowered to make attachments for the city and the orphans court, in the absence of the court messenger, "when people come from out of the City," with the same legality as if made by a court messenger. On the 7th, the presiding burgomaster asked the members of the city bench whether Koeck should be given this authority to arrest persons who came to the city, and who were "indebted as well to the City as the Orphans Chamber." The court decided that such a matter "must be communicated" to the director-general and council.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 129-30; Rec. N. Am., IV: 45.
- 9 The town of Harlem petitions the provincial council that the settlers there may be exempted from the payment of 8 gl. per morgen for their land; rejected.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 235.
- " A "mill" and the house of Weyntje Elberts, widow of Aert Willemsen, a brewer, are mentioned in the records as being on her lot "on the Eastside of the Heere Straat" (now No. 42 Broadway).—Min. of Orph. Court, I: 210. For particulars about this property, once owned by Andries Hudde, see Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82e, Vol. II), and Key, Sec. C., No. 11, pp. 235-37, Vol. II.
- 10 Nominations are made by the burgomasters for a church-warden and an orphan-master, which they submit to Stuyvesant and the council for an election and confirmation. The elevation of Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt to the office of a burgomaster had created a vacancy in the orphan-masters court, and made the choice of a new member of that bench necessary; and Hendrick Jaesen vander Vin had completed his term as a church-warden, and so was to be superseded. The provincial authorities, on the 16th, elected Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven as an orphan-master; no choice was made of a church-warden by them before March 30, and on April 7 a commission was delivered to Govert Loockermans.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 130-31, 135, 152; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch: 235. See also April 7, 1662.
- " Jacques Cortelouy, the official surveyor, appears before the burgomasters of New Amsterdam and is asked what his "charges for making the City map" amount to. He replies, he is willing to leave the amount to be fixed by the city officials, but volunteers the information that, "if made" in Holland, "such a map would bring 100 ryksdaalers," about $100. Whereupon, the burgomasters allow him, "for making the map and other services for the City 100 fl. in heavy money," or about $40. A week earlier (March 3), Jacob van de Water, a draughtsman, had been "allowed by the Burgomasters, for making the map of this City, according to his bill for 96 fl. in beavers, the sum of 100 fl. in wampum." This important survey of the city by Cortelouy had been finished at the end of the year 1661 (see Dec.), when he had handed the data to the draughtsman. On Jan. 26, 1662, Cortelouy was summoned by the burgomasters to the city hall, where, upon interrogation, he informed them that he had finished his work and that the material had "already been in the hands of van der Veen for 6 weeks," who promised "to have it ready this week," being the end of January. The name "van der Veen" in the record is clearly a slip of the pen by the secretary or clerk for "van de Water."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 124, 129, 130. See also, summary of the Dutch Period, I: 91; description of the Duke's Plan, I: 208-9, and Castello Plan, II: 209 et seq.
- 14 A list of lands at New Haerlem at this date is entered in the court records; it shows the name of each owner, with the number of morgens of land possessed by each. The highest number of morgens held by any one person is 24. J. Pietersen Slodt, Daniel Tuerouer, Lubbert Geritsen, and P. Kasje each hold this number. Domine Zijperus, the preacher, it is shown, has 18 morgens.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 8 (N. Y. Pub. Library).
- 15 By a proclamation issued by Stuyvesant and the council on January 26, a day of general thanksgiving, fasting, and prayer in New Netherland was named for March 15. The proclamation was read publicly at New Amsterdam on March 10.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 233; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 130. See also Eccles. Rec., I: 516-18, for text and reasons.
- 21 Schout Tonnenman requests the city court by petition "that from now henceforward no judgment pronounced" by that court, shall "be put in execution, until the successful party" has obtained "a receipt from the Treasurer and paid the Schout his fees; and that

1662 the Bailiff be charged and commanded not to execute any more Mar. receipts, until on notice given by the Court Messenger, the 21 judgment is also produced." This is allowed, as it has been decided by the provincial government.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 54.

" Claes van Elsland, Jr., and Pieter Schaafbank, the two court messengers of New Amsterdam, are ordered to "warn the arrested parties and notify them of the fine," when they serve persons with an attachment, in case the parties endeavour to "violate the arrest or run beyond the same without the consent of the Officer" (Schout).—Rec. N. Am., IV: 54.

" Geortje Teunis (probably wife of Cors Jansen.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 334) is charged by the schout with having "tapped for Mat-theu, the negro of Heer Steenwyck on the 15th of this month, being a Day of Fasting," and he asks the court to deprive her "of her trade for one year and six weeks." She denies the charge, but Mattheu says in his examination that he got drink from her and she took his money for it. Resolved Waldron testifies that the negro lies and has been forced to it by beating. It is alleged that Mattheu got drunk "at another place." On the 28th, witnesses were examined, and the court dismissed the case for insufficient evidence, and ordered the negro to be "imprisoned for false accusation."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 55, 56-57.

24 The burgomasters resolve "to issue an order that no fruit market shall be held at the prescribed place and date."—Min. of Orph.
Court, 133. The records do not reveal the purpose of this vote.

" The fire-wardens of New Amsterdam request the burgomasters for written instructions and make the following suggestions, viz.
 that the leather firebuckets be greased and cared for; that everybody who has powder in his house shall "be ordered to take good care of it, to prevent disaster in case of a fire;" "that wells be made;" that firehooks be procured and locations for them be designated; they also ask what they ought to do when a fire breaks out, since they have "nothing to show" that they are firemen, also what fines they may be allowed to impose; they request an order prohibiting anybody from using the firebuckets, "on pain of being fined;" and they want to know "how much" they are "to receive for their lost time." The written instructions were issued on April 21 (q. v.).—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 132.

" David Wessels and Ferriek Azenen report to the burgomasters that some people come from out of town to the city "asking for work or to make chair matting," who are "allowed to earn the wages." This, they say, deprives them as burghers of the city, who paid the city's taxes, from earning "a support for themselves and their families," and they ask for a prohibition of the intruders.
 —Min. of Orph. Court, II: 132-33.

28 Nicasius de Sille and Hendrick Jansen vander Vin, church-wardens of New Amsterdam, report to the city court that they "agreed with Claas Mareschbal to repair the glass in the Church [in the fort] which he undertook for a reasonable price," but now renders an unreasonable bill, which they exhibit to the court for examination. The glazier replies that he "calculated according to the Church work," and "had great trouble to set the lozenges in the arms in their proper places." The court appoints Cornelis Steenwyck and Adolf Pietersen to reconcile, if possible, the parties in dispute.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 57. For earlier reference to the coats-of-arms in the windows, see Oct. 9, 1656; and July, 1768.

30 Oratam, chief of the Hackensacks, and another chief, named Mattano, are authorised by the council of New Netherland to seize any brandy brought into their country for sale, and to seize the purveyors thereof, bringing them to New Amsterdam to "be punished as an example to others" in the hope of stopping this illicit run traffic with the Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 218-19; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 235.

Apr. 6 The provincial council gives notice that the duties on goods exported to New England and Virginia will be sold to the highest bidder.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 236.

7 On March 10 (q. v.), the burgomasters nominated Joannes de Decker and Govert Lookermans, submitting their names to Stuyvesant and the council, so that one of them might be elected and confirmed as a church-warden to succeed Hendrick Jansen vander Vin, whose term had expired. No choice was made then, so, on March 30, the burgomasters named Lookermans and Jan Vigne, from whom the provincial authorities commissioned Lookermans. Now the late church-warden, Vander Vin, requests permission from the burgomasters, "on behalf of the Church," to take away the box in the City Hall," which is granted. He was also ordered, on April 12, "to make ready his accounts of the Apr. Church revenues and expenditures as soon as possible and submit them to the Burgomasters." This report he delivered on the 7 21st, "as more fully may be seen by the bills filed in this City Hall." The burgomasters, on Aug. 3, ordered Lookermans "to enter upon his duties."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 131, 134, 135-36, 152; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 235.

" Jan de Pré acknowledges the sale of his house and house lot, as well as farm land and garden, in New Haerlem to Willem de La Montagne, for one cow and fifteen guilders in seawant (wampum), the purchaser to pay for the survey. It is signed by both parties in autograph and witnessed by the hand of M. Zyperus, the clergyman.
 —Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 14 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

13 A minute is entered in the council minutes relating to Stuyvesant's visit to and return from the Esopus country, now Kingston, N. Y.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 236.

7=17 The "Corporation for the propagation of the gospel in New England and parts adjacent in America" is established.—Winsor, op. cit., V: 169.

18 The city court grants permission to Anna Claas Croesens, widow of Daniel Litsche, "to sell by the Bailiff some books" in her possession and the property of Sir Henry Moody, Bart., she having a lien on them "for a considerable sum."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 64.
 It would be interesting to know the titles of the books in this early book sale.

19 On March 23, Gerrit Hendricksen petitioned the provincial government for a renewal of his lease of the revenue of the weigh-house for another year, which was granted. Now the council farm the weigh-house to him again, but with some alterations in the conditions.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 235, 246.

20 "David du Four" (David de Voe) acknowledges acceptance of the post of herder of cows in New Haerlem, to begin on the 23<sup>d</sup> of this month.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 16 (N. Y.
 Pub. Library). Action was brought, on May 11, against "David de Voor" in the New Haerlem inferior court, because of the damage sustained by the town through his not properly performing his duties, and because the town has to expend more to replace him.
 His answer was that he was beguiled by sweet words into taking the job, but did not want it. He was compelled to pay to the town the amount in excess of his own contract to which the town was put by his failure.—Ibid., I: 19. See April 29, 1662.

" The residents along the great canal (now Broad Street), "between the first bridge and the shore"—meaning, apparently, from the Brouwers Brugh (present Stone Street) to the East River (now Pearl Street)—are directed "not to put earth beyond the posts set, and to improve the street," so that people can "drive and walk over it." Jacob Kip, Joannes Vervelen, and Coenraet ten Eyck are appointed overseers by the burgomasters, to "further this work."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172-73.

21 On March 24 (q. v.), the fire-wardens requested from the burgomasters written instructions with respect to their duties and prerogatives. These are now adopted by the burgomasters, and may be summarized as follows: (1) They are to see "that no more roofs are covered with reeds nor the old ones repaired, under a penalty of 6 fl.;" (2) "That no wooden nor plastered chimneys" are built in the city, "and to condemn those which may have remained," having them "torn down in a prescribed time under a fine of 6 fl. for each time" their orders are disobeyed; (3) They are to fine householders whose chimneys are foul; (4) To see "that the ladders and fire-buckets" are not used by the inhabitants, and fine those who do use them; (5) They are obliged "to go to a fire with a black staff with three crosses" (from the city arms), as their insignia of office, and to suffer a fine of three guilders for the benefit of the schout if they fail; (6) It is their duty "to make an inspection at least every three months," to observe if the fire-buckets are in their proper places at the points designated for their deposit, and to have those which are damaged "brought to the City Hall," to be repaired by order of the burgomasters; (7) They are to watch
 "that the porters of the Weighhouse and the beer carriers, as well as the grainmeasurer," go to fires and remain there "until the fire is out or as long as the Firewardens" deem it advisable, and those who fail are to be fined; (8) They are required to see to it "that no little fires" are "made outside of the houses, to cook by in summer," because these fires might "cause a conflagration;" (9) For their services, the fire-wardens are to receive all the fines provided for in their instructions.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 135, 136-37.

- 1662 Reyer Cornelissen van Soestbergen, a prisoner held for alleged theft, answering certain interrogatories in court, declares he "bought from a negro by the new Bridge the sack of grain" which he threw "in the water by the Cripple bush;" but did not know the negro. He says that subsequently he had intended "to bring the grain to the mill and sat so long on the pigstye behind Tomas Hall's until he removed it thence." It developed in the case that the scound demanded of the court that the prisoner be heard further, "after having been subjected to Torture on the rack."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 68. On the 28th, the prisoner pleaded guilty of four points, and was condemned by the court to be brought "to the place where criminal justice is usually executed and there to be tied to a stake, severely scourged, branded and banished out of this City's jurisdiction for the term of ten years," and "further in the costs and mises of justice." The punishment was administered the next day (29th).—Ibid., IV: 68-70.
- 29 Jan Cocou (Cogu, or Koku) and Moenits Pietersen acknowledge that they have engaged from this day to attend as herdsmen of cows and oxen belonging to the town of New Harlem, until "a fortnight after All Saints day." They are to be paid 350 guilders, in seawant, and half a pound of butter for each milch cow, of which 50 guilders are payable five weeks from date and the remaining 50 guilders on the expiration of their term.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 18 (N. Y. Pub. Library). See April 20, 1662.
- May — The Latin school at New Amsterdam reopened at about this time, with Aegidius Luycck (see Feb. 20) as master. This young man had commended himself to Stuyvesant as his children's tutor. His "method of inculcating the first principles of the Latin and Greek languages, as in writing, arithmetic, cataphising, and honorum morum praxis," was praised. The director-general realized also that children who had started their education under Curtius would be "compelled to sacrifice all their prospects," or be sent "to the Patria," unless something were done. So Luycck was employed "for this end," Stuyvesant promising "he would advise and recommend it to the Lord Directors" that a salary should be paid him.—Pratt, Annals of Public Education in N. Y., 33, citing Van der Kemp's translation (since burned) of Luycck's letter to Stuyvesant, dated July 30, 1663, in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXI: 257, 258. K. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 105, who shows in a footnote that the date of the reopening of the school is fixed by a statement of Stuyvesant's, made Aug. 9, 1663, that the school had been in operation "during five quarters of a year." As to Luycck's salary, see July 30, 1663, et seq.
- Apr. Without the alteration of a word, Charles II signs a charter for Connecticut which has been prepared by the colonists. No more liberal charter was ever granted by an English monarch.
- May 3 This charter provided for the union of the colonies of Connecticut and New Haven. The leading men of the latter were opposed to the union and resisted the charter until 1665.—Wissor, op. cit. III: 334.
- 10 Arent Lauwrenszen receives a ground-brief for a house and lot on the west side of William St., north of Exchange Pl., now forming part of the site of the Atlantic building.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82, Vol. II, and II: 287; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 392.
- 11 Severyn Lawrens (Laurens, Lourenszen) and Jan Jansen Laogestraet are ordered prosecuted for selling liquor during divine service, contrary to law.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 237. Cf. Nov. 11, 1661.
- 16 Claes van Elslant is removed from the office of court messenger by the city court.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 81.
- " Geertje Jans, widow of Ryer Stoffelens, asks the burgomasters and scabepsens "that a sewer . . . be laid near the work at the Water Gate [Pearl and Wall Sts.] to prevent the water from the work running thro' her garden." This laod had been conveyed to her husband on Sept. 10, 1655, and when he sought permission to build a house there, he was prevented by the provincial council, because it would have abutted "right against the wall outside the city gate." The land was therefore cultivated as a garden. The widow's complaint was that the garden suffered from washouts, and therefore the city ought to provide drainage, since it was a fault that was due to the wall and embankments of the city. Nothing seems to have been done about it during the Dutch régime; but on March 7, 1665, the widow conveyed to the city the abutting or southerly end of her garden, which no doubt relieved her of the difficulty complained of.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 83; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 7-8; recitals in Patents, II: 85 (Albany); Liber Deeds, May B: 67, 68. See also Castello Plan, II: 340 (No. 7).
- Timothy Gabry, vendue master by appointment of the provincial government, declares in the city court, in an action brought against him there, that he is not amenable to the city bench in any action which relates to his commission on sales, but is answerable solely to the jurisdiction of the higher court of the province. He is ordered to prove, therefore, that he is entitled by his instructions to receive "half commission."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 85.
- Schout Tonnemann asks the city court to issue an order to the two court messengers, requiring them to report at his house every morning between seven and eight o'clock and every afternoon between one and two, to see if he has any need of them; if this cannot be granted, he requests to have one of them "adjoined to him" regularly; the court informs him that, if he has any summons to issue, he may "tell the Messengers to come to him on Saturdays or Mondays."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 87.
- A survey is ordered by the provincial council of land at the Fresh Water, called the Calck Hook, in dispute between Abraham Verplack, Jan Vigeo, and Jacobus Kip.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 237. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965.
- The burgomasters conclude "to lay before the Director General and Council . . . the necessity of keeping up the Heere Gracht [great canal, now Broad Street] and for that purpose to ask permission" to compel persons, who are unwilling, "to pay their share of expenses;" and to submit "at the same time the resolutions" of Stuyvesant which were "adopted at the meeting" of the burgomasters in the city hall, on June 28, 1660.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 140; Rec. N. Am., VII: 255. See also June 2, 1662; May 25, 1661.
- Parliament passes the Uniformity in Religion Act, which restores the Church of England, obliges all the clergy to subscribe to the "Thirty-nine Articles," and to use the same forms, and the same Book of Common Prayer.—Adams & Stevens, Select Doc. of Eng. Const. Hist., 427-31. The Convocate Act, of May 17, 1664, still further strengthened the position of the Church.
- Charles II marries Catherine of Braganza, daughter of John IV, King of Portugal.
- A resolution of the burgomasters of this date reads: "Whereas the Burgomasters of this City have resolved to have erected in the Heere Gracht [great canal, now Broad Street] at the East River [outlet, present Broad and Pearl Sts.], a convenient and durable lock, to keep said Gracht at all times full of water, so that in time of need because of fire . . . and at other occasions it may be used and that especially the great and unbearable stench may be suppressed, which arises daily when the water runs out, therefore they direct all and everybody dwelling on either side of said Gracht to pay, upon the demand of the Treasurer or on his order, the share as imposed by the tax of February 13, 1660, even though these moneys were intended to pay expenses for the Gracht and now are to be used for erecting the aforesaid lock."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 142-43. See also May 26, 1662; May 25, 1665.
- Concierge Matheus de Vos reports to the burgomasters concerning a dispute between him and Secretary Joannes Nevius about "the fees for selling goods at auction." Both lay claim to these perquisites, but they submit their differences voluntarily to the burgomasters for a decision, and these decide that the fees should be equally divided between the two. Both sides are satisfied and thank the board.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 143.
- Eghbert van Borsum, late ferry-man, petitions the provincial council for compensation due to him for ferrying over the East River several persons on the public service, and he is allowed 50 guilders.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 237. See June 1, 1654; May 28, 1658.
- The burgomasters order "a warrant to be issued to the Treasurer to collect the tax on chimneys August 1, agreeably to the Ordinance of July 27, 1661."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 147.
- Annetje Smitt, wife of Hendrick Jansen Smitt, is hailed to court by the scouth, who charges her with tapping on Sunday during the preaching hours, contrary to law. She is fined "six guilders for the poor."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 102, 163. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 156. The tavern was on No. 32 Bridge St. See Feb. 4, 1647.
- Adriaen Vincet is ordered by the burgomasters to pay the renewal of his burgherright, because he has been in the country and absent from the city of New Amsterdam. He pleads with 1662 them, saying he was away only a short while and left "his house July [in New Amsterdam] unsold." The burgomasters, in consideration 4 of his residence of "many years" in the city, and because he has not "made it a business to go and come," remit the fee for the renewal of the burgherright, but require him in lieu thereof, to pay "his due for the Rattlewatch and chimneys," taxes which have fallen due during his absence.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 148.

7 The city treasurer reports to the burgomasters that the skippers from oversea are "unwilling to pay the Burgherright and the 20 fl.
to go to Fort Orange [Albany], before having first kept" in New Amsterdam, "according to rule, an open shop." He requests that they be forbidden by an order to leave, "also that yachts and barges" be required to "pay wharfage and port dues and that in default thereof" he may have authority to "make seizures." He is ordered "to demand and collect wharfage and port dues as well as the Burgherright fees and other City taxes without delay, to arrest the unwilling and compel them to pay."—*Min. of Orph.
Court*, II: 150.

" The deacons of New Amsterdam receive a ground-brief for a lot now known as Nos. 32 and 34 South William St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 297; Map of Dutch Grants, west side of William St., 23 feet north of Exchange Pl., the lot now included in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Castello Plan, 15 The directors at Amsterdam are inclined to a "total abolition of the military" in New Netherland, placing "reliance on the inhabitants alone for the offensive and defensive maintenance" of the province. Stuyvesant and the council see in such a policy only disaster. They show how feeble the military establishment is, as follows:

"Your Honors have seen from the list sent over last year, how many soldiers remained then in the service and how they were distributed, namely pursuant to your Honors' former order 10 or 12 at Fort Oraoge [Albany], 12 to 14 at Fort Altena on the South [Delaware] river, indeed few enough in our poor opinion considering the multitude of barbarians, who visit the distant places daily, 25 men at the Esopus [Kingston], whom we have reinforced while writing this by 6 or 8 men from the garrison here [Fort Amsterdam], on account of warnings from other savages, that the Esopus savages had threatened to attack some of our people there during seeding time in revenge for the savages sent to Curaçao [see May 24, 1660], 6 men on Staten-Island for the safety of the few inhabitants there, the balance of about 70 to 80 remain for the reasons given in our former letter here in garrison [at Fort Amsterdam]: some of these have been discharged since and several more will be sent home discharged by the ships, now about to sail, so that not more than 60 or 70 remain here in garrison as a reserve troop for any arising emergencies; altogether they do not number over one hundred and twenty five military persons."

"They tell the directors in Holland that, if they had from their own experience "a perception of the interests, losses, sudden attacks, unexpected murders, manslaughters, different incendiary fires, happened to the inhabitants," they would rather grant more military assistance than design to take away the inadequate number of soldiers now in the province, who are scattered in small contingents.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 223-24.

Aug. 4 Surgeon Jacob Huges produces a judgment before the burgomasters against Lodowycck Pos, captain of the rattle-watch (night patrol), and requests that his rattle-watch tax be liquidated by a garnishee of the salary of Pos. The burgomasters say it cannot be done, "except with the consent of the debtor," and that "the City's property" can not "be attached."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 153.

11 The burgomasters resolve "that henceforth" there shall be in New Amsterdam "two market days in the week, to wit Tuesday and Saturday, at which time the country people" may "offer for sale and sell their wares."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 156.

12 A number of cases have come up in the city court at this time about faulty bread baked by the bakers of New Amsterdam, so the city court decrees that the scout or prosecuting officer shall "go around once every week," but at no stated day, in company
"with one of the Inspectors of baked bread," to discover the guilty bakers. This order is delivered to him "in writing," and he promises "to do so."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 111.

Aug. 24 Hendrick Karstensen and Adam Dircksen, fence viewers of the village of New Haerlem, having been sent for by the town officials, are asked why they fail to do their duty, and they answer; because the scout has refused to cooperate with them. Several persons also testify as to damage done to their crops by cattle or hogs, and aver that the scout has refused to hear them in their respective complaints or do anything against the guilty owners of the intruders.—Haerlem Records (original MSS.), I: 31 (N. Y. Pub.
Library.)

25 The question is raised by the burgomasters whether a man who has married in New Amsterdam the daughter of a burgher may also enjoy the burgherright without paying for it. "After some discussion," they decide in the affirmative, on condition, however, that the person give "notice of it within six weeks after marriage."
—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 158.

28 The shippers of furs are given notice by the provincial council to send in a return of what they have shipped in the vessels about to sail. Two days later, another notice was given to them to send their furs, within 24 hours, aboard the vessels about to sail, and, on Sept. 6, a warrant was issued to the farmers of certain export duties to search the sailing vessels.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 240.

Sept. 21 Previous edicts "against Conventicles and prohibited assemblies" are not obeyed as the provincial government desires, so now the ordinance is renewed and enlarged upon. Only "the Reformed worship and service" are legal; all others are inhibited.
The law reads: "no Conventicles or meetings shal be kept in this province whether it be in houses, barnes, ships, barkes, nor in the Woods nor fields upon forfeiture of fifty guildens for the first time for every person wether man or woman or child, that shall have bene present in such prohibited meetings, and twice as much for every person, whether it be man or woman or child that has exorted or taught in such prohibited assemblies, or shall have lent his house barne or any place to that purpose; for y<sup>e</sup> second time twice as much; for the third time four times as much, and arbitary punishment besides."

As it is alleged that persons bring in and distribute "among the Common people . . . seditious & erroneous boecks writings & letters," a prohibition is placed upon "the importation of such printed or unprinted boecks, writings or letters," and also upon
"the communicating or dispersing, receiving, bidding of the same, upon forfeiture of an hundred guildens, to be paid by the importers and distributors of such boecks, letters or writings and fifty guildens for every one that shal receive them from those that distribute them, with confiscation of the imported boecks when they are found out." Moreover, persons who came into New Netherland without leave are required to take the oath of allegiance within six weeks after their arrival, and to register their names at the office of the provincial secretary in New Amsterdam.

All magistrates, schouten, marshals, officers, and commanders in the province are instructed to enforce in their respective precincts the laws against conventicles, unlawful assemblies, and vagabonds. Persons who harbour or conceal undesirable characters are subject to heavy penalties; likewise any local official who violates his office by winking at the law is to be fined heavily and forever disbarred the public service.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 428-30.

23 Jan Gilisen Koeck reports to the burgomasters that he has summoned several persons who owe rattle-watch dues and chimney fees to the city; whereupon they order all persons in arrears to pay promptly or suffer an execution against them.—*Min. of Orph.
Court*, II: 161.

" Rachel van Tienhoven, widow of Cornelis van Tienhoven, and sister of Jan Vigne, having been ordered to pay rattle-watch and chimney dues, produces a bill against the city for bricks delivered by her. She is told by the burgomasters that the city has not received as many bricks as she charges for, "and that only 4,000 bricks" have been "used for the two chimneys of the guardhouse."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 161.

" As the burgomasters have learned that Allard Anthony, the treasurer of New Amsterdam, intends "to go to the Virginias by the first ship," they direct him to give them, "before his departure, an account in due form of his administration of the City's domain."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 161.

Oct. 3 Jan van Cleef and Titus Cyre appear in the city court, in regard to a breeze-mill of Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, which they have bought, and whereof Cyre has sold his share to

- 1662 his partner, who in turn has sold the share to Albert Albertsen Nov.
 Oct. Lintwever. The latter and his partner "sold the mill, as they 3 bought it, according to agreement therefor, to Jacobus Backer, Govert Lookerkerns, Jacques Cousseau, and Hendrick van de Water." Albertsen gave "an assignment of four hundred guilders" on Van de Water, and feared he might "not get his own." He therefore requests the city court to direct "the Court Messenger to attach the money," which being allowed, he asks that the attachment "be declared valid" until it is found to whom the most belongs. The court so declares.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 139.
- 12 Claes Teunissen receives a negro-brief for a piece of ground to the south of Augustine's (the negro's) land; to the north of the land of Cornelys Aartsens; to the east of the great highway; and to the west of Thomas Hall's land; containing in breadth along the said highway 63 rods; on the east side, 28 rods; on the south side, 60 rods; and on the north side, striking south-east, 75 rods; in all about 10 acres, or 5 morgens, and 128 rods.—Liber Patents, II: 108 (Albany).
- 16 Jan de Wit, a miller of New Amsterdam, is fined for picking his mill stones on Sunday.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 241.
- 28 For some time the inhabitants of New Amsterdam have been distressed because they have been unable to buy "anything from the merchants with seawant, except at an excessively high and intolerable price." The presiding burgomaster, therefore, asks the city court whether some means are not to be found to alter this untoward state of affairs. After deliberation, it is decided "that the value and currency of seawant to be given by the Burgers and inhabitants" of the city and its jurisdiction, as well as within the province, shall "be fixed annually when the beaver" is "purchased by the traders and merchants."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 153. See Oct. 12, 1661.
- " A proposal is made by the city court to request Stuyvesant and the council to "abolish the excise on beer and wines sent to the North [New England] as well as to Virginia."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 153.
- 31 In a dispute in the city court between Hendrick Willemsen, the baker, and Hendrick Janse Smitt, Willemsen demands that Smitt "be ordered to drain his water through his own drain and to raise his lot" (now 32 Bridge St.); but Smitt says he has already raised his lot. The court refers the matter to the fence viewers, "to make ocular inspection," settle the dispute by an order as they see fit, and endeavour to reconcile the parties in dispute.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 155. See also Castello Plan, II: 267 (No. 11).
- Nov. Jan de Wit and Denys Hartogvelt, carpenters, agree to build 2 a wind-mill outside the landgate of the city (Broadway and Wall St.) near the company's farm, on condition that they receive at a reasonable price the stones and iron belonging to the company's old wind-mill which "erelong" will be "in ruins." The old wind-mill stood in the present Battery Pl., at Greenwich St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961). On Sept. 22, 1663, the company signed an agreement to give them the stones and ironwork of the old mill and to allow them to grind in the new mill to be constructed by them, "without contributing for it any share to the Company for the use of the wind," on condition that they should build the mill as quickly as possible on a lot to be granted to them, and should grind for the company "25 shepels of grain weekly, free of toll, if the Company require so much."—Liber Deeds, B: 34, New York. On the same day, Hartogvelt gave up his share in the wind-mill project, his place being taken by Jan Theunissen, of Leerdam; and De Wit, on April 4, 1664, sold his interest to Claes Janzen van Langendijck.—Ibid.
- This new wind-mill, in which the West India Co. owned a half interest, stood in the present City Hall Park, on the old Commons, and was known later as "Jasper's Mill" and "Old Garrison Mill." It was erected between Sept. 22, 1663, and April 4, 1664; was destroyed by lightning in 1689, and rebuilt in 1695. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962, and Pls. 107, 17, 22, Vol. I, and I: 212. See also April 4 and May 27, 1664.
- 3 The sworn butchers appear before the burgomasters, show their instructions, and ask for an increase of pay. The burgomasters amplify their instructions and order that nobody shall "slaughter any animal within this City's jurisdiction, but such persons" as live in the city and have taken the oath of allegiance; but that everybody may "take some one of the Burgers and inhabitants to assist him, provided that a sworn butcher" is "present at the slaughtering." They are "not allowed to take an assistant from outside this jurisdiction," unless they first inform the burgomasters thereof and report to the secretary of the city. The sworn butchers are allowed fees, as follows: For an ox or cow, 5 florins; for a calf or pig, 2 florins; for a sheep or goat, 1 florin, and smaller animals in proportion.
- On Nov. 17, Asser Levy and Eghbert Meindersen, sworn butchers, again told the burgomasters that their pay for slaughtering was insufficient, and were allowed an increase in certain prescribed cases.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 163, 165. See Oct. 31, 1665.
- Upon the request of Joost Goderus, the foreman of the porters at the weigh-house of New Amsterdam, the burgomasters decide that the porters shall each pay eight stuivers weekly into the common fund. Those who are "unwilling" are to be assessed "twice as much." This is the common fund established for the benefit of the porters in case of illness, etc.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 163-64.
- Schout Tonnenman requests the city court to allow him "to place Francois de Bruya in prison in the City Hall," as he has defaulted in a judgment recently rendered against him. The court directs the schout to confine the prisoner "in a respectable tavern."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 160.
- The provincial council of New Netherland appoints magistrates for the village of New Haerlem.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 242.
- Pieter Tonnenman, the city schout, on Oct. 26, petitioned the provincial government for an increase of his fees for arrests, and to be allowed to "agree and compound for all civil and criminal cases up to one hundred guilders." This is now granted to him by apostil, "on condition that he render every month precisely, correct account and reliqua to the City, Poor and Church, of what share or portion" belongs to each. The petition and apostil thereon were ordered to be entered upon the court minutes of the city court, on Jan. 23, 1663, as of record.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 187, 188; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 242.
- The burgomasters inform Lodowyc Pos, captain of the rattle-watch, that his men are not going about at night "to their proper places for calling" the hours, "and that the people on Pearl Street" have lodged a complaint about it. Pos replies that "they always call at the first entrance of Pearl Street" (apparently at the present State and Whitehall Sts.), but do not go farther because the residents beyond are unwilling to pay the watch tax, so are not entitled to the service. The burgomasters simply tell him to see that they make "their rounds properly."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 164.
- Lubbart Gerritsen acknowledges the sale of his lot No. 8 on the north side of the village of New Haerlem, with the housing and garden, to Jan Lourensen (Duyts), in the manner he had purchased the same from Matijs Boon, and that for the sum of 300 guilders, in seawant.—Haerlem Records (original MSS.), I: 33 (N. Y. Pub. Library).
- The court of shepens of the village of New Haerlem appoints and authorizes Jan P. Slodt as surveyor [roijmester], for the welfare and security of the village, enjoining also all carpenters from setting up any fences or building in the absence of the surveyor.—Haerlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.
- This day the village officials of New Haerlem make the following minute in their records: "Posted a notice [for the benefit of the inhabitants], that the fences be set up on the northside of the village within fourteen days, subject to a fine of two pounds Flemish" for dereliction.—Haerlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.
- Symon Durwij and Moenis Piteresen are appointed fence viewers of the village of New Haerlem, and it is ordered that persons in default of fencing be fined three guilders for each dereliction.—Haerlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34. On Dec. 16, it was decided to have an inspection of fences on Dec. 18.—Ibid. This fence viewing resulted in a number of prosecutions in the court of shepens.—Ibid., I: 35, 36, 38.
- Daniel Tourneur is chosen deacon of the church and fire-warden of the village of New Haerlem in the place of Jan Lamontagne, Jr.—Haerlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.
- A curious form of instalment payment of the burgherright appears in the case of a man who was sworn in as a member of the rattle-watch or night police, but whose burgherright fees have not been paid. He is ordered to pay 30 guilders for it, in monthly instalments of six guilders, to be deducted by the city treasurer from his salary as a watchman.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 167.

1662 Willem Jansen, the Bergen-Manhattan ferry-man (see Dec. 22, 1661), complains against the Bergen officials that they have told the community there that every inhabitant of the place can keep a barge and ferry, whereupon these officials are summoned to appear before Stuyvesant and the council "to give an account of their action." They appeared on Jan. 4, 1663, and counter-charged that Jansen "had refused to carry over," which prompted them to act, but Jansen said he only refused to serve "those who would not pay him." The Bergen schout "was directed to assist the ferryman" in securing his payments for service, and, if he acted unbecomingly, to report him to the provincial authorities, who would "then issue such orders, as occasion may require."—Ibid., XIII: 234, 235. This was the ferry known as the Communipaw ferry. See also June 25, 1669.

The constant depreciation of wampum as an exchange in New Netherland, after repeated correspondence between the provincial government and the directors at Amsterdam, leads to the promulgation of another ordinance for regulating the currency, which is the last act of the kind passed during the Dutch régime. It is found that the depreciation is so great "that 20, yea, even, by some, 24 guilders are now ordinarily paid for one Beaver." Moreover, the directors at Amsterdam have often in dispatches, and especially in a letter of Dec. 22, 1659, ordered the reduction of payment made in New Netherland "to the Company's servants in Wampum or Beaver, to the value of Holland money." Stuyvesant and the council find themselves obliged, "in order that the Company's servants may receive in some degree an equivalent of Holland money, again to reduce the Wampum, at the Company's counting house [Pearl near Broad Sts.], from 16 to 24 White, or 12 Black [beads], for one stiver, and to disburse it at that rate on the first of January next, to the Company's Servants in payment of Monthly wages and Board money, and as regards Beaver, to continue to pay out, provisionally, until further Order, at 7 guilders, in payment of Monthly wages and board money."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 433-34. See Dec. 22, 1659; Oct. 28, 1662; and Jan. 20, 1664.

Three negro women, slaves, petition Stuyvesant and the council to be manumitted, which is granted to them on condition that one of them shall come weekly to do Stuyvesant's housework.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 242.

During this year, the West India Company's ship, the "Arms of Amsterdam," on her way from Guinea to New Netherland with a cargo of negro slaves, was captured in the West Indies by an English privateersman, Robert Dowman, and carried into Virginia. Stuyvesant and the council sent Jan de Decker at the head of an embassy to Virginia, to remonstrate and reclaim the slaves.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254, 259; N. Y. Col. Doct., II: 218. The proceedings had upon this complaint are in the Records of the General Court of Virginia, No. 2, and a transcript thereof, made in 1847, is in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Jan. Jacob Leisler, "merchant and burgher" of New Amsterdam, having "no acquaintances in Holland," ships through an agent to The Hague "244 heavy deer skins and 22 rolls of Spanish tobacco, weighing 474 lbs.," which are "to be sold for the best profit" of Leisler.

On May 12, he committed to the care of an attorney the collection from the directors at Amsterdam of "all such moneys" as were "due him for his military service, according to accounts and proofs thereof."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 47-49. Leisler had come over in 1660 (see April 27, that year), as a soldier in the employ of the West India Co., retiring to engage in business.

Dec. Aiming at toleration for Catholics, the king suspends the Conformity Act by proclamation. A parliamentary bill to permit this had failed to pass. About this time, Non-Conformists began to be called Dissenters.

Jan. Hendrick Willemsen and Reinier Willemsen, inspectors of bread baked within the jurisdiction of New Amsterdam, send a written remonstrance to the city court, because they have received "many complaints" that some of the bakers have been baking bread "not only of mixed stuff, such as wheat and rye," but also, "under guise thereof," have been using "material altogether unfit for bread." They request the promulgation of an ordinance giving them power to take official action in such cases, to which the burgomasters and schepens agree.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 178.

On March 13, the ordinance was "published from the City Hall after the usual ringing of the bell three times." It referred to a former ordinance of the director-general and council, renewed on Oct. 21, 1661 (q. v.), by the burgomasters and schepens. The new enactment gave the two inspectors authority "to go around among the bakers," at will, but "at least once a week," to see that the bread baked was "of good material and due weight," and just as the flour came from the mill, "unmixed or with other stuff amongst it." Unsatisfactory bread was to be seized and the guilty baker was to be fined; the schout was "authorized duly to proceed against the contraveners" of the law.—Ibid., IV: 214-15.

This ordinance resulted in a petition from the bakers of the city, who averred they could not comply with it without loss, unless the price of bread were raised to the consumer. The burgomasters and schepens, on March 23, agreed upon a new assize of bread; but the increase was still unsatisfactory to the bakers, who named higher prices. The city fathers met them half way, and a revised rate was fixed upon on April 17 (q. v.), to wit: wheaten loaves of eight pounds at 26 stuivers; rye loaves of equal weight at 22 stuivers, and white loaves of two pounds at 12 stuivers.—Ibid., IV: 217, 218, 220, 224.

Pierre Pia, a Frenchman from Picardy, conducts a tavern in New Amsterdam, at a house owned by Joannes Vervelen, on the north side of Marketfield St., at the east corner of New St. See Castello Plan, II: 335, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. He is now charged in the city court with tapping "out of hours and after setting the watch and in conducting himself irregularly, both in making noise and other insolences."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 175; 179-80; 186-87. See 1660.

On Jan. 30, Schout Tonnenam recommended to the burgomasters and schepens the nomination of new members of the city court. On Feb. 1, they made the nominations in the presence of Cornelis van Ruyven, as representative of the provincial government, and now, on the 2d, Stuyvesant and the council elect from the nominees the new members of the bench, who take the oath and are installed by Councillor Iannes de Decker, he having been especially commissioned to act in the case.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 194-97; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 244.

Those in the employ of the West India Co. in New Netherland are enjoined from receiving payments of wages on account, unless they have as much as three months' wages due to them. The order prohibiting advance payments arose from the discovery that some of the employes, "by their troublesome and impertunate applications," had "received more than they were entitled to, in direct violation of the Order issued on the subject of payments." They are warned "not to impertune or trouble the Receiver or Commissary for money or goods, on pain of instant dismissal" from the service, and the disbursing officers are made subject to the loss of a month's salary if they aid persons contrary to the act, and are to "be debited on their account" with all that they advance "to anyone contrary to this Order."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 435.

Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift receives his warrant to act as treasurer of New Amsterdam, in place of Allard Anthony. He received the books and papers of the financial administration of the city on March 2.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 168, 169.

A great earthquake is felt and heard throughout New Netherland, New England, Acadia, and Canada. For contemporaneous accounts of the phenomena, see notes by Henry C. Murphy on one of Selyns' poems, in Anthology of New Neth., 176, passim; also Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 709.

Complaint is made to the provincial council by Johannes de la Montagne, schout of New Haerlem, against divers persons for riot, committed in planting a May pole decorated with rags before the door of a newly-married couple, and by assembling around the house, "harming," etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 244.

Nicholas Verlett receives a grant from Gov. Stuyvesant for a tract called Hobuk (Hoboken)—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 21.

Notice is given by the provincial council to Paulus van der Beeck, ferry-man, informing him that there have been "many complaints" against his service, because he does "not fulfill the conditions under which the Ferry" was leased to him, which is an inconvenience to those who need the service, and who often have to "wait half a day or night" before he carries them "across the river." They send him, as a reminder, a copy of the conditions to which he is amenable, and threaten, "if the complaints continue," to "let the said Ferry publicly to somebody else" at his expense.

- 27 Joris Dnpzen (George Dobson), an Englishman, is summoned to the city court, where he is informed that complaints have been lodged against him "for his keeping a disorderly house and entertaining sailors, whereby the masters or skippers receive no service from them." He pleads not guilty and is released with a warning.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 205, 320.
- Mar. From nominations sent by the two burgomasters of New Amsterdam, on Feb. 16, Stuyvesant and the council now elect Allard Anthony and Johannes van Brug as members of the bench of the court of orphan-masters. Cornelis Steeuwyc holds over as the third member of this court.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 169, 170; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 245.
- 8 Abraham Jansen, a carpenter, is requested by the burgomasters "to make a model or a plan for a sluice to be put in at Joghinn the shoemakers."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 169-70. The reference is to Jochem Beekman, whose house lot was on the Heere Gracht, at what is now Broad, near Beaver St., where the Consolidated Exchange stands. See Castello Plan, C. - 30 The newly named Brugh Street (Bridge Street) is mentioned in a lease of the house of Antony Jansen van Fes (also known as Van Vees, and Van Salee, and sometimes called "Antony the Turk"). The house was on what is now Bridge St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts. The lessee is "bound to roof the house with good tiles at his own expence."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 42. See Castello Plan II: 261, Nos. 12 and 13.
- 31 The city court authorizes the marshal "to seize by nntices and to sell by execution the house, brewery and mill of François de Bruyn." It seems to be the brewery which he bought from Reyndert Jansen Hoorn, giving his bond dated Jan. 1, 1661.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 30, 218-19.
- Apr. Catharina Ernstigh, widow of Hendrick Jansen Sluyter (called "Blue Coat"), receives a ground-brief for a house and lot on the south side of Wall St., west of William St., the ground now included in the site of the building of the United States Trust Co. at No. 45.—See Castello Plan, C. - 5 The provincial council resolves to reduce the military force and the number of civil servants in the province of New Netherland.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 245. As early as Dec. 24, 1660, the directors at Amsterdam had written to Stuyvesant and the council urging economy, advising them to "begin with the military establishment," as they deemed it "utterly unnecessary to keep 250 soldiers in the service," and directing them "to get rid of as many soldiers as possible."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 487.
- 13 Lodowyc Pos, as captain of the rattle-watch, is directed by the burgomasters to change every eight or fourteen days the pairs in which his men are to go about on duty, and to order them to arrest all persons who quarrel or are noisy "on the Strand" of the East River (the present Pearl Street); to "bring them to the City Hall and keep them there until [the] next day and then report to the Burgomasters through their Captain for punishment according to circumstances."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 171.
- " The captain of the rattle-watch or night police is informed by the burgomasters about complaints against his men, because sometimes they fail to call out the hours for three or four hours at a stretch and are not keeping order in the city.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 171.
- A new assize on bread is promulgated in New Amsterdam.—See summary under Jan. 9, 1663.
- Apr. Publication is made in front of the city hall of renewed ordinances "forbidding the tapsters or tavernkeepers to tap any drink or entertain parties on the Sabbath;" and further forbidding them "to draw any strong drink for the Indians or natives" of the province.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 225.
- 19 The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam petition the provincial government for the removal of duties on exported liquors; Stuyvesant and the council on the same day order the removal of the export duty on beer brewed in New Netherland.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246.
- " Abraham Jansen receives permission from the provincial council to erect a water-mill near the Capske in New Amsterdam (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965), with the pledge that no one else shall be permitted to erect a similar mill on Manhattan Island. There is no recorded evidence of the execution of this right.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246; O'Callaghan's MS. Notes on Windmills, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.
- " An old and sickly negro, Mayken by name, who has served as a slave of the West India Co. since 1628, petitions the provincial authorities for her manumission, which is granted.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246.
- 20 The burgomasters determine to write a letter to Jacob Jansen Gardener, alias Flodder, who lives at Fort Orong (Albany), ordering him to "line up the bank before his lot next to Daniel Litsco [Litschoe], as his neighbours there suffer great damage, or else, if he fails to do it, it shall be done by the City and the expenses recovered from the lot."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172. The reference is to the absentee owner's neglected sheet-piling on the shore of the East River, his house being in the street with that of John Lawrence, afterwards a mayor under English rule, and with Litschoe, the tavern-keeper. It was the street along the strand, now Pearl Street, south of Wall St. Flodder's absence and continued neglect led to the confiscation of the lot and its regrating, in 1667, to Balthazar de Haart.—See Castello Plan, II: 326, Nos. 10 and 11.
- " Adulf Pietersen and Aldert Coninck are appointed by the burgomasters as "buymesters" or overseers, "to see that the High [now Stone] Street be properly made higher and passable;" and "the people living on High Street" are "directed, each to raise and improve the street before his house and lot."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172. On May 25, the burgomasters again directed these overseers "to do their duty in improving the street."—Ibid., II: 174.
- 26 A land ordinance, passed by the provincial government, recites a strange violation of former laws regarding land tenure. It shows that on Manhattan Island, Long Island, and in other places, land, that was granted with the understanding that it was to be improved, still lies "wild, waste, unoccupied and unfenced;" moreover many tracts of land are "also abandoned and stripped of their Fences by the Proprietors," who, none the less, reclaim the lands whenever others seek to acquire them for cultivation. This situation is looked upon by the government as a "serious damage of the Public," an "obstruction of Agriculture," and therefore a "loss of the Honorable Company's long expected Tenths and other Revenues." Another ordinance is now directed to stop these abuses. All grantees of lands within the province, for which tenths are long due and which are unimproved, are notified "to fence in and improve, within the term of six months, the lands they lay claim to," or suffer forfeiture of the land for the behoof of the company, the same to be again disposed of "for the public benefit."—Laws of Ord. N. Neth., 438-39.
- May In a criminal case, the burgomasters and schepens "adjudge that Jasper Abrahamson shall be brought to the place where criminal justice is usually executed, be bound to a stake and severely flogged, and the Hangman shall make a gash in his left cheek or jaw so that the blood flows; further he shall be banished for the term of five and twenty years from this City's jurisdiction and be condemned in the costs and mises of justice, which the prisoner shall have to pay before being released from confinement." A similar sentence is pronounced against Hendrick Jansen, "which two foregoing judgments are put into execution, according to antient custom, on the fifth of May." Abrahamson was a native of Amsterdam and sailmaker of the ship "The Furmerland Church," and Jansen was cooper of the ship and a native of "Atrendurp in the Haten District [Atrendorf, in Land Hadeln] near Hamburg." 1663 offences, for which these punishments were inflicted, were as follows: They violently went about in several houses demanding food and drink, taking what they could seize, beating and abusing people, not even respecting women. They then entered the house of George Wolsey, demanding drink, but were thrown out by Wolsey, assisted by Elias Doughty and Richard Corneil, and contumacious their escapades at the house of Charles Bridges (Carel van Brugge), another Englishman, by whom they were likewise ejected. Jansen also profaned the precincts of Dominie Driusius's house and assaulted people in the public streets, and perpetrated other villainies, which were adjudged to be intolerable "in a well regulated place and city such as this is, where justice is administered." The case was a very important one in the annals of the Dutch settlement.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 231-35.

8 Isaac Grevenaert buys the house and outbuilding of Michiel Tadens "on the Strand near Capsken," with the intention of moving the house, if possible, to another lot "on the Straad near the Fort, near the house of Jan Eversen Bout."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 45. For the Tadens property, see Castello Plan, II: 272 (Block G, No. 4), and for the Grevenaert property, see ibid., II: 275 (Block H, No. 1). The Capske rocks (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965) are shown very well on the Castello Plan, extending around the southern end of Manhattan Island, beginning just beyond Stuyvesant's house and extending around to the Beaver Path, near the wind-mill. Grevenaert's and Bout's properties were on Stuyvesant's Hoeck (mentioned in the De Sille List, Vol. II). This is one of the earliest mentions of an attempt at house-moving in the records.

17 A provincial ordinance prohibits skippers, sloop captains, and others from bringing within the jurisdiction of New Netherland any "Vagabonds, Quakers and other Fugitives, whether Men or Women," without having first received permission from the government.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 439-40.

24 Because Warnera Wessels, the farmer of duties on exports and imports, has made several complaints against the prevalence of smuggling, he is authorized to visit or cause to be visited, in his discretion, "all departing Vessels subject to the payment of Duties," if the vessels have remained in port over night.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 441.

25 The burgomasters resolve that, "Whereas the Heere Graft [great canal, now Broad Street] has by the Burgomasters and Rulers of this City been put in good condition by making a good lock and repairing the old one, that it may retain the water to prevent the unbearable stench at low water and whereas said graft is very foul and muddy, therefore the Burgomasters direct every resident along the same to dig out and carry away two feet in depth of the mud and the overseers of the graft are ordered to have it done."

On the same day, Trytje van Campen asks the burgomasters to appoint her husband as "lock-tender." She is told that no salary is attached to the position, because the city receives "no revenue from the lock."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 175, 176. See also May 26, and June 2, 1662.

June 7 The Indian massacre known as the Second Esopus War was begun on this date. The Indians made "an unexpected, sudden attack" on the settlers near Esopus (now Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.), attended by murder and arson. It was timed to take place when but few men were in the village of Wilkwyck, while they were at work in the fields. In this village twelve dwellings were burned, eighteen persons, men, women, and children, were murdered, and ten others were carried off into captivity. The new village, afterwards called Hurley, was "burned to the ground and its inhabitants were" mostly taken prisoners or killed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 245-47, 256-57; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), IV: 27, ff.

8 "Freydijck Flippen," as mortgagee, having obtained a judgment against Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, asks the burgomasters for permission to levy on and sell "the brewing utensils" of Couwenhoven, but is told to submit his request to the full bench of the city court. This he did on the 12th, demanding by virtue of the judgment that the defendant's "brewing materials, hypothecated to his predecessor and subsequently to him," might "be sold by execution to obtain his pay therefrom." Couwenhove answered that he had no objection to the account, judgment, and mortgage, "but that some silverware" was in Flippen's hands "as a pledge," and that his dwelling-house and the brewery and its contents had already been "seized for sale on the 24 July next" for the satisfaction of creditors. Flippen expressed content, "on condition of getting the first money" from the sale; but the court adjudged that he should wait, "saving his action in case of preference or concurrence." On July 3, Flippen requested the court for an "act of authority to the Marshal to sell the dwelling house, brewery, brew vat and brewing apparatus of Jacob van Couwenhoven, mortgaged to Pieter Rudolphus, dec'd." and the court ordered the marshal "to put these in execution." On July 12, Couwenhoven told the court that the marshal had "lieden with him in Freyck Flippen's name to seize his brew kettle and brewing apparatus pledged to Freyck Flippen to sell them by execution." He was ordered to make his peace with Flippen.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 175; Rec. N. Am., IV: 256-57, 271-72, 282. Couwenhove's house was on the corner of the great canal and "Brouwers Straet" (now Broad and Stone Sts.), and the brewery was an adjoining house, with a well in the yard. See Castello Plan, II: 304 (Block N, Nos. 1 and 2).

Some persons having appropriated for their own use some of the fire-ladders which belong to the city, and having failed to return them, the burgomasters order the fire-wardens to institute a search for the missing ladders, and when found to "lock them up with the others at the prescribed place back of the City Hall and take good care of them." The fire-wardens are also authorized "to hire them out," on condition that the renter pay each time for the use of a ladder six stuivers for a repair fund.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 175-76.

Corneils van Ruyven, as provincial secretary, sends a circular letter to the magistrates of the villages in the environs of New Amsterdam, in which he tells them of the Indian ravages at Esopus and urges upon them the necessity of guarding and watching properly in their respective jurisdictions.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 248.

A roster of men in New Harlem fit for military service and the number of firearms, etc., received and available, is recorded by the schepens.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 39-40, 42-44 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

On this day, at an executive session of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam, the following minute is entered: "The wife of Hendrick Couturier appearing, she is told, the Burgomasters had learned, that she sold in retail; therefore she is bound to purchase the Burgherright. She answers, it was given to her husband by the Director General [Petrus Stuyvesant]: asked, whether she had not given something for it to the General, she says, her husband has painted the portrait of his Honour and drawn pictures of his sons."—Executive Minutes of the Burgomasters, in Min. of Orph. Court, II: 176-77. She wrote her name "Elisabet Couturier," in Records of Transports, Book A, 1673-1675, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Her husband, sometimes called "Sieur Hendrick Couturier," was at this time a "merchant at New Amstel on the South [Delaware] River."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 56.

The reference to the portrait of Stuyvesant is important; it was recognized by Mr. Paltsits in 1912, and was pointed out in the Iconography, I: 95-96, as a "hitherto unnoticed reference," being "the earliest mention of portrait painting in what is now the state of New York." The probability of the known portrait of Stuyvesant owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. being the identical portrait painted by Couturier was also suggested. See July, 1768, for Du Simithiere's note about the Stuyvesant portrait, then in his son's house in New York.

New information on this subject has recently been brought to light by Dr. A. Bredius. At a meeting of the literary section of the Koninklijke Akademie van Wetenschappen, in Amsterdam, on June 2, 1919, he read a paper on "Two unknown painters," one of them being "Hendrick Couturier de Jooge" (a name spelled variously in the records), from which a full abstract is given herewith. The younger Couturier was the son of a father with the same given name, who distinguished himself by "de Oude" or senior. According to the denizens' book of the city of Leyden, the father came "from the land of Limburch," and was a linen-drapeer. The son was recorded as a "young man from Leyden," when undoubtedly he was born, although absolute proof is lacking, because the baptismal registers of the Walloon congregation are incomplete for the period required, though they contain, in 1628 and 1629, the baptismal records of other children of these parents. On Jan. 8, 1648, a record was made at Leyden of the contractual relations and marriage of the younger "Heyndrick Couturier," painter (Schilder), "young man of Leyden, living on the Bierkay," with "Lysbeth Coppin," "young woman from Valenchijs [Valenciennes], living at de Oude

- 1663 Chingel" (Oude Singel, at Leyden). The record made in the Walloon Church book calls him "Henri Couturier, peintre de Leyde." June 12 Also in the year 1648, the St. Lucas Guild of Leyden was founded, and one of the first names enrolled was that of Couturier. On Nov. 17, 1648, as "Sr. Hendrick Couturier de Jonge," and as a camelot or grosgrain cloth manufacturer (groff geynreder), he is recorded as making, before a notary, a mutual testament with his wife, "Elysa-beth Coppin," their home being "on the Coepoortgracht," in Leyden. On Sept. 6, 1649, he hired a house and lot in Leyden, from the organist Eustatius Parisi, but before the end of that year he had "left the city," as is registered against his name in the roll of the St. Lucas Guild.—Verslagen en Mededeelingen. Afdeling Letterkunde. 5<sup>e</sup> Reeks, Deel IV (1919-20), 363-70. See also Addenda.
- 14 On account of the Indian war at the Esopus, "most of the soldiers in garrison" at New Amsterdam having been sent to Wiltwyck (now Kingston), it becomes necessary for the burgomasters to provide a proper watch over the city, and they therefore direct the captains and principal officers of the trainbands or militia to see to it "that henceforth every evening a non-commissioned officer with a sufficient number of men with hand and side arms" shall "go on guard for the night at the Land gate," and that sentries shall be posted and the rounds made until further orders are issued.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 178. On June 22, Lodowyc Pos, "the Marshall, issued to each Burger Company fifty pounds of powder, altogether one hundred and fifty," for the three companies.—Ibid., II: 179. The rattle-watch or night police was thus superseded by the train-bands. See July 10, 1663.
- 15 In a letter to the magistrates of Fort Orange, Stuyvesant mentions the Indian depredations at Esopus, and says he "arrived in the village of Wiltwyck [now Kingston] at about 6 o'clock" (on the previous day); that he intended going to Fort Orange to bring about the ransom of "the forty-five captured women and children," held by the Esopus savages through help from either the Mohawks or the Senecas. But he could not find a ship and, moreover, was forced to change his plans, he says, because the yachts going to Manhattan, by "bringing the pitiful tidings . . . would throw everything into dismay there." He felt obliged on that account to hasten his return to Manhattan and "make there arrangements" for the relief of Esopus. He also gave orders that henceforth no yacht should sail up or down the Hudson River "by itself, unless well manned, to prevent possible surprises."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 249-50. On June 19, another order required that all yachts coming from the north "must touch at Esopus, to get news from there, under a penalty of 50 guilders" for dereliction.—Ibid., XIII: 254.
- 16 The people on Staten Island are informed by the provincial council concerning the recent depredations by the Indians at Esopus, and are reassured as to the good will of the savages about them, yet are urged to be on their guard and to "keep good watch"; also, two soldiers are sent to them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 248.
- 17 Stuyvesant and the council determine to use the Mohawks in ransoming from the Esopus Indians captives in their hands, and to pursue "the deceitful and treacherous nation" (Esopus Indians), until revenged.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 252.
- 18 The provincial authorities name commissioners to manage the enclosing with palisades of the settlement of Gemoenepe (now Jersey City).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 252.
- 19 The court of burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam considers a "petition of the beer tapsters," who ask permission to "sell the Vaan [4 mangel or about 5 quarts] of beer for sixteen stivers" (32 cents). The court allows them to sell at "fourteen stivers and no more."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 260. On the 26th, the court ordered the schout "to take strict attention to this and to impose a fine fixed thereon upon the tapsters, who take more than fourteen stivers for the vaan of beer."—Ibid., IV: 268-69. But on Oct. 9, the tavern-keepers petitioned the provincial council for leave to charge 16 st. and this was granted.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 253.
- 21 The inhabitants of New Netherland are warned by proclamation "to be cautious in making use of the Public Roads and to travel only in parties of 4 or 5 persons, and provided with proper arms." The precaution was necessary on account of the Indian massacres at the Esopus, and the consequent "condition of the country."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 444.
- 22 Lodowyc Pos, who has been captain of the rattle-watch or night police, is now in command of three burger companies of militia, with the title of "Marshall" or provost marshal. On July 10, four members of the rattle-watch were summoned before the burgomasters and informed that the "Trainbands," or three burger companies, had "taken the place of the Rattle-watch;" therefore these men entered the service in the militia.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 179-80.
- 23 Stuyvesant, in a handbill issued at Hempstead, promises "free plunder and all the savages, whom they could capture," in order "to induce some of the English to take part in the expedition to the Esopus."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 259.
- 25 Stuyvesant and the council, at Fort Amsterdam, issue a proclamation calling for volunteers for "an offensive and defensive war against the . . . Esopus savages," enlistment to be "for a year or a year and a half or longer, until the same shall be destroyed." The usual soldier's pay is offered, also "free plundering," possession of captured Indians, "exemption from tithes for 6 years," and compensation for injuries and loss of eyes or limbs.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 259-60.
- 26 Marten Cregier informs the city court that he has been favoured by Stuyvesant and the council "with the Captain-Lieutenancy in the service of the Honble West India Company," and therefore now comes "to take his leave of the Bench of Burgomasters and Schepens of the City and at the same time to deliver to Burgomaster van Cortlant the City Seal and the Key of the Chest of Deposits." On July 3, the city court resolved "to invite, by the Court messenger in the name of Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens, for next Thursday [July 5], at nine o'clock in the forenoon," thirteen of the substantial men of the city, men who had been former burgomasters or schepens, to gather at "the City Hall, in the manner of a Common Council (Vroetschap) . . . to lay before them the letter" of Stuyvesant and the council, "and to deliberate together and consider, whether 25 @ 30 men could not be encouraged to serve in time of need as a reinforcement to this or other place requiring assistance, on receipt of five guilders per day for the expedition, and in addition the privilege and benefit of exemption from watch, chimney money and tenths for the term of six years; and to hear their advice thereupon." The city bench, moreover, in view of Cregier's resignation as a burgomaster, and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven's resignation (on July 3) from the office of schepen, to join Cregier's company as lieutenant, deemed it expedient that these vacancies should be filled. The court made double nominations in the usual manner, on July 3, and the two places were filled on the 6th by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 268, 273-77. The letter of Stuyvesant and the council referred to above (dated July 2—see text ibid., IV: 274-76) was inspired by the Indian troubles at Esopus and a fear of further Indian depredations in other villages, or even on Manhattan Island. The city fathers and former burgomasters and schepens met in common council on July 5 (q. v.).
- 27 Schout Tonemman asks the city court to condemn Lysbet Auckers, who has "presumed to sell and tap with unstamped whole and half mutsjes [a mutsje =  $\frac{1}{2}$  of a bottle] and with a beer can, found to be under size, thereby abusing and affronting Jan Jellissen and bystanders, saying she will not let them stamp any more than she pleases and also to be no more obliged to use, than what she daily makes use of." For "her stiffneckedness, unmarked measures and under sized can," the schout demands she be fined 25 guilders and costs, "on condition of allowing the unstamped cans, mutesj and half mutesj in her house to be marked, on a fine thereunto affixed" (sic). She replies that "the can belongs to Paulus Heimaos and that he placed it in her house, and that she locked up the unstamped mutesj, with which she has not tapped." The court orders her "to prove that the seized can belongs to Paulus Heimaos and that she has no other than stamped measures in her house or to make them unserviceable."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 265-66. On Oct. 23, she was again hailed before the court, as "Lysbet Ackermans," charged with having "tapped brandy for two soldiers and beer for two Indians on Sunday." She admitted having drawn beer for the Indians, but said "it was before the sermon," and that she "was not aware of the ordinance." She denied tapping brandy "for the soldiers at this time." She was fined ten guilders.—Ibid., IV: 320.
- 27 Proposals are made by Stuyvesant and the council at Fort Amsterdam to sachems of the Hackensack, Nyack, Staten Island, and other Indians in an alliance against the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 261-62.
- 27 Warning is given "that about 20 to 25 Esopus savages have 1663 left their fort 3 or 4 days ago," intending "to come down here [about Manhattan] and get prisoners or kill some Dutchmen." June 27 People are cautioned, therefore, not to go into the fields or along roads, unless in company.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 261.

30 Burgomaster Martin Cregier is commissioned by Stuyvesant and the council as "Captain-Lieutenant over all our military, to command the same agreeably to the instructions already given or hereafter to be given, to drill, to march them up and down and have them commanded, drilled and marched up and down by other, his subaltern officers, as the situation and circumstances of affairs shall require it for the best of the Company and the greater safety of the country," and to have full direction of the military affairs when Stuyvesant, the "Captain-General," is absent. Cregier takes the oath and receives his "provisional instructions."

At the same time the oath is taken by Lieutenant Nicholas Stillwell, and by Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, "Captain-Lieutenant of a detachment of natives [Indians] and volunteers." These officers, and "the oldest Sergeant Christian Niessen," constitute a "Council of War," which has the decision in "all matters of war as well in sending out parties as concerning the expedition [against the Esopus Indians] in general," by a plurality vote, and, in case of a tie, Cregier has an extra vote to settle the matter. The council of war is "directed to use all possible precautions in sending out parties for the protection of the coming harvest and the cattle, to send out as frequently and in as good order and with all precautions as many parties" as seem to be desirable, without jeopardy to the protection of Fort Amsterdam, and to make a detailed report of occurrences and requirements to the director-general and council.

Cregier arrived at the Esopus Kill on July 4, with reinforcements. Stillwell and Van Couwenhoven arrived, with the troops they had been able to assemble, on the evening of the 9th. Cregier remained in the Esopus country until Nov. 17, when he returned to Manhattan, leaving about 60 soldiers under the command of Ensign Niessen; and on the afternoon of Dec. 19 he left Manhattan Island again and arrived at Wiltwijck about noon of the 22d. He returned to Manhattan on the last day of the year, and reached New Amsterdam about noon of Jan. 3, 1664. The return voyage was attended by flood and ice drifts.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 268-73; and Cregier's very important Journal of the Esopus war, 323-54.

4 On account of the Indian uprising, the provincial government, on June 26, appointed July 4 and the first Wednesday of each succeeding month as days of fasting and prayer throughout New Netherland. In New Amsterdam the proclamation thereof was made in front of the city hall on June 30.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, Rec. N. Am., IV: 269.

5 A common council (Vroetschap) is convened at the city hall of New Amsterdam, consisting of the city bench and thirteen invited former burgomasters or schepens, at which it is agreed "to perform every duty, to enrol for the service of this City some people, as many as twenty @ five and twenty men; during these troubles [Indian massacres] or at most for one year to be employed at and sent as a reinforcement to this or any place reduced to stress by the Indians; then whereas a considerable sum of money is requisite thereunto, and the City Treasury cannot supply so much to defray the same, it is therefore expedient to take up some money on interest from the Commonalty on a/c of the City, which it will be permitted not only to get but also to discharge, unless the R<sup>t</sup> Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and Councillors . . . shall please to benefit this City for ever with the income of the half weigh scales [i. e., half the receipts of the weigh-house, the city having formerly been granted one half, and the provincial government having retained the other half] and the Ferry to this side of the river," being the ferry from Brooklyn. A committee of two is appointed, one burgomaster and one schepen, to communicate this resolution to Stuyvesant and the council the next day.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 276, 277. See June 26 and July 10, 1663.

From Wiltwijck (now Kingston), Capt. Martin Cregier writes to Stuyvesant and the council, informing them that his contingent numbers "about 130 men bearing arms, all counted except the negroes," and that he "cannot bring much more than 100 men bearing arms into the field." He asks that "the ordered goods" be sent at "the first opportunity," for "we cannot," he says, "get anything here, it must all be brought from the Manhattans." Not only supplies were furnished from Manhattan Island, but the grain raised in the Esopus region had to be sent down to be ground, "on account of little water" at that place.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 273.

A call for volunteers for the defense of New Amsterdam is issued by the provincial government.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 250.

On July 2, a circular letter was sent by the provincial council to the several towns of the province, urging upon them watchfulness and defense at the present conjuncture of affairs, due to the Indian troubles, and requiring them to send delegates to a provincial meeting to be held at New Amsterdam on the 6th. A similar letter was sent to the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam. The delegates were convoked on the day named; but, on the 10th, the delegates from Amersfoort (Flatlands), Gravesend, Midwout (Flatbush), New Utrecht, and Brukelken wrote to Stuyvesant and the council that they were ready to defend their neighbours on Long Island from attack, but refused to cross the river to New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 249; Rec. N. Am., IV: 275-76.

10 Various members of the rattle-watch or night police are informed by the burgomasters "that the trainbands have taken the place of the Rattlewatch," and they are asked if they will "be willing to go on an expedition in the service of the City," in case trouble arises from Indians on Manhattan "or in the surrounding villages." The men agree to enlist, on condition of being "rewarded if wounded"; are furnished with hand and side arms, and promise "to turn out by day or night upon the command of the Burgomasters or the officers."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 179-80. See June 14, 1663; June 26, 1663; July 5, 1663.

Stuyvesant and the council write to Councillor Johan de Decker at Beverwyck: "We have renewed the peace with the savages around here [Manhattan]; if the heart is as good as the mouth, then we hope for a good result."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 279; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 302.

11 Skippers of sloops sailing on the Hudson River are ordered by a provincial edict of this date "to apprehend, if possible, all Indians" who come aboard their vessels "between the Daas Kamer and Catskill," and then to deliver them as prisoners at New Amsterdam or Esopus, in order that they may be used as guides as occasion requires. Those who deliver up as prisoners "any of the Esopus Indians or their adherents," who are at war with the Dutch, are promised 100 guilders in wampum for each Indian captive. The "Dans Kamer," a dancing ground of the Indians, was on a plateau adjoining the rocky point at the head of Newburgh Bay, north of the present city of Newburgh.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 444-45; Ruttenber, Indian Geog. Names (1906), 138-39.

19 As liquor is being sold to Indians, contrary to statute, and as the existing Esopus Indian war makes the sale in the province the more dangerous, since it invites the peril of other Indian disturbances, another law is now passed, directing all magistrates of inferior courts in the towns to enforce strictly the laws hitherto passed on the subject, and to enact in their respective jurisdictions such orders as they judge to be "best and most proper for the suppression of that scandalous traffic."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 446-47. For summary of such laws, see June 18, 1643.

20 "Seventeen savages" come "into the Port" (Amsterdam), and state that they live "on the East end of Long-Island," and offer their services "to go also into the fight against the Esopus savages." The offer is accepted by the provincial government, and they are asked when they will come; they answer, that they will first "wait for news" how matters stand "at the Esopus."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 280.

26 The sachem of the Wickquaskeek (Indians of Westchester County) comes "of his own accord with his brother" to the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, and says "he was warned by a Wapping savage that the Esopus savages would come down with 40 or 50 men in about 5 or 6 days, to kill them and the Dutch of New Haerlem, Hasimut, Hoboocken, Gemoeoepea and the new village" (Noortwijck). He says also that "therefore he has come to take refuge with his people near New-Haerlem, he gives notice of it and why they come, so that the people of New-Haerlem may not get frightened." He says, further, that "he has warned the inhabitants of New-Haerlem and requests that we give notice to the people on the other side of it and on the General's bowery," that is Stuyvesant's farm.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 282.

30 Aegidius Luyck, rector of the Greek and Latin school in New Amsterdam, petitions Stuyvesant and the council for a salary (see May, 1662). His request is referred to the directors at Amsterdam, to whom, on Aug. 9, Stuyvesant recommended that

- 1663 July 30 Luycx be allowed the same salary that Curtius had received (see July 12, 1661).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 251. See Aug. 16. Prof. Kilpatrick declares that Stuyvesant "deserves special mention for his individual interest in education. No appeal for better educational facilities ever met refusal from him."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 85.
- Ag. 6 15 Parliament passes a second Navigation Act on July 27/Aug. 6. Before the provincial council in Fort Amsterdam there appear chiefs of the Mianisk, accompanied by the chief of the Hackensacks, and renew the peace with the Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 289-90.
- 16 Aegidius Luycx petitions Stuyvesant and the council "to be confirmed in the rectorship of the Latin school, with a salary [see July 30], or given leave to return to Holland to solicit it."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 251. The burgomasters feel compelled, at this juncture, to make an appeal in behalf of the schoolmaster, who has "hitherto zealously instructed in the Latin tongue the youths of this and other places, in which they have made good progress to the satisfaction of their parents." After deploring the delay of the provincial government in deciding upon an "honorarium for his services," they request that an adequate allowance be given him, "so that the petitioner's zeal may not abate to the detriment of you and our children and of the youths of this and other places but may increase in the length of time to the glory and renown of this City among our neighbours and elsewhere." Stuyvesant and the council agreed "that the continuation and promotion of the Latin school" is "necessary," but assert that it is customary in Holland that such services be paid for by the city. They authorize the city fathers "to give to said Domine Luycx such a salary" as they consider right, of which the council will, provisionally, pay one half, "subject to the approval of the Lords Directors."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 180-81. Luycx is engaged forthwith at a yearly salary of 1,000 guilders in wampum.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 251. Prof. Kilpatrick points out that "wampum at this time had only half the value of coin," so that the amount was equivalent to the 500 fl. which was paid to Curtius (see April 10, 1659).—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 106.
- 27 Capt. Cregier is requested by Stuyvesant and the council to send Lieut. Van Couwenhoven with 60 soldiers from the Esopus "to be stationed here in the villages of New-Haerlem, Bergen and elsewhere," because of anticipated trouble from the Wappinghs; the request was renewed more urgently two days later.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 293.
- " Capt. Cregier, at the Esopus, having asked for surgical assistance from Stuyvesant and the council, is answered: "We understand the necessity of a good surgeon perfectly well, but you know as well as we, how difficult it is to obtain one; Master Haas [Kierstedel] is a burgher [of New Amsterdam] and besides cannot be spared here without detriment to the whole place and all the inhabitants. You and we know, what the other two are. We see for the present no better expedient, than that the sick and wounded, whom the sawbones there [Wiltwijck] can neither help nor cure, he sent down by every chance."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 292.
- 28 Hendrick Willemsen, the baker, brings suit in the city court against Hendrick Jansen, a smith, demanding damages from the defendant because his property on Bridge St., below the corner of Broad St., has no drain, and this, Willemsen alleges, causes water to run into his cellar adjoining Jansen's property. He says that during a previous heavy rain he had four and a half feet of water in his cellar. Jansen admits he has no drain; whereupon Willemsen informs the court "that Nicolaes the Cartman offered the deft. to lay a drain to conduct the water into the street through his cellar." Although the schout recommends that Jansen be fined 50 guilders, the court simply orders an inspection of the place.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 290-91.
- 31 Hans Stein, Cornelis Jansen, Adolf Pietersen, Sibout Claessen, and Hendrick Jansen van der Vin are appraised by the city court of the necessity of making up the sheet-piling along the strand of the East River from the city hall to the new bridge. Stein is finally exempted, but the others are required to pay the sum of 125 guilders for the work.—Original unprinted manuscript of a portion of the minutes of the burgomasters and schepens, found among the records of the city clerk. If the reference to the new bridge in this order refers to the bridge over the graft in line with Bridge St., the location on the East River would be from Coenties Alley to Broad St.; but if it is to the recently completed pier, the location would be from Coenties Alley to Moore St.
- The provincial council resolves that Stuyvesant should go to Boston for the purpose of coming to some agreement, if possible, with the commissioners of the United Colonies, respecting the boundary controversy. He is still in New Amsterdam on the 21st, but on Sept. 24th he writes a letter to the vice-director of Curaçao, which is dated from Boston. In this letter he gives an account of his reception at Boston and the place of his residence there.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 252, 303. See also, regarding his visit, Hollandse Mercurius (Jan., 1664), 11; Josselyn, Voyage to N. E., 194.
- " The porters of New Amsterdam are ordered by the provincial authorities not to carry any beer or wine from any house without a permit from the farmer of the excise.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 252.
- " The burgomasters order that "all grain and lime" be measured by the official measurer.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 182.
- " The burgomasters resolve, "that the Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens in office" shall "receive yearly the sum of 25 fl. instead of being exempted from the excise on wine, beer and meat."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 182.
- 10 From nominations made by the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on the 7th, Govert Loockermans is appointed by the provincial council an orphan-master in place of Johannes van Brugh, who has gone to Holland.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 252; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 181-82.
- " First news of Capt. Cregier's victory over the Esopus Indians is received by the council at Fort Amsterdam from a Hackensack Indian, and "a new coat" is promised to him as a reward for his tidings.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 294.
- " Stuyvesant and his council observe that the Sunday laws are being treated as if they applied only to "keeping of half the Sabbath;" so now an ordinance is passed commanding "that not only a part but the whole of the Sabbath day" shall be kept. "From sunrise to sunset "no ordinary labor" is to be performed, "much less drinking-clubs allowed to sit;" and it prohibits "all extraordinary exercises, such as Gaming, Boating, Riding in cars or wagons, Fishing, Fowling, Running and roving in search of Nuts and Strawberries, Trading with Indians, or any such like, and, among the rest, the too unrestrained and excessive Playing, Shouting and Screaming of children in the Streets and Highways, on the fine of the upper garment, or six guilders (according to the rate of the counting house) for the first offense; double the sum for the second time, and for the third time to be exemplarily corrected on the body." This law was transmitted by the provincial authorities to the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on Sept. 15.
- In March, 1664, the city fathers had not yet made publication of the act as directed, and Stuyvesant notified them to do so, asking "the reason such was not done." He was told "that the Board found themselves agrieved in some particulars." When the matter came up in the city court on March 18, the act was again read and considered, and the court adjudged "the observance thereof to be highly necessary," but declared it would "not dare to publish such a Placard as divers sections thereof" were "too severe and too much opposed to Dutch liberties." In May, several persons had been arrested for Sabbath violations and a test case was in hand, so the city bench requested a conference with the provincial council to settle "some points" in the act which were "in direct opposition to the custom of Holland."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 448-49; Rec. N. Am., IV: 301-2; Vj: 38-39, 60; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 252.
- 13 While Stuyvesant is "on the eve of leaving for Boston," the council receives a letter from Capt. Cregier "regarding the success and the advantage" which he has gained with his troops over the Esopus Indians. The council promises to send reinforcements and supplies to Cregier.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 295.
- 14 Teunis Cray is appointed measurer of apples, onions, and turnips, as well as harbour-master of New Amsterdam.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 182. Fernow's translation of wuyen, i. e., wijen, was queried by him as "carrots," which is incorrect.
- 20 The chief of the Marsepings appears in the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam in regard to furnishing some of his savages to aid the Dutch against the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 295-96.
- 24 Stuyvesant writes from Boston to his vice-director at Curaçao, informing him of the Dutch victory over the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 297.

1663 For reference to wampum in a letter from the directors at St. 27 Amsterdam to Stuyvesant, see Jan. 20, 1664.

Oct. The provincial council votes to raise 4,000 guilders, Holland 11 currency, for public purposes, on the security of four brass cannon in Fort Amsterdam. Two days later, a contract was made with Cornelis Steenwyck to advance 12,000 guilders in wampum on the above bill of exchange and security.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254.

13 Cornelis van Ruyven, Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, and John Laurence are commissioned by the provincial council to proceed to Hartford, there to endeavour to procure a settlement of the boundary between New Netherland and Connecticut. They left New Amsterdam at sunrise on the 15th and arrived at Hartford on the afternoon of the 18th.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254, 304.
 Their journal is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 385, ff.

15 Cornelis Steenwyck reports "in the morning" to the council at Fort Amsterdam that, on the previous night, "at about 9 o'clock," Secretary Cornelis van Ruyven was at his door to tell him "what a Northern savage had related at Jan de Schilder's house, namely, that the balance of the Esopus savages had fled with their prisoners to the Wappiogs, where also the Mahicanders, Kiehtawaugh, Wiechquaeskeck and other [Hudson] River savages had gone." Before the session of the council is ended, confirmation comes in letters sent from the Esopus and from Fort Orange. It is reported that these Indians have had a war dance "and made a plan" to make common cause against the Dutch as soon as their corn has been gathered, by sending down "500 or 600 men strong, to destroy first all the Dutch plantation over the River at Hoboocken, Hasi-mus, the corn-land and then the Manhats Island, to burn, to kill everybody or take prisoners, whom they could get and that it should be done in a few days." At noon, the council got the confirmation, was greatly concerned, and deferred deliberation until the afternoon, when some of the city fathers were to be present on invitation to deliberate with the council, for the matter was deemed to be of "very great importance." When the joint meeting assembled in the afternoon, "the advices received from the Esopus were read" to a majority of the burgomasters and schepens present, "and then a frank statement was made of the present situation of the country and its perilous state, of the impossibility to redress it, unless either by subsidies or by negotiation of drafts on the Fatherland money could be raised for the maintenance of the too small military force, but neither counsel nor help could be thought of or proposed by them; however it was resolved for the present to send some troops to protect New-Haerlem . . .
 and two yachts, each manned by 10 or 12 men up the Northriver [Hudson] to prevent the designs of the savages and divert them as much as possible; meanwhile also to warn the villages in the country around . . . that they must be on their guard;" and
 "16 or 20 men were sent in the City's lighter to New-Haerlem, to remain there in the river and to prevent as far as possible the savages from crossing over to Loog-Island." The two yachts designed for the Hudson River were put in motion, and Lieut. Van Couwenhoven was given particular instructions how to operate with his command.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 299-301. See Oct.
 22, 1663.

22 The city court of burgomasters and schepens addresses a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, in which they recall that the latter, some while ago (see Oct. 15, 1663), brought to their attention "the very dangerous position and situation of the country, as well in regard to the perilous war with the barbarous Esopus nation and their allies, as the menacing anticipations and encroachments of neighbours together with the already mutinous revuls of some English subjects, and that, for the prevention and farther resistance, not only advice, but deeds and means" were "highly requisite and necessary." They say that they are "well inclined and bound," as a body corporate, as well as individually, to give the "aid of their poor council and small abilities for the benefit of the common wealth and more especially of this City;" but that they represent "only one member and the danger" is a concern of "the Province in general." On this account, they judge it "to be very necessary and advantageous that some Delegates be convoked and called as well from this City as from the other surrounding places and villages, also especially from the town of Beverwyck and Colonie of Rensselaerswyck to deliberate and consult together under your Honors' wise direction and higher authority for the good of the commonwealth;" they request Stuyvesant and the council to order the convoking of such an assembly "as soon as possible," so that whatever is "found most advantageous for the country" may "then be determined for the general peace, quiet and union." Oct. 22

The apostil of the provincial authorities thereon, dated the 26th, declared: "Though the Director General and Council of N. Netherland find the request consistent with justice and consider the convocation of the Magistrates mentioned herein as necessary, yet bearing in mind the inconvenience of the approaching winter and that the delegates sought as well from the Colonie of Rensselaers Wyck as from the Town of Beverwyck cannot possibly come down and return before the winter, the Director General and Council would find it more convenient to call for the present occasion the Magistrates of the adjoining towns and hamlets, and that what by them, with the knowledge of the Director General and Council, may be proposed and advised for the public good may be in scriptis, to be communicated, should time and circumstances permit, to the Courts of the Colonie of Rensselaers Wyck and of the Towns of Bever Wyck and Wild Wyck and to bear their advice thereon."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 318-20; Van Rensselaar Bouvier Manuscripts, 784-85.

On Oct. 29, the presiding burgomaster presented to the city court the answer of the provincial government to the aforesaid petition, and stated that he had "called together the Court to conclude, in pursuance to the answer, on the points and articles necessary to be proposed for the good of this Province at the General Assembly to be convoked . . . also to commission by plurality of votes two persons from the Board to attend the Assembly." The city court then agreed upon the following articles, viz.—(1) "To demand assistance against the savages;" (2) "To take up the matter of "boundaries between us and the English;"
 (3) "To send Delegates to Fatherland," to make their demands to the Directors at Amsterdam for assistance and, failing with them,
 "to address themselves to the Lords the High and Mighty States General." Burgomaster Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Schepen Jacob Kip were qualified as the two delegates of the city to the general assembly, and were instructed "to propose their articles and points."—Ibid., IV: 325. The provincial council agreed, on Oct. 27, to a general assembly and sent out circular letters on the 29th, convoking the same on Nov. 1.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 254.

On the day named (Nov. 1), the delegates met at New Amsterdam. They sent an address to Stuyvesant and the council, in which they recommended the appointment of agents, in Holland, to procure a settlement of the boundary controversy with Connecticut and free trade with the neighbouring English colonies. The general assembly remained in session until the 3d. See Oct. 22 and Dec. 11.

The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, and the delegates from the adjacent towns, address a remonstrance to the directors of the West India Co., the more important parts of which may be summarized as follows: In behalf of the inhabitants of the province, they refer to "the depreciated value of returns, not only causing here an excessive rise and dearness of wares imported into this country from Patria, but also the departure hence of several families; and, consequently, a depreciation in houses and real estate, the prosperity and hopes of agriculture alone remaining." 2

Certain means for the preservation of the people are necessary, as vouchsafed by the "Freedoms and Exemptions" published by the directors; namely, "reasonable protection, peaceable use and enjoyment of the bona fide property of the lands;" protection "against all intestine and foreign wars, invasion and violence;"
 and the fulfillment of the promise of the directors "to work out and secure commission and patent, in due form," whereby their "real and legitimate jurisdiction over this Province and its territories could be shown, demonstrated and justified," and to obtain "from his Royal Majesty of England, an absolute and definite settlement of the Boundary with his subjects, the English Nation, our neighbors here, and the ratification and approbation thereof."

They aver: "This province ought to be reinforced by a requisite number of good soldiers;" but they have been disappointed. "The consequences whereof, so repeatedly placed before your eyes and submitted to you, are at present palpable, and make the Remonstrants indeed feel the licentious, bloody and impending ruinous effects thereof." These effects are seen in the massacre at Esopus. ". . . it is considered that the Remonstrants, on the one side, stand here between barbarous nations, and are bounded

- 1663 on the other by a powerful neighbor who keeps quarreling with Nov.
Nov. this State about the limits [boundaries]. Thus the good people 29 are thereby brought and reduced to a condition like unto that of 2 a flock without a shepherd, a prey to whomsoever will seize his advantage to attack it."
Regarding the aggressions of their English neighbours, they say that nation has "found out a way neglected by your Honors, to provide and arm itself with a coat of mail in the shape of an uo-limited patent and commission which it lately obtained from his Majesty of England [see April 23, 1662; March 24, 1663]; . . .
for experience in State affairs teaches and abundantly exemplifies, that the stroogest are commonly in the right and that the feeble, ordinarily, must succumb."
The eventual outcome was already apparent: "The total loss of this Province is infallibly to be expected and anticipated." They report: "It being objected and pleaded by the abovenamed English, as a pretext for their designs, that the real right and property of this Province and its territories were not duly proved and justified on your Honors' part by proper commission and patent from their High Mightinesses." The document closes with a plea for relief and help as indicated, and is signed by delegates of the city of "Amsterdam," and the villages of Amersfoort, Breuckelen, Midwout, Haarlem, Utrecht, Boswyck, and Bergen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 477-79 (where full text is given). See also summary under Oct. 22; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254.
3 The general assembly (Geneene Landt Vergadering) chooses and commissions Jan Baptist van Rensselaer, patroon of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, and Johannes Pietersen van Brughe, former schepen of New Amsterdam, as the official agents to carry to Holland the remonstrance of Nov. 2 (q. v.), with other papers, and provides funds for their expenses. The documents in this case are in Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 785-89. See also Oct. 22 and Dec. 11.
4 Andries Huddle dies. He had been in New Netherland since 1629, and was one of the earliest official surveyors of the province, as well as among its earliest land patentees, serving the government in many high places of trust for 34 years. While in process of removing with his family to Maryland, he arrived on Nov. 1, 1664, at Apoquenaming, in the present state of Delaware, "and died there of a violent fever on the 4th."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 81 (note); XII: 446.
8 Marie Taine (or de Tene), widow of Philippe Casier, and David Uzille, sell to Joost van Oblinus their houses, barn, land, and garden, situate in New Haarlem, contained in three parcels, one lying north of the village, and the other two on Van Keulen's Hook, with the meadows thereunto belonging.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 47 (N. Y. Pub. Library).
15 The chief of the Wickquaeskeek (Indians of Westchester County) comes to Fort Amsterdam, to request "for himself and his people permission to fish unmolested near the village of New-Haerlem." This is granted "on condition that they shall not come armed into the neighbourhood of the Dutch." To serve as means of identifying them, passes are issued, containing "the seal of the Company impressed in wax on little cards," to be shown to the Dutch whom they meet. Twelve such passes are issued, four each for the Wickquaeskeek (dwelling between the Hudson and Byram's Rivers), the Kitchiwan (Croton River), and the Reckgawank (Haverstraw).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 303.
17 New Haarlem magistrates are appointed by the provincial council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 255.
21 Instructions are given to Lieut. Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, Sergeant Pieter Ebel, and Harmen Douwesen, "all three well versed in the savage tongue," to find out if the Wappings and Esopus Indians are well disposed to make peace, as has been reported.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 304-5.
29 Abuses are noticed with respect to leased bouwerijs or farms.
The owners allow the lessees the use of horses, oxen, ploughs, wagons, and other implements, but the lessees use them "also in the service of others and on other Lands, whereby not only the Horses, Cattle and implements" are abused and worn out, "but even the leased Bouwerijs and Lands" are neglected, "to the serious damage of the Lessors and Agriculture in general." To stop this cause for just complaints, the provincial government prohibits by law the use thereof on other than the specified land leased, unless such permission has been "expressly stipulated by written contract;" for violation, the act provides a forfeiture of four shepels of wheat for each day, in addition to what was earned by the lessee "by plowing, drawing of timber, &c.," to be divided equally between the owner and the fiscal.—Laws & Ord.
N. Neth., 450-51.
The supreme court of New Netherland gives judgment in favour of Timothy Gabry, vendue master, in his suit against the city clerk and city marshal of New Amsterdam, enjoining them from selling a certain class of property by public auction. It is held that all sales of property surrendered for the benefit of creditors shall be conducted by the provincial secretary or his deputy.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 255.
At a session of the schepens of New Haerlem, Joannes Ver-veelen is chosen by them to seek to obtain a voelster (precentor) for the town.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 48 (N. Y.
Pub. Library).
Dirck Klaisen and J. Vermeije request the schepens of New Haerlem for lots lying outside of the town's gate.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 48 (N. Y. Pub. Library).
On the afternoon of this day, Capt. Martin Cregier sails in the company's yacht on a voyage to the Newesingh (Navesink) Indians, and with him go Gvoert Lookermans, Jacques Corvelink, and Pieter Ebel, with ten soldiers, two sailors, and the sachem and another Indian of Staten Island. They warn certain Englishmen they meet there against presuming to buy land from the Indians without the consent of the Dutch provincial government of New Netherland. On Dec. 12, an agreement was made with chiefs of the Newesingh Indians for the purchase by the Dutch of all their unsold lands, and to prevent sale of the said lands to anybody else.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 314-17. On Feb. 16, 1664, the council determined to send an expedition of 20 to 24 men in a yacht to take possession of the country which was in danger of settlement by some Englishmen.—Ibid., XIII: 358.
Domingo Angola, a free negro, petitions the provincial council for the manumission of Christina, a baptized orphan daughter of Manuel Trumpeter and Anthonya, his wife, both of whom have died. The council grants the request, on condition that the West India Co. is to be furnished with another negro slave in her place, or that 300 guilders be paid for her release. On Sept. 16, 1664, record was made of the payment of this sum for her freedom by Gvoert Lookermans. The petitioner, Domingo, and his wife, Maykie, although free at this time, only received their certificates of manumission as the company's slaves on April 17, 1664.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 256, 264.
Albert Leendertsen receives a ground-brief for a lot at No. 13 and part of No. 15 Wall St., the westward part of the Wilks building being now on this site.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.
The chief of the Hackensack Indians comes to the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, to inform Stuyvesant that the Wappingh and Esopus Indians, and their allies, are "glad that the Dutch were willing to make at their request a peace with them."
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 314.
The provincial government issues a certificate in regard to coffering of half liberty upon certain of the negro slaves of the West India Co. on Manhattan Island.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 256.
Joost Goderus is dismissed from his office as head porter of the weigh-house at New Amsterdam, because he has stolen firewood, "a very prevalent practice among the poor of New Amsterdam." Goderus had been superseded by Barent Jacobsen Cool (or Kool) on Sept. 21.—Min. of Orph. Courts, II: 182-83;
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 256, 257.
Cornelis Steenwyck appears before the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam and is informed that, "pursuant to their unanimous resolution," he is "requested by the General Provincial Assembly [held Nov. 1-3] to proceed to Fatherland as Delegate from this Province, to lay the deplorable and sorrowful condition of this Province before the Directors with petition for redress pursuant to the writings to be given him therewith;"
as the ship "Gilded Star" is in port ready to sail, he is "requested to get himself ready, to repair thither in her in the aforesaid quality;" but Steenwyck demurs because "his circumstances at present" do "not permit it," yet offers to sail in another ship, in March or April of 1664, and "to do then all" that lies "in his power for the good of this Province."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 342. See Oct. 22 and Nov. 3.

1663 Stuyvesant, on behalf of the Amsterdam chamber of the West Dec. India Co., and in compliance with their order of Sept. 11 of this 22 year, cedes, transfers, and conveys to the burgoasters of old Amsterdam in Holland the "South [Delaware] river from the sea upwards to as far as the river reaches, on the east-side inland three leagues from the bank of the river, on the west-side as far as the territory reaches to the English Colony, with all streams, kils, creeks, ports, bays, and outlines belongiog thereto."—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, XII: 449.

28 Before Stuyvesant and the council at Fort Amsterdam appear chiefs of the Hackensack and Staten Island Indians, bringing the brother of the chief of the Wappings, requesting "two months more of armistice" for the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 320-21. The next day they returned and renewed their request, which was granted because of the difficulties in which the government found itself owing to English aggressions in Westchester, on Long Island, and in the country of the Newersings.—
Ibid., XIII: 321-22.

29 An armistice is made with the Esopus savages for a period of two months.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 322. On this day, also, Stuyvesant writes to Capt. Cregier at Esopus, informing him of the terms of the armistice and instructing him how to inform and regulate the people there under these conditions.—Ibid., XIII: 323.

30 Maria de Truix (Truix), wife of Jan Peock (Peeck), is prosecuted by the provincial council for selling brandy to Indians. At the same time, the council, due to this and other cases of infraction, promulgates an ordinance which demands the arrest of "the Indians who are found drunk on Sundays . . . and not to liberate them before they shall have paid one pound Flemish.
 But the Sachems shall be previously informed hereof," namely, of the order.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 257; *Laws & Ord.
 N. Neth.*, 451.

On Jan. 3, 1664, the fiscal lodged a complaint against Maria in the provincial council for selling liquor to Indians, no doubt in continuance of the original case brought up a few days before, and the council condemned her to pay a fine of 500 guilders and the costs of action, and to be banished from the Island of Manhattan.
 On Jan. 24, she begged the council, as "one of the oldest inhabitants of the city of New Amsterdam," to grant her a remission of the sentence and permit her to remove to Fort Orange (Albany).
 Four days later, the provincial authorities remitted her fine for the time being and allowed her to remove to Long Island.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 258, 259. The tavern was in the Smits Vly.—See July 24, 1666.

31 It is discovered that "furniture and cattle which the Indians plundered from divers Inhabitants and Boweries" during periods of Indian uprisings, as recently during the Esopus Indian war, were bought or bartered from the Indians by some of the inhabitants, which encouraged and afforded the Indians "to perpetrate more and more such Robberies and thefts, to the serious damage of the Farmers and of Agriculture." A law is passed prohibiting the purchase, barter, or trade of "any plundered or stolen Movables or Cattle from the Indians, unless information thereof" has been "previously given to the Director General and Council or to the Inferior Magistrates, each in his respective jurisdiction where such goods" are "offered for sale," and their consent is obtained.
 Anybody who violates the law is required to give up such stolen property to the rightful owner or to the court in their jurisdiction, to suffer all losses involved, and forfeit "in addition as a fine, as much as they shall have given the Indians for the purchased or bartered goods."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 452-53.

— Sometime before this year, a blockhouse was erected west of the present Church St. and south of Wall St. It is shown on Pl.
 10A, Vol. I. On Pl. 23-A, Vol. I, it is called "the Northwest Blockhouse."

— In this year, buccaners, led by Sir Henry Morgan, began their depredations on the colonies of Spain.

— The population of New Amsterdam, which numbered 1,000 souls in 1656 when surveyed by Capt. De Konink, now numbers 1,500, of whom less than 150 are male adults, the rest being women, and children under 18 years of age.—O'Callaghan, Hist. of New Netherland, II: 540, citing Albany Records, XVIII: 138; Holland Docs., XVI: 221.

A guard-house at the land gate was mentioned in a deed from 1664
 Hendrick Hendricksen to Martin Hoffmaag, dated Nov. 17, 1664.— Liber Deeds, B: 55 (New York). The words referring to the guardhouse are as follows: "A lot east of the High Street, having to the north the place where formerly the Court of Guard was kept."
 The site of this "Court of Guard" is the south-east corner of Wall St. and Broadway. When Hendrick Hendricksen bought the house and lot at this corner, May 30, 1658, no mention was made of the guard-house. It had therefore, apparently, not been built by 1658, and it was gone before Nov., 1664.

Neglect of fencing has led to daily complaints "by the Farmers of the great damage done to the planted and sowed fields, because such care and attention as ought to be taken of the Fences" have not been paid to them, and "the trespassing of Cattle in some Villages" has resulted in "entire plantations being "eaten up, destroyed and trodden under foot, to the serious damage of the proprietors and the detriment of Agriculture in general." Stuyvesant and his council now pass an ordinance in the hope of obviating a recurrence of these abuses, and order the appointment,
 "in all Villages, Hamlets and Settlements," of three fence viewers, who are required to examine the fences in their respective jurisdictions every two or three weeks, and to fine delinquents after due notification. A "proper Pound" is to be "conducted by the respective Inhabitants on the first fitting opportunity," but not later than the ensuing month of March, and any inhabitant has power "to take up and impound all Cattle found in Cornfields within a common fence," for which the impounder is to "receive from the Owner," before the impounded cattle are released, prescribed penalties for trespassing. Should an owner delay the redemption of his impounded cattle more than the second day after notice they are to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder by "the nearest Officer."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 453-54.

The provincial council orders a search to be made for the person of Lysbet Antonissen, a negress born in New Netherland and a slave belonging to Martin Cregier, who is suspected of having set fire to her master's house. She was examined before the council on Feb. 4, and the next day the company's fiscal made a formal complaint against her as an incendiary. She confessed her guilt on the 8th, and on the following day was sentenced to be chained to a stake, strangled, and then burnt. However, the council at once revoked this sentence, and directed instead that all preparations for strangling and burning her should be made, and that then, when about to go on with the execution, she should be pardoned and returned to her master.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 258, 259.

Jan Pietersen Slot receives a ground-brief for a parcel of land on the island of Manhattan, at Van Keulen's Hook, east of Pieter Jansen's land; west of Nicholas Meyer's; in breadth, 32 rods; "division line out of the road to the Creek south; contains 8 morgens, a corner (hoek) in the Great Valley lying over against No. 5, in common with Philip Cogie."—Liber HH-2: 130 (Albany). The number 5 referred to was the lot of the common lands of Harlem on Van Keulen's Hook, drawn in 1662 by Daniel Tourneur; lots 7, 8, and 9 were those drawn by Slot.—See Riker's Hist. of Harlem, 206.

On Dec. 25, 1663, the magistrates of the new village of Harlem petitioned the provincial council for the appointment of Johannis la Montagne, Jr., as clerk of their church and as schoolmaster. The council now appoints him to these offices.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 258. He accepted, and served until 1670.—Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools of N. Neth., etc., 133, 160, citing Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 269.

The following agreement is entered into this day between the Dutch commissioners of New Netherland and John Scott, "president of ye English on Long Island and Capt. John Youngs Comissioner for Connecticut," namely: "That ye English on Graves end flashing folstone Crafford, Newark & Hemstead doe still remain according to ye Now Settlement under the King of England

Theunissen was formerly a tapster.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 171. See, further, May 27, 1664.
- 23 An edict of the states-general, under the great seal, is issued, declaring the right of the West India Co. to plant colonies in America, and laying particular emphasis upon its jurisdiction in "the country called New Netherland." It avows the company's authority, derived from its charter of 1621, to settle the boundaries by the Hartford treaty of Sept. 19, 1650 (q. v.). This edict is a result of recent English aggressions, and by it the Dutch seek to stave off further encroachments.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 455-57; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 729-30.
- 24 The directors at Amsterdam resolve to allow some Huguenot families to proceed with an adventure from La Rochelle and other parts of France, in their own or other ships, to New Netherland, and to receive gratuitous grants of land there. They send the resolution to Stuyvesant, enclosed in a letter, which directs him to give every assistance to the new colonists upon their arrival.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 306. See Aug. 4.
- 26 Martin Cregier receives a ground-brief for substantially the same property as that conveyed by his ground-brief of May 18, 1643 (q. v.).
- 28 The new Huguenot village on Staten Island is granted an inferior court of justice by the provincial government, which names David de Marest, Pierre Billon, and Walraven Lutten as the first body of magistrates. Appeal is to the supreme court of director-general and council, "from all judgments exceeding Fifty guilders." The local court is also "authorized to enact proper Ordinances, [providing] that the Cornfields and Gardens are to be "carefully fenced, kept inclosed, and the broken fences properly repaired."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 458-59.
- 29 Schout Pieter Tonneman of New Amsterdam, in view of the approaching election of new members of the city bench, recommends the nomination of "such persons as make profession of religion, no opponents of the Superior or Inferior government, but peace loving and such as are fit for that office." The bench made nominations on Feb. 1, "in the presence of Cornelis van Ruyven," appointed by Stuyvesant and the council to be present on this occasion on behalf of the provincial government. Election by the latter took place on Feb. 2, after which public announcement was made to the commonalty, in front of the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., V: 15-18; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 259.
- Jan. 29 Stuyvesant addresses a representation, consisting of ten items, Feb. 8 to the provincial councillors, and to the schout and burgomasters of New Amsterdam, in regard to the iovation of the English on Long Island and the possibility of an attack on New Amsterdam. The schout and burgomasters, impressed by the "great importance" of the matter, communicate it to the schepens, and to Olloff Stevensen van Cortlandt and Allard Anthony, both former burgomasters, in order to obtain their advice. The representation relates to "summons and demand" made "first by letters" by the English at Hartford, and, "subsequently, by force of arms—first by one Jan Coo [John Coe] with a troop of about 80 @ 90 foot and horsemen in the English towns only on Long Island; afterward and recently by one Jan Scott [John Scott] with a troop of about 80 horse and also as many foot not only in the English, but also in the Dutch towns, on said Island." Stuyvesant adds that "no similar hostile proceeding" has "hitherto been made use of against these [parts]," but, "to prevent bloodshed and consequent greater mischiefs," efforts have "been made by embassies and written protests to bring matters to an accommodation," or at least to refer the whole matter to the lords of the states-general, as an international concern. But not much is expected of an agreement abroad. Opinion differs in New Netherland. Some praise the forbearance which the Dutch provincial government has shown, while others declare "the non-resistance and non-opposition by force and violence to be cowardice, scandal and insult"—a reprehensible conduct for the Dutch nation.
- The conferees advise resistance to any further invasion by John Scott, should he return in March, as he has threatened. They declare that the directors at Amsterdam should have made use of their assets, profits derived from duties in Holland and New Netherland during many years, by "enrolling and sending 2 @ 300 brave discharged soldiers" and by fortifying the city of New Amsterdam. Had provision made this provision for security, they have no doubt "but those who now revolt would have taken good care, knowing that we being strong enough would have given them plenty of trouble and reduced them by force of arms to obedience." This is not the case; but "every Burger" is "bound to defend his place within its walls," they say, while "the military or soldiery of the Company" serve "outside and the country and villages round about," wherever necessary, both against "the savage barbarians" and the English or any other nation which seeks to do injury.
- Stuyvesant had said that he thought the English were trying to provoke a quarrel ending in bloodshed, as a pretext to attack the Dutch villages with "fire and sword" and to plunder New Amsterdam. The conferees agree with him and describe the invaders as "a ragged troop," ready for pillage. They agree to defend their "lives and fortunes," and acquit themselves as well in "defending the Company" as they did "in the Year 1653, in the English War."—Rec. N. Am., V: 18, ff. See Feb. 20.
- " The fear of an English invasion of New Amsterdam leads to the consideration of its defences. Its "openness . . . along the water side, both along the East and North Rivers," is "notorious." Stuyvesant has asked the city conferees "in what manner" it is "best to fix and defend" the place, and whether they think it "practicable and necessary" to set off the city immediately "with sufficient palisades against an expected attack." He now suggests that an inventory be taken of the number of palisades which each householder and each unmarried man ought to furnish, and sets the time when it shall be done. They reply, that the burghers are exhausted and unable to be further burdened; that the city's income is so meagre that even "the few works heretofore begun for the City" cannot be completed; that "the greater the revenue, the greater the expenses;" therefore Stuyvesant, they say, should "be pleased to lend the Company's Negroes to cut and haul palisades with the City's Negroes for two wings, one to be brought to the North, the other to the East River." Day and night watches for the city are discussed.
- There are some things in Stuyvesant's remonstrance which the city conferees consider to be beyond their jurisdiction and properly a concern of the provincial government, among them being the encroachments of the English in the country of "the Neuwesings;"

1664 also the reported recruiting of "every sixth man in the adjoining colonies" of New England, and the anticipated difficulties in the Dutch and English towns on Long Island.—Rec. N. Am., V: 22-24.

" Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt receives his commission as treasurer of New Amsterdam, and "all books and papers concerning his office."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 185.

12 In the city court of New Amsterdam, Egbert van Borsum, ferry-man, alleges that a boat which Hendrick Lambertsen Mol built for him "is unfit to be used on the Ferry." The case is referred to arbitrators.—Rec. N. Am., V: 24-25, 36. See June 1, 1654.

14 An ordinance is enacted for the recording of deeds and mortgages in Breuckelen, Midwout, Amersfoort, and New Utrecht, instead of at New Amsterdam, because it has been found that many inhabitants of these villages neglect "to convey in proper form their sold Lands, Houses, and Lots, to the purchasers, and to give a quitclaim therefor," on the ground that they are "unwilling to bear the trouble, loss of time, and expense attendant on going to the Manhattans, to the office of the Secretary of the Director General and Council," such neglect resulting in some lands being sold four or five times, "without being duly recorded." The new law requires local registration in registers kept separately for deeds and for mortgages, and correct copies thereof are to be delivered annually at the office of the provincial secretary.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 459-60.

16 The council sends a force to hold the Navesink lands.—See Dec. 6, 1665.

19 Abraham Lubbersen is engaged by the burgomasters as constable (gunner) in the city.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 185.

" The burgomasters of New Amsterdam enter into an agreement with Jan Boeckhout, Gerrit Jansen from Arnhem, and Jacob Keeren "for making eight gabelions to-wit thirty two  $4\frac{1}{2}$  feet high and wide, thirty two  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet wide and 5 feet high, and twenty eight 6 feet high and  $4\frac{1}{2}$  wide," for which they are to receive "thirty-five stivers a piece," and besides half a barrel of good beer, on condition that they themselves cut the wood." Cartage is to be paid by the burgomasters.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 185. See Feb. 20.

20 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam resolve to submit proposals for the defence of the city to Stuyvesant and his council. Experience, they say, has shown that "all wars and troubles" with their English neighbours have been "based upon the desire to plunder New Amsterdam "or obtain booty." New Amsterdam is the "capital," and its inhabitants are "mostly Dutchmen," who have "at their own expense built so many fine houses" that the city surpasses "nearly every other place in these parts of North America." Here is "a garrison of three complete companies of militia;" therefore, the place should be "properly fortified" in the manner they recommend, which would make it "formidable to envilinded neighbours or the savages," and these proposed works "would then also considerably secure both rivers, East and North, making them safe for help to come, as a road to retreat or go to the assistance of so many villages, hundreds of farms, with houses, grain, lands, cattle and nearly ten thousand souls, mostly Dutchmen and some Frenchmen, who in the course of years and with God's blessing" would "grow into a great people, in a province so favourably situated, where thousands of acres of land" are yet "uninhabited and untilled."

The country, they think, might even be a refuge for the people of the Netherlands, if the fatherland were "visited by cruel wars, civil or with outside nations."

Or it might become a "granary" for the fatherland, in the event of "failure of the Eastern crops or a prohibition of trade by the Northern kings and princes." The burgomasters estimate that "about eight thousand shepels of winter grain" are "in the ground, besides the large quantity of summer grain, rye, peas, oats, barley, buckwheat and others to be sown." If a peace reigned, these promise "an abundance of cereals."

Again, they say New Netherland might be expected "to become the staple of commerce" for the fatherland "by the planting of tobacco, hemp, flax and other necessities," all of which thrive there.

As they contemplate these things, the burgomasters conclude that, "next to God the only salvation" of the province, "after the boundary question" has been settled, lies "in the fortification" of New Amsterdam "by a bastion at the East River gate [Pearl and Wall Sts.], pallsades closely set through the water to the round bulwark before the City Hall [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley], from there pallsades to the Kapsken [rocks at the southern end of Manhattan, where Battery Park is now], where a water battery should be built to protect from there the East and North Rivers and specially the City and the port, then again pallsades to prevent a landing to about half way up the North River to a bastion," this bastion "to protect the part as far as the North West bastion, to be built with a wing of closely set pallsades, running down to the river and well protected against the floating ice." From this point across the island to the East River gate they propose the building of "a strong stone wall with two bastions" and "with a wing into the [East] river."

Now they contemplate the cost, which they say will be "a large sum of money." They know that the provincial government cannot spare any money, because the late Indian war depleted the treasury, and it is also impossible "to burden the inhabitants" of the city "with more taxes." The people, they say, "grow daily poorer." However, "in this pressing necessity," the burgomasters promise "to spend the whole of the City's income on the fortifications, and to raise among the merchants and richest Burghers and inhabitants as much on interest" as can be obtained, or may be needed, provided the provincial government will, "in a year from now," allow the city "to receive the innkeepers or tapsters' impost" as security for the creditors and until the loan has been paid, but no longer.

On the 21st, Stuyvesant and the council agreed to this request, with the proviso that the collections of the tapsters' excise should begin in May, 1665, and that "from that date on the present and future revenues of the City" should "be bonded for the payment of the money to be raised and that the fortifications" should "be planned and made with the knowledge and approval of the Director General and Council."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 185-90; see Feb. 8, 1664. On the following day (Feb. 22), the city court met, and the aforesaid propositions were read, together with the concession. The presiding burgomasters reported "that Mr. van Ruyven" had "already offered 1000 fl. and the Director General" promised at least as much on interest. It was then resolved, unanimously, "to summon not only the old Burgomasters and Schepens, but also the wealthiest inhabitants," to be assembled on Monday, Feb. 24; meanwhile the members of the city bench promised their personal loans, on interest.

On the 24th, some of the burghers and inhabitants, who had been invited to court, had the proposals for a loan presented to them and were asked to signify the amounts they would lead to the city at an interest of ten per cent., this interest to begin "when each shall have paid his last promised pennies and continue until the monies given on interest" have been paid back, at the longest for a period of five years from date, "in such value as the zewaet" then had, being eight white and four black beads for a stuiver.

More than a hundred loans were then made, aggregating 27,500 florins, which included a loan from the deacony of 2,000 florins, the largest single loan.—Rec. N. Am., V: 28-33.

On Feb. 26, the burgomasters requested "a sealed warrant, showing that the impost on wine and beer, to be sold by the tapsters" in the city, was to remain in their hands until the projected loans were paid with interest. Stuyvesant and the council gave this warrant under the provincial seal on March 6.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 190-91; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 261; Rec. N. Am., V: 33.

The council minutes refer to "the newly commenced settlement of Noortwijk on the Northriver," where, a farmer having died, leaving a minor son, it is desired to appoint guardians and trustees "for the aforesaid orphaned child," as well as "to take an inventory of the property" left by the parent. Stuyvesant and the council "request and authorize . . . Paulus Leendersten vander Griet, present Burgomaster, and Mr. Allard Anthony, ex-Burgomaster of this City of Amsterdam and Co-Patrons of the said new settlement to act as guardians and trustees" for the child.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 360. This settlement, formed about 1663 (see July 26, 1663), was also known as the Burgomaster's Colonie or Bouwery, and was the site of the older Saponkaikan plantation, and within the confines of the later Greenwich Village.—De Puyter Papers and Warren Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

7 The city court of New Amsterdam, addressing Stuyvesant and the council, says: "Although your Honors convoke in the month of October of last year a General Provincial Assembly which was held on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd of November following by Deputies from the adjoining towns and settlements only, because the delegates from the Colony of Rensselaerswyck and villages of Beverwyck and Wildwyck were unable to come down and sail back at the time, owing to the inconvenience of the approaching winter: and whereas after the aforesaid meeting of the Assembly, our neighbours, the revolting English, have made attempts under one Jaa [John] Scott against this State endeavoring to reduce our villages on Long Island under their obedience, with divers threats which they gave out, of making some attempt on this place; all which we think unnecessary to enlarge on, as such is sufficiently known to every one and what they further sought to commit in invading, taking possession of, and inhabiting the Neuwesingshes, we find ourselves necessitated to turn to your Honors with urgent entreaty that in this highly imperious necessity, in which the whole country is placed, you would again convoke a General Provincial Assembly as early as possible and call together some Deputies both from the surrounding places and towns. As specially from the Colonies of Reinselaers Wyck, Beverwyck, and Wild Wyck to enact by a unanimous vote, what shall be found proper for the prosperity, quiet and peace of this Province, which ought to be immediately reported to our Lords and Principals in Europe, so as to be able to send it over with the Delegates in the ship the Statyn." To which Stuyvesant and the council replied, on March 18, that "Conformably to the Apostile dated 27th Octob. last, the petition was deemed just and necessary. Therefore the letters thereto required" should "be drawn up and placed in petitioners hands to be dispatched by the earliest departing sloops."—Rec. N. Am., V: 33-34; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 262.

" On April 1, the provincial government issued a writ summoning the several towns to send delegates to a general assembly to be held at New Amsterdam on April 10, at 9 A. M. The city court, meanwhile, elected as its delegates Burgomaster Cornelis Steenwyck and Schepen Jacob Backer. The assembly met as required, and the delegates drew up an address to Stuyvesant and the council, which was answered the next day. On April 12, they sent a second address, in which they explained the purport of their first communication, and solicited information. Other exchanges followed. In an address on April 15, the delegates asked permission to petition the West India Co. and the states-general for protection and for a redress of divers grievances, as well as to send agents to Holland to support the same, which was granted.

Without coming to a final conclusion or voting supplies, the general assembly adjourned for a week. On the 21st, the provincial government again notified the delegates to assemble on the following day, and when they were met Stuyvesant addressed them in person.—Rec. N. Am., V: 45; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 263, 264; Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 728-29; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 516-17.

" Some men appear before the burgomasters and offer their services "to cut wood for the pallisades." The burgomasters draw up the following proposals for contractors: "The pallisades are to be of oakwood, 13 feet long and at the thin end 8 inches square with true edges, that is at least 8 inches across for 1000 pallisades, 2400 feet as ribs, one third 7 inches square, two thirds 7 inches by 4, all to be delivered near the stump at a place convenient to haul them: they may be thicker, but not thinner and at least 1000 pieces together round wood and not split." The bidders demand 60 fl. per hundred and are offered only 40 fl. by the burgomasters; after discussion, the burgomasters yield. The job is given to four men, who sign a contract and ask an advance allowance for food; they are promised to fl. apiece when ready to begin work.

On the same day, Hendrick Lambertsen Mol contracts with the city to quarry 30 to 40 scows full of rock, at 18 fl. in wampum for each scow, and to begin his work at the end of the following week.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 192-93. See Feb. 22.

Nicasius de Sille is confirmed as a church-warden of New Amsterdam by the provincial council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 261; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 193.

Govert Loockermans, one of the church-wardens of New Amsterdam, having been called before the burgomasters "to render account of the administration of the Church money," says he has "never had the key of the money box or kept account," and that the key has "always up to date been in the hands of Mr. Johan de Decker and his attorney François Boon." It appears from the records that Decker "had the administration of the money and of the property of the Church." Loockermans, now being continued in the office of a church-warden, and having associated with him Nicasius de Sille, demanded the delivery of the money and property to him "under inventory." Decker had left the city and had given the church funds "to his attorney François Boon," but had made no accounting; so the burgomasters presented the situation to Stuyvesant and the council, asking that Boon be obliged to surrender the property and money to the two wardens of the church, with an inventory, "so that the necessary repairs of the Church" might be made. On the 18th, Boon was ordered to do so.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 193-94, 194-96.

Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven reports to Stuyvesant and the council concerning information he has received from a friendly Indian about "great dissatisfaction among the Esopus and Wappings," who "had expected to kill all the Dutch and drive them away, as the English of Westchester had promised to them, that they would first take Loog-Island and then the Menades" (Manhattan). To ascertain the correctness of this rumour, Lieut. Van Couwenhoven was sent, with "2 or 3 others, conversant with the savage tongue, in the Company's yacht to the Wappings." Inquiry sustained the charge of English machinations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 365-64.

Stuyvesant and his council issue an ordinance "for the better and more careful Instruction of Youth in the principles of the Christian Religion." In order that children may be instructed "in the principles and fundamentals of the Reformed Religion," as well as in reading, writing, and arithmetic, it is ordered that the schoolmasters "shall appear in the Church, with the Children committed to their care, and intrusted to them, on Wednesday before the commencement of the Sermon, in order, after the conclusion of Divine Service, that each may, in the presence of the Reverend Ministers and the Elders who may be present, examine his Scholars as to what they have committed to memory of the Christian commandment, and Catechism, and what progress they have made; after which performance, the Children shall be dismissed for that day, and allowed a decent recreation."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 461. "Among the Dutch," says Prof. Kilpatrick, "it was the universally accepted duty of schoolmasters to teach religion through the catechism and other church formularies. . . . Accordingly the Classis of Amsterdam—in special cases, the local minister and consistory—examined the prospective New-Amsterdam masters as to their fitness, especially for their religious 17 "The civil authorities conceived their interests and responsibilities in a manner strikingly similar to what is common in America today. They chose the masters—frequently upon ecclesiastical recommendation—paid their salaries, furnished the schoolhouse, and gave the directions under which the masters taught. In the division of civic function, the States-General exercised only a broad oversight, serving more as a court of final appeal than as an executive or legislative agency. The Lords Directors from the general treasury of the company furnished the money for the salaries, directed the general affairs of the school, and besides held themselves free to control even its minutiae. The director general and council acted only as the agents of the company, but exercised much power in the service of their lords. The city authorities, but for decaying finances and an autocratic director, would have furnished a sufficient support and the sole control of the city school.

Mar. —over the actual teaching of the school.

" . . . In spite, however, of any thwarting of purpose, enough was done by the secular authorities to present a remarkable anticipation of the American public school."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 85, 93-94.

" Several persons, both white and coloured, are fined for shooting pigeons in the woods on Manhattan Island on Sunday, contrary to ordinance.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 261, 262, 263.

" Willem Bogardus is granted by the provincial council the use of one of the company's houses in New Amsterdam for a residence.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 261. These houses, known as "the five houses of the Company," stood on Winkel Straet. See Castello Plan, II: 259 (No. 6).

18 Jacob Strycker is confirmed as a member of the court of orphan-masters by the provincial council.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 196-97.

12-22 Charles II, deeming the Dutch in New Netherland usurpers, totally regardless of prior grants, arbitrarily grants the entire territory between the Connecticut and Delaware Rivers to his brother, the Duke of York, "his heirs and Assignes"; he also conveys to him the territory between the Kennebec and St. Croix Rivers (Maine). See modern maps.

The territory covered by this extensive and very important grant is thus described: "All that part of the Mayne land of New England beginning at a certain Place called or knowne by the name of St. Croix next adjoyning to New Scotland in America and from thence extending along the Sea Coast unto a certaine Place called Petuaguine or Pemaquid and (see) up the River thereof to the furthest head of the same sit tendeth Northwards and extending from thence to the River of Kinebeck and soe upwards by the shortest course to the River Canada Northward And alsoe all that Island or Islands comonly called by the severall name or names of Matowacks or Long Island scituatue lyeing and being towards the west of Cape Codd and Narro Higansetts abutting upon the Mayne land betweene the twoe Rivers there called or knowne by the severall names of Connecticute and Hudsons River Together alsoe with the said River called Hudsons River and all the land from the west side of Connecticute River to the East side of De la Ware Bay And alsoe all those severall Islands called or knowne by the names of Martin Vinyards and Nantukes otherwise Nantukett" (etc.).—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 1-5.

An engrossed parchment duplicate of this grant is in the New York State Library, in the State Education b'ldg at Albany. They also offer their friendship and express their desire to live in peace with the Dutch, upon whom they urge the necessity of expedition in putting up a house or fort in the country of the Newesingsh to counteract the advances being made by certain Englishmen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 364-65.

Apr. Jan de Wit, the miller, makes acknowledgment of a contract of sale to Claes Jansen van Langendijck of "half of the windmill, as it now stands upon a plain outside of this City near the Fresh Water, with half of the lot, on which it stands, measuring 20 rods square," and other appurtenances, on condition that the purchaser pay "for two and the Company besides one half of the two old sails, belonging to the mill from of old," and that the purchaser also take upon himself one half of what is still due by the mill to the company, "to wit, weekly to grind for the Company" 25 scheepels of grain, whenever the wind is good and it is required of him.—*Min. of Orph. 8 Jan Schryver is charged in the city court by Schout Tonnenman with entertaining at his house on Sunday, April 6, "in the afternoon after the 2<sup>d</sup> sermon," 20 persons who were drinking. Schryver admits he "tapped a little pint for strangers on account of their thirst." The court holds that there is a contradiction in the Sabbath ordinances of Oct. 26, 1656, and Sept. 15 (sic), 1663, and unanimously resolves to go in a body to Stuyvesant and the council "on Thursday next [April 10] at nine o'clock in the morning . . . to speak to them on this subject," also to find out "for what reason those who reside beyond the Fresh Water are allowed to tap more on the Sabbath than the tavernkeepers of this City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 46.

" As "some dead hogs" lie "here and there on the street," Schout Tonnenman asks the advice of the city court with respect to their disposal—"where he shall have them conveyed and by whom, to prevent the stench, which proceeds therefrom." He is instructed "to send the City's Negroes" under order "to collect and bury the same."—Rec. N. Am., V: 45.

21 Ensign Nijssen writes from Wiltwijck (Kingston) to Stuyvesant and the council, stating "that on the 10th of April an Englishman arrived here with Claes Tijssen, who desired, as he said, to buy some land from the Dutch," but accomplished nothing. He says he "afterwards found out, this Englishman must have been a spy, for according to his statement, he wished to live among the Dutch, because he had been badly treated by the magistrates on the North and then he said, that the English would take and possess this place, Fort Orange and the Manhattans within 6 or 8 weeks."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 368.

26 In a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, Stuyvesant tells them about the war with the Esopus Indians, and says: "We have got back all our Christian prisoners, except three." He adds: "Other tribes inform us, that they are willing to renew the peace with us," but he does not place reliance "upon the statements and declarations of this uncivilized, treacherous and mendacious people." He gives the expenses of his government "for the last year" as "80,000 guilders, while on the other side the revenue will not be more than 30,000 guilders on account of the poor trade in beavers, caused by the wars which the Maquas [Mohawks] and Sinnekus [Senecas] wage against the Northern [New England] and Canadian savages. We shall therefore have a deficit of 40 or 50,000 guilders."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 372.

" In the council chamber at Fort Amsterdam appear the chief of the Hackensacks and others, Sarah Kierstede acting as interpreter, in regard to the murder of a Dutchman by one of the Wapping Indians. Stuyvesant is referred to as "the chief of the Manhattans."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 371-72.

29 Schout Tonnenman charges Hendrick Jansen Smitt in the city

- 1664 court with violation of the laws regulating tapsters. Smitt's tavern stood on the present site of 32 Bridge St. He is accused of selling drink on Sunday, April 6; and again, on May 22, he was charged with selling after hours at night, so that there resulted "noisy singing and chanting." He makes a general denial, and is condemned to pay a fine and receive a reprimand.—Rec. N. Am., V: 48, 64. See Castello Plan, II: 267-68; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980; Pl. 174, Vol. III; also Chronology, July 16, for his death by suicide.
- May Sachems or chiefs representing the Esopus, Wapping, Kightewangh, Rewechongh (or Haverstraw), Wickquaskeck, Hackensack and Tappan, Staten Island, Nyack, Marseping, and about 20 other tribes, meet in the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam in a peace conference with the Dutch officials, and conclude a treaty of peace. It was signed on May 16, by Stuyvesant, Nicasiaus de Sille, and Cornelis van Ruyven for the Dutch provincial government, with the following witnesses, Burgomasters Cornelis Steenwyck and Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, Jacob Backer, as president of the schepens, old Schepen Govert Loockermans, Capt.-Lieut. Martin Cregier, Lieut. Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, Thomas Chambers, as commissary of Wiljtijck, and Abraham Wilmerdox, jr. The interpreters include Sarah Kierstede, as well as Loockermans, Van Couwenhoven, and Chambers.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 375-77. See also June 4.
- 17 Three instruments of title, still extant (reproduced as Pl. 12, in this volume, from the originals in the N. Y. Pub. Library), present a succession of title which includes ground-brief, confirmation, and conveyance, and are of special interest, at this early period, on account of the intervening change of government. The first, dated May 17, 1664, represents the West India Company's ground-brief, being from Director-General Stuyvesant to Andries Rees, for a piece of land in New Amsterdam, drawn up and attested by Cornelis van Ruijven, provincial secretary, signed by Stuyvesant, and sealed with the beaver seal of New Netherland. Rees's lot was on the east side of William St.; a little north of Exchange Pl. The National City Bank now covers the ground.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, and p. 332, Vol. II; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 406, Vol. II.
- The second instrument represents the confirmation by the English government under the terms of the Articles of Surrender of Aug. 27/Sept. 6, 1664 (q. v.), being issued on June 4, 1667, by Gov. Nicolls to Andries Rees for the aforesaid property, written by the clerk's hand, signed by Richard Nicolls, and attested and recorded by the signature of Matthias Nicolls.
- The third instrument is the first conveyance of the property, on May 26, 1680, by Andries Rees to Thomas Davis; signed with Rees's mark, sealed in the presence of Edward Antill, and attested by Matthias Nicolls as entered in the records.
- " Pieter Jansen Triubolt (known as "Pietter the Norman") receives a ground-brief for a lot on the south side of Wall St., between William and Hanover Sts. The National City Bank building now covers the plot.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 324; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 406, Vol. II.
- 26 Jan van Bommel, a carpenter, appears at a meeting of the provincial council and requests "permission to erect a water mill near Hogs [now Blackwells] Island and that in consideration of the expenses" incurred, nobody else be allowed to build a mill in that neighbourhood for some years. He is given the exclusive privilege for three years.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 548.
- 27 Jan de Wit and Jan Theunissen receive a ground-brief for a plot of land without the land gate (Broadway and Wall St.), near unto the Fresh Water by the Great Highway, containing, on the north-west side, 20 rods; on the south-west side, 20 rods; on the north-east side, 20 rods; and, on the south-east side, 20 rods.—Liber Patents, II: 116 (Albany). Willem Aartsen is confirmed in one moiety or half part, on a transport from Theunissen, of Aug. 21, 1666, recting a wind-mill on the land built by De Wit and Theunissen (see Jan. 22, 1664). Claes Jansen van Langendijck is confirmed in the other moiety or half part on a conveyance by De Wit, dated May 31, 1664. Both confirmations are dated Oct. 3, 1667, and are recorded in Liber Patents, II: 116 (Albany). The contract between De Wit, Theunissen, and the West India Co. was concluded on Sept. 22, 1663, and between that date and April 4, 1664, when De Wit conveyed to Langendijck, the mill was built. The mill is shown on Pl. 10-A-a, Vol. I. See also Manatus Maps, II: 206; Castello Plan, II: 212; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962, and Chronology, Nov. 2, 1662, and April 4, 1664.
- The general court of Massachusetts-Bay at Boston receives intelligence at this time that the English ships bearing the Commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, and Maverick, are "on their Voyage to these pts," and makes preparations for their reception.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 72-73.
- Certain inhabitants of Gowanes and Manhattan petition the provincial government for permission to dredge the kill "between the end of Frederik Lubbertsens land [Brooklyn] and the Red Hook," so as to make "a passage to the Gowanes and the mills, without going round West of the Red Hook, where the water" is "ordinarily very low." The kill is "filled up with sand at one end," and it is believed the improvement will enable boats "carrying one hundred schepels of grain or a full load of wood," or other cargo, to "pass through" the passage. The petition is granted, the dredging to be done at the expense of the petitioners, and saving the title rights of Lubbertsens and others.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 548-49. The name Red Hook is returned to this day on maps of the South Brooklyn shore of New York Bay, just south of Buttermilk Channel. See also Randel Plan of 1814, A, Pl. 15, Vol. III.
- Several negroes, male and female, are sold by direction of Stuyvesant and the council at New Amsterdam to the highest bidder.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266.
- Various letters from Virginia are received by the provincial authorities of New Netherland, which give notice of an intended attack on Dutch vessels from Manhattan by a privateer. On June 6, the provincial authorities ordered the magistrates of New Utrecht to watch for the privateersman, who was Robert Downman, and to send word in case he was found along the coast.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266.
- The provincial government of New Netherland makes a contract with Thomas Willett for a quantity of beef and pork, payment therefor to be made in negroes.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266.
- This day is set aside in New Netherland as "a general day of thanksgiving as well on account of the desired peace as specially for God's signal mercy, which he has shown us during the war with the Esopus savages in delivering all the captive Christians out of the hands of the barbarians contrary to all human hope and expectation." Voted by Stuyvesant and the council on May 31.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 385-84. See also May 15-16, 1664.
- The Rev. Henricus Sylvius writes from Breukelen to the classis of Amsterdam of the safe arrival of Domine Samuel Megapolensis, and adds: "You have heard of the sad state of New Netherland. The Indians have killed some, wounded others and taken a number of captives and at the same time burned a number of houses at Esopus. The English have declared, that they would take our town [New Amsterdam] and all Long-Island with flying colors."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 384.
- When the Indians brought their peltries to Manhattan for barter and trade, some persons, as alleged in complaints of the inhabitants as well as of the Indians, assailed the Indians, led them by the arm, and dragged them with their goods "against their will into one house or the other, without allowing the Indians to barter and exchange elsewhere their Peltries for such goods" as they required. This led to trouble and was deemed to provoke "still more." Stuyvesant and the council, "to prevent such irregularities," now ordain that nobody, whether following the business of an Indian trader or not, directly or through others, shall "accost, or . . . take along with him the Indians on their arrival at the River side or landing, or the Peltries and other wares" brought by them, "or . . . cause the goods to be carried to his house," but shall "allow the Indians to go with their Merchandise" where they themselves wish. Penalties for infractions are established.
- This law was transmitted to the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on June 24, with orders for its publication; but the city fathers took no action until July 17, when, in the city court, they declared that, as the provincial government had already provided a copy of the law, which was "affixed to the gate of the Fort," and, "the substance of it" had been sent to the traders, they believed it "to be unnecessary to publish the aforesaid Placard from the Puy of this City," that is, in front of the city hall.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 465-64; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266; Rec. N. Am., V: 97.

" There having been "many complaints" to Stuyvesant and the council because "the Fences around some Bouweries on Manhattan Island" are "not kept up as well as they ought," resulting in "serious damage" to cornfields "by the trespassing of the Cattle," the provincial government therefore passes a law which names three fence viewers for Manhattan Island, who, when they find "any Fences out of order," are required to warn the owners to make repairs immediately, and for failure to comply to cause them to be fined 12 guilders for the first delinquent, twice as much for the second, and 50 guilders for a third offense, as well as to pay whatever damages result from trespass of their cattle.

A third of the fine was paid in to maintain the pound, and the remainder went as a perquisite to the fence viewers.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 46-63.

24 The directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and inform him that ships have been sent from England against New Netherlands.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266, 267, 307. Before this letter arrived, Stuyvesant had heard this news from other sources.—See July 8.

" Joannes Ne-vius, the secretary of New Amsterdam, informs the city court that he has seen a copy of an "answer" in a suit, written by Walewyn vander Veen, a notary, and wants to know "whether such copying by others" than himself can be done. The court replies it cannot be done, but "that the papers in the suit, consisting of demand, answer, reply and rejoinder, which parties enter against each other, must be copied" by the secretary, and that he is entitled to the fees for the "answer" which the notary has transcribed. At the same time, the court warns the notary against accepting the fees, and threatens him with disbarment for six weeks if he again trespasses on the rights and perquisites of the secretary.—Rec. N. Am., V: 80-81.

" Tomas Coninck is charged by Schout Tonoeman in the city court with having "unstamped measures" in his possession "after the Crier had notified every one to have els, cans and weights stamped by the sworn Measurer," according to law. He is fined ten guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 77. In 1665, he was a resident of Pearl St.—Ibid., V: 223.

" Merritje Goetbloet is charged in the city court by Schout Tonoeman with having "tapped on Sunday morning during the sermon," who also states that he "found five persons at her house." The case is postponed and beyond that the records are silent.—Rec. N. Am., V: 77.

July 1 Michiel Tadens is charged in the city court by the schout with having twelve Indians at his tavern (11 Pearl St.), and the schout demands he be fined 500 guilders according to ordinance. Tadens is ordered to deposit the sum with the court. On the 8th, the schout in court demands the payment in "heavy money." He says some of the Indians were drunk, but Tadens alleges they came drunk "to his house and he tapped small beer for them, but no strong beer." He is then fined 30 guilders, because "drunken Indians were found on Sunday at his house."—Rec. N. Am., V: 83-85. See Sept. 5, 1652; and July 25, 1656.

3 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam call upon the director-general and council and make "a statement of the grievances and discontent of many merchants and inhabitants" of the city, because they have been "forbidden by those of the Colony of New-Amstel on the Southriver to trade either with strangers or savages on the whole river," which they allege is contrary to their privileges obtained "many years ago." They say that Peter Alrichs has come to New Amsterdam from the South River, with a cargo worth twenty to thirty thousand guilders, and wants to know if persons who come from the Delaware to trade here "should not be obliged first to purchase citizenship (burgherright) and to keep an open shop for 6 weeks according to the privilege granted this City;" also whether these traders should "be permitted to trade here with strangers and savages," which is forbidden the inhabitants of New Amsterdam at the South River. The provincial authorities reply that Alrichs is exempt, because he is "an officer of the Colony of New-Amstel," and came only to sell goods to secure "with them a lot of cattle for the use of the said Colony;" that with respect to their grievances "on account of the prohibition to trade on the Southriver, a detailed report" has already "been made before this," and will "again be made to the lords-directors" at Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 454-55.

The Duke of York sells his claim to lands between the Delaware and the Hudson (in part) to Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret. Sir George having been governeur of the island of Jersey, it is called New Jersey; and it becomes a proprietary state, owned by the owners of Carolina. New Jersey is separated from New York. The deed of sale, of this date, followed a lease dated the day before.—N. J. Archives, 1st ser., I: 8-14.

A record is made in the minutes of the provincial council concerning information which has been given to Stuyvesant by Thomas Willett of the receipt of news at Boston about the sailing of an English fleet for the reduction of New Netherlands, with "Nicles" on board, who comes out to be governeur. The council at once passes resolutions in regard to the intelligence, and invites the two burgomasters and the presiding schepen of New Amsterdam to a conference.

These city representatives report the same day to the city court that at the conference they were informed that "reports of persons worthy of belief" are current in regard to the arrival of a ship from England, "some weeks ago at Boston," which brought intelligence "that two frigates and a fly-boat, each mounted with between 40 @ 50 guns, lay at Portsmouth ready to go to sea, having on board three hundred soldiers and each ship one hundred and fifty seamen; and one Capt. Clercq arrived fourteen days afterwards at Boston, relating for news, that the same ships had gone to sea; further that a friend had spoken with one Capt. Bryden at Boston, who told him that he firmly believed the ships were already arrived in the west."

After they had received this communication, Stuyvesant and the council asked for an expression of opinion as to what ought to be done in the matter—whether ships then in the roadstead before New Amsterdam should be detained, in order to "be on the look out," or "whether they should be despatched forthwith to Fatherland?" Also, they asked, "what is then to be done" at this juncture? The three city representatives replied that they would first have to communicate with the whole city bench in order to gather a general opinion. As the provincial authorities had acquired, they now await the judgment of the city fathers, who unanimously resolve "that the skippers ought to be warned in time to be on their guard;" and that it is necessary to put the city "forthwith into a posture of defence;" to this purpose they agree to give their best efforts daily; they also determine that, in case the ships from England come to New Netherlands, it will be wise "to be on . . . guard and to wait, what directions and order" the English may have and then regulate themselves "according to the circumstances of the time."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266, 267, 307; Rec. N. Am., V: 88-89. See also Aug. 4 and 23, for continuation.

One of the Esopus sachems, speaking through Sarah Kierstede as interpreter, comes to the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, and says that "the other Esopus Sachems cannot come according to the promise made at the conclusion of the peace, for they are mostly sick and very lean because of the want of food." As "all the provisions" which they gathered "have been destroyed, and they have now nothing to live upon," he requests that the Dutch "sell them some provisions and send them to their country on the other side of Haverstraw in a vessel, for they are all in want and suffer some hunger." The answer of the provincial authorities is "that the savages may freely come here [New Amsterdam] to purchase, what they require," that it is "better for them to come here, than for our people to go there, but that nobody of our people shall be prevented, if he is willing, to sell them provisions in their country."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 386-87.

Willem Abrahamson vander Borden and Daniel Verveelen complain to the city court "that a tannery" has been "established between their houses and lots." They say they anticipate that "their water" will "be thereby spoiled," and that they will "also have to endure great stench from the tanning of skins;" therefore they request the court to prohibit the tannery, "especially the digging of a pit, in which the skins are soaked and washed." The court holds that, "as others have been allowed to make a tannery

 Jl. 8 Rec. N. Am., V: 87.

The city schout and the city secretary then headed a copy of the verdict to Stuyvesant and the provincial council, who found "no objection to the sentence itself," but objected to "its form," and suggested approval by them was contingent upon the heading being made to read in the name of the states-general, the directors of the company, and the director-general and council of New Netherland. This so stirred up the members of the city bench that they went in a body to Fort Amsterdam where Stuyvesant and the council were assembled and requested, in the name of the city court, "that they be not abridged in their obtained privileges, which empower them, if their Schout were prevented, to inform themselves in the first instance of murderers and to apprehend the same." They objected because the provincial fiscal had prevented the city schout from removing the body of Smitt from "the entrance of the Kalk-boeck, as he [the schout] ought to have done." They maintained, too, that "all offenders within the jurisdiction" of the city "should first be apprehended by their Schout," and, if a prisoner were first caught by the fiscal or his substitute, he "ought to be handed over . . . to their Schout, except the Company's servants," who, when committing an offense and if apprehended by the schout in the fiscal's absence, were to be handed over to the fiscal. The superior court agreed that the body of Smitt should be delivered over to the city schout by the provincial fiscal, because the schout "was officially by the dead body . . . before the Fiscaal;" but no action was taken to decide the city bench's demand for jurisdiction within the city over all offenders who might be apprehended within the city's legal jurisdiction.—Rec. N. Am., V: 93-95; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 267. See also April 29.

17 "Owing to the perilous situation of affairs," caused by the news of an expected English expedition against New Netherland, "all sloop captains sailing up and down the North River" are "warned and ordered not to navigate" on the river "until further orders," and then only in company of two ships, "properly manned, so as to prevent disaster." They are "also commanded," when sailing, "to touch, when going up and down, at the Esopus [now Kingston], and to demand a pass" from the commissary there, "as a proof" that this provincial law has been "obeyed." Those who fail to comply are to be subjected to a fine of 25 guilders.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 465.

" Sybrant Cornelissen, from Flensburg, is appointed assistant surgeon by the provincial council, to be employed in shaving, bleeding, and administering medicines to the soldiers.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 267.

" Rev. Henrich Selyns petitions Stuyvesant and the council for his dismissal from the churches at Breuckelen and "in the settlement near the Director-General's Bowery," because the four years for which he was engaged are "about to expire." They grant his request, and, as the ships are about to sail for the Fatherland, he is allowed "to depart in the Beever, in which he came." Selyns, on his part, remarks that he has "no doubt, that when D<sup>o</sup> Samuel Megapoliensis, Pastor and Medicinæ Doctor," arrives, they will "have a good opportunity" to fill his place.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 550-51.

13-23 The king having appointed four commissioners, Nicolls, Carr, Cartwright, and Maverick, to hear complaints and appeals in New England, and settle the peace of the country, they arrive at Boston, and are opposed as hostile to colonial liberties. They left shortly afterward for New Netherland.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., July I: 737. See also May 18/28, and July 22/Aug. 1.

Richard Nicolls and George Cartwright, in a joint letter to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, written "from Anchor near Nantascott Islands," inform him that they have been sent by his Majesty under a commission "to doe him some service neare yo<sup>r</sup> Government;" and as some we hee fitted our selves, & enquired after of Associates, (for our long Voyage and ill weather haue put us into some disorder, we shall make haste to you, and wee giee you this Notice that you may bee ye more ready to assist us, according to his Maties<sup>e</sup> Expectacon." This is the veiled language by which Winthrop learns of the projected expedition against the Dutch of New Netherland.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 73.

Frans Jans van Hooghten receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden, now No. 49 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, and p. 130, Vol. I; Castello Plan, C. Pla. 82, 82a, and p. 269, Vol. II; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 386, Vol. II.

Stuyvesant writes to the directors at Amsterdam in regard to the constant rumours of an English invasion of New Netherland. He says: "We keep the military force under our command as close together as possible, heighten the walls of our fort, strengthen it with gabions and make all arrangements for defense. It is not our least anxiety, that we have so little powder and lead on hand, there being only 2500 lbs in the magazine and besides that not over 500 lbs among the militia and inhabitants here and at Fort Orange, as we are informed. You can easily judge, that this supply will not last long, for it is not more than two pounds of powder for each man able to bear arms and then we have nothing left for our artillery, if we have to sustain an attack. We hope, that it will not come to that, but we must most urgently request you, immediately and successively to provide us better, than hitherto, for the preservation and protection of this capital, which if lost, all is lost, with the following war materials: powder, lead, grenades and small arms; else the great expenses of building a wall of stones around the fort which is daily being made higher and stronger, will be speedily lost for want of the necessary ammunition and [to] the dishonor and shame of the nation and your faithful officers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XVI: 553; see also July 13/23, and Aug. 23 passim.

Stuyvesant informs the directors at Amsterdam that "seven or eight persons," representing French Huguenots of La Rochelle and St. Martin, have arrived "by the last ship, the Eendracht, to view the land" for a colony of refugees, and have been particularly pleased with Staten Island as a place for a settlement.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XVI: 554-55. See Jan. 24.

John Pynchon writes from Springfield to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, thus: "my Pore advice is That some way be thought on speedly to Certifie ye dutch of ye falshood of all such reports w<sup>ch</sup> they have Recd ag<sup>t</sup> ye English, that so they may not entertaine such false aspersions, w<sup>ch</sup> may be best done by making use of Cap<sup>t</sup> Willet or any other yo<sup>r</sup> think fit. Hist. Soc.).

Nicolls and Cartwright propose to the governor and council of Massachusetts Bay, with respect to cooperation in the reduction of New Netherland, as follows: "In obedience to his Maties<sup>e</sup> Commands, for ye more effectuall meanes of reducing the Dutch Plantacon, who have, contrary to all right and justice, Usurped, aud are now possessed of his Maties<sup>e</sup> Dominions in and near adjoining to Hudsons River in America, Wee doe in his Maties<sup>e</sup> Name propose to the Governor and Council of his Maties<sup>e</sup> Colony of Massachusetts Bay as followeth. The council of Massachusetts Bay Colony answers the proposal of the same day, by Nicolls and Cartwright, for coöperation in "the reducing of the Monhatoes, by raising and furnishing a Number of Soldiers, to begin their March on the twentieth of Augst next." The councillors say they are "very desirous to testify their loyalty to his Mat<sup>ie</sup> and readynesse to promote ye interest of the English Nation," and therefore have passed an act calling a session of the general court to be held on Aug. 3, to whom his majesty's letter and the proposal would be submitted "for their advice, Assistance, and concurrence therein."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 77-78.

July Nicolls and Cartwright write to Sir Henry Bennett, principal 28- secretary of state, and inform him of their arrival in America.
 Aug. They say they intended to make port at Gardiners Island, but 7 because of contrary winds were obliged to make for Nantasket, where they went to Boston. They tell him about the negotiations they have entered into with the government of Massachusetts-Bay, and complain of the dilatory tactics of that government. They have informed the officials at Boston that it was an act of providence that cast them upon their coast first, when the original design was to go to the east end of Long Island. Therefore, they presented the Boston government "with an opportunity of testifying their loyalty to the King, and their Zeale for his Service, which wthout this providence they would have wanted," by enlisting their coöperation "towards the reducing of the Manhatoes to the obedience and Govern<sup>t</sup> of his Mat<sup>ie</sup>," who had "particularly recommended it to all his Colonies," so that "they might now by giving" to the expedition "their advice and Assistance sett a good Example to ye other Colonies," encourage the soldiers, "and dishearten the Dutch, and more, demonstrate their obedience and affection to his Mat<sup>ie</sup> then by any other thing they could doe."—*N. 14 A letter is written by the Rev. Samuel Drisius to the classis of Amsterdam, in which he expresses regret that Domine Henricus Selyns is returning to Holland, who, he says, "has attached very many unto him, among them a number of the negroes, who are greatly grieved by his departure." He adds: "In reference to the Bowerie [Stuyvesant's bowery], it is not yet positively decided, but I think it probable, that the son of Dom. Megapolensis, who has recently come over, will take charge of them, as he has not been sent by our patrons to any other place. The French on Staten-Island would also gladly have a preacher, but their families are few in number and poor, so that they cannot contribute much to the support of the Gospel and as our support here is unpunctual and small, there is no probability that they will settle a preacher. In the meantime, that they may not be wholly destitute Governor Stuyvesant at their request, has permitted me to go and preach there every two months and administer the Lord's Supper. This I have done for about a year: in the winter season it is troublesome on account of the great water or bay, which must be crossed, and the showers and storms, which occur."—*N. Y. Col. The ship "Gideon," for the account of the West India Co., lands at New Amsterdam 290 negro slaves, of which 153 are males and 137 females. Simon Cornelissen Gilde is captain of the slave-ship. These negroes were brought from the Coast of Guinea, via Curaçao, and the charter-party of the "Gideon," dated Nov. 15, 1665, was for a voyage from Holland to Africa to procure copper and elephants' tusks, and slaves for New Netherland.—*Cal. 10-20 The general court of Massachusetts-Bay sends messengers to Nicolls, Cartwright, and the other royal commissioners with an answer to the proposals of the commissioners of July 27 in regard to the request for soldiers to coöperate "in reducing the Dutch at Manhatoes." The message was delivered to Nicolls on board the "Guinea," on the 20th instant, Old Style.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 93.

The presiding officer of the city court of New Amsterdam, in addressing the members of the bench, refers to the prevailing rumour that the English frigates which have arrived at Boston are to come against New Amsterdam, and asks what action shall be taken in case he and his associate burgomaster are summoned to a conference with the director-general and provincial council, particularly if the time does not admit of "calling a meeting of [the] Burgomasters and Schepens." The members of the city court agree "to wait the time, in order to hear what demonstration the frigates" show, and to "regulate themselves afterwards accordingly."

Meanwhile, they make a demand on the provincial authorities for 25 negroes to labour eight days "at the City's works," which are to be begun next week.

On Aug. 25, the court ordered by resolution that one-third of the inhabitants, without any exception, should "appear in person or put another in his place furnished with a shovel, spade or wheel-barrow, to labour every third day at the City's works, on a penalty of six guilders [for delinquent]; that "the guard" should "be kept and a whole company [be] paraded," beginning on this day (25th), when the drum was to "be beaten at five o'clock in the afternoon;" that every one who mounted guard was to receive a pound of powder and one and a half pounds of lead; furthermore, to conserve grain, the brewers were not to be allowed to "malt any hard grain during eight days nor brew beer higher than twelve guilders the tun."

On the same day (25th), the city court petitioned Stuyvesant and the council in writing, declaring that they had positive information about the arrival of "four frigates" at Boston "or thereabouts in N. England, provided with a considerable number of soldiers with intention, as reports run, to attack and invade this place and the adjoining districts especially on Long Island," and that these were even then "on the way to come here."

The city fathers thought it manifest that the city should be put in a defensive state, and so asked for "eight pieces of good and heavy cannon provided with their carriages, balls swabs, brushes, picks and spoons." If this were granted, then the city would be "provided with a quantity of twenty-two pieces;" they also requested 50 pounds of powder for each piece of artillery, or altogether "eleven hundred pounds," as well as "ball in proportion, also six hundred pounds of lead for bullets, to be used by the Burghers for their muskets." It was feared that New Amsterdam would have "to bear the first attack," before the fort was assaulted, and for that reason it seemed "necessary to demand a greater number of people than the Burghery" could turn out, as the city had already provided a company of burghers to "keep guard every night." They requested, on that account, that the city's contingent "be strengthened at first by soldiers and the Company's servants, and that the day watch . . . be kept by soldiers at both gates [the water and land gates], and in case of being besieged or attacked . . . all the soldiers and Company's servants with the Burghery" should "repair to this City's walls," it being considered that if the city were lost, the fort would be unteachable, "or very little so;" also, that if, "in skirmishing, any Burgher should require powder," he should "have free access to the Company to be furnished there with powder."

Stuyvesant, after a brief visit to Fort Orange, now (Monday) returns to New Amsterdam, only to meet at once the overwhelming difficulties of an invasion by the English.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 372.

The petition of the city court is now returned, with the apostil or marginal note of approval from the provincial body. That the fortifying might proceed speedily, Stuyvesant and the council at once contributed the company's negroes and "the assistance of a corporal's guard of soldiers," whilst promising also to "assist with all possible might and means;" they sent six heavy cannon, as an addition to fourteen "previously delivered to the City," making the cannon for the city's use 20 in all; and also the requisite powder (1,000 lbs.) and lead (600 lbs.). They agreed, too, to provide the company's soldiers "to assist with the Burghery" in the defense of the city, and made a provisional allowance "that one half the number of people" (i. e., the soldiers) should "watch

Rev. Samuel Driusius wrote on Sept. 15 to the classis of Amsterdam regarding the day's events as follows: "On the 26th of August [N. S.] there arrived in the Bay of the North River, near Staten Island, four great men-of-war, or frigates, well manned with sailors and soldiers. They were provided with a patent or commission from the King of Great Britain to demand and take possession of this province, in the name of His Majesty. If this could not be done in an amicable way, they were to attack the place, and everything was to be thrown open for the English soldiers to plunder, rob and pillage. . . .

"Our Director-General and Council, with the municipal authorities of the city, . . . asked that the whole business should be referred to His Majesty of England, and the Lords States General of the Netherlands; but every effort was fruitless. They lauded their soldiers about two leagues from here, at Gravezandt, and marched them over Long Island to the Ferry opposite this place."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 414. There is another translation of this letter in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 393-94. See, further, under Sept. 4.

29 Stuyvesant having returned to New Amsterdam on the 25th (New Style), after having spent a couple of weeks at Fort Orange, now writes to the Dutch officials at Fort Oranoe: "Difficult, on account of my indisposition, was my departure from you; more difficult and troublesome were my return and arrival here, on last Monday [25th], on account of the report of the four English frigates, one of which [the "Guinea"] showed herself, on the following Tuesday [26th], in the Bay, near Sandy Hook.

"Yesterday, being Thursday, three more arrived and sailed together up into the Bay of Najack, where they remain at anchor up to the present time; they have sent the inclosed summons to all the Dutch towns, from which and from verbal statements, it is evidently to be inferred that they will endeavor to reduce not only this Capital [New Amsterdam] but also the whole Province to obedience to England.

"The naval and military force from Old England is estimated at 1,700, some say 2,000 men, in addition to the crowd daily expected from New England.

"You can easily consider in what a state of embarrassment and anxiety we find ourselves, without a hope of any relief. Therefore this serves chiefly to warn your Honors and all friends especially and mainly not to send down any Beavers or Peltries for fear of their falling into the hands of the English.

"'Tis desirable, and indeed most necessary, that your Honors should assist us with some aid in men and powder, in case any hope or means remain of transporting and bringing them here in season and in safety."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 372. On Sept. 3 (N. S.), La Montagne and Van Rensselaer sent an answer, remarked they were surprised not to find the enclosure mentioned in Stuyvesant's letter, and said that, "at the request of some passengers, whose homes" were "at the Manhattans," they had "coensented to their departure in a sloop" bound for New Amsterdam.—Ibid., II: 373.

"Stuyvesant writes to the royal commissioners, Nicolls and Cartwright, asking the reasons why the English hostile fleet lies in the bay before New Netherland, and sends the letter by a delegation to intimate "that wth the utmost respect and civility, they doe desire and entreate of the Comander in Chief, of the aforesaid men of War or friggotts, the intent and meaning of their approach, and continuing in the Harbour of Nyack [Nyack, below the Narrows, near Gravesend, between New Utrecht and Coeey Island], without giving any notice to us, or first acquainting us wth their designe, w<sup>ch</sup> Actioe hath caused much admiration [sic] in us, having not recd any timely knowledge of the same, w<sup>ch</sup> in respect to y<sup>e</sup> Governm<sup>t</sup> of the place, they ought, and were obliged to have done."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 80-81.

"Stuyvesant and the council send a letter to the commanding officer at Esopus (Kingston), in which they inform him of the arrival of the English fleet at Nyack (near Gravesend) on Long Island. They add: "We have therefore resolved for the better protection of this fort and consequently of the whole country to call down here the military, except that the Redoubt [Rondout] remain properly garrisoned. You are therefore directed, to send upon receipt hereof the Sergeant with the rest of the men immediately to this place."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 392-93.

The royal commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, et alii, publish by proclamation their design, under his majesty's command, for expelling or reducing to English control "all such forraigners, as have without his Ma<sup>ties</sup> leave and consent seated themselves amongst any of his Dominions in America" (meaning the Dutch of New Netherland).—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 79.

Col. Nicolls answers Stuyvesant's letter of the day before by a letter conveyed to New Amsterdam by Col. George Cartwright and three other delegates, with a summons for surrender, claiming for the king of Great Britain the "unquestionable" right and title "to these parts of America," and designating the "forraigners" as usurpers. Nicolls states that the king has commanded him "in his name to require a Surrender of all such Forts, Townes, or places of strength" which are in the possession of the Dutch under Stuyvesant's command, add: "And in his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Name, I do demand the Towne, Situate upon the Island commonly knowne by the Name of Manhatoes wth all the fforts there unto belonging, to be rendered unto his Ma<sup>ties</sup> obedience, and Protection into my hands." He adds: "That his Ma<sup>ties</sup> being tender of the effusion of Christian blood, doth by these p<sup>res</sup>ents confirme and Secure to every man his Estate, life, and liberty, who shall readily submit to his Government, And all those who shall oppose his Ma<sup>ties</sup> gracious intencou, must expect all the miseries of a Warr, w<sup>ch</sup> they bring upon themselves." He expects an immediate answer.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 81-83.

Stuyvesant acknowledges the receipt of Nicoll's letter of Aug. 20/30, and promises a full answer on the following day.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 87.

The burgomasters of New Amsterdam request of Stuyvesant a copy of the letter of Col. Nicolls in which he demanded the surrender of the city, but are refused; whereupon a delegation from the burghers of the city visits the provincial council and demands either the letter itself or a copy.

On the following day, the burgomasters asked Stuyvesant to communicate to them the contents of a letter he had received from Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, but he refused their request peremptorily, and tore the letter in pieces in their presence, against which they protested. Then they demanded to know the contents of Stuyvesant's answer to the demand for surrender.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 268.

Stuyvesant writes a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, in which he informs them of the arrival of the English fleet, that Long Island is lost, that New Amsterdam has been summoned to surrender, that popular murmurs and disaffection exist, and that the loss of New Netherland is certain.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 308.

 surrender, which Nicolls and Cartwright sent by deputies three days before. He denies the alleged "unquestionable" right and title of the English to the Dutch possessions, cites the charter granted to the West India Co. in 1621, and his own commission of July 26, 1664, as well as the extraordinary and inaccurate dates of Dutch settlements in New Netherland. He asserts that the country over which he has command and which he has been commissioned "to maintaine . . . in the name of . . . the States Gen<sup>all</sup>," is Dutch by "first discovery, uninterrupted possession and Purchase of the Lands" from the Indians and others. Moreover, he refers to the Hartford treaty of 1650, which resulted from boundary disputes, but at which the Dutch jurisdiction itself was never questioned. He declares that the use of force by Nicolls would be "a breach of the Articles of peace" made between their sovereign nations, and offers a reference of the case for adjudication to their governments in Europe. Closing his letter, he writes: "As touching the threats in you<sup>r</sup> Conclusion we have nothing to Answer, only that we feare nothing but what God (who is as Just, as mercifull) shall lay vpon us, all things being in his gracious disposall, and we

Mrs. Van Kesselers, in a description of the fort as it was at this time, observes (in Hist. City of N. Y., I: 520-21): "New Netherland was in as good a condition for defence as any American colony; Fort Amsterdam, indeed, was a better fortification than could elsewhere be found. Yet the statement made at the time by Stuyvesant's council of war, the reports which he afterwards prepared [see Aug. 27/Sept. 6], and various supporting documents show how impossible it was to defend city or fort against an invading force of any size."

"The ten bakers of New Amsterdam are summoned to the city court, where they make a declaration of the amount of grain that is available, which shows that the united stock amounts to 975 siege by the approaching English expedition. The date of the original

A press warrant is issued by the royal commissioners, Nicolls,

The Rev. Samuel Drisius, in his letter of Sept. 15 (N. S.), to the classis of Amsterdam, continued his narrative (see Aug. 16/26) 4 thus: "The frigates came up under full sail on the 4th of September with guns trained on one side. They had orders, and intended, if any resistance was shown to them, to give a full broadside on this open place, then take it by assault, and make it a scene of pillage and bloodshed.

"Our Hon. rulers of the Company, and the municipal authorities of the city, were inclined to defend the place, but found that it was impossible, for the city was not in a defensible condition.
 [See the remonstrance which the inhabitants addressed to Stuyvesant, N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 248; and Stuyvesant's defence, ibid., II: 364, and 427.] And even if fortified, it could not have been defended, because every man posted on the circuit of it would have been four rods distant from his neighbor. Besides, the store of powder in the fort, as well as in the city, was small. No relief or assistance could be expected, while daily great numbers on foot and on horseback, from New England, joined the English, hotly bent upon plundering the place. Savages and privateers also offered their services against us. Six hundred Northern Indians with one hundred and fifty French privateers, had even an English commission. Therefore upon the earnest request of our citizens and other inhabitants, our authorities found themselves compelled to come to terms, for the sake of avoiding bloodshed and pillage. The negotiations were concluded on the 6th of September [see Articles of Surrender, Aug. 27/Sept. 6]. The English moved in on the 8th [see Aug. 29/Sept. 8], according to agreement."— Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 414-15.

Stuyvesant writes another letter to Nicolls, in which he says nothing remains to him but to defend himself against the insistence of Nicolls that he surrender; yet, as he views the possibilities of attack and defence, he sees that there would "be a great deale of blood spilt" and "greater difficulty" might "arise hereafter;"
 it has therefore been "thought fitt" to send to Nicolls deputies to avert the disaster and to arrange "a place & hour" for deputies from Nicolls to meet "with full Commission to treat, and seeke out the means of a good accommodation, and in the meane time, to

No. 2, 103-4.* The place designated was the company's old bouwery No. 1, which Stuyvesant had purchased in March, 1651.

" Samuel Willis, writing from Milford to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, says: "Here Is A boate fr<sup>o</sup>: Setaucut [on Long Island] w<sup>h</sup> brings Newses of The Arruall of The frigets at Longe Island The men vpon the Iland fr<sup>o</sup>: 16 To 60 yeares of age warned To attend The designe against The Manatoes Who are To meet at Gravesend vpon next Munday. In Case you heare noe thinge of our vessell this Shalup will be redy Transport you at an Howers Warning. . . . Corenell Cartwright quartered last night at Setaucut." —Winthrop Papers, XX: 51 (Mass. Hist. Soc.).

Aug. 27- Articles of surrender are consented to at Stuyvesant's bouwery by representatives of the Dutch of New Netherland and the royal English commissioners who, as we have seen, have associated with themselves four leaders of Connecticut and Massachusetts.

These articles provide for the free enjoyment of all farms and houses owned by the West India Co., except such as are in the forts, and all public houses are to continue in use as before.

The people are to "continue free Denizens and enjoy their Lands, Houses, Goods, Shippes, wheresoever they may be" in the province, and dispose of them at pleasure.

Any inhabitant inclined to leave the country is given a year and six weeks "to remove himselfe, wife, Children, Servants, and Goods, and to dispose of his Lands."

Officials who are minded to go to England are offered free transportation when the frigates return overseas.

People may freely come from the Netherlands as planters and Dutch vessels are allowed freely to come and go, carrying back to The Netherlands either persons or merchandise.

The open shipping trade is to be enjoyed for six months.

The Dutch inhabitants are granted freedom of worship.

No Dutch ship is to be forced to serve in war "against any Nation whatever."

The townsmen of Manhattan are not to be required to billet any soldiers "without being satisfied and paid for them by their Officers," and, if, the fort proves incapable of quartering all of them, then the burgomasters of New Amsterdam are to "appoint some houses capable to receive them."

All public archives pertaining to inheritances, the church, the poor, or orphans, are to "be carefully kept by those in whose hands" they are now, and the records which particularly concern the states-general may at any time be sent to Holland.

Other provisions regulate court judgments; travel to and traffic with England, the English possessions, and the Indians; debts; and the continuation of civil officers and magistrates in office until the regular time of new elections, provided they take the oath of allegiance to the king of England.

Contracts and bargains made before the treaty are to be "determined according to the manner of the Dutch."

The military officers and soldiers are to "March out with their Armes, Drums Beating, and Colours flying and lighted Matches."

Redelivery of the province is to be made immediately if "at any time hereafter" the king of Great Britain and the states-general agree thereto.

Finally, it is agreed that certified copies of the grant of Charles II to the Duke of York, and of the duke's commission to Nicolls, shall "be delivered to y<sup>e</sup> Honble M<sup>r</sup> Stuyvesant the present Governour, on Munday next [Aug. 29/Sept. 8] by eight of y<sup>e</sup> C<sup>o</sup>sent in the morning at y<sup>e</sup> old Milne [old mill, shown on the Nicolls Survey standing about at the intersection of the present Pearl and James Sts.], & these articles, consented to, and signed . . . and that within two hours after, the fort and Towne called new Amsterdam vpon the Isle of Manhatoes, shall be surrendered." —N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 95-98; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 250-53; also transcript in M. C. G., II: 49-52, under July 7, 1698; and Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 762-63.

A contemporaneous Dutch broadside of these articles, probably issued in Holland as a news bulletin, is reproduced as Pl. 13, Vol. IV, from the original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. This is headed (translated):

"Articles of Surrender of New Netherland on the 27th of August, Old Style, Anno 1664." It continues:

"Symon Gilde van Rarop, skipper of the ship 'Gideon,' coming from Menates or New Amsterdam, in New Netherland, reports that New Netherland, on the 8th of September, New Style, was delivered over to the English on the following conditions. . . ." (see reproduction).

Opinions as to the identity of the "oude Molen" (old mill), mentioned in the last section of these articles, are considered in the description of the Nicolls Map or Survey, Pl. 10 A-a, p. 211, Vol. I. Reexamination of the evidence now at hand makes it almost certain that the conclusion there reached as to the identity of the "old mill" was erroneous, and that the reference is after all to Pieterson's mill. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961.

The surrender was confirmed by the Treaty of Breda, July 21, 1667 (q. v.). After later recapture by the Dutch, and subsequent recapture by the English, New York was secured to the English by the Treaty of Westminster, Feb. 9/19, 1674 (q. v.).

In the year 1666, Stuyvesant, in his "Answer" to the charges which were made against him by the West India Co., for surrendering to the English without a demonstration of resistance, stated to the states-general that the fort of New Amsterdam could have been "reduced by 500 men in less than thrice 24 hours," and he gave the following description of the fort and of the conditions with which he was confronted at the time:

"First. The fort is situate in an untenable place, where it was located on the first discovery of New Netherland, for the purpose of resisting any attack of the Barbarians rather than an assault of European arms, having, within pistol shot, on the North and Northeasterly sides, higher ground than that on which it stands, so that, notwithstanding the walls and works (muragie) are raised the highest on that side, people standing and walking on that high ground can see the soles of the feet of those on the esplanade and bastions of the fort, where the view is not obstructed by the houses and church in it, and by the gabions on the wall.

"Secondly. The fort was and is encompassed only by a slight wall, 2 @ 3 feet thick, backed by coarse gravel, not above 8, 9 @ 10 feet high in some places, in others higher, according to the fall of the ground.

"Thirdly. It is, for the most part, crowded all round about with buildings better adapted for a citadel than for defence against an open enemy; the houses are, in many places, higher than the walls, and bastions and render these wholly exposed; most of the houses also have cellars not eight rods distant from the wall of the fort, in some places not 2 @ 3, and at one point scarce a rod from the wall, so that whoever is master of the city can readily approach, with scaling ladders, from the aforesaid houses the wall of the fort, which is unprovided with either a wet or dry ditch; and also, if need be, run a mine from the so close adjoining cellars and blow the place up.

"Besides this, the fort was and is without either well or cistern. Previous to this time it was hastily provided with 20 @ 24 water barrels or pitched casks removed from the ships and filled with water. Hence then, 'tis to be deduced how easy 'twould be to recover it back; how difficult, nay, impossible for us to defend it. For, the houses being built of wood so close under the fort, they must first be torn down, or else, for want of time, burnt to the

1664 utter ruin of the Burghers and not without danger to the church
Aug. in the fort, which is roofed with shingles; the soldiers' barracks, 27- also built of wood, may likewise be set on fire. Certainly, the Sept. ground outside being higher than that within, they can be easily 6 fired, and in that event, the Burghers, so many women and children, who, between one and 18 years old, amounted to fully 12 @ 1,300, would be under the necessity of seeking their retreat and support in the little fort, whose plane, from wall to wall, is less than 150 feet in length and breadth."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 440-41. The "Reply" of the directors of the company is in ibid., II: 489, ff.

See A. 6 Stuyvesant claimed (after the conquest of the town by the English) that the fort of New Amsterdam could not endure an English siege (see July 25/Aug. 4), among other reasons, because there was no well in the fort and only a limited number of water barrels. In the "Reply" of the directors of the West India Co., made in 1666, they said: "The further excuse that there was no cistern in the fort, sounds very strange to the Company, who now hear the fact for the first time. Yet, when looked into more closely, and the eye is cast on the situation of the place, 'tis true that close by the fort was a well of water which could, with a little trouble, be conveyed into the place. But, besides this, the fort might have been furnished with water-barrels, as the ship Gideon alone could supply plenty to stock the fort for three months, exclusive of those which still remained in the city."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 500.

"Egidius Luycck and three others who witnessed the surrender made a written declaration on March 7, 1666, in which they said:
"the city of New Amsterdam being open all around, and only enclosed on the land side in all haste and speed, on the arrival of the enemy, by old and rotten palisades against which a little breastwork was thrown up about 3 @ 3½ feet high, and scarcely one foot wide, and consequently unfit to withstand the smallest force.
. . . Besides, it is notorious and manifest that the fort is, of itself, very weak, and, in regard to its situation, incapable of any long defence, houses being built almost all around it, which must first be burnt or pulled down, to the ruin and destruction of the poor Burghers. It is also to be noted, in addition to the above, that the ground to the north on Broadway (Herengracht), scarcely a pistol shot from the fort, is much higher than the bastions and walls of the fort; so much so, that the soles of people's feet on the batteries, and in some places, the terreplein, can be seen from it. Moreover, the walls of the front in some places were not above 8 @ 10 feet high, and without ditch or palisade, so that ladders could at once be brought against the wall. From this and many other circumstances, every one, and even the principal military officers, were of opinion that the fort itself could not hold out three days, even though the surrounding houses were cleared away, to the ruin and destruction of the major portion of the Burghers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 475.

In an address made by Gov. Hunter's friends to the Bishop of London, about 1714, in opposition to the Rev. William Vesey, reference was made to the first Episcopal services held in New York, as follows: "When this Province was taken by the English in the year 1664, there was left in it a small Garrison of English Soldiers who had a chaplain allow'd upon the establishment; in the fort at New York (the seat of our Governour) was a large church wherein the Dutch inhabitants in their own way and language performed their worship, that ended, the Chaplain read Divine service according to the Liturgy of the Church of England to the Governour and Garrison in the same place."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 265 (4to ed.).

Aug. 29- On this day, Stuyvesant and the council issue a certificate of Sept. 8 consent to the articles of capitulation, dated "at the fort of Amsterdam" and under the "Publique Seale," thus ratifying and confirming what the joint commission agreed upon in the articles, which were dated Aug. 27.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 102-3.
August 29 is the day customarily cited as the date of surrender, not August 27.

"In Anno 1664 his Majestic Charles the Second sent over four worthy Gentlemen Commissioners to reduce the Colonies into their bounds, who had before incroached upon one another, who marching with Three hundred red-Coats to Manadaes or Manhataes took from the Dutch their chief town then called New-Amsterdam, now New York; the Twenty ninth of August turn'd out their Governour with a silver leg, and all but those that were willing to acknowledge subjection to the King of England, suffering them to enjoy their houses and estates as before. Thirteen days after Sir Robert Carr took the Fort and Town of Auravia now called Albany and Twelve days after that, the Fort and Town of Awspaia [Esopus] then De-la-ware Castle, man'd with Dutch and Sweeds.

So now the English are masters of three handsome Towns, three strong Forts and a Castle, not losing one man. The first Govern-our of these parts for the King of England was Colond Nicols, a noble Gentleman, and one of his Majesties Commissioners, who coming for England in Anno. Dom. 1668 [sic] as I take it, surrendered the Government to Colond Longlace [Lovelace]."—Josselyn, An Account of Two Voyages to New-England (1674), 153-54. This early use of the term "red-Coats," as well as the reference to the "Governour with a silver leg," is particularly interesting.

The following affidavit was made in 1667, relative to the circumstances connected with the surrender of New Netherland, viz.: "This day, the 4th of March 1667, appeared before me, Henr.
Outgers, notary public, etc., in the presence of the hereinafter named witnesses, Harmen Martense van den Bosch, 26 years of age, and Evert Willemse Munnick, 38 years of age, both of whom served the Chartered West India Company of this country in the capacity of sergeants in New Netherland, even at the time when the same was surrendered to the English, and at the request of the Honorable Directors of the Chartered West India Company, Chamber of this city, declared, attested and deposed for the truth that in the year 1664, and a considerable time before the arrival of the English to whom the aforesaid province of New Netherland was surrendered, when news was received that a force would come to capture the aforesaid place if possible, they failed to notice or discover that any effort was made by the government to put the place of New Amsterdam in a posture of defense in case of attack, but that everything remained as it was; that only finally, in the latter part of the month of August, two or three days before the arrival of the four frigates, when further news was received, orders were issued by the government to put the city and fortress of New Amsterdam in a state of defense, as they had resolved to offer resistance to the English, and that they, the deponents, and the soldiers under their command, being willing and resolved to defend the aforesaid places to the utmost, helped to repair the defenses of the city and the fort and made every effort to put them in a posture of defense; that after this had been accomplished as far as the short time at their disposal permitted, they began to notice that some of the burghers became fainthearted and instead of keeping watch with the soldiers as they used to do, did not come to the guard-house any more; that, therefore, seeing that the burghers were apparently unwilling to help protect themselves and their property, they and the other military, being about 150 strong, moved into the fort to defend it; that meanwhile, some negotiations having commenced between the English and the Director, of which the deponents did not know the substance, two of the aforesaid frigates, being very poorly mounted, to their great astonishment came sailing up (the bay) to pass the fort; that these approaching and the soldiers seeing that no preparations were being made to prevent it, they began to murmur and to declare roundly that they were sold; that the aforesaid frigates, sailing along, actually passed the fort, without a shot being fired to prevent it, as could easily have been done. That two or three days later, the negotiations having continued, the deponents were notified that an agreement had been reached and that they were to march out with flying colors, drums beating and bullets in their mouths, which news was received by the military with peculiar dissatisfaction, mainly because they considered themselves sufficiently strong to resist the force that was then about the place and were in no danger unless it was considerably increased, for the soldiers and sailors who had come from Old England in the frigates were but about 400 strong and were very poor and inexperienced men. Furthermore, that the soldiers of the Company were not allowed the honor of seeing the English when they marched out, for fear that, being full of courage and spite, they might attack the English, as indeed they had plenty of courage and bravery to do, with a fair prospect that they would have cut the English up. That, therefore, they first embarked on the ship Gideon and that thereafter the English appeared and entered the city and the fort, they having meanwhile kept themselves out of their sight on the bowery.

"Furthermore, the aforesaid Evert Willemse Munnick, alone, declares that at the time the aforesaid frigates passed the fort, Director General Stuyvesant acted as if he wanted to go to the gunner to order him to fire on them, but that the ministers Megapolensis, father and son, practically led him away and induced him to leave.

1664 "And the aforesaid Harmen Martense, alone, declares that
 Aug. having been some time with the troop of Jan Schot [John Scott], 29- he knows very well that they were of no importance and had little Sept. following. Furthermore, that nothing was done to defeat the 8 enemy, but that the secretary and councilor van Ruyven having sent his wife ahead to meet the English, he asked the said secretary what they, to wit, the government, intended to do while he sent his wife to the English, whereupon he answered that they had no powder and that the English were their friends, but that on the contrary, when they were embarked on board the Gideon and asked for the powder with which they were to be supplied, Captain Marten Krijger told them that he would provide it, but that for fear that the soldiers would attack the English, he had had two kegs of powder brought to his house instead of on board.

"Finally, the aforesaid deponents jointly declare that the wife of Nicolaes Meyer, free merchant there, in going out of the fort with Mrs. van Ruyven, when she saw that the soldiers intended to offer resistance, said: "These lousy dogs want to fight because they have nothing to lose, whereas we have our property here, which we should have to give up."

—Affidavit, relating to the surrender of New Netherland, made on March 4, 1667, before Notary Henrick Outgers, at Amsterdam, Holland, and entered in No. 6 of the records of that notary, now deposited in the Gemeente Archief of the city of Amsterdam.
 Translated by A. J. F. van Laer from a typewritten copy of the Dutch text, furnished to him in June, 1919, by Mr. Désiré S. van Zuiden, of The Hague, Holland.

Col. Richard Nicolls, on this day—the day of the surrender of New Netherland to him—reveals to Capt. John Young his intention of summoning deputies from the several towns to assemble at a convenient time and place, in order "to propose and give their advice in all Matters tending to y<sup>e</sup> peace and benefit of Long Island," and desires Young to impart these things to his friends and neighbours. This was the first revelation of the idea which came to a head March 1, 1665 (q. v.), and the calling of that meeting was delayed until too late in the season and then it was considered inconvenient in the winter "to put the Inhabitants to the trouble of sending any Deputies, to meete in relacon to y<sup>e</sup> affaires of the Island." When the Hempstead meeting was called, John Young was one of the two deputies from Southold.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 100, 132, 156.

Evidence that Col. Richard Nicolls changed the name of New Amsterdam on this, the day of its surrender, is found in his letter to Capt. John Young, which is dated at "N: Yorke." The letter directs Capt. Young "to take an exact list of y<sup>e</sup> Names of those of long Island, who have taken upp Armes" under his command "for their King and Country," with their addresses, that he may reward them; it requires that their arms may remain in their hands, and that a known body of militia may be ready to be called upon when necessary.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 100.
 On the same day, the royal commissioners dated their letter to the governor of Massachusetts "from New Yorke vpon the Island of the Manhatoes."—Ibid., 100-1.

The Rev. Samuel Drisius, in his letter to the classis of Amsterdam of Sept. 15 (N. S.), continued his narrative (see Aug. 16/26 and Aug. 25/Sept. 4) thus: "After the surrender of the place several Englishmen, who had lived here a long time and were our friends, came to us, and said that God had signally overruled matters, that the affair had been arranged by negotiations; else nothing but pillage, bloodshed and general ruin would have followed. This was confirmed by several soldiers who said that they had come here from England hoping for booty; but that now, since the matter turned out so differently, they desired to return to England.

"The Articles of Surrender stipulate that our religious services and doctrines, together with the preachers, shall remain and continue unchanged. Therefore we could not separate ourselves from our congregation and hearers, but consider it our duty to remain with them for some time yet, that they may not scatter and run wild.

"The Hon. Company still owes me a considerable sum, which I hope and wish they would pay. Closing herewith I recommend your Honors' persons and work to God's blessing and remain,

"Your willing colleague,

Samuel Drisius.

CHAPTER II
1664-1763

CHAPTER II

1664-1763

1664 ABRIEF summary of the principal events of the English Colonial period of New York City's history, from the surrender of New Amsterdam by the Dutch on Aug. 29/Sept. 8, 1664, to the Treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, which gave to the English control of the lands in North America lying east of the Mississippi River, is contained in Vol. I, Chap. II.

Aug. 30<sup>d</sup> Among the papers relating to the Dutch surrender of New Netherland is a "Register of the principal events" connected therewith, under this date, in which is found the following paragraph: "And thereupon, without any other occurrence, was, as above stated, the place of New Amsterdam, in New Netherland, situate on the Manhatans, surrendered to the English, the garrison retiring with all their arms, flying colors and beating drums; and thereby the English, without any contest or claim being before put forth by any person to it, took possession of a fort built and continually garrisoned about forty years at the expense of the West India Company."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 415.

9 The city court of New Amsterdam is informed "that divers soldiers," who have "worked for the City," claim "about four hundred guilders," hence, "means must be provided." The court, therefore, orders the farmers of the excise on beer and slaughtering to make immediate returns to the city treasury, and directs the city treasurer to make an immediate accounting of "the City's income and disbursements," while public notice is given to all the city's debtors to pay within eight days.—Rec. N. Am., V: 107-8.

15 Rev. Samuel Drisius writes to the classis of Amsterdam an account of the surrender of New Amsterdam, as follows: "I cannot refrain from informing you of our present situation, namely, that we have been brought under the government of the King of England. On the 26th of August [N. S.] there arrived in the Bay of the North River, near Staten Island, four great men-of-war, or frigates, well manned with sailors and soldiers. They were provided with a patent or commission from the King of Great Britain to demand and take possession of this province, in the name of His Majesty. If this could not be done in an amicable way, they were to attack the place, and everything was to be thrown open for the English soldiers to plunder, rob and pillage. We were not a little troubled by the arrival of these frigates.

"Our Director-General and Council, with the municipal authorities of the city took the matter much to heart and zealously sought, by messages between them and General Richard Nicolls, to delay the decision. They asked that the whole business should be referred to His Majesty of England, and the Lords States General of the Netherlands; but every effort was fruitless. They landed their soldiers about two leagues from here, at Gravezandt, and marched them over Long Island to the Ferry opposite this place. Sept. 15 The frigates came up under full sail on the 4th of September [N. S.] with guns trained to one side. They had orders, and intended, if any resistance was shown to them, to give a full broadside on this open place, then take it by assault, and make it a scene of pillage and bloodshed.

"Our Hon. rulers of the Company, and the municipal authorities of the city, were inclined to defend the place, but found that it was impossible, for the city was not in a defensible condition. And even if fortified, it could not have been defended, because every man posted on the circuit of it would have been four rods distant from his neighbor. Besides, the store of powder in the fort, as well as in the city, was small. No relief or assistance could be expected, while daily great numbers on foot and on horseback, from New England, joined the English, hotly bent upon plundering the place. Savages and privateers also offered their services against us. Six hundred Northern Indians with one hundred and fifty French privateers, had even an English commission. Therefore upon the earnest request of our citizens and other inhabitants, our authorities found themselves compelled to come to terms, for the sake of avoiding bloodshed and pillage. The negotiations were concluded on the 6th of September [N. S.] The English moved in on the 8th [N. S.], according to agreement."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 414-15, which is a slight revision of Eccles. Rec., I: 560-61. Another translation is in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 393-94. For other portions of the letter, see Aug. 16/26; Aug. 25/Sept. 4; Aug. 29/Sept. 8.

The earliest recognition of the name New York ("Jorck") in the minutes of the city court appears on this date, in a letter written by the court to the directors of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., in which they tell about the surrender of the city and province to the English authority.—Rec. N. Am., V: 116. Its earliest appearance on a map is found on a very rare map of the world (16' x 5'), dated, and published this year by Joseph Moxon, London.—British Museum Cat., No. —; copy (New Neth. portion) in author's collection.

"The city court resolves to write to the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, informing them of the capture of their city by the English and concerning the establishment of English authority in the province. This letter begins: "We, your Hon<sup>s</sup> loyal, sorrowful and desolate subjects, cannot neglect nor keep from relating the event, which thro' God's pleasure thus unexpectedly happened to us in consequence of your Hon<sup>s</sup> neglect and forgetfulness of your promise—to wit, the arrival here, of late, of four King's frigates from England, sent hither by his Majesty and his brother, the Duke of York, with commission to reduce not only this place, but also the whole N. Netherland under his Majesty's authority, whereunto they brought with them a large body of soldiers, provided with considerable ammunition. On board one of the frigates were about four hundred and fifty as well soldiers as seamen, and the others in proportion." The letter then recites the summons sent by Nicolls to Stuyvesant and the subsequent negotiations which led to the surrender, and describes the circumstances which prevented resistance by the Dutch, who had demanded three days' time for consultation, which had been allowed. "But meanwhile they [the English] were not idle; they approached with their four frigates, two of which passed in front of the Fort [Fort Amsterdam], the other anchored about Nooten [now Governors] Island[,] and with five companies of soldiers encamped themselves at the Ferry [at Breuckelen], opposite this place, together with a newly

- 1664 raised Company of horse and a party of new soldiers, both from the North [New England] and from Long Island, mostly all our deadly enemies, who expected nothing else than pillage, plunder and bloodshed, as men could perceive by their cursing and talking, when mention was made of a capitulation." The city fathers made a full inquiry regarding the means for defence, and found the population "to be full fifteen hundred souls strong in this place," but not 250 men "capable of bearing arms exclusive of the soldiers, who were about one hundred and fifty strong, wholly unprovided with powder both in the City and in the fort; yea, not more than six hundred pounds were found in the fort besides seven hundred pounds unserviceable." A draft of one farmer in three met with refusal, so the city fathers "with the greater portion of the inhabitants considered it necessary to remonstrate" with Stuyvesant and the council, demanding that they "consent to a capitulation;" finally, after they had laboured with the provincial authorities with "much trouble" in presenting the difficulties that precluded resistance of the invaders, Stuyvesant and the council gave in and the surrender eventuated.—Rec. N. Am., V: 114-16.
- " On this day, the last entry in New Style dating, as used by the Dutch, is employed in the minutes of the city court. For the next two meetings (Sept. 13/23 and 20/30), double dates were used, but thereafter, through the first English period, the entries were made according to Old Style, as practised by the English, being a subtraction of ten days in this century from the reformed reckoning, all dates between Jan. 1 and Mar. 24 being counted as belonging to the preceding year.—Rec. N. Am., V: 110, 116. See Sept. 22.
- 8-18 A very early mention in the records of "Fort James in New York," if indeed not the first one, is found in a search-warrant issued this day against the slave-ship "Gideon."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 105.
- 9-19 Nicolls issues a passport to Skipper Simon Cornelissen Gilde, of the slave-ship "Gideon," given up under the terms of the articles of surrender, permitting him to transport back to "any Port or Harbour of Holland" all the soldiers and goods that belong to the late Dutch administration of New Netherland.—Ibid., 184-85.
- 10-20 A commission is given by Nicolls to Col. George Cartwright to effect the surrender of "fort Aurania,"—that is, Fort Orange (the English usually spelled "Fort Orange" as the Dutch pronounced it—"Fort Aurania").—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 105. See Sept. 20.
- 13-23 Gov. Nicolls issues an order directing all masters of ships, whether English or foreign, upon arrival in the port of New York "or the places and Roades adjacent," to appear immediately before him and give information concerning "whence they came, and whither they are bound, together with the Contents of their lading;" and, in case they intend to unload any goods, they are "first to make a true Entry & report of all such goods & merchandizes," in conformity with the parliamentary "Act for encouraging of Trade;" also he requires all masters who wish to "lade any goods in this Port or the places and Roades adjacent within his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Comands," to "first make Entry of his Shipp, Sloop, or Vessel before" he takes "any goods or merchandize in, and declare what port or place" he is bound for. Thomas Delavall is commissioned at the same time receiver of shipping.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 115-16.
- 20-30 Warner Wessels is instructed by the city court to prevent the exportation of goods by any but responsible persons, and to make an entry on his books of the duties, but not to collect any duties; and, in the mean time, he is "not to pay any more money to the Receiver of the [West India] Company" on the export account, other than was due on the day when the surrender was consummated. He is to abide by this order until Gov. Nicolls can be consulted on the subject.—Rec. N. Am., V: 122.
- 22 This is the first "Old Style" date found in the minutes of the city court (see Sept. 16).—Rec. N. Am., V: 123. From this point until Sept. 3/14, 1752, when the Gregorian calendar was adopted in England and went into effect in New York, the "Old Style" of the Julian calendar is regularly followed in the Chronology. If data are introduced from Dutch or other sources using the reformed date ("New Style"), the double date is given. See Oct. 5/15, 1582.
- 23 Nicolls and Maverick, writing to Gov. Benedict Arnold of Rhode Island, ask pardon for not having been able to give the Rhode Island deputation "so good an Entertainment" as was due, pleading that they are "as yet strangers here;" but they are glad to note that the deputies will "bring back" to Arnold "the satisfaction of having seen his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Interest and Right prevayle in these parts without effusion of Christian blood," and they hope "also that this Colony, which his Ma<sup>ty</sup> hath granted to his Royall Highnesse the Duke of Yorke," will "strengthen the hands of all his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s loyal subjects in these parts, and be able to lend as well as to expect assistance in like occasions of defence to and from all the English Colonies; well knowing that the Dutch pay no more than a fore's Obedience to his Ma<sup>ty</sup> and their practices have been always treacherous to the English Nation."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 107-8.

- " The first formal treaty with the Iroquois is made at Albany, on behalf of the English, by Col. George Cartwright, and is signed also by four Mohawk chiefs and four nominal Senecas, two of whom are Oneondagas and two Cayugas. The treaty provides for mutual trade, offense and defense, and the English are not to give aid to certain New England Indians who have treacherously murdered a Mohawk chief, but they are to bring about a mutual peace with the River Indians. - 25 John Winthrop, Jr., in a letter to the English chancellor, says he waited upon the commissioner who came over to subjugate the Dutch of New Netherland "at their first arrival at the west end of long Island, and continued that service till upon the 28 of August last I saw the fort and towne upon the Manados Iland reduced to the obedience of our Sovereigne Lord the king, whereby there is way made for the enlargement of his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Dominions by filling that vacant wilderness in time wth Plantations of his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Subjects, and we hope also it will be a means of the future peace & good of these his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s adjoining Colonies."—Winthrop Papers, V (Letters and Papers of John Winthrop, Jr., 1649-1676), in Mass. Hist. Soc.; also from another manuscript in Clarendon Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 58.
- 30 Gov. Nicolls issues an order of banishment against Johannes de Decker, late member of Stuyvesant's provincial council, because he "did (contrary to the 14th Article of Surrender) actually traffice from hence and traffice with powder and Negroes, unto fort Albany and other places upon Hudsons River," without requesting a pass and liberty to do so from the governor; moreover, because after having been informed thereof, "hee did endeavor by discourses to alienate the mindes of his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Dutch subjects from that happy reconilement without bloodshed; upon Articles so lately made, and that hee did comit these misdeameans<sup>ts</sup> before that fort Albany was surrendered unto his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s obedience." The governor gives him ten days to get out of the province of New York.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 109. De Decker's banishment was later revoked, and Gov. Lovelace gave him as a peace offering a confirmation of land on Staten Island, on Jan. 9, 1670/1.—Exec. Coun. Min. (ed. by Paltsits), I: 65-67; II: 447-49. Cf. - After Sept. Some time between Oct., 1664, and early in 1665, Cornelis Melyn and his son Jacob sought permission to go from Connecticut to New York. The facts are given in an undated letter of recommendation which Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut wrote to Gov. Nicolls, asking "that he [Melyn] might obtain liberty to go over to Staten Island," and Winthrop adds that it "is well knowne to most of those that his losses and sufferings there [Staten Island] by the Indians hath bene very great having had some of his children, & servants & tenaots killed by them & himselfe wife & son prisoners among them many good houses & barns burnt & many cattle destroyed & many good[s] taken away & therein deprived suddainly of a very fair estate: having since tyme lived here among the English I have knowne him many yeares I believe he hath a reall hearty love to the English he hath long agoe foretold and expected this day of the English possessing that place and hath shewed the end of the duch [Dutch] creulities." From this letter we learn also that Cornelis Melyn spoke "not very much English but good french, his son [Jacob] now wth him upon his vessell speaks English."—Winthrop Papers, V: 207 (Mass. Hist. Soc.). Cornelis Melyn had removed to New Haven Colony in 1657, with 1664 his son, where they took the oath of allegiance to English authority. The importance of this newly-discovered record is in its revelation of Melyn's attitude toward the capture of New Netherland, and because it is later than any record hitherto known in relation to him while alive. The latest recorded mention of him was in 1663. See Innes, op. cit., 122, 351; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 486.

Oct. 10 The value of wampum as money, in New York City, is now "eight white and four black" beads to a stiver or penny.—General Entries, I: 113 (N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2). See also June 24, 1673.

1-11 The Dutch and Swedes on the Delaware capitulate to the English, and for the first time every mile of the Atlantic coast from the north-east corner of Maine to the southern limits of Georgia is under the British flag. 11 The Dutch ministers of New Amsterdam, Joannes Megapolensis and Samuel Drisius, come into the city court and state that they have received their discharge from the West India Co., "dated the last of the month of September," notwithstanding which, as they are "inclined to serve the Commonalty," they have addressed themselves "to the Governour Richard Nicolls [sic] and spoke to his Honour about the wages." They state that he told them their wages ran "for the time of six months, to which time the Company is receiving the recognitions" (i.e., duties), after which time he would see how to arrange the matter. As the ministers are now in doubt as to how they should "regulate themselves," they seek the advice of the city authorities, from whom they receive assurance that their salaries will have due consideration, the same as "the other servants of the City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 133-34.

" Evert Pietersen, who has been schoolmaster since 1661, and employed at a fixed salary by the West India Co. (see May 9, 1661), requests from the burgomasters and schepens, now that "his allowance from the Company is struck off," that they "keep him at the same allowance, to wit: fl. 36 per month, fl. 125 for board, Hollands currency, free house for school and residence, and free passage to Patria." He is told "to be patient for the space of eight days, when his petition shall be disposed of."—Rec. N. Am., V: 137. His "eight days" having expired, he appeared in court on Oct. 18, and sought an answer. He was notified "to wait still a day or two."—Ibid., V: 142. It was actually necessary for him to wait much longer (see Apr. 25, 1665).

13 The general court of Connecticut appoints deputies to accompany Gov. Winthrop to New York, in order "to Congratulate his Majesties Honorable Commissioners" on the capture of New Netherland, and, if an opportunity offers itself, to arrange "the Bounds betweene y<sup>e</sup> Dukes Patten<sup>t</sup> and Connecticut."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 134-35.

"One agreement was written out and very nearly made, declaring that Connecticut should not come within twenty miles of the Hudson River [Nov. 30, 1664—see N. Y. Colonial MSS., LXIX: 4], but, as it did not receive the signatures of the contracting parties, it had no force. New York historians, like Brodhead [Hist. State of N. Y., I: 253], are therefore wrong when they declare: 'It was well known that it had been settled in 1664 that the boundary should be everywhere twenty miles from Hudson's River.'"—Bowen, Boundary Disputes of Conn., 69-70 See, further, Dec. 1.

14 The burgomasters report to the city court that Gov. Nicolls told them on the evening previous that he would "appear in person to administer the oath and with that view [the] Burgomasters should summon to this City Hall the Magistracy of this City and some of the principal inhabitants."

When assembled accordingly at the city hall, Gov. Nicolls came in, accompanied by his secretary, Matthias Nicolls, and, looking around, asked where Stuyvesant, Van Ruyven, and the city's preachers Megapolensis and Drisius were. The burgomasters replied that "it was not known that they should be sent for." Nicolls, however, ordered them to be called, "who being invited . . . immediately came." Gov. Nicolls then asked each one present to take the oath of allegiance as "a true subject to the king of Great Britain," and to be obedient to the king, to the Duke of York, and to such governours and officers as were appointed by such authority.

In the original records, the form of the oath is recorded in both English and Dutch. When the oath had been read to the meeting by the governour himself, "divers debates occurred thereupon by some of the assembly," and "finally all the meeting roundly declared that they could not take such oath," unless the governour added to the form the words "conformable to the Articles concluded on the Surrender of this place." This they desired because "they feared by taking such oath" without qualification "they might nullify or render void the articles." Megapolensis and Van Ruyven, however, said they "saw no impediment to taking such oath." Others of the assembly squabbled over the oath so long that Gov. Nicolls "finally departed with his secretary from the meeting," which then adjourned.

On the following Tuesday (18th), "the burgomasters went with the Treasurers' book of the City accounts" to the governour, "and placed the same in his hands together with the bond granted to the City by the late Director General and Council." Then and there "debates arose on both sides in [the] presence of Coll. Cartwright and Mr Thomas Willet regarding the oath." The governour said "that the Commonalty were greatly distracted by some;" the burgomasters denied any knowledge thereof, and "persisted again that they could not take the oath" until after the demanded words had been inserted. Then Nicolls exhibited to them a written declaration, which denied the "false and Injurious aspersion cast upon the Oath of Obedience," namely, that signing it would annul and make of no effect "the Artycles of peace so late and solemnly made, signed and sealed." He declared that the articles were not in the least "broken or intended to be broken by any words or expressions" in the oath, and said he would hereafter consider anyone who circulated such a false construction as a disturber of the peace, and would proceed against him. He ordered the declaration to "bee forthwith read to all the Inhabitants and Registered" people, and "that every denizen" be obliged to take the oath, if he intended to remain in the province.

On Oct. 20, the general meeting assembled again. The former proceedings and the declaration of Nicolls were read. The conferees agreed unanimously that the oath could be taken with safety, "provided the abovenamed Governour Nicolls" would "seal his given writing" or declaration.—Rec. N. Am., V: 142-45. This declaration and the form of the oath are given in N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 118-19, 145-46. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 524-27. For form of oath, see Addenda.

As city schout, Pieter Toneman, about to depart for Holland, asks the city court to give him his discharge from office and appoint a successor. He also asks for "a settlement from the City under the City's seal and signature," and the "payment of his services according to [the] salary granted by the City." On the 20th, Toneman told the general meeting which had assembled to act on the oath of allegiance which Gov. Nicolls required that he was unable to advise on that subject, because he intended "to depart for Holland with the ship lying ready to sail."

There was delay; so, on Nov. 22, he again requested the city court to choose another in his place "at the next Court day," so that he could then "take his leave" and also "wish his successor luck in his place." The city court thereupon resolved "to invite the old Burgomasters and Schepens to meet them in this City Hall at three o'clock in the afternoon, to choose, in form of a common Council," a successor to Toneman. Accordingly, this common council assembled, and those present were informed by the presiding officer of the object of their being convened, and that Toneman wanted "to depart with the ship the Eendracht lying ready to sail." Nominations were made and Allard Anthony received a plurality of votes as new schout, subject to "the approbation of the Honorable Governour Nicolls."

On Nov. 29, Tonemans sat with the city court for the last time. At this session he communicated "in writing his retirement from the Bench," and asked for a certificate as evidence that he had performed the duties of his office "to the best of his power" and in the interest of the country and its inhabitants. This was granted and he received also the thanks of the bench. In regard to his salary he was asked to wait because the city was "burthened with many heavy debts." On Dec. 8, Gov. Nicolls issued a passport to him to go to Holland in the "Eendracht" (Unity).—Rec. N. Am., V: 143, 145, 159, 160, 166-67; N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 140.

Margriet Jells is charged in the city court by Schout Toneman with having "five persons at her house on Sunday afternoon between two and three o'clock during the preaching." She was fined 30 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 140. The offence was tapping at an unlawful hour.

This flag from H. M. S. "Guinea," one of the squadron which invaded New Netherland, replaced the flag of the Dutch West India Co. on Fort James (formerly Fort Amsterdam).—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 123.
- " An important bearing of the articles of surrender on the customs and shipping at the port of New York is shown in an order from Gov. Nicolls to the collector, Thomas Delavay, as follows: "Whereas the Articles of Surrender of this Towne of new Yorke do not expressly sett downe the true meaning and intent of the Recognicion, nor to whom it shall be paid, yet for the good of this place, I have bene, and am still content it shall be rec<sup>d</sup> by M<sup>r</sup> Cornelius van Ruyven; and in regard there is in this Harbour, a Ship called the Unity [Enderacht] of Amsterdam, and doth take in Tobaccos towards her Loading, w<sup>ch</sup> are bro<sup>gt</sup> from his Maties' Plantacions; It being not mencion'd in y<sup>e</sup> Articles that there is leave so to do, nor is it permitted by the Lawes of England, yet for the p<sup>re</sup>sent to encourage the Inhabitants of this place, I am willing that they do so loadre there Tobaccoes, they paying here the Customes and Dutyes sett downe in the Booke of Rates, as they are usually paid in England, And by reason that I may not have returns from Eng<sup>l</sup> so soone as I expected, and shall want accomodacon for my Souldiers, and to p<sup>re</sup>vent the disorders and inconveniences that may happen to this Towne thereby, I have thought fit to Order that 5 <sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub> Cent be rec<sup>d</sup> upon all Beavers that are already Ship<sup>t</sup> in this Harbour, or shall be Ship<sup>t</sup>, over and above the 10 & <sup>1</sup>/<sub>4</sub> Cent formerly paid to the west India Company, w<sup>ch</sup> payment is to bee in Content Beaver, or the value, w<sup>ch</sup> you are to looke narrowly after, and for so doing, this shall be yo<sup>r</sup> Warrant."—*N. Nicolls orders Cornelis van Ruyven to receive and hold for him, until the accounts of the West India Co. can be better adjusted, "all payments in Goods or Beavers" due or to become due, "according to the severall Sales, made of y<sup>e</sup> 30th of August and 1st of September, and those also of y<sup>e</sup> 12th of September following," so as to make sure what part of the cargo of negru slaves brought to New Amsterdam from Curaçao—some being sold—is included in the pretences of the West India Co.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 122.
- " Thomas Carveth is appointed by Gov. Nicolls "a Publique Notary in this Towne of New Yorke," because there is no other public notary in the city who understands "the English Tongue."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 125.
- 28 Gov. Nicolls permits the sale of the Elizabethtown tract by the Indians to John Bailey, Daniel Denton, and Luke Watson, Long Island Puritans, while ignorant of the sale of New Jersey by the Duke of York.—N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 42. He ratified the sale on Dec. 1.—N. J. Archives, 1st ser., I: 17-19. The village, begun at this time, was named Elizabethtown, in honour of Lady Carteret, wife of Gov. Philip Carteret of New Jersey.
- Nov. The burgomasters and schepens, now the city court of New York, resolve to farm out the burgher excise on beer and wine, and the excise on "all cattle slaughtered for consumption" in the city. They designate Tuesday, Nov. 8, for this purpose, and direct the secretary of the city "to write and affix notices." As nothing
- was done theo, another order, of the 24th, directed the secretary to write and affix notices for the farming to take place on the 30th, "at the house of Juffrouw Wessels at four o'clock in the afternoon."—Rec. N. Am., V: 151, 162.
- James Davison (Jamis Daidits), an Englishman, is charged by Schout Tonnenman in the city court with having four persons drinking at his house "last Sunday about ten o'clock, during preaching." He responds that he had "no club . . . sitting and he did not tap within doors, but sold drink by the can and small measure out of doors and treated some friends." He is fined 12 guilders. Davison had taverns in New Amsterdam and in Albany.—Rec. N. Am., V: 124 (note), 152.
- Schout Tonnenman charges in the city court that he found four persons drinking at the house of Eghbert Meindersen on Sunday during preaching, contrary to law. Meindersen's wife appearing, says "that four Englishmen came to her house demanding a drink of beer for their thirst, which she refused them," because she feared the schout would come and fine her; but they said "they were very thirsty" and would "guarantee against the trouble." She is fined 12 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 152.
- Jonas Bartelsten, the "Farmer of the Great Excise on wines consumable by the tapsters and tavernkeepers" of New Amsterdam, appears in the city court against Hedrick Obe, demanding that he be fined "for the wines laid in by him and not entered, according to depositions," that the wines be confiscated, and that Obe be charged with the costs of the action. Obe in rebuttal says he does "not tap to every one" and that he lodges strangers. He maintains he is "not obliged to pay the full excise." He is condemned to pay Bartelsten "the full excise on the wines laid in and not entered, with costs of clerk hire."—Rec. N. Am., V: 153-54.
- On the 22d, Obe produced the above judgment in court, and declared that he had "laid in some wines not only to tap them, but to sell again," and asked the court if he was obliged to pay excise on more than he had tapped. The court persisted in its original judgment and decreed that Obe would "have to store the wines" on which he intended "to trade, not in the cellar under his house, but elsewhere; as well as make return of the amount of wine he tapped."—Ibid., V: 158-59.
- Capt. Hugh Hyde, commander of H. M. S. "Guinea," comes to Fort James in New York and gives notice to Gov. Nicolls that his vessel is fitted up and ready to sail, but stays only for a favourable wind. He had been ordered, on Oct. 26, by the three royal commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, and Maverick, to set sail "directly for Portsm<sup>o</sup> [Portsmouth, England], giving his Royall Highnesse notice" of his arrival. Hyde was delayed from sailing, in order "to attend the Issue of a Mutiny of the Souldiers" in the garrison of New York, and, as that mutiny had been "appeased," the royal commissioners sent him another sailing order on Nov. 22, this time with directions to "touch upon the westerne parts of England, for advice, and from thence to Portsmouth."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 124, 125, 133.

- The "Prince Graft" (Broad Street from Beaver to Wall St.) is mentioned in a record of this date.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 2. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1008.
- "The Beavers Graft" (Beaver Street between Broadway and Broad St.) is mentioned in a land record of this date.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 3. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 993. "The Marketfield" is mentioned in a laod record of this date.
- The house conveyed was on the corner of the Beaver Graft and overlooked the Marketfield, called by the Dutch "Het Markcveld." This record goes to show that the name was at this time applied to more than the present Whitehall Street, and included the large open space or plain before the fort, at the outlet of Broadway.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 3. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005.
- The president of the city court composes a letter to His Royal Highness, James, Duke of York, on behalf of the city fathers of New York, in which they promise obedience to the duke, and say they deem themselves fortunate that he has provided them "with so gentle, wise, and intelligent a gentleman" for their governour as Col. Richard Nicolls, and they are confident "that under the wings of this valiant gentleman" the city will "bloom and grow like the Cedar on Lebanon." They request for the city "the same rights and privilege, that his Majesty our King and most gracious Lord is 1664 conferring on all his subjects in England; that is, that ships of all

 Nov. nations may come and bring into England the products of their own 22 country, and may sail thence thereunto back again free and without impost on condition of paying the King's duty." But, on account of the impoverished condition of the city of New York, they ask that no more be paid there "for five or six years" than is paid by ships and goods which come "from other places out of England, or even from England to Boston or any places in New England," or go "to their own countries." At the end of this period, they suggest the duke will see the advancement of the province, even to his deriving "great revenues" from it, and will witness a domain
 "then peopled with thousands of families and great trade by sea from New England and other places out of Europe, Africa or America." For communitating these things "with greater pleasure, zeal and courage," they request "that all privileges and prerogatives" which the duke will grant them, "in addition to those inserted and conditioned in the capitulation on the surrender," may "be made known by Letters Patent" from the duke and the king,
 "not only in the United Provinces, but also in France, Spain and other Hansa and Eastern places." This letter is "sealed with the Great Seal of this City impressed on Red Wax." The text of the letter was approved by the city bench on Nov. 24.—Rec. N. Am., V: 160-61, 162.

24 The city court resolves "to give notice to tapsters and tavern-keepers" that, if they want to continue in business, they must take out a license by a given time.—Rec. N. Am., V: 162.

 Holland, growing out of commercial rivalry in African gold-dust and slaves.

26 Customs and duties at the port of New York are made payable to Thomas Delavall by an order of Gov. Nicolls, which directs "that all Shippes or Vessells, from this Port, bound to the Netherlands" shall "pay the Customes and Dutyes exprest in the Booke of Rates, of all sorts of Merchandize, according to Our English Lawes," and "make paym<sup>t</sup> to M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Delavall, at the Custome office."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 133-34. See also Oct. 26.

Dec. An agreement is made between joint commissioners from 1 Connecticut and New York upon boundaries, including provisions that Long Island shall belong to New York, and "that the creek or river called Momoronock which is reputed to be about thirteen miles to the east of West Chester, and a line drawn from the east point or side where the fresh water falls into the salt at high water, north-north-west to the line of the Massachusetts, [shall] be the western bounds of the said Colony of Connecticut; and all plantations lying westward of that creek and line so drawn to be under His Royal Highness' government, and all plantations lying eastward of that creek and line to be under the government of Connecticut."
 —N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 135-36; N. Y. Colonial MSS., XXII: 5; LIX: 5 (Albany). This agreement proved not binding. For further account of the Connecticut-New York boundary, correcting errors in Brodhead's Hist. State of N. Y., see Bowen's Boundary Disputes of Conn., 70-71.

" Gov. Nicolls issues a general letter informing the people on Long Island that they are, by agreement with Connecticut, henceforth under the jurisdiction of the Duke of York. Meanwhile, Nicolls continues all the magistrates in office, and makes the first reference to a meeting of deputies to be held at a more reasonable time to settle the affairs of the island. He says that he expects for the present no other service from the inhabitants than their readiness when summoned to "Joyne in the defence of this his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Territory, as they did in the reducing of it to his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s obedience."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 132-33.

Referring to the determination made by the boundary commissioners of New York and Connecticut on this date, Gov. Andros, in May, 1675, expressed his opinion thereon in a letter to the general assembly of Connecticut, especially as to the territory west of the Connecticut River, as follows: "And as to their [Gov.
 Nicolls's commission] determination for this [New York] Colony made the 15th of december 1664 [it] was an evident surprize & directly Contrary to his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s patent, & their own Intreats & never Confirmed. Els By it not onely what you now have, but also Albany, Esopus & in effect all Hudsons River would be yours

 Side of momoronocke [Mamaroneck] Creeke or Riuier though

Claymed at any time by you."—From a copy in Secretary Allyn's hand, in Winthrop Papers, Vol. X (Miscell. MSS. in Mass. Hist.
 Soc.).

Gov. Nicolls grants liberty to some Lutherans in New York
 "to send for one Minister or more of their Religion, and that they may freely and publicly exercise Divine worship, according to their Consciences," provided they in no wise abuse "this Liberty to the disturbance of others," and obey such laws and ordinances as are imposed upon them by the government.—General Entries, I: 71 (printed in N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, p. 136).

The original permit or charter, still preserved in the archives of the church, is reproduced as Pl. 14, Vol. IV; see also article by Kretzmann in The Oldest Lutheran Church in America (1914), opp.
 p. 12. The full text of the charter is as follows:

"Whereas severall Persons under my Government who profess the Lutheran Religion have taken the Oath of obedience to his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Royall Highness, and such Governour or other Officers, as shall by their Authority be sett over them, and they having requested me for Liberty to send for one Minister, or more of their Religion and that they may freely and publicly Exercise Divine worship according to their Consciences; I do hereby give my Consent therunto, provided they shall not abuse this Liberty to the disturbance of others and submitting to, and obeying such Lawes and Ordinances, as shall be Imposed upon them, by the Authority aforesaid, Given under my hand and Seale at James Fort in New Yorke on the Island of Manhatans, this 6th day of December Anno.
 1664. Richard Nicolls."

In the city court an interesting case comes up, of George Baxter against Cornelis van Ruyven, the receiver of the West India Company's revenues. Baxter says he has "attached the Company's houses" because the company owes him the sum of 1,278 florins. But Van Ruyven answers that he pays only on the order of Stuyvesant, and characterizes Baxter's account as doubtful. He also says that Baxter, while "a servant of the Company, rebelled in the beginning of the year 1655" against the authority of the states-general and the company, by raising up "tumult and sedition in the village of Gravesend and there erected the arms of the Commonwealth of England." To this Baxter gave the lie in court several times, for which "unmanly speeches" he is prevented from speaking further until he pays a fine "for the benefit of the poor." He refuses. Later he relented and returned to the court, made an apology, and promised to pay.—Rec. N. Am., V: 167.

Cornelis Steenwyck, burgomaster of New York, and his partners, are granted by Gov. Nicolls the privilege to trade for one year between Holland and the port of New York in Dutch ships, with "Liberty of unloading and Loading here y<sup>e</sup> Goods and Merchandize of this place, and to export them to what Port they please, paying onely such Customes and Dutyes, as are payable by Englishmen here."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 137-38; also 148-49 (Jan. 30, 1664/5).

Gov. Nicolls issues the following order to Stuyvesant and Van Ruyven with respect to the Dutch West India Co's estate in New York, viz.—

"Whereas the West India Company of Amsterdam hath Intrusted yo<sup>r</sup> with the Managem<sup>t</sup> of an Estate in Lands, Houses, Goods, Cattle, Negroes, Debts, and all other Revenue of what sort soever unto them belonging. These are therefore to give yo<sup>r</sup> notice that for good reasons and Consideracions mee thereunto moving, I have thought fitt to put an Arrest upon yo<sup>r</sup> further proceedings therein, and do require, that yo<sup>r</sup> neither Act nor conclude, in any Bargaine Sale, or disposition of any part or Parcel of the Estate of the West India Company, untilt further Order from mee, but on the contrary, that yo<sup>r</sup> give mee a true and exact Account, without any mystery or concealment of all and every part or Parcel of any sort of Estate appertaining to the West India Company as yo<sup>r</sup> will Answer the neglect of this Warrant upon yo<sup>r</sup> utmost Perill."

On the 27th of this month, Nicolls, by another order to the various local authorities, "to be publisht to yo<sup>r</sup> Inhabitants," required "that all Persons" who were in any way indebted to the company, or had "any part or parcel of the Estate . . . in their possession," or were otherwise interested, should "bring in Writing"
 "to him within ten days' time" "a true State of their Debt and possession, trust or Concealm<sup>t</sup>," with warning of arrest to those who practised fraud, as well as the forfeit of twice the value of thing concealed.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 140-41, 142-43.

- Probably from this year dates the Nicolls Map (or Survey), reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 10A-A. This carefully drawn and accurate survey shows the entire island of Manhattan and its immediate surroundings, and gives, as an inset, a plan of the city, very similar to the "Duke's Plan." It is particularly interesting as showing the early road system at the southern end of the island.
- During this and the following year, the "Deacon's Account" (printed in full in Riker's History of Harlem, 247) indicates activity in building a Dutch Reformed church at Harlem. It was on the north side of the Great Way (later the Church Lane), on a vacant lot between the east end of the old gardens and the river, i.e., in 125th St. west of First Ave. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 935), seemingly reserved for the purpose. The work, suspended "during the farming season, was resumed on the approach of winter by the mechanics Jan Gulick and Nels Matthyssen."—Riker, 248. In order to raise money for the purpose, "gardens, suitable also for building lots," were laid out, to be sold to "actual freeholders or residents at 25 gl. each." There were 20 of these, each containing about half an acre, at the west end of the village plot, running north and south from street to street. They were called the "Out Gardens," as they were outside the palisade.
- "Doubtless, as is usual in new settlements, the people undertook the incipient labour of preparing the timber, etc., as a voluntary offering. This work, of which no record remains, had evidently been completed and the building inclosed and [made] ready for seats" when the deacon's account of money expenditures began.
- The first entry, under Jan. 23, 1665, is for a feast given for Gen. Stuyvesant by D. Tourneur, Verveelen, and Montagne, at a cost of f. 21:19. The minister probably came from New York to conduct the services.—Ibid., 246-48.
- In 1666, the church was not finished and money was needed. Some of the out-gardens had not been sold, and but little money had been paid in for the others. It was resolved that a tax should be "laid upon the lands, by the morgen from each lot," but for the present, if the ministers and deacons approved, funds were to be borrowed from the "poor money." Lumber was obtained, and Hendrick Karstens was employed to "raise up and underpin the building," and also to plaster it.—Ibid., 256. By Jan. 30, 1667, work was so far completed that an allotment of seats took place. The building now came to be used as a school as well as church, and a loft or second story was sometimes rented. There was on the church lot an older house, belonging to the town, which was probably rented with the loft. A change was also made in the burying-ground at this time.—Ibid., 263-65.
- On Thursday, April 15, 1686, "the people had gathered around the Lord's table, for the last time in that humble but hallowed sanctuary where, through their early struggles, they had sought and found inward strength and comfort."—Ibid., 455. The church was abandoned in 1687 for a second and better edifice. Regarding the second church, see March 30, 1686.
- In this year, St. Augustine, Fla., was plundered by buccaners under Capt. John Davis, an Englishman.
- In this year, the colonies of New Haven and Connecticut were finally united. John Winthrop was elected governor.
- The great plague of London rages throughout this year.
- Jan. 31 A petition of Eghbert Meindersen to the burgomasters is brought to the attention of the city court, in which Meindersen seeks "some abatement from the farming of the taxes," because he has "not received any excise from the cattle slaughtered as well before as after the English troubles." He is allowed 20 guilders "in seawant @ eight white or four black beads for one stiver."—Rec. N. Am., V: 182.
- "Arien Appel, who has boarded and lodged some soldiers of the English garrison, seeks payment from the city, but is referred to Gov. Nicolls or Thomas Delavall.—Rec. N. Am., V: 183, 187-88.
- Feb. 2 By the sixteenth article of capitulation (see Aug. 27/Sept. 6, 1664), the burgomasters and schepens in office at that time were continued. That article stipulated that they should also thereafter name and elect their successors. Under the Dutch régime they had been allowed only to nominate, whilst the election was reserved to the director-general and council. Following out now (Feb. 2) these vested rights, the board elects and confirms a new city court bench. This done, they submitted their action to Gov. Nicolls, to learn "if he had any objection to these persons." He had not, and the board proceeded to proclaim the new bench to the commonalty of the city at the city hall. The new members took the oath of allegiance to the English authority on the 5th, and their oath of office on the following day. Not one member of this bench was an Englishman.—Rec. N. Am., V: 183-85; N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 146-47.

Col. Cartwright, in a letter to Gov. Nicolls, says: "I am very glad that Mr Willet intends to go immediately to you (by whom I hope this letter will come safe to your hands). I believe him both a very honest and an able gentleman, and y<sup>e</sup> he will serve you both for a Mayor and a Councillor."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 87. This letter reveals the fact that Gov. Nicolls was planning at this time to place Thomas Willet at the head of the municipal government, when English officials should displace the Dutch (see June 12). Brodhead says: "At Nicoll's request, Carr, while on his way to Boston, visited Willet at Rehoboth, and obtained for him from Governor Prencle leave of absence from Plymouth, to assist in remodeling the city government in New York, as he was more acquainted with the manners and customs of the Dutch than any Englishman in the country, and his conversation was very acceptable to them."—Brodhead, Hist. of N. Y., II: 76.

Col. Cartwright advises Gov. Nicolls that "the Fort is not to be kept 2 days longer nor 2 howers, by having the walls raised higher, in my opinion, and therefore a battery upon the point would be of greater advantage and more considerable than the Fort itself, if ever the town be fortified: The same materials will serve in both places."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 87.

The first suggestion of post-riders appears in a letter of Gov. Nicolls to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut: "I have for the speedy dispatch of Letters of Publicke concern made a Law that any Letter attested on the back side with the Name of the Governour of any Colony, and directed to mee, or from mee so attested by mee to any Governour or other person shall be Immediately dispatch<sup>d</sup> from Constable to Constable, who is to presse a horse and man for such service at the rate of six pence per mile." He suggests that Winthrop "cause the same to be put in practise" in the colony of Connecticut, the payment to be "laid upon the Publick charge."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 23, in Mass. Hist. Soc. for the establishment of the first regular postal service, see Dec. 10, 1672.

The members of the city court unanimously agree to obey the ordinaoes "on the subject of being absent and coming too late as well as ordinary as extraordinary Court days."—Rec. N. Am., V: 189.

Elizabeth Tyss(e) receives a patent by way of confirmation for a plot "having on ye southwest the Maids Path, and on the northwest the East River and on the southwest the house of Peter Hermens which said southwest side contains by estimation 120 feet, 6 inches, the southeast side, 127 feet, and the northwest side 250 feet, 6 inches."—Liber Patents, I: 33 (Albany). See also Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 467.

This day is set by Gov. Nicolls for the appearance of two deputies from each town on Long Island and Westchester for a general meeting at Hempstead, "to Settle good and knowne Laws within this government for the future."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 564-65.

The Duke of York's Laws are promulgated at Hempstead, L. I., Gov. Nicolls having them compiled from the statutes governing other English colonies in America. Regarding the various original written copies of these, and the later printed ones, as well as their substance and amendments, see Col. Laws N. Y., I: 6-100. The preparation and publication of these laws were done in obedience to the duke's commission to Nicolls, dated April 2, 1664 (q. v.). A letter of March 13, from Gov. Nicolls to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, acknowledged the receipt of a copy of the Connecticut laws when he "was upon the way to Hempstead." He said that he "had finish<sup>d</sup> the body of Lawes for this Government, except the Publicke Rates whereof I gave the Deputies their choice amongst all the Lawes of the other Colonies who recievd verbatim those of Connecticut." All the other laws, he said, were "collected either out of those of Boston, Newhaver, Mary Land or Virginia, and by that you may conclude them not much differing from those of y<sup>e</sup> Colony." The governour went on to tell of his "great tryalls and exercise of patience" with "some very disoblising persons [Capt. Young of Southold and John Howell of Southampton] whom I sought most to satisfy both with reasons & Civility." I "made divers concessions and alterations in the Lawes . . . acquainted them that I would give them the most honourable share in the Government but I found they . . . refused any office att all which you know passeth not vponusith in other Colonies but I am 1665 too well Naturd to deale harshly though with the worst of men." Mar.

 Mar. Furthermore, when, at the conclusion of the meeting, the other 1 deputies signed "a publike address to his R. Highnesse . . . that they and theirs doe submit cheerfully according to the Tenour of the Patent to his Royall Highness and his heires and the Lawes which are or shall be establish," Young and Howell did not sign.—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 23, in Mass. Hist. Soc.; cf. Brodhead, op. cit., II: 66-70. These laws, thus formulated, are ill-arranged and relate to a large variety of subjects, such as the proceedings of courts in various actions at law; the administration of estates; slavery; the boundaries of towns and common lands; brewers; the registration of births, marriages, and burials; capital offences; branding and impounding of cattle, horses, sheep, and hogs; public worship and holy ordinances; children and servants; physicians and surgeons; conveyances; forfeit of dowry; fast days and thanksgiving; official fees; crimes; innkeepers and ordinaries; Indians; defamation; lying and false news; military affairs; marriages; master and servants; public officers (such as constables, overseers, justices of the peace, etc.); public charges; weights and measures; wolves; shipwrecks; oaths; forms of procedure, etc.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 6-73. The laws further provide that a court of assizes, composed of "The Governour and Council with the High Sheriff & the Justices of the Peace" shall be held at New York once a year, beginning on the last Thursday in September. This court had the "supreme Power of making, altering and abolishing any Laws" in New York.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 16; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 188. Some authorities believe that a court of assizes existed before March 1, 1665. Chalmers, Pol. Ann., I: 575, says that Nicolls, in erecting this court, was merely "prudentely copying what had been already established by the Dutch," and Dawson, in The Sons of Liberty in N. Y., 11 (footnote), puts forth the suggestion that the court of assizes was the same as the Dutch "Court of Director General and Council." See also Brodhead, op. cit., I: 63 (footnote). These laws were amended in many particulars in Sept. and Oct., 1665, and added to in 1670, 1671, 1672, 1675.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 73-100. An alphabetical index was made in 1667 in the East Hampton (L. I.) copy of the original laws.—Ibid., 93. New York City was made by these laws the place of record of bargains, sales, or other conveyances, and of the administration and probate of wills.—Ibid., 62. There is a copy of the laws at Albany, in the office of the secretary of state. They are printed in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 305-428. See March 17; and Addenda, March 8.

2 To the city court, Schout Anthony Chadds Lydenba Ackermans with using an unstamped weight and unstamped wine measure; that on Jan. 8 (Sunday) people went into her house, "after the third bell rang," to drink; also that she had insulted and abused Domine Megapoleosis with "Godless words." She makes all kinds of excuses in extenuation of the charges, but the court decrees that she will "have to clear herself by oath."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 192-93.

17 Gov. Nicolls, writing to Gov. Winthrop, says: "I shall cause a Copy of our Lawes [see March 1] to be written according to your desires."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 165. If ever made, this copy seems to have disappeared. There is preserved in the Mass. Hist. Soc. a fine manuscript copy of the Duke's Laws that was sent in 1673 to the chief magistrate of Nantucket (then a part of New York). It is in the handwriting of John Clarke, the engraving clerk in the office of Sec'y Matthias Nicolls; it contains 62 leaves, of which the last three are blank. The first page is an engrossed title, as follows: "Laws Established by his Royall Highnesse James Duke of Yorke & Albany &c To be observed in his R. H<sup>es</sup> Territories in America." There is a statement, dated April 22, 1673, in the handwriting of Matthias Nicolls, that the oath of fidelity was always to the king, and that proceedings were in the king's name.—Cf. Hough, Nantucket Papers, 59; Ex. Coun. Min., I: 372-73.

18 Gov. Nicolls issues a warrant to the "Scout, and p<sup>se</sup>nt Magistrates of Harlem" to require that they take "speciall care, that none of your Towne p<sup>se</sup>sume to sell any sort of Stroog Liqueur, or Strong Beere unto any Indyen, and if you<sup>es</sup> shall finde any Person offending therein, that you<sup>es</sup> Seize upon such Liqueur, and bring such Persons before mee to make Answer for y<sup>o</sup> Offence."—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 159.

21 Albert Leeedertsen and Arianstje Cornelis petition the city court for satisfaction and payment, or restitution, "of their land taken by the Hoo: Petrus Stuyvesant and laid out for the Village of N: Haerlem." Stuyvesant was furnished with a copy of the petition and order by the court to make an "answer therunto in writing."—Rec. N. Am., V: 202.

The president of the city court informs the bench that, during a visit by him and Burgomaster Van Cortlandt on the previous day to Gov. Nicolls, the governour had told them the soldiers were in need of being boarded and of having their washing done, because they had no "pot or kettle to cook for themselves," and "it was therefore necessary to quarter the soldiers in the Burgers' houses;" adding, that he would furnish weekly rations for the soldiers and the burgomasters should give payment of two guilders weekly for each soldier for lodging money, in consideration of which the city should have, "in addition to the great excise, the income of the Scales and the Ferry, and that eighty soldiers" should "be quartered, two and two in a house." The city bench agree "to see some Burgers" to obtain their consent to lodge soldiers. Meanwhile, the schout is sent to Gov. Nicolls to invite his presence at their meeting. The schout returning, reports that the governour is "not yet dressed," but has requested "that Burgomasters and Schepens would please come to him."—Rec. N. Am., V: 207-8. See March 31.

A large number of burghers and inhabitants having been "invited to appear at the City Hall this day," about three dozen respond. The president of the bench informs them of the governour's proposal and the reasons thereof (see March 29); that the governour wanted to scatter the soldiery so as to prevent further disturbances and insolences by them, and that the governour promised, if any person suffered "any damage or imposition" from the soldiers billeted in a house, he would "make good the same and charge the damage to the soldiers." Most of those present refuse to lodge soldiers.—Rec. N. Am., V: 208-9. See April 6.

The president of the city court informs his associates that he and Burgomaster Van Cortlandt have again had a conference with Gov. Nicolls at which the governour "accused them of sloth" in regard to "quartering the soldiers in the Burgher's houses" (see March 31). If they have not sufficient authority, Nicolls is willing to vest them with it; he intends to send for them in the evening, in order to bear their resolutions. After listening to this report, the court agrees unaniously that "it is a serious matter," and resolves "to request from the Governour that the subject be postponed 'till to-morrow in order to bear thereon the old Burgomasters and Schepens as well as some of the principal Burghers, and to ask their advice."—Rec. N. Am., V: 211.

The conference with the court members was held on the 7th. The governour's proposal was again presented, but those present unanimously declared "they would rather contribute than receive the soldiers into the house." Gov. Nicolls then appeared, and again they were asked "man for man," in his presence, "if they intended to receive and lodge soldiers," but they persisted in their former declaration. After all had withdrawn except the governour and the regular members of the bench, Nicolls delivered a written order, charging the court to give him a list of houses sufficient for lodging 100 soldiers, and to so distribute the number that not more than two would be lodged in any one house. To this the court replied that the commonalty dreaded to receive soldiers in their houses, in view of the insolences that the soldiers were even now committing against the people.—Ibid., V: 212-13. See April 18 and 19.

Bartholdus Maan complains to the city court "that two soldiers struck him on the head on the 5th of April or thereabouts, New Style" that, although he was forbidden by Gov. Nicolls "to tap for the soldiers," he was forced to it by the soldiers, who came in crowds before his door, even taking "two of his great glasses," and accusing him falsely "of having presented a pistol at them to shoot them," when, in fact, they had "taken the pistol from his bedstead" and carried it off, he only securing it again "outside his door." He also accuses two soldiers of insulting his wife; of a number of soldiers coming in and, "with naked swords, backing and striking all within their reach," giving him and Daniel Verveelen a cut, as well as later "in the night after the rounds had passed," smashing his window in pieces, an offence which they had committed against his house on a previous occasion also.—Rec. N. Am., V: 211. Insolence like this by the soldiery determined the commonalty not to quarter them in their houses, as the governour had desired.—Ibid., 212.

In the city court of June 13, Bartholdus Maan was again in trouble, the schout charging that there was "disturbance and trouble at defts. house on the 9th of June last, and that deft. is accused with having drawn a knife, also presented a pistol" and that the governour had ordered him, the schout, "to take informa-

8 Gov. Nicolls grants to William Goulding and others all that part of East Jersey between Sandy Hook and the Karitan River.

14 Gov. Nicolls gives orders to Cornelis van Ruyven, late treasurer-general of the West India Company in liquidation, to "make up and Complete the said Books of Account" of the company.—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 164. See Dec. 24, 1664.

18 Isaac Grevenraet, in whose house the soldiers were quartered, asks the city bench to permit him to have possession of his house again "on the first of May," when the lease expires.—Rec. N. Am., V: 219. See Feb. 13, 1666. For the location of the house, see Castello Plan, II: 237.

19 The earliest known street directory of New York City was a "List of the Burgers and Inhabitants of this City that are assessed" for the lodging of the English soldiers. It gives, all told, 254 names, as follows: At the Marketfield, 11; on the Heere Straet (Broadway), 22; on the Strand of the North River, 13; at the Cingel or City Wall, 10; on High St., 41; along the Waal, 11; by the Water (now Pearl St.), 15; on Pearl St., 19; behind Pearl St., 7; on Brewer St., 11; on Winckel St., 5; on Bridge St., 10; on the Heere Graf, 20; on the Prince Graf, 17; on Prince St., 3; on the Beaver's Graf, 9; in Marketfield Alley, 8; on Smeek (Smith) St., 11; in the Smits Vly (Smith's Valley), 18; outside of the Landgate, 5.—Rec. N. Am., V: 221-25. Cf. Man. Com. Coun. (1849), 356-59; Ibid. (1850), 452; Ibid. (1861), 613-21. This list as given in Wilson Mem. Hist. of N. Y., 1: 338-40, teems with errors. The "De Sille List" (see July 10, 1660, and The Nicusius de Sille List, II: 349-51) was a census of houses rather than a directory.

" The city court is again appraised of the governor's order for billeting 100 soldiers (see March 29), and that he offers now a weekly pay of three guilders in seawant "or goods equivalent." Nobody was satisfied, however, unless another two guilders were added. This being conceded, enough places were found for quartering the 100 men. Nicolls was given a list of the houses, and he gave it to Capts. Delavall and Salisbury "with orders to inspect the houses;" and to ascertain if they were "adapted for the reception and lodging of the soldiers." They reported to him that the houses were "almost all fit except fifteen in number wanting double bedding and pillows for two persons, which Burgomasters and Schepens having fitted up, they were delivered over to Capt. Salisbury on the 18th of this month by order of the Hon. Govt Nicolls." The governor was "about to depart for Boston . . . in three or four days," hence he "thought fit to suspend the quarterings until his return . . . so as to remove difficulties between Burgher and soldier," but "on condition that Burgomasters and Schepens should pay now to the soldiers the two guilders per week in seawant as lodging money, which they had previously promised to the Burghers for the quartering the soldiers." The court decided "to accept the proposition of General Nicolls considering it to be the best for the Commonalty and good inhabitants" of the city, and resolved upon "a general assessment" to raise the 200 guilders required weekly (see also June 17). Jan Jelisens Koek was authorized by the court "to go, with one of the Court Messengers, from house to house with the assessment list, and collect the monies from each for so much as he is assessed." On the 20th, he received his formal act of authority, in which he was "ordered to prepare both notes and strings of wampum of two guilders to two hundred guilders and deliver them to the Treasurer" of the city; if there was a residue, he could give that to the treasurer in any greater sum, yet, in no wise "receive any sum without counting it," since he was "responsible for the monies, for the counting of which" he was promised "ten guilders a week."—Rec. N. Am., V: 220-25. See May 2.

20 A certificate states that grants of land near Stuyvesant's bowery, were made in 1659 and 1660 to divers negroes; the negroes' names are given.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 269.

" Because of complaints "That the Scout of Harlem doth not execute his Office, and y<sup>e</sup> severall disorders are committed, and y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants hindered of their accustomed Rights," the governor orders that the "Magistrates now in being, do Act as formerly, and in case the Scout will not Execute his Office, That the Magistrates do Justice in his place, for the good of the Towne, and to decide all matters, that doth, or shall happen there, not exceeding the value of one hundred guld<sup>r</sup> in Wampone."—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 1652-66.

A passport for ex-Gov. Peter Stuyvesant with his son, Nicholas William, and servants, to go to Holland in the "Crost Heart," is issued by Gov. Nicolls.—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 69. See May 2.

22 John Underhill is commissioned by Gov. Nicolls inspector of all ships coming into port and surveyor of the customs on Long Island.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XVI: 566-67.

25 Referring to his petition of Oct. 11, 1664 (q. v.), concerning salary, Evert Pietersen, the schoolmaster, asks the city court what has been decided or done in the matter, and is informed "that it with other petitions was shewn and delivered to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Governour Nicolls, who has postponed the matter until his return."—Rec. N. Am., V: 231. See Sept. 19.

May Isaac Grevenraet rents his house, "standing in the Broadway" (at the present No. 46 Broadway) to the burgomasters, as barracks for soldiers (see March 29). This is the earliest mention of barracks for British troops in New York.—Rec. N. Am., V: 337. See Feb. 13, 1666.

2 Petrus Stuyvesant visits the city court and informs the bench that, as his time is short and he is about to depart for Holland (see April 2), he wishes them "every luck and happiness," sentiments which the court reciprocates. He requests the court, if proper in their eyes, to "accord to him a certificate of his comportment," which may "avail him or his children today or tomorrow." After due consideration, the court issues to him a certificate, stating that he has "during about eighteen years' administration conducted and demeaned himself not only as a Director General, according to the best of our knowledge ought to do, on all occurring circumstances, for the interest of the West India Company, but besides as an honest proprietor and patriot of this Province and a supporter of the Reformed Religion."—Rec. N. Am., V: 233.

" Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and others appear in court and are told about the governor's resolve, "that for the good of the place an assessment list is made of what each shall have to give per week as long as Gov. Nicolls shall be from home or at least for six weeks, so that the soldiers may not be quartered in Burghers houses and that they were found unwilling to contribute the same" (see April 19). Their reasons are demanded. They reply "that the money was not expended as well as it ought and that the soldiers notwithstanding evince their insolence; also that the assessment was unjust, because one is taxed in proportion higher than the others." The board endeavours "in a friendly way" to pacify the objectors, on the ground that it is only for six weeks' time. They then agree to bring in what they are assessed. Some women came now into court, to whom the situation was explained, and the court allowed each of the women "to give according to her ability." So, more was gained by friendly intervention than by force.—Rec. N. Am., V: 232-33.

4 Gov. Nicolls holds out inducements to Gov. Winthrop to settle in New York City, addressing him by letter thus: "If your resolutions are, not to accept of the Government of Connecticut the Year ensuing, I would beg the favour of you, to resolve of settling at N. Yorke with y<sup>e</sup> family, where probably some matters considerable may be putt in practise by y<sup>e</sup> assistance and knowledge. To w<sup>ch</sup> end whatever you shall comnd and mee I will readily performe, and one thing I doe promise you, that in fourteen daies Notice I will provide for y<sup>e</sup> selfe and family one of the best houses in N. Yorke, which shall cost you nothing but the acceptance, wherein also you will extremely oblige."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 165, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

19 Jacob Flodder, of Albany, bought, in 1656, a plot of land from the heirs of Jan Jansen Damen, on the south side of Wall St., between Pearl and William Sts., which he subdivided and sold off in small parcels, reserving a strip in the rear on the East River side (now Pearl St.). He has been notified by the city court "to build up and line the bank" of this lot on the waterside, with planking against the wash of the tide. His dereliction leads the court on this date to write to the court magistrates at Albany, requesting that court to notify Flodder by their court messenger to comply, as a further neglect will be followed by the sale of his lot and confiscation of his rights therein.—Rec. N. Am., V: 233-34.

23 Hendrick Willemssen, the baker, living on Bridge St., corner of Broad, complains in the city court about the trouble he is having from the drain of his neighbour, Annetje Gerrits, widow of Hendrick Jansen Smit.—Rec. N. Am., V: 238. Sometime in June the widow promised to change her drain, but failed to do so. Willemssen made further complaints against her, but in spite of repeated threats

1665 and orders by the court, she did nothing, and the case dragged along May for almost three years.—Ibid., V: 300, 342, 343-44, 351. Finally, 23 on May 19, 1668, the court ordered the sheriff to have one of the city carpenters "finish the Watercourse," and "to seize upon so much of the good [s] and effects" of the widow as would cover the costs of the work and the charges of the court.—Ibid., VI: 127.
 This decree seems to have been carried out (ibid., VI: 138), but it does not appear to have been done to the satisfaction of Willemssen, for he complained again (Dec. 5, 1671). The court then ordered the execution of former orders without delay.—Ibid., VI: 348.

June An order from Gov. Nicolls directs Cornelius van Ruyven to ad-8 just accounts with Warner Wessells "for the farmes hee hired the last yeare, of the West India Company, and also, to Account wth him, what is due from him to the said Company, on any former Account." Van Ruyven was also ordered to adjust accounts with Jonas Barteloon, weighmaster.—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 171.

12 A municipal government, of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff, is established for the first time. By the governour's proclamation, this English form displaces that of the Dutch schout, burgomasters, and schepens. The leaves which contain the order of "Revocation of the forme of Government of New Yorke undt y<sup>e</sup> Style of Burgomast<sup>rs</sup> and Schepens" (June 12, 1665), and the charter of Gov. Nicolls, establishing a court of mayor and aldermen (June 12, 1665), are missing in the original minutes of the city court, under June 13, 1665.
 In the printed Rec. N. Am., ed. by Fernow, these two documents were printed from texts in Gen. Ent., I, which later were destroyed in the capitol fire at Albany in 1911.—Rec. N. Am., V: 248-50.

In the "Revocation," the change in the form of government is indicated by Nicolls as follows: "I do Revoke and discharge the forme and Ceremonie of Government of this his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Towne of New Yorke, under the Name or Names, Style or Styles, of Scout Burgomasters and Schepens; . . . I do further declare, That by a Particular Commission, Such Persons shall be Authorized to putt the Lawes in Execucon, in whose abilities, Prudence and good Affection to his Maties Service, and y<sup>e</sup> Peace and happynesse of this Governmt I have especially reason to putt Confidence, which persons so Constituted and appointed, shall be Knowe and Called by y<sup>e</sup> Name and Style of MAYOR, ALDERMEN and SHERIFFE, according to the Custome of England in other his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Corpora-cons." See also editorial in N. Y. Times, June 27, 1921.

In the "Mayor and Aldermen's Commission," Nicolls further states that he has found it necessary to change the form of government under the name of "Scout, Burgomast<sup>rs</sup> and Schepens, which are not knowne or Customary, in any of his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Dominions; To the end that the course of Justice for the future, may be Legally, equally and impartially administered to all his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Subjects as well Inhabitants as Strangers; KNOW ALL MEN by upon this Island, Commonly call'd and Knowne by the name of the MANHATTANS ISLAND, are, and shall bee for ever, accounted, Nominated and Established, as one Body Politique & Corporate, under the Governmt of a Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffe, and I do by these PRESENTS Constitute and appoint, for one whole yeare, . . .

 M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Willitt [see Feb. 4] to be Mayor, M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Dela-
 Ruyven and M<sup>r</sup> John Laurence, to bee Aldermen, and M<sup>r</sup> Allard Anthony to bee Sheriffe; Giving and Granting, to them the said Mayor and Aldermen, or any foure of them, whereof the said Mayor or his Deputy, shall bee always one, and upon equall Division of voyces, to have always the Casting and Decisive voyce, full Power and authority to Rule and Govern as well all the Inhabitants of this Corporacon as any Strangers . . . As also, to appoint such under Officers as they shall judge necessary for the orderly execution of Justice; And I do hereby strictly Charge and Command all persons to obey and execute, from Time to Time, all such Warrants, Orders and Constitutions, as shall be made by the said Mayor and Aldermen, as they will Answer the Contrary at their Utmost Perills.—Ibid., V: 248-50. Cf. text of commission in M. C. C., II: 53-54. The following oath of office is from N. Y.
 the one in Rec. N. Am., V: 251-52:—

Gov. Nicolls appears in the city court at the city hall, accom-14 panied by the newly appointed mayor and aldermen (see June 12).
 Burgomaster Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, who has been named as one of the aldermen on the new board, arises and maintains that the abrogation of the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens at this time is "directly contrary to the 16th Article made on the surrender" of the city, which stated that "All Officers and Magistrates" should continue as they then were, "if they were willing,
 "till the time of election," when, and not till then, "new ones" were "to be chosen by themselves." Nicolls replies, and correctly, too, that the article is "not infringed in the least, as at the time of election [see Feb. 2] other new ones were chosen by the retiring Magistrates," who have continued in office ever since. A considerable debate ensues; but Gov. Nicolls is determined to proceed in conformity with his instructions from the Duke of York, "to establish the government of this City conformable to the custom of England," which is done on this day. He declares he has "nothing to say against the service of those retiring nor against their demeanour;" he acknowledges as "good" what they have "heretofore officially resolved and concluded;" but declares he has "qualified some English for the office on purpose," so that litigants, "as well English and Dutch," may "be better aided on both sides," and in the interest of "the peace and quiet of the inhabitants." This done, Gov.
 Nicolls "installed" the mayor, aldermen, and sheriff and administered the oath to them. After the taking of the oath and "the customary ringing of the bell three times," the new court was "proclaimed to the Commonalty."—Rec. N. Am., V: 250-52.

Gov. Nicolls, in accordance with his majesty's commission of 15 Feb. 22, 1664, declares "that all the Houses, Lands, Goods, Estate both Reall and Personall, Debts and Credits, belonging to the said West India Company, . . . are confiscated to the use and Service of his Ma<sup>ties</sup>;"—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 174-75. See Dec.
 24, 1664, and June 22, 1665. Brodhead states that the old West India Company went into liquidation soon after the conquest of New Netherland in 1664, and the new corporation took no interest in its recapture.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., 209, footnote.

The newly organized city court of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff 17 (see June 12) holds its first meeting. They vote to continue Joannes Nevius as secretary of the city, at 200 guilders seawant as an annual allowance (see June 27), and "to increase the emoluments and fees for writing by allowing [him] to charge for them silver value, or seawant three for one," keeping Nevius "a month or two on trial."—Rec. N. Am., V: 252.

18 Claes van Elslandt and Pieter Schaafbanck, who served as court messengers under the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens, are now "continued in their offices as Towne Serjeants" by the newly organized city court of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff, at the same wages as heretofore.—Ibid., V: 252. On Oct. 10, all occurring occasions in court, "that they were employed on all occurring occasions by the General [Nicolls], Capt. La Val [Delavall], M<sup>r</sup> Van Ruyven and other officers without receiving any pay therof," and requested
 "some allowance," since their regular income was insufficient for their support. The court asked Mayor Willitt to consult the governour and other provincial officers about it.—Ibid., V: 301.
 Hendrick Ohe was elected constable and took oath to endeavour to preserve the peace and prevent its infringement; to "truly execute such warrants" as were handed to him by the court, and, in his absence, to furnish "some able man" as his deputy.—Ibid., V: 252, 254. See June 21, 1666, for his reappointment.

The newly-organized court of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff orders "the Court of Haarlem and the Constable Resolvect Waldron by letter" to be present at their session on the 17th, for the purpose of receiving their orders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 252-53. Accordingly, on the day named, Waldron appeared and was notified of his election to the post of "Constable of N. Haarlem;" he accepted and took the oath. The magistrates, who came with Waldron, were then "discharged from their office," and Waldron, as constable, was authorized "to select three or four persons," as overseers, who were "to decide any differences or dispute to the extent of five pounds sterling in seawan and no higher," and, if any party was dissatisfied with the decision, he could appeal therefrom to the city court of New York, upon payment of six st. to the constable and the costs of proceeding before the city bench.—Ibid., V: 254.

The new city court resolves "to draft a Placard relative to the observance of the Sabbath."—Rec. N. Am., V: 253.

"Whereas the provision regarding the City revenue as well from the Burgers as tapsters excise on wines and beer consumable within the jurisdiction of this City is somewhat high, inasmuch as the Treasurer deducts five per cent and the Collector in like manner five per cent," the city court "resolved to observe the strictest economy therein; also to order the Treasurer and Collector to appear next Saturday afternoon at two o'clock here in the City Hall to render a good account of their administration."—Rec. N. Am., V: 253. See June 17.

The churchyard of the city (Castello Plan, II: 221-22, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927) is "very open and unfenced," so that the hogs root there. The mayor's court sends for the churchwardens, one of whom, Govert Loockermans, appears. He is told of the conditions and "the necessity of repairing the same." He replies that such repairs can be made easily enough if there is "money in the chest;" and that it will cost 500 guilders to do the work properly. It is concluded to raise the sum by "a collection."—Rec. N. Am., V: 253. See Nov. 13.

The mayor's court votes "that from now henceforward," and until Gov. Nicolls shall "order otherwise," there shall "be raised weekly from the Commonalty" a levy of "two hundred guilders in seawan," according to assessment, "for the support of the soldiers as heretofore."—Rec. N. Am., V: 254-55. See also April 19.

The mayor's court resolves "that both the Burgers and tapsters' permits, passed by the Collector," shall "be brought every evening to Nicolaas Bayard by the labourers of the Weighscale and the beer drawers," and that the "Weigh house labourers and beer carriers" shall appear at the city hall on the next Monday, at nine in the morning.—Rec. N. Am., V: 255. On that day (19th), Bayard was notified that he was to be furnished thereafter "with the Excise permits of beer and wine consumable as well by the Burgers as tapsters and tavernkeepers" in the city's jurisdiction, "to be executed by the Collector Tymotheus Gabry, whereof he shall be bound to keep a register; and that he should "sit, every Court day, with the Secretary Nevius in Court, and keep the minutes" of what was "transacted in English, translate the same into Dutch, make extracts thereof in English, and . . . agree with the . . . Secretary for the writing both of the same and of the Dutch." At the same time, the court reëacted the ordinance relative to the duties to be performed by the weigh-house and beer porters, of whom Barent Jacobsen Kool was foreman, and the men took the oath to abide by their instructions.—Ibid., V: 256-58.

Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, the city treasurer, and Tymotheus Gabry, the collector (see June 15), appear before the city court and produce their accounts "relating to the income, receipt and expenditure of the City's domains."—Rec. N. Am., V: 254. The city court determines "to abolish the office of Treasurer and the monies as well of the Burgers as tappers excise," to "be received by the Collector Tymotheus Gabry," who is "to disburse the same on the order and signatures of Mayor Tomas Willet and the Secretary Joannes Nevius;" and the secretary of the city is "ordered to keep the book thereof and to register the orders."—Ibid., V: 255. On June 19, Gabry, the collector of the city, promised the court "to conduct himself honestly" in his office, and took the formal oath.—Ibid., V: 255-56. See June 5, 1676.

A riot, caused by some soldiers from the fort, takes place about seven o'clock this evening "on the Bridge" by the East River, during which several persons are struck with swords, and the constable, Hendrick Obe, is wounded.—Rec. N. Am., V: 260-63.

The mayor's court orders the bakers of the city "to furnish this day to Secretary Nevius an account of what they . . . baked here during five months in cakes and hard bread, to whom delivered and how much they still have on hand."—Rec. N. Am., V: 255.

The mayor's court orders all the tapsters of the city to appear at the city hall on next Saturday (24th) in the afternoon, "bringing with them their last obtained tapsters license."—Rec. N. Am., V: 260. On the 24th, Secretary Nevius was "ordered to give the tapsters a license" on the following Monday (26th), "to enable them to tap for one quarter of a year."—Ibid., V: 263.

Gov. Nicolls directs the civil and military officers of the three ridings of Yorkshire to put their jurisdictions "into such a Posture, and readiness," for the defence of New York against the contemplated visit of the Dutch fleet under Admiral De Ruyter, that "upon their first notice" they shall "Immediately repair to the ferry, or over against New York" as a place of rendezvous under arms.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 568. Yorkshires was the name which was given to Long Island by Capt. Nicolls when New Netherland came into the hands of the English.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 105.

This day, "after the usual riving of the City Hall bell three times," is "published a Proclamation regarding the confiscation of the West India Company's effects, in consequence of the Company inflicting all sorts of injury on his Royal Majesty's subjects; pursuant to the printed Proclamation."—Rec. N. Am., V: 262. See June 15.

Gov. Nicolls sends a letter to Gov. John Winthrop, of Connecticut, enclosing a copy of a letter from the king, and urging Winthrop to "provide the best you can, against the Common Enemy; I have made some former Proposals to you of mutual Assistance upon such occasions, but I could hitherto, never obtain a Satisfactory Answer, yourselves well know, that your preservation of this place, is of the greatest Consequence to the Safety, (not only of his Ma.<sup>ties</sup> Interest in New England, but more Particularly of your several Plantations adjacent, you may Read in his Ma.<sup>ties</sup> Letter that hee hath been pleased to Authorize and Impower mee, to See that your Publick Peace and Safety, bee diligently attended in this conjuncture of affaires, and therefore I desire you will give some speedy direction, that the Neighbor Townes of your Colony, do upon notice from mee, of the Enemies approach, repair to New York, to wch place De Ruyter hath Orders to give a visite, as my Letters from my Lord Chancellors inform." Winthrop is also requested to forward enclosures to Boston.—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 1777. N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 567. The original letter is among the Winthrop Papers in the Mass. Hist. Soc.

Under this date, Gov. Nicolls writes also to Gov. Bellingham, of Massachusetts, enclosing a copy of "his Ma.<sup>ties</sup>" letter and dispatches to be forwarded to the governors of Plymouth and Rhode Island.—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 1777-78; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 567-68.

The mayor's court resolves "that the tonnage, anchorage and other duties" shall "be levied" by order of the mayor and aldermen, as heretofore, until further order, "except the Burgher tax."—Rec. N. Am., V: 263.

The earliest panel of jurors and earliest case of trial by jury in the mayor's court of New York City are of record on this date.—Rec. N. Am., V: 267.

Mayor Willet informs his colleagues on the city court bench that he intends "to goe to Albania with the first Convenient opportunity" and desires the court to "accept in his absence as his Deputy Mr Thomas d' Laval" (Delavall), one of the aldermen, who by this procedure becomes the first deputy mayor of New York City.—Rec. N. Am., V: 268.

The city being "very open and unfortified," Mayor Willet asks the court if it were not expedient to call the inhabitants together, to learn if they are willing to contribute toward the fortifying of the place. The bench agrees that the fortifying is necessary; but suggests, before consulting with the inhabitants, "to hear the advice" of Gov. Nicolls in the premises. Yet, on the following day (28th), the people assembled "by order of the Court," when the mayor laid his proposition before them and asked for their advice. He told them the city lay "Very Open and in Noe Capacity to Resist the Violence of an Enemy;" whether, this being so, "they did not judge it necessary that the Ould works made for the fortifying of this Towne should be Repaired, and that the West syde alonge Hudsons River should be fortified with good and sufficient palliades for the use off which" Gov. Nicolls had "proffered to

Richard Nicolls

- 1665 Contribute two thousand Pallissades & thousand Gilders in wampum. He said, "the intent of this proposition" was "not to Constrain any Inhabitant to fight against his owne Nation but to make the Towne defenceable against the Violence of an enemy w<sup>ch</sup> might seecke to spoile or destroy the same." Cornelis Steenwyck said he was ready to abide by anything that the mayor and aldermen should think best and order; but some of the people declared the city was strong enough; "others that they could not worke before they had their Armes Restored to them againe & many other excuses, but noe Categorical answer was given."—Rec. N. Am., V: 268-69.
- June 27 Nevius asks for his dismissal from the office of secretary of the city (see June 15), on the ground that he can not support himself and family, having "no other income than that received from the City," which is inadequate. The court grants his discharge.—Rec. N. Am., V: 265. He was succeeded in the secretaryship by Nicolaes Bayard; but Nevius continued to hold possession of "the old books and papers." As these were "frequently" needed in administration, the court, on July 18, ordered him to hand over to Bayard, "in the presence of Cornelis van Ruyven, all books and papers appertaining in any wise to the Secretary."—Ibid., V: 279.
- " The porters of the weigh-house and the beer carriers petition the mayor's court for "an increase of fees," as they find their income inadequate. The court establishes, therefore, a new rate for their fees, as tabulated in the records.—Rec. N. Am., V: 265-66.
- 28 The city hall (the old "Stadt Huys") is for the first time called "the City house," in the minutes of the city court.—Rec. N. Am., V: 268.
- July 30 Gov. Nicolls writes to the Earl of Clarendon: "wee haue rather hopes then feares of De Ruyters arriual. . . . I must not flatter yo<sup>r</sup> L<sup>d</sup> with the Imaginary strength of the fort which is truly inconsiderable against Land forces, but all his fleet shall doe vs no prejudice, I haue sett double stockadoes round, and mounted 40 piece of Cannon vpon the Walls & Batteries I haue 200 men beere for the defence, besides the other Garrisons which may not be left naked. I haue furnisht all the English about mee with Armes & ammunition, and disarmed only y<sup>e</sup> Burgers of this place. . . . I was soe much sollicitod to bee present at Boston in hopes of a fayre Issue of his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Commission, that after haueing settled every thing in good order here I made a journey through the Woods to Boston, and returne back in a monthes tyme. . . . yo<sup>r</sup> L<sup>d</sup> will alsoe be more fully informed that the late Indenture made by my L<sup>d</sup> Berkeley and S<sup>t</sup> George Carteret is to the manifest destruction of the Dukes Collony, for my lord, the very name of the Dukes power beere, hath bine one great motive for well affected men to Remove hither out of other Collonies, men well affected to Monarchy, and haue found that our new Lawes are not contriued soe Democratically as the Rest, and when I was last at Boston, I did engage a hundred familyes to remove, and dispersed printed papers for their Encouragement, but good land is none of the least Arguments to a Planter which was then to bee found in the Dukes Patent, but now is wholly giuen away. In discharge of my duty to his Royall Highnesse, and the trust reposed in mee I begg pardon for being very plaine in the matter, My Lord, all that part of the Duke's Patent ioyneing to Nova Scotia is not worth a farthing, when it comes to Long Island which is a place of common fame, I assure yo<sup>r</sup> L<sup>d</sup> it is as barren a soyle as any part of New England, mainly inhabited by a poore sort of people who are forced to labour hard for bread and cloathing, the whole revenue which can bee drawne from their Labours is but 200<sup>s</sup>, of this country pay, which is litle above a hundred pound sterling, with which sume all the courts of Justice and other Publique charges are to be maintained, I durst not eadeano<sup>r</sup> to stretch their purses farther in the infancy of this change least [sic] their affections should bee perverted, and wee doe not want ill neighbours to doe us ill offices in such occasions But by this meaneas all their mouths are stopt, and the first 3 sessions haue bine held with good satisfaccoe to all the Collony, in 7<sup>ber</sup> is held a general Assizes the Governour, Councill, and Justices upon the Bench, where the lawes are againe to bee reviewed and amended, in case any reasonable objections be made, otherwise to bee confirmed here, and remitted over to his Royall Highnesse for his Royall haad, to make them authentick, and then if they were printed and immediately sent over they would bee fully satisfactory to these parts, and of some consequence to his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Interest, in relation to the other Collonies, your L<sup>d</sup> will alsoe percieve by this inclosed determinaco, betwene the Commission<sup>r</sup> with the Governo<sup>r</sup> and councill of Connecticut that those Townes
- upon the maine to the Eastward of N. Yorke did properly belong to their precedent pattent, soe that there remaines only, One small Towne to his Royall highnesse, of all that tract of laud from Connecticut Riuer to Hudsons Riuer, soe that yo<sup>r</sup> Hudsons Riuer which is all the North part, and soe cold that few or none will bestow their Labours, Only one Towne is seated wth Planters to which or very neare the Indenture reacheth. about that 70 myles is Albany seated, who are noe planters but only a towne of Trade, with the Indians, Thus the extent of the Dukes Patent is described to yo<sup>r</sup> L<sup>d</sup> [see also July 1/11, 1674] and I humbly begg yo<sup>r</sup> L<sup>d</sup> to take the whole matter into serious consideraco, for if the Duke will improve this place to the vtmost, Neither the trade, the Riuer, nor the Adjacent lands must bee devided from this Collony, but remaine Entire, But if his Royall Highnesse bee weary of the hopes of his new Acquisition It were much better for the publike good to deuest himselfe of the whole. . . ."—Clarendon Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 74-77.
- Elizabeth, N. J., is founded by Philip Carteret and a party of colonists.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 424-25.
- It having been found that "commonly each Court day" some of the members of the City bench, "as well as of the appointed jury-men," come in "long after the appointed time of the sitting of the Court," occasioning a "long delay" in the beginning of business, it is decreed by the court "that every one, whether of the Court or jury, having previous notice thereof," who is not "present half an hour after ringing of the bell, . . . unless . . . prevented by sickness or other necessary circumstances," shall suffer a fine of three guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 289.
- The mayor's court orders "that six Burgers" shall "every night keep watch within this City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 291. A watch during the summer season was unusual (see Oct. 4, 1658); the troubled conditions (see June 19 and 22) probably induced this action. See Nov. 18.
- Arian Cornelissen, "husbandman," petitions the mayor's court for "some abatement of excise, as he is daily asked by those passing by, for a drink of beer and he can scarcely accommodate them, as he has heretofore found by experience, that if he pay the whole tappers' excise, no profit but loss will be realized by the spilling of the beer in carting, loss of time etc." He is "allowed to lay in half a barrel of [strong] beer, weekly, for the convenience of travellers," without the payment of "the established tappers excise thereon."—Rec. N. Am., V: 291. When Stuyvesant's order of Jan. 18, 1656 (q.v.), that people gather in hamlets or villages for mutual protection against Indian attacks, was renewed on Feb. 9, 1660 (q.v.), people north of and adjoining the Fresh Water petitioned that, instead of abandoning their homes, others might be encouraged to build near them and thus fulfill the spirit of the order (see May 3, 1660). "The tavern [of Cornelissen, near Stuyvesant's bowery], which had been set up at the village, as travel increased, became known as the two-mile stopping place, and is said to have been a famous place of resort. Its situation was admirable for the purpose, and it was, no doubt, visited by those making excursions of pleasure from the city, especially sleighing parties. At this time and for a great many years, this was the only road of any great length on which such a sport could be enjoyed."—Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 47-49.
- The classis of Amsterdam resolves that encouragement shall be given Rev. Samuel Drisins to remain in New York and that he shall be directed to oppose as much as possible the introduction of the English liturgy into the Dutch Church. Rev. Megapolensis is to be likewise instructed on this latter point.—Eccles. Rec., I: 574-75.
- "The petition of M<sup>r</sup> Evert Petersen, Schoolmaster and Precursor of this City," is read and considered, requesting "that he may have some proper fixed Salarium, as he was heretofore paid his wages by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company and has been continued in his employment from that time to the present" (see April 25). He is told that an order will be made shortly "relative to the salary of the Ministers of this City, under which the Precursorship also comes," and that proper action will then be taken on his petition.—Rec. N. Am., V: 294. See Feb. 20, 1666.
- The constables and overseers of Brooklyn are ordered by Gov. Nicolls to make provision for the horses of such persons as come to Brooklyn and the ferry in order to attend the court of assizes.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 570.
- The trial of Ralph and Mary Hall upon suspicion of witchcraft is held in the "Court of Assizes" in New York. They are accused

- 1665 having, by some "detestable and wicked Arts, commonly called Witchcraft and Sorcery," caused the sickness and death of George Oct. 24 2 Wood and an infant child of Wood's widow, Ann Rogers, all of Seatalcott, Long Island. Both plead "not guilty," and the jury renders the following verdict: "Wee having seriously considered the case committed to our Charge, against y<sup>e</sup> Prisoner at the Barr, and having well weighed y<sup>e</sup> Evidence, wee finde that there are some suspitions by the Evidence, of what the woman is Charged with, but nothing considerable of value to take away her life. But in reference to the man wee finde nothing considerable to Charge him with." The court sentences the man to be "bound Body and Goods for his wives Appearance" at each session of the court as long as they remain in the government, and meanwhile "to be of y<sup>e</sup> good Behavior." After entering into a recognizance in accordance with the sentence they were freed. Nearly three years afterwards, Aug. 21, 1668, Gov. Nicolls released them from this recognizance.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), IV: 85-86.
- 3 Evert Duycklingh, Hendrick Willemsen, and Thomas Hall, the fire-wardens of the city, are authorized by the mayor's court "from now henceforth to inspect," as often as they consider it proper, "all chimnies and fireplaces" in the city, and to fine those whose chimnies and fireplaces are "foul," as well as to "remove those of wood or other improper ones."—Rec. N. Am., V: 298.
- 9-19 Petrus Stuyvesant, former director-general of New Netherland, memorializes the states-general concerning his conduct in the surrender of the province to the English expedition commanded by Col. Richard Nicolls, and accompanies his memorial with a report and papers as evidence of the "real circumstances of the case." He states that he "was necessitated to surrender said places through the unwillingness of the Militia, the protests and menaces of the Burghers, the weakness of the Fort, the scarcity of provisions and munitions of war, and the small number of soldiers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 364, ff.; and Jameson, Nar. Neth., 458 (dated Oct. 1662). For his further "Answer," see N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 427, ff.
- 12-22 Ægidius Luycx, "late Principall of the Latin School in New Amsterdam, in New Netherland, aged about twenty-four years," makes a deposition about the surrender of New Amsterdam in September, 1664 (see Aug. 27, 1664, O. S.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 469 (where the years are recorded erroneously as 1654 and 1655).
- 17 Mayor Willet explains to his associates on the city bench that Gov. Nicolls has informed him that he intends "to Proceed with the inquartering of his Soldiers in Burger's houses to the Number of 80 heads," and the mayor asks the court for their judgment therein. The court thinks it "best to Call about 40 of the Inhabitants together, of them, w<sup>ch</sup> have bene Willing to quarter the Soldiers by the time [i.e. at the time] of the Borgemasters [see April 19], & to see or [i.e. if] they could dispose them to the inquartering Voluntarily," as in the articles of surrender "it was agreed the Inhabitants should not be forced with the inquartering of the Soldiers." On the next day (18th), "diverse of the Inhabitants of this Towne New Yorke" were summoned to court. The mayor told them that, for "want of Sufficient Lodginge into the fort," it was resolved by the gouverneur "to inquarter his Soldiers for this followinge winter into the Inhabitants houses." The terms were given them, and voluntary promises were made for quartering 43 men, as listed on the 19th.—Rec. N. Am., V: 302-3. Difficulties arose in connection with the collection of the weekly assessments and an insufficient treasury; hence, on Dec. 12, the court authorized the sheriff, Allard Anthony, to give notice to those in arrears to pay up within three days at "the house of Jan Jillsen Kok" or, if in default, to suffer a fine double the amount of their arrears.—Ibid., V: 311, 328.
- " Timothy Gabry, having been ordered to appear before the mayor's court, is asked to render an account of the burghers' excise on wine and beer, and cattle slaughtered in the city. He did so, and it was found that the city was "indebted to him, at this date, in the sum of 550 fl. besides his commission."—Rec. N. Am., V: 302.
- 23 Christopher van Laer purchases from the estate of Rachel van Tienhoven a lot on the corner of Broad St. and Exchange Pl.—Liber Deeds, A: 7 (N. Y. County). Van Laer had erected a tan mill by July 12, 1670, when a dispute arose between him and Adriaen van Laer over the "partnership of the tan-mill."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 245-46. Both Van Laers were again in court on Sept. 27, in a suit brought by the carpenter Abram Jansen, for the building of the mill.—Ibid., VI: 258. For location of this mill, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962.
- From a mayor's court record of this date, it is apparent that "All Saints' day" (Nov. 1) was "usually the day for the termination of leases."—Rec. N. Am., V: 304.
- The carters of the city are summoned to the mayor's court and ordered "henceforward not to stand any more on their carts," because this is dangerous to traffic.—Rec. N. Am., V: 309.
- In the mayor's court, Sheriff Allard Anthony brings suit against Abram Pietersen Corbyn. The latter has been arrested "by Capt. John Jough [Young] authorized thereto by special warrant from the General [Gov. Nicolls] for having sold strong beer to the Indians in opposition to the order of the General made therein." Corbyn says he sold only beer to the Indians and was not aware of the prohibition, and had a verbal pass "to pursue that trade." Mayor and aldermen, not perceiving that strong beer was "directly forbidden by the last order enacted for this purpose," refer the parties to Gov. Nicolls, especially because the commission of Capt. Jough provides "that the culprit be brought before his Honour," the gouverneur.—Rec. N. Am., V: 311. See Aug. 21, 1666. For location of tavern of Abraham Pietersen, see Castello Plan, II: 231-32.
- The sworn butchers of the city petition the mayor's court for an increase of "their fees and wages for slaughtering," and ask that unauthorized persons who slaughter in the city be prohibited. The court decrees, that the rates established on Nov. 3, 1662 (q. b.), shall stand as to small cattle, and allows them an increase of one guildler for killing an ox or a cow; also that nobody save the sworn butchers be allowed to slaughter within the city, unless the sworn butchers give their "general consent" to do so.—Rec. N. Am., V: 312. The sworn butchers were enjoined, on Nov. 13, from slaughtering any animals without having first obtained "a Ticket of Cosent from the Collector" of the city, excepting only those to be killed for Gov. Nicolls.—Ibid., V: 312-13.
- Gov. Nicolls, in a letter to the Duke of York, writes: "I have not bene sparing either of Toyle or charges to put these parts into a posture of defence against the Dutch though at the same time I was engag'd in troubles with the Indians also at Fort Albany, insomuch that I found it necessary to augment the number of my soldiers, and consequently many incident charges have arisen this summer, with all which I have struggled even to the utmost of my own monies and credit in the Country still depending on the promised supplies till now, that the winter is come and no ships appear, the want whereof is a general Calamity, but it falls most heavy upon me in particular who am not able to support so heavy a burden any longer. I do not value the sight of my own ruine in point of fortune, but my reputation lyes at stake to the Country having so often (in confidence of a supply) assured the Inhabitants of the care which was taken for their reliefe; who depending thereupon are now left naked to the rigour of the winter; The whole trade, both inward & outwards is lost for want of shipping, but the charge of four Garrisons with all their fortifications and supplies falls upon mee."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 104.
- The church-wardens, Lookermans and Johannes de Peyster, are asked by the bench if they now have enough money "in the Church Treasury" to "fence the grave yard" of the city (see June 15). They reply in the negative, and add that there are "still many small debts . . . due here and there," which they were unable to pay on account "of the trifling income." The mayor's court then resolves "to advance from the Burghers excise" of the city "to the Church wardens" a sum sufficient "for the fencing off of the grave yard, on condition the same be repaid from the first incoming money—which the abovevamed Church wardens promise to do."—Rec. N. Am., V: 313. For an account of the hog nuisance in the city, see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 90-98.
- The deputy-mayor tells the members of the city bench that Gov. Nicolls has proposed "to allow the Burghers to watch anew." Each man is to "bring on his watch two sticks of firewood," and there is to be one lantern for every two men. However, the court thinks it better "to continue the two night watches," and resolves "to agree civilly with them, together with two other volunteers," who can then "undertake to watch on the other nights."—Rec. N. Am., V: 319-20. See Aug. 22.

In this year, Brooklyn's first church, on Fulton Ave., near Lawrence St., was built.—Stiles, Hist. of Brooklyn, I: 166.

The mayor's court orders that all actions determinable by a jury shall come to trial on the first Tuesday of each month, and to

- 1666 this end, "at the said dayes, a Bench of Juries" is to be appointed.—
Rec. N. Am., V: 339.
- Feb. 13 Isaacck Grevenraet sets forth, in a petition to the mayor's court, "that he hired to the late Burgomasters of this City his house standing in the Broadway for fl. 220 a year, commencing first of May last" (see April 18, 1665); as the soldiers "have now left the same," he desires payment of the rent and also a settlement for the damages done to the windows, hinges, etc., due to the improper use of the house by the soldiers. The court appoints a committee of three "to estimate the committed damage," and orders payment of the first half year's rent.—Rec. N. Am., V: 337-38. This house of the first barrack of the English soldiers, was situated on the east side of Broadway, just south of Exchange Pl.—See Castello Plan, II: 237.
- " In the mayor's court, Sheriff Anthony declares that Omfrie Cley keeps "a very unorderly house," and that he is living "with a woman as man & wife, with whom he is not Lawfully married Withrally Contrary to al godly Lawes." The sheriff requests that Cley be deprived from drawing drink any more, and be required "to depart this Towne." Cley replies, "that as long [as] he hath kept ordinary there hath bene but twice quarrel At his house & further that he hath taken the s<sup>d</sup> Woman for his wife;" and he proffers "to depart from hence with the first open Wether." The court gives him until the end of the next month (March) "to depart this Towne," and, in case he shall stay longer than the time mentioned, the court orders Cley to give security for his appearance before the court of assizes.—Rec. N. Am., V: 338.
- " In the mayor's court, Sheriff Anthony charges Katherine Mills with keeping "a very unorderly house," and that, on a recent Saturday, "Several Souldiers beinge verry dromck" came "out of hur house, which made a great tumult in the Streates & abused & beated the People whom they did meete withal." The sheriff recommends that she "ought not to have Liberty to draw drink any more," but "be ordered to depart this Towne." She declares the quarrel did not occur on her premises, but "after they were gone from hur house;" so the sheriff is instructed to bring in his evidence at the next session of the court.—Rec. N. Am., V: 338. Mrs. Mills defaulted twice in appearance at court; hence, on March 6, the court ordered her "from henceforth" to "draw noe drinke, or Keepe ordinary [f]inn any more, & further to be summoned to appear in [her] owne Person" at the next court. Apparently she kept an inn in the house rented from William Hofmeyer.—Ibid., 341.
- 16 Thomas Lamberts receives a patent by way of confirmation of a conveyance to him by Abraham ver Plank, dated July 18, 1661, for a certain lot of ground lying on the west side of Broadway without the gate of the city, bounded on the south by land belonging to Peter van Couwenhoven; on the west by the land of Abraham Verplanke; on the north by that of Hendrick van der Wall, and on the east by Broadway; containing in breadth 56 ft. and in length 20 rods.—Liber Patents, IV: 7 (Albany).
- 17 Gov. Nicolls writes to Gov. Winthrop: "Wee have beene bound by this Wiether with a looger frost than was ever knowne in these Parts . . . This Morning about Eight of the Clock two extraordinary great Rainbowes were seene and about a quarter of an hour after three Suns were visible to the whole Towne the Rainbowes parted the 3 suns."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 1. For other unusual phenomena, see Sept. 7, 1668. A letter written by John Davenport of New Haven recites that Gov. Nicolls had a drawing made of the rainbows and suns to send to Gov. Winthrop.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 141.
- 20 Evert Pietersen asks the city court "that a suitable allowance be granted to him, inasmuch as the W Court had, on the 19th of 7th last [9-7], promised that an order should be made also regarding his stipend, when the preachers were granted their salary, which has now been done." The city court "decree absolutely, that he shall receive some satisfaction for his service. But whereas the City Treasury is at present so low, that the daily expenses can scarcely be met, the petitioner is requested to wait still a while."—Rec. N. Am., V: 340. See April 28, 1668.
- Mar. 6 An order of the mayor's court is sent "to Mr Tho: Hall and the other farmers both on this and on the other side of the Fresh Water to nominate six proper persons and send them in" to the court, "as Overseers of the Roads and Fences lying around this City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 342. See March 20.
- See A. 20 In order to increase the range of the cattle of New Harlem, Jacques Cortelyou, the surveyor who first laid out the village, is directed by Gov. Nicolls to draw a line from the river, near the middle of the town, one mile directly into the woods in such a direction as to provide the greatest "convenience of range" for the cattle.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 250-51.
- " The court considers the nominations made for overseers of roads and fences (see March 6) and elects "from the same Dirck Sicken [Sicken] and Jao Langestraat," and the court messenger, Elslaadt, is "ordered to summon them by the next Court day to take the oath of fidelity."—Rec. N. Am., V: 345. They came into court on the 27th, and took "the oath of fidelity," promising to "render justice according to the instructions given them, touching the fences they shall be called to, without distinction or regard of persons."—Ibid., V: 346. See April 16, 1667.
- 27 Joost Goderis (of Harlem) and Gerrit Hendricksen are accepted as "public carriers and labourers at the Weighhouse" by the mayor's court and take the required oath of fidelity.—Rec. N. Am., V: 347.
- 31 Pieter Jansen receives a patent by way of confirmation for a lot on the west side of William St., near Wall St., now included in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Liber Deeds, B: 90 (New York); Map of Dutch Graots; C. Pl. 87, and its description, II: 393.
- Apr. 3 Complaints having reached the ears of the mayor's court, "that through the expiration of the office of the previous Surveyors, such care and attention" are "not paid to the subject of surveying" as is desirable, "but [it is] almost altogether neglected;" they, "being desirous to provide" against this state of affairs, elect as surveyors of the city "Sieur Fredrick Philipsen and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven," who are "authorized to pay as much regard to the subject of surveying" as is proper.—Rec. N. Am., V: 349.
- 7 Gov. Nicolls, writing to the Earl of Clarendon, makes note of the severity of the winter season thus: "from the beginning of November till now wee have beene frozen up, which hath not bapped formerly in mans Memory." As one of the king's commissioners to New England, he also submits a report of the difficulties encountered in Massachusetts: "Thus ended our affaires at Boston so that as Commission<sup>rs</sup> wee have settled onely the bounds of the three Colonies of Connecticut Plymouth & Rhode Island & yett haue not fully visited Coenecticut. Where indeed at our coming there will not bee two dayes worke for us, & not the least appearance of a refractory disposition . . ." The report continues: "My Lord I haue according to yo<sup>r</sup> Lordships Comands . . . used all my Endeav<sup>rs</sup> to keepe up the spirits both of the Merchants Planters & Souldy<sup>rs</sup> in dayly hopes of the supplies mentioned, I haue run my selfe into debt both here & at Boston, I haue consumed a considerable summe which I brought of my owne, I haue charged my small Estate & friends in England with neare two thousand pounds sterling by bills of Exchange, . . . knowing that his Royall Highnesse will not suffer mee to perish under the burden, for had I not thus engaged my selfe & friends, the souldy<sup>rs</sup> must haue either perished and with them his Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s Interest, or by them the Planters must haue beene eaten out, who haue enough worke to support their owne meane Conditions & families; Our neighbours of Boston haue made good use of our Necessities in raying the price of their Goods . . . [cf. Dongan's financial embarrassments Feb. 27, 1692]. My Lord I could urge the protection given to criminal persons already, but there are so many other contingencies of greater moment that I shall onely mention two which wee cannot but expect hereafter; The one is that his Royall Highness by Patent hath all Hudsons Riuer with all the Customes profits & granted by his Ma<sup>ty</sup>. The Duke hath given away all the tract of land to the West of Hudsons Riuer with all his Rights thereunto, Now whether the Duke meant to give away the Customes & profits which cannot but swime vpon Hudsons Riuer—not express, or cleare to mee, However I did not exact any from Capt Carteretty; Neither are Islands mentioned in the Grant, yett hee has putt in his Clayme to Staten Island, whereby wee must see of selues absolutely besieged on all sides, The Riuer will remaine but the Customes are lost."
- The other contingency is a probability that the expansion of New Jersey as a colony will provoke war with the Indians, which will also involve New York. "Some debates haue of late passed amongst the Indyan, how farre it was probable I would take part or revenge any mischeife done in New Jersey, T<sup>he</sup> was concluded they would not doe any violence without my leave, because I haue wth guilts and a good Garrison, gain'd some Interest & power amongst them. Yett they are of late highly sensible of yo<sup>r</sup> waots, whereas the Dutch alwayes supplied them with Plenty & upon easy termes so that both Christians & Pagans generally suffer by the dearth of the

1666 Trade," Nicolls argues other trade disasters unless "his Royall Apr. Highnesse can obtaine either a Generall Liberty for some Terme of 7 years to the better Encouragement of this Place, that shippis of any Nation may Import or Export into or from hence all sorts of Merchandize whether they please, oonly paying to his Royall Highnesse his vse such Customes & Dutyes as his Royall Highnesse shall Establish; . . . Otherwise my Lord in regard this whole Colony is peopled with three parts Dutch, which may not (the warrs ended) a permission be given oonly to foure or six Holland Shippis to trade yearly hither with Com<sup>o</sup>ities of their owne Growth & & Manufacture, & from hence to returne directly home, payinge oonly dutyes to his Royall Highnesse.

"My Lord some such like Overture for Trade must be accepted or this Colony is run'd . . . at this present during the Warrs with Holland we cannot expect the good affections of the Dutch here to the English, but this I presume to affirme, that in all other occasions they would manifest their good Obedience to his Mat<sup>ty</sup> in better Terms than some of the Vaited Colonies.

"My Lord I have remitted for confirmation to his Royall Highnesse the present Lawes of this Colony collected out of the Lawes of the other Colonies, oonly with such Alterations as may reviue the Memory of old England amongst us, for Democracy hath taken so deepe a Roote in these parts, that y<sup>e</sup> very name of a Justice of the Peace is an Abomiation, wherefore I have upon due Consideration of his Mat<sup>ty</sup>'s Interest layd the foundations of Kingly Government in these parts so farre as is possible, which truly is grievous to some Republicans, but they cannot say that I have made any alteration <sup>amongst</sup> the English for they had no settled Lawes, or Government before.

"These Lawes have bene put in practise the space of one year with some Amendments upon Reviewe, & such is the unfortunate Condition of these parts, that some Points of the Lawes Must of Necessity admitt of Alterations or Abolitions yearly, & yet by the Dukes Instructions I am narrowly bound up to the space of a year for his Highnesse Confirmation, otherwise the Law is voyd, By which Instruction fully executed, we should at this present have no Law in force; I hope his Royall Highnesse will giue a larger Latitude to the next Governour in that point, & dispatch this New body of Lawes in print without Alterations."—Clarendon Papers, in N. Y.

9 In a letter to Lord Arlington, Gov. Nicolls anticipates Stuyvesant's recommendations regarding leniency in trade regulations with Holland (see Oct. 23, 1667). As at least three-quarters of the inhabitants are Dutch, and "their estates as well as relations interwoven with their correspondents and friends in Holland, unlesse His Mat<sup>ty</sup> pleaseth to graunt them some extraordinary enfranchisement, the sudden interruption of the factory wth Holland will absolutely destroy all the present inhabitants, who . . . will prove better subjects than we have found in some of the other Colonies, and with a moderate permission both for time and trade, will support this government better than can be reasonably expected from new corners of o<sup>r</sup> owne nation, who at first (as we find by experience) are blowne up with large designs, but not knowing the knacke of trading here to differ from most other places, they meet with discouragements and stay not to become wiser."—*N. Y. Col.
Docs.*, III: 114.

May Gov. Nicolls grants a charter to New Harlem, confirming the lands unto the owners thereof, and describing the bounds as follows:
that "from the west side of the fence of the said Town, a line be run due West four hundred English poles, without variation of the compass, At the end whereof another line being drawn to run North and South, with the variation, that is to say, North to the very end of a certain piece of meadow ground commonly called the Round Meadow, near or adjoining to Hudson's River, and South to the Saw Mills over against Hog Island, commonly called Perkins Island; It shall be the West bounds of their lands. And all the lands lying and being within the said line, so drawn North and South as aforesaid, eastward to the Town and Harlem River, as also to the North and East Rivers, shall belong to the Town."

The inhabitants were granted the privileges of a town, but this was to be "immediately depending on this City." They were allowed to go farther west into the woods for more range for their horses and cattle, the lands lying within the bounds being intended for "plowing, home pastures and meadow grounds only;" and no person was to be allowed to build nearer than two miles from the town bounds without the consent of the inhabitants.

After making the preceding grants, certain conditions were imposed: The town was to be called Lancaster instead of New Harlem;
the inhabitants were to provide one or more boats for ferry use "to and from the Main;" and were to be subject to the "acknowledgments and duties" which are or shall be ordained by the Duke of York or the governours who are set over them.—Liber Patents, I: 571 (Albany), cited by Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 250-53.

Riker says: "It is putting it in mild terms to say that this patent was not approved by the Harlem people. . . . The change in the name of the town . . . was a most offensive feature, and was never adopted. The bench of justice of local court, and, in general, such rights as they had enjoyed in common with the other villages, were indeed comprehended under 'the privileges of a town,' but as it made all, without limitation, 'depend[ing] [dependant] on this city,'—this condition might impose untold burdens.
In the vital matter of taxation, it left them quite at the mercy of the Duke. . . . Nor did it fully cover their landed interests, as it omitted to name the meadows appertaining to their farms, but separated by the Harlem River." So, while the patent remained of record and was never "recalled," the people merely abided their time for securing a better one.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 253-54; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 37; Pirsson, The Dutch Grants, Harlem Patents, etc. (1889), 10. For a later charter, see Oct. 11, 1667.

The secretary of the city delivers to the mayor's court an account "of the weekly assessment collected by Claes van Elslandt from 18th Decemb<sup>r</sup> 1665 to [the] last [of] April 1666, being 19 weekes." It is found that "many persons" are still "in arrears for a large sum;" that Elslandt has collected fl. 3359;5, and paid over to the secretary only fl. 2909;9, leaving fl. 281;8 still due, after deducting his commission. When Elslandt is asked by the court to clear himself, he declares he "paid in to the Secretary all the mooey he had received." The court then resolves to elect Jacques Cossaert in his place, as collector of the weekly assessment for the use of the soldiers, until Elslandt has "called in the remainder of his list and . . . paid his arrears."—Rec. N. Am., V: 352-53. See May 8.

Rec<sup>d</sup> to the amount of 260 fl. is due Casper Steytmets for the use of his house as a "City school" for one year, and he demands payment from the mayor's court. He is "told to wait yet a while, as there is at present no money in the chest."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 4.
His house was on the site of the present No. 10 Stone St.—Castello Plan, II: 260. Similar petitions to the court appear frequently during the next four years (Ibid., VI: 80, 177, 221). Payments for the schoolhouse as well as for the schoolmaster (see Feb. 20) were made reluctantly by the English court in New York.

Resolved Waldron, constable at New Haerlem, has requested and received his discharge from office by the mayor's court of New York City. That bench now orders the inhabitants of New Haer-lem "to nominate by plurality of votes two persons" from that village by the next court day, so that one of them may be elected as the constable for the ensuing year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 4. From the nominations delivered to the court, on the 15th, Johannes Vervelen was elected to the vacancy and at once took the oath of fidelity.— Ibid., VI: 8. For the original Harlem patent, see May, supra.

Jacques Cossaert, who was recently named by the mayor's court as "Collector of the weekly assessment for the behoof of the soldiers" (see May 1), reports to the court that he "made the collection last week," but has fallen so far behind in the receipts, that the surplus is scarcely enough to cover his commission. He, like his predecessor, has been allowed five per cent. of the collections, but he now seeks an increased allowance of seven and one-half per cent., which the court allows, binding him "to make good" any shortage
"in the money to be collected."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 4-5. See Oct. 9.

This date marks the anniversary of the appointment of the first board of mayor and aldermen (see June 12, 1665). The old bench held its last session and yielded to a new magistracy the next day (q. v.).—Rec. N. Am., VI: 15-18.

The deacony of the city appear in the mayor's court against Timotheus Gabry, the "Vender Master" (see Nov. 29, 1665), and demand an accounting from him "of the goods of the de<sup>d</sup> horse-doctor," which they have delivered to him to be sold.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 16. This seems to be the earliest reference in the New York records to a veterinary.

Nicolas Bayard, the secretary of the city, petitions the mayor's court "to confirm his allowance." As "the revenue of the City is at present very small," he is "allowed from the commencement of 1666 his service four hundred guilders zewant yearly, with promise of June increase as soon as the ships<sup>1</sup> arrive in port, when it is hoped the 12 revenue of the city will show improvement.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 17.

 " The inhabitants of New Harlem make return to the mayor's court of nominations for overseers of their village, and the court elects for the ensuing year, Joost Obliuis, Isaac Vernele, Glaude Lametre, and Nielis Mattysee; Jan Montagne is named as secretary.
 They, together with Daniel Terneer, the under sheriff, or his deputy, and the constable of their village, are empowered "to judge and absolutely determine all questions and matters occurring between man and man in their town and brought before them, without regard to persons, up to the sum of 200 gl. in zewant, according to the laws established in this country, and all inhabitants of the town of N. Harlem" are "ordered and charged duly to respect the aforesaid persons as their Overseers."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 15. On June 19, the under sheriff and the overseers took their oath of fidelity.—Ibid., VI: 21. A new court was chosen annually; for the next one, see Aug. 6, 1667. For the first court at Harlem, see Aug. 16, 1666. For the original Harlem patent, see May, 1666.
 13 A new mayor, Thomas Delaval, and a new board of aldermen, have come into office, presumably by the governor's appointment on the preceding day. No official record appears however. The services of Capt. Willett are still retained as a member of the bench.
 —Rec. N. Am., VI: 18. For Delaval's terms as mayor, see M. C. C., VIII: 149. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 380; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 49.
 " The terms "of the Church Wardens or Kirkmeesters" having expired, the mayor's court appoints Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Jeronimus Ebhing "to be Kirkmeesters of this Towne one whole year" from this date; they are to receive from their predecessors "all the Bookes, accounts, & what Estate" belonged "to the Church yet under their Custodie."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 18.
 21 Hendrick Hendricksen Obe is reappointed by the city court bench "as Constable of this Towne" for another year (see June 15, 1665), after which he takes "the oath of allegiance."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 21. A few days later, Obe was chosen to be collector "of the Grand & Smal Excys of this Place," and Thomas Carvet was at the same time named as controller thereof. Their salaries were stipulated to be "six of the hundred," four per cent. for the collector and two per cent. for the controller.—Ibid., VI: 24.
 See A. The labourers at the weigh-house are bound by oath "not to 28 draw out or work at any wine or beer or other strong drink without July a proper permit . . . first obtained from the Collector."—Rec.
 3 N. Am., VI: 27.
 25 It is ordered by the magistrates of New Harlem that no inhabitant, under penalty, shall be permitted to let any of his hogs run at large without being yoked, nor "to fodder his Cattle within the general fencing." This action was the result of "manifold complaints concerning the great damage done by the Cattle foddered on the land, and also by the uprooting by hogs daily among the fruit in the gardens."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 43. For the earliest ordinance in New Netherland concerning swine, see March 15, 1640.
 Aug. 7 The city's secretary, Nicolas Bayard, asks the mayor's court how much commission he is to "receive for the receipt and expenditure of the money of the soldiers," as there is "great loss in zewant and extraordinary trouble in the receipt and disburse<sup>ment</sup> of the same." He is allowed five per cent. "of the receipt and disbursements."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 29. See also May 8.
 " The secretary is authorized "to issue forth Executions upon all Judgements of [the mayor's] Courte in 8 dayes after the date of the Judgement."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 29.
 9 Complaints to the mayor's court because of the violation of ordinances by the bakers of the city who sold "both brown and white bread" of inferior quality and under weight, leads the court to choose Christoffer Hoogland and Hendrick Willemsen as inspectors, who are to make the rounds and in the presence of the sheriff inspect the bread.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 30. See Jan. 21, 1668.
 " The bakers of the city petition the mayor's court "to forbid the transport of bread" from the city "to the Indian plantations, and that all hucksters and forestallers of bread both within and without the City . . . be abolished." The court enjoins the peddling of "any sort of bread or cakes along the houses," and allows selling
 "at retail in their houses," provided the bread is "of due quantity and quality." Bakers, other persons, and Indians are "forbidden to transport any bread or cakes from this City to the Indian plantations, in order to expose for sale and sell the same there on commission to the Indians or others," yet "everyone" is "free to buy as Aug much bread" as he requires "and to carry, transport and sell it," 9 wherever he thinks proper.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 30-31.

 21 In the mayor's court, Sheriff Anthony charges that Abram Pietersen Carpyn "lodged 9 Indians on the night of 19th of July last, without having returned the same." Carpyn says the Indians came in "without his knowledge, after he had gone to sleep." The court condemns him to pay a fine of five guilders for each Indian harboured, and "quit the house" he occupied within eight days, since it is "sufficiently notorious" that he has resided there "only for the purpose of carrying on the trade in brandy with the Indians."— Rec. N. Am., VI: 32. Because of this liquor trade with the Indians "out of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift's rear building occupied by Abram Pietersen Carpyn," the court orders that "said little house shall no longer be occupied by anyone," and that, if the present occupant do not quit it within 14 days, the house shall be pulled down.—Ibid., VI: 33. See Castello Plan, II: 231-32. See Oct. 31, 1665.
 The great fire of London occurs. See Addenda.
 2 Three men, including Daniel Tournour, president of the court, are 3 brought before the bench at New Harlem "for fetching hay on Sunday" into the village by canoe. The court orders the hay and canoe to be taken into custody by the constable until redeemed.
 —Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 44. See Oct. 9.
 13 A young woman, for immorality and attempting to murder her child, is condemned by the mayor's court to be taken "to the Whipping post and then & there to Receive twentie Slashes with Rods, and then to Remaine in Prison the time of 24 hours and to be brought out the Townes Gate."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 35.
 27 There is a case of slander before the New Harlem bench in which the plaintiff is Daniel Tournour, the president of the court. Elizabeth Nightengale is accused of calling him a "Villian of Villians," and declares further that he has designedly taken the life of a man in France with his sword. The bench refers the case to the mayor's court.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 45-47. In the mayor's court, on Oct. 9, the defendant asked for time to get proof of her statements from France. Such opportunity was denied her, and she was required to "acknowledge her fault in open Court at Harlem and declare she did wrong and pay costs."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 39-40.
 " Daniel Tournour and Claude Lemaistre appear before the New Harlem court, of which both are members. The former accuses the latter of mowing in the plaintiff's meadow land and "demands the mowed grass as his own." Each takes oath that the meadow is his property. Subsequently [Jan. 25, 1667] they adjusted their differences and agreed on a division of the meadow land.—Harlem Recs.
 (MS. translation), I: 45, 60.
 Oct. Daniel Tournour, against whom action by the New Harlem court 9 was recorded on Sept. 3 (p. v.), carries to the mayor's court his case "against the Magistrates of N. Haerlem," without much satisfaction. He is condemned to pay a fine of 25 guilders, and the defendants are ordered to return the hay. In case the "President of the Court" shall forget himself hereafter "during his abovementioned Office," his colleagues are ordered "to address themselves to the hon<sup>ble</sup> Mayor's Court."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 36.
 " Jacques Cossaert (see May 8), "Collector of the monies promised by the inhabitants for the support of the Clergy," comes before the mayor's court and asks for an allowance "for the collection of said money." He is granted four per cent. of all he collected.—Rec. N.
Am., VI: 40. On the 9th, he inquired of the court from whom he was "to get his commission of 4 per centum," and the court decreed he should be paid "out of the money" he collected "for the behoof of the Clergy."—Ibid., VI: 44.
 24 In a letter to the Earl of Clarendon, Gov. Nicolls acknowledges the arrival of ammunition and clothes for the soldiers and urges that "shipping may come either early in the spring."—Clarendon Papers in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 125.
 Dec. The mayor's court decides that the weighmaster shall "hence-4 forth take for sugar no more than 10 stiv zewant per 100<sup>lb</sup>s and that no person shall be held to have his goods weighed except on receipt from foreign places; also that a proper order shall be given "for the regulation of the Weigh Master and trader." Such an order was made out and received the confirmation of Gov. Nicolls, on March 27, 1667. This legislation was the direct outcome of a case before the city bench, in which one of its own members, alderman John Laurence, was the defendant, and Jonas Bartelsen, weigh-master, the plaintiff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 47.

- 1666 Stoffel Michielien, the city crier, upon his petition to the mayor's court, "is allowed henceforth to demand and collect twenty stivers Dec. 29 want for each cry" he makes.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 48.
- 1667
- In this year, John Milton's Paradise Lost, written during the years 1658-1665, was first published.
- Verveelen's tavern at the ferry at Harlem was erected during this year.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (ed. 1881), 268. The location of this ferry tavern (on the modern plan) was on the north side of 123d St., 200 ft. west of Pleasant Ave. Vide infra, Jan. 3.
- Jan. 3 One of the requirements of the patent granted by Gov. Nicolls, in 1666, to New Harlem was the establishment of a ferry. Early in 1667, Mayor Delavall, who owned land on Van Keulen's Hook extending to Montagnes Kill (outlet of Harlem Creek into East River just below 108th St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966), made certain proposals to the magistrates of Harlem, which involved the development of his own property as well as the establishment of a ferry to be used instead of the fording-place at Spuyten Duyvil. Delavall's project included building a grist-mill and stone house upon his lot; but before undertaking it he wished to be assured of the establishment of such lines of travel as would make the mill easy of access from the surrounding country. On Jan. 3, he presents the following petition to the authorities:
- "First. That they make one half of the road from this place to Manhattans or New York, and that to Spyteo deuvl be stopped up [see Feb. 22 and 25, 1669].
- "Secondly. That the same care be taken for a suitable Ordinary [tavern] for the convenience of persons coming and going and also for the Village: and he promises the nails and the making of a Schouw (Ferry-boat) provided that the Ferry-man shall remain holden upon occasion to again repay the Honorable La Val.
- "Johannis Verveelen agrees to take the Ferry and the Ordinary for six years, giving his oath thereupon that he will not tap liquor to the Indians and promises accommodations for travellers, such as victuals & drink, lodgings &c.
- "Thirdly. That it be resolved that the Inhabitants of the Town shall make the Dam, since other Towns promise to make a dam if so be he please to build the mill near them.
- "Fourthly. Requests to have leave to build a stone house behind his land, near the Mill & to fortify the same, as a refuge for the Village in time of need.
- "Fifthly. Requests leave to draw a straight fence from the fence now standing to the stone-bridge upon Van Keulen's Hook, and to use the land and meadows so enclosed.
- "Sixthly. Requests that the Inhabitants of the Town shall set off the meadow land on little Barent's Island, in case they wish to hold it; as the said Island belongs to him; but being further willing to put the Town to no inconvenience, he offers them the Island provided they will free the meadows.
- "Seventhly. Whereas the Bronx land has been sold to him for two thousand guilders in beavers, and he thinks that it had better fall to the Town, he therefore offers to let the town have it for that sum. To which having given consideration, to advise & make known to him."
- On the following day the proposals of Delavall were considered and resolutions adopted. On the first point they agreed to stop up the Spuyten Duyvil Road, and with regard to the road to the "Manhattans," to "make a road as far as practicable." Johannes Verveelen was accepted as ferry-man and keeper of the ordinary. They agreed to build the dam, provided they might enjoy its benefits according to usage; they agreed to the erection of a house near the mill, and to giving the mill the use of the land and meadow mentioned in the fifth point. No definite action was taken by the authorities regarding Barent's Island or Bronck's land.—Harlem Res. (MS. translation), I: 52-54. The mill-dam was built across Harlem Creek a little west of the present Third Ave., and the mill was erected near the north end of the dam, but Delavall's return to England interfered with the plans for building the stone house.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 259-63. For lease of ferry to Verveelen, see July 3. For the Harlem patent, see May, 1666. See also Firsson's The Dutch Grants, Harlem Patents and Tidal Creeks regarding Van Keulen's Hook, Montagnes Kill, etc.
- 15 The mayor's court orders the sheriff, with the constable, to "give due warning to all them that are Indebted, to the Weekly assessment to pay their debts, according to the order Published the 12th of this Instant."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 53. The original order does not appear in the records.
- Karsten Sneding, servant, and Daniel Tournere, master, appear before Jan La Montagne, "Secretary of this Town admitted by the High and Honorable the Mayor's Court residing at New Harlem," and "acknowledge with one another to have agreed and bargained" concerning their respective rights and duties. According to the agreement consummated, the former "promises to serve his master with all diligence in all honest and lawful service" for one year; while the latter agrees "to command his said servant in no other than honest and lawful labors, and at the expiration of the term of service to pay to the aforesaid Karsten Three hundred guilders in Sweat, and one pair of shoes, and one pair of stockings."—Harlem Res. (MS. translation), I: 57-58.
- Hendrick Obe, the collector of the excise, asks the mayor's court how much he shall "charge for excise on cider or apple-drink." The court decides, in view of the scarcity of wine and large consumption of cider at this time, that the collector shall thereafter "levy for each anker of cider, ten stivers for Burgers excise and three guilders for tappers excise on the same."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 55-56.
- The city court decides that Paulus Leendertsen vander Grist shall "be paid for lodging the soldiers from the Burgers' excise at the same rate as the others" (see April 19, 1665, for rate).—Rec. N. Am., VI: 57-58.
- Mayor Delavall informs the city bench that it is Gov. Nicolls's pleasure that "this Town" shall "maintaine for one Year Longer on [e] of the Ministr<sup>s</sup> of this place," and as several persons have departed the city or are designing to do so, being persons who have subscribed during the last year toward the maintenance of the ministry, the court orders some of the inhabitants summoned to court, to learn if they will raise by voluntary subscriptions "the sums wh<sup>ch</sup> they promised the Late Yeares to pay towards the Maintenance of the Ministr<sup>s</sup>." This results in voluntary subscriptions by 26 persons.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 58-59. See June 18.
- Gov. Nicolls, writing again to Gov. Winthrop, says: "I may have forgotten in my former Letters to acquaint you that I am very proud of a well in the fort which I cause[d] to be made last summer beyond the Imagination of the Dutch, who would [oo]t beleve it till they saw it finish, which produces very good water."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 11. This well within the fort is shown on PL. 23, Vol. I. It is the earliest public well of which we have any record. For a later well "in the State-House-Yard," see June 19, 1671. The town was dependent upon these two wells until Feb. 28, 1677, when the common council ordered that six be made "for the publique good."
- Elias Doughty deeds to John Archer "four Score Acres of up Land, and Thirty Acres of Meadow lying & being betwixt Brothers River and the Watring Place at y<sup>e</sup> End of the Island of Manhattans." This deed was not recorded until Sept. 24, 1671. On Sept. 18, 1667, Doughty made this statement: "It is to be understood that M<sup>r</sup> John Archer is to have the freshest Boggy Meadow that lyeth on y<sup>e</sup> South side of Westchester Path."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 195-196. In 1668, the town of Harlem complained that Archer was encroaching on its land and succeeded in getting judgments against him.—Ibid., I: 197, 205-6. Archer had controversies, in 1669 and 1670, with William Betts and George Lippett in regard to his land at Fordham and Spuyten Duyvil (see July 31, 1669).—Ibid., I: 210-15. On Oct. 18, 1671, his land was ordered to be laid out by Jacques Cortelyou, and, after the surveyor's report on Nov. 9, Betts and Lippett were warned against trespassing on Archer's property.—Ibid., I: 216-19. On the suggestion of Archer, Lovelace instituted, on April 10, 1673, a court at the manor of Fordham "for the Decision of all Differences of Debt or Trespass between the Landlord & Tenants, or one Tenant wth another."—Ibid., I: 219-20. - 1667 defence of Van Laer is, that he hired the wagon of Kier Woltersen July June 8 "by the day to ride his tan from the bush to the scow at the shore 2 and again from the shore to his house." Woltersen was one of the overseers of roads and fences, which may have been the reason why the court ruled that Van Laer might continue "for the present . . .
 with his work," whilst agreeing to promulgate "an ample ordinance on this subject."—Rec. N. Am., VI, 73-74. Such an ordinance was provided for on June 11. It limited public carting, "whether for Burghers or merchants" in the city, to those alone who were "the appointed carmen;" but anyone was "free to convey his own goods as well as all goods from without or from the bush, by land" to the city. The public carters were allowed for each load within the city's gates, a fee of "ten stivers zewant and no more under a Peyster, aldermen; and Allard Anthony, sheriff.

- 14 "To Daniel Tournear was granted the meadow lying alog Montagne's Kill, west of the hills of the Rocky-hook till the end of the Creek on the North side of the said Kill, for the consideration four rods in length and five rods in breadth, it being well understood, on the North side.

- " Ian Montagne was permitted to have in case of exchange, the Church lot's meadow lying in the bend of the Hellegat, provided he leave instead a piece of meadow lying south of the great meadow & belonging to Number 1" (described as No. 1 by the spring). A footnote says: "The Rocky Point, appears to be the rocks which ran south from Mount Morris. The meadows between these rocks and the creek west & north west were those here referred to, it would seem. Those which Montagne exchanged with the town for the meadows in the Bay of Helgate were at the Great Meadow, Sherman's Creek."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 74.
 See Sept. 27, 1666.
- 18 As "divers complaints" have been made to the mayor and aldermen "regarding the non payment of the promised and fixed salary of the Ministers" of the city (see Feb. 7), the mayor's court orders, "by and with the advice" of Gov. Nicolls, that "all the inhabitants" of the city who are "in arrears to the said salary" shall promptly pay up, and that the deacons of the city, accompanied by Jacques Cossiert, the city's collector, shall exercise "all possible means to promote the collection of said arrears."—Rec. N. Am., VI, 79. See Oct. 29.
- " Secretary Bayard requests payment of his salary, according to account amounting to fl. 235-64, which the city court allows and orders Hendrick Obe, the city's collector, or Willem Abrams, to pay on the city's account.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 80.
- " The mayor's court resolves, "at Johannes Vervelden's request," to speak to Gov. Nicolls "about the Haarlem Ferry money."— really confirmed in this document, for one-half the land.—Liber Patents, II: 64 (Albany).

- 2 The city was "at a Very great Charge in Renewing & Repairing" the bridge (see plate description, I: 244). Under the Dutch government, Stuyvesant and the council had provided by ordinance that all ships landing or transporting any goods to or from the city, were to pay a tax toward "the upholding & Repairing of the Bridge." The mayor's court now reestablishes this tax, requiring masters of ships to pay a landing fee of five st. in beaver per last, and the merchants certain specified fees for transported tobacco, peltries, etc. The collection of this tax is entrusted to Thomas Carvet, to be by him turned over to the secretary of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 81. See also March 5, 1672.
- 3 As a result of previous negotiations (see June 18), the city agrees five years it is "to be farmed out;" but for the first five years Vervelden is to have it without cost, and if let out "to another," then "the house" provided by Vervelden is to "bee Valued as itt stands" and Vervelden be paid for it. He is also to "have the profferrance of the hying of itt at the tyme Expired." Regulations are made of the tolls to be charged by him for every man, passenger, or horse or cattle. Messengers from the gouernours of New York and Connecticut are to "bee ferried free." Vervelden is to "bee att the Charge of building a house on each side of the ferry," for which Gov Nicolls grants him free excise on whatever wine or beer he shall retail in his house for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 83-84.

 This lease was confirmed and "settled" at a court held on July 9.—
Ibid. The site of the New York landing was near the intersection of the modern 124th St. and Pleasant Ave. Vervelden did not stay out the term of his lease; the ferry was removed to Spuyten Duyvil in 1669 (see Feb. 2, 1666). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 942; and Pl. 173, Vol. III. See A.
- 5 Claes van Eldandt, Jr., who has been "tewn sergeant" to the mayor's court since the introduction of the English form of municipal government in 1665 (see June 15), is dismissed from his office for absenting himself from court. His dismissal was by special order highway (Broadway), having on the north the land of Gerritt Jans Roos, on the east the land at one time belonging to Adriana

- 21-31 The Treaty of Breda is signed, by which the English occupation of New York is confirmed.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., to the Dutch.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 135-36.

- 30 At some time between this date and the last meeting of the mayor's court, on July 16, Gov. Nicolls must have appointed a new magistracy, although no official record of such appointments has been found. At the meeting of the new court on this date, Capt. Willett appears again as mayor; only one new name is seen on the bench, Isaac Bedloe, who succeeds Cornelis Steenwyck. Johannes de Peyster, who was "absent upon the Last Election day," is now sworn as alderman. Hendrick Obe, who was elected constable first on June 15, 1665 (q. v.), is continued in office for another year "Commencing the 24th of the Istant Month." Capt. John Manning displaces Allard Anthony as sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 88.

 in by the court of Harlem, chooses Daniel Terneur, sheriff; Johannes Vermeije, constable; and Isaacq Vermeije, Joost Obhlinus, Johannes Verveelen, and David d' Marest (Demarest), overseers.—Rec. N.
Am., VI. 92. There is an order of the mayor's court, recorded under July 30 providing that the constable and two of the overseers of Harlem be sent for.—Ibid., VI. 90. It is probable that the court desired to get from them the list of nominees above mentioned.

" Allard Anthony, Cornelis van Ruyven, and Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift each had one of "the City's ladders" for "some years in use" on his farm. The mayor's court now orders them to return these ladders within ten days, or, failing therein, each of them will "be condemned to have a new ladder made for behoof of the city."

 said land and premises having been purchased in the year 1652 by Arent van Curler, was transported (to Beckman).—Liber taining in breadth towards the street on the west side, 40 ft.; behind, on the east side, 39 ft.; and in length, both on the south and north sides, 139 ft.—Liber Patents, II: 116 (Albany); see also Cal.

Hist. MSS., Eng., 235. This was the plot, known as Pieter Stouten-burgh's garden, on which is the First Presbyterian Church, on Wall St., was afterwards erected. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 931.

" The creditors and heirs of Cornelis van Tienhoven receive a confirmation of the ground-brief by Kieft to Van Tienhoven, dated June 14, 1644 (q. v.), excepting that part generally bounded by Broadway, Beckman St., Ann St. and Nassau St., later known as "The Vineyard."—Liber Patents, II: 113 (Albany).

11 Gov. Nicolls grants a new patent to the freeholders of Harlem in response to their petition of March 15 (q. v.). Because several inhabitants have improved a "considerable proportion" of land and also "settled a competent number of families thereupon, capable to make a Township," Nicolls grants to Thomas Delaval, John Verveele, Daniel Tourneur, Joost Obhlinus, and Resolved Waldron, as patentees, for them and their associates, their heirs, etc., the tract of land within definite bounds as set forth in the patent. The town is to be known as New Harlem, in contradistinction to the first patent (1666, q. v.), where Lancaster is given as its changed name. The conditions of the earlier charter with regard to the establishment of a ferry, payment of tribute, and restriction of building within two miles of the town bounds, are reiterated.—

15 A deed of transfer of this date indicates the location of a horse-mill belonging to Jacques Cosseau on Slyck Steegh or Dirty Lane, afterwards known as Mill Street Lane. The site is now represented by 32 and 34 South William St.—See Castello Plan, II: 298; Ab- stracts of Wills, II: 462. On Nov. 8, 1919, in excavating for a new building on the site of the present No. 46 Beaver St. and Nos. 14 and 16 So. William St., two old mill-stones were uncovered near the rear party line. Five more stones were subsequently found, and were seen by the author. They were about 3 ft. 6 in. in diameter, and the small stones of which they were composed were held together by heavy iron rims. There is no record of a mill on any of these lots.

" By way of confirmation of ground-briefs given to them by Director Stuyvesant in 1659-60, certain free negroes receive patents
 as follows:

Manuell de Ros (Liber Patents, II: 122, Albany). It was designated No. 2, and lay on the west side of the Bowery, north of the grant to Santome. Bleeker St. now bisects this tract.

Pieter Tamboer (Liber Patents, II: 121, Albany). It was designated No. 4, and was situated at the north-west corner of the old Sand Hill Road (the Cross-way), now the corner of 8th St. and designated No. 6. This land lay on the west side of the present Cooper Square, between 5th and 6th Sts.

 No. 7. This land lay along the west side of the present Fourth Ave., 16 "Groote Manuëll (Liber Patents, II: 122, Albany). It was designated No. 12. It covered the present south-west corner of Astor Pl. and Fourth Ave.

 "By way of confirmation of ground-briefs given to them by Director Stuyvesant in 1659-60, certain free negroes receive patents
 as follows:
 "Luycas Pieters (Liber Patents, II: 124, Albany). It was designated No. 3, and had a frontage on the west side of the Bowery just north of the land grant to Manuëll de Ros, No. 2 (see Oct. 15).
 Bond St. now runs through this grant.
 "Solimon Pieters (Liber Patents, II: 123, Albany). It was designated No. 4, and lay on the west side of the Bowery, to the north of the grant to Luycas Pieters (supra). Great Jones St. now runs through this grant.
 "Willem Antonsy Portugies (Liber Patents, II: 123, Albany).
 It was designated No. 9. This land was located on the west side of the present Fourth Ave. north of the land granted to Domingo south of the present Astor Pl.

 "Manuel Sanders (Liber Patents, II: 123, Albany). It was ed No. 14. It was situated about 170 ft. west of the present Fourth Ave., on both sides of 8th St., north of the Sand Hill Road.

 "Antony Antonsy (Liber Patents, II: 124, Albany). It lay west of the Bowery, and was probably later a part of the Bayard east farm.
 "By way of confirmation of ground-briefs made to them by Stuyvesant in 1664, Francisco Negro receives a patent (Liber Patents, II: 125, Albany), probably for part of the ground that later became Trinity Church's upper farm, near Richmond Hill; and Manuel Sanders receives a patent (Liber Patents, II: 125, Albany), for land described as a corner or hook stretching northward behind that of Pieter de Sweet.
 "The widow of Anthony Mathys, deceased, a free negro, receives a patent (Liber Patents, II: 125, Albany), by way of confirmation of a ground-brief made to her husband in 1655, lying behind the land of Claes Martins.
 19 "Anna Negrine" (i.e., Anna, a free negress), receives a patent (Liber Patents, II: 126) by way of confirmation of a ground-brief to her, bearing date Feb. 8, 1647 (p. 2).
 "Cleyo Antonio, a free negro, receives a patent by way of confirmation (Liber Patents, II: 130, Albany) of a ground-brief granted to his father, Cleyo Antonio, a free negro (now deceased), by Director Kieft, Dec. 30, 1644. The land stretches along the land of Pieter Santomee, west-westerly somewhat more westerly; thence along the land of Symon Congo to the land belonging to "Old Jan," west-south-westerly; then along by the said Old Jan's land south-southeasterly; further easterly and by north and a little more northerly, and then east-and-by-north, and east-north-east and north-and-by-west to beginning; being 6 acres, 549 rods.
 22 "The overseers of roads and fences complain in the mayor's court against the ten public cartmen of the city for having defaulted
 "one days' time in repairing the highway about the Fresh Water," for which neglect the overseers request the court to fine each cartman "six guilders zewant." The court, however, holds that the cartmen were not included in the instruction, which was meant only for "the householders and planters on this and the other side of the Fresh Water;" but if in the future the help of the cartmen may be necessary "in the making of new or repairing of old roads," their assistance may be ordered by the mayor, if so requested by the overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 99.
 23 "The king, in response to a petition from Peter Stuyvesant, orders "that a temporary permission for seven years, with three shippings only, be given and hereby is granted unto the Dutch freely to trade with the Inhabitants of the Laods lately reduced from the Dutch into the obedience of his Ma<sup>tie</sup>. The king orders the Duke of York to "grant his Passe and Lychence unto Heere Peter Stuyvesant, late Governour of the New Netherlands to returne to the place formerly held the New Netherlands . . . pursuant to the Passport he had and received from Coloeel Nicolls for his safe going for Holland & returne into those Parts."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 166-67.
- By another order in Council, on Nov. 18, 1668, this trading privilege was revoked.—Ibid., 177-78; see also 187.
 In Stuyvesant's petition he cited the sixth article of the terms of surrender between himself and Col. Nicolls as the basis for his plea for free trade with Holland: "It is consented to that any people may come from y<sup>e</sup> Netherlands and Plant in this Country and that Dutch Vessells may freely come hither and any of y<sup>e</sup> Dutch may freely returne home or send any Merchandise home to vessells of their owne Country." He added that the free trade would be the means of furnishing "y<sup>e</sup> Planters . . . wth some necessaries, not to bee had from other parts," and also would be conducive to "a more amicable correspondence between and Joynt endeavour for y<sup>e</sup> Ma<sup>ties</sup> service, by y<sup>e</sup> Ma<sup>ties</sup> Subjects of both Nacōns."— Ibid., III: 164-65.
 Stuyvesant, in an appeal to the Duke of York, offered the following reasons why the sixth article should be confirmed:
 1. "That since the most considerable Inhabitants of those parts (being composed of the Dutch nation) always kept a Correspondence with their friends in their owne Countries, and having received constant supplies from them, at farre easier rates than from any other parts, They will not only be deprived of soe great advantages, but even Commerce itselfe since at present they have not had an opportunity to fix their Correspondence elsewhere.
 2. "Since their manner of agriculture is wholly different from that way practised by the English nation there, and therefore cannot possibly expect a supply from England of those utensils relating to the cultivating of their Land, but of necessity must expect them from their owne Country.
 3. "Since the Trade of Beaver, (the most desirable comodity for Europe) hath always been purchased from the Indvans, by the Comodities brought from Holland as Camfer, Duffles, Hatchetts, and other Iron worke made at Urick & soe much esteemed by the Natives, It is to be feard that if those Comodities should fail them, the very Trade itselfe would fall, and the french of Canida, who are now incroach'd to be too neere Neighbours unto us (as but half a days journey from the Mohawkes) making use of their Necessities and supplying them, they will in time totally divert the Beaver Trade, and then the miserable consequence that will ensue, wee shall not have one shipp from Europe to Trade with us.
 4. "That it being most certainly Evident now shipp from England are resolv'd to visit those parts this season, soe that unless the Inhabitants be supply'd before sprig with all necessaries from Holland, It will be not only impossible for them to subsist, but they must be constrained to forsake their Tillage and seeke out a Livelyhood elsewhere.
 "But if his Royall Highnes out of his tender care and compassion to his distressed subjects there, will procure liberty for one or two small Dutch vessells . . . to goe from thence to New York, Hee will undertake to satisfie the necessities both of the Marchant and Husbandman, with all things necessary, And soe the Inhabitants being plentifully supply'd may cheerfully follow their Vocations, and bless God for the opportunity of Injoyment of all peace & plenty under the Auspicious wings of Your Royall Highnes paternall care and protection."—Ibid., III: 161-64; cf. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 136-37. See Nov. 18, 1668, for revocation of passes to Dutch ships.
 24 Nicholas Jansen Backer receives a patent by way of confirmation for a lot now covered by Nos. 9 and 10 to State St.—See Liber Patents, II: 134 (Albany); Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and its description, II: 391.
 25 Six persons are summoned to appear in court, "and asked why they have not paid their quota to the Ministers' salaries" (see June 18). Most of them agree to pay.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 101.
 "Hendrick Obe, collector of the excise, delivers to the mayor's court "a list of debtors to the s<sup>d</sup> excise" and complains that he can not get any money from them. These debtors are: Mettie Wessels, Frederick Gysbersen, Patrick Hayes, Egbert Myndersen, Onfric Cley and Evert Pels, whom the court commands to pay within two weeks' time, or be proceeded against with an execution.—*Rec.
 N. Am.*, VI: 101.
 26 Stuyvesant's deed for Bowery No. 1 is confirmed.—Liber Patents, II: 140 (Albany), erroneously cited in description of the Maogtus Maps (II: 188) as "II: 140." 27 Jan Lamontagne sells Daniel Tourneur three gardens for three good "sale-able cows." The seller "shall have for his use one half 1667 of the fruits—for attending to the same, the buyer promises twenty

Nov. days' work of a negro in the Hop garden and three days in the winter, 17 when the seller shall have need of him."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 90.

19 "Hanna Ackleton & Elisabeth Jewel" are summoned before the mayor's court to tell why "they without Licence of the Govern<sup>t</sup> & this Court, Contrary to the Lawes of this Govern<sup>t</sup>! [such a law was enacted as early as Apr. 13, 1642—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 32] are come to dwell within this Towne." Hanna Ackleton replies, that when she first came, she had obtained a license from Thomas Delavall, former mayor, but could show no proof thereof; whilst Elisabeth Jewel states, "she did not know of any such order." The court then orders these women to leave the city within eight days' time, "uppon penalty of 5 lbs Sterl<sup>s</sup> & Corporal punishment" for dereliction.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 101. Elisabeth Jewel had not left the city by Jan. 28, 1668, when the court summoned her again and demanded to know why she had not departed, to which she answered she could not on account of her accouchement, "but promised to depart in y<sup>e</sup> month of March."—Ibid., VI: 114.

26 Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift asks the mayor's court to pay him for caring for the soldiers for 40 weeks, and for 1,000 fl. he loaned the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 103. No action is recorded thereon.

Dec. Gov. Nicolls confirms to Burger Joris his title to a lot, house, 3 brew-house, and garden. The original confirmation is in the New York Hist. Soc., Box 1 of New York MSS. It is printed in that society's Collections (1913), 80-81. For location and description, see Castello Plan, II: 330-31, and Key to the Dutch Grants, 408-9. By referring to No. 8, Block M, and No. 11, Block Q, of the Map of Dutch Grants (C. Pl. 87), and to the Map of Manhattan Island in 1908, Pl. I, Vol. II, it will be seen that the New York Cotton Exchange is built upon Burger Joris's land. See also Innes, N. Am. and its People, 233.

13 Capt. John Manning, the city's sheriff, having been sent by the mayor's court to ask Gov. Nicolls about the payment of the weekly assessment for the care of the soldiers (see June 17, 1665), brings back word that the governour wished the city to pay its arrears and one month longer, amounting "to about fl. 1040 Wampum."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 105. On the 17th, the court published a general order to all persons in arrears to pay or suffer the penalty of the law.—Ibid., VI: 106. For further action, see Jan. 14, 1668.

17 The cartmen of the city having petitioned the mayor's court for permission "to Ride in their Karts in the streets, promising that if any accident should happen, they would suffer any punishment" that Gov. Nicolls and the city bench should think fit, the governour and the bench now grant their request, with this proviso, that they shall "not ride hard along the Streets, and, in case they injure anybody, they shall forfeit horse and cart; and, if anyone be killed by their fast riding, the life of the cartman shall "be undf the lapse of the Lawe." Moreover, the cartmen are "bound to Keep in Repair the streets & highways" in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 105.

24 Otto Grim receives a patent by way of confirmation for a grant to him by Director Stuyvesant, May 15, 1664.—Hoffman, Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 196. The land was on the west side of the Bowery north of the court to Solimon Pieters (see Oct. 16). It is now bisected by E. 4th St.

— In this year, Great Britain, the United Provinces, and Sweden formed a "Triple Alliance" to arrest the growing power of France. It was dissolved in 1672.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 395-96.

Jan. Gov. Nicolls issues proclamations declaring that peace has been concluded between his Maty, the french King, and the States General of the united Netherlands."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 522-23.

14 Continued dereliction of some of the inhabitants of the city in regard to the payment of the weekly assessment for the support of the soldiers (see Dec. 13, 1667) causes the mayor's court to order the constable and the marshal to seize by execution as many "goods and effects" from delinquents as are necessary to cover the arrears.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 109.

15 Samuell Edsall receives a patent by way of confirmation of a transport to him by Pieter van Couwenhoven, made July 11, 1664, for a lot of land without the land port, on the west side of the "Great Highway" (Broadway), containing in breadth before towards the said highway on the east side and behind on the west side, 145 ft.; in length, both on south and north sides, as it lies from the said highway before named, to the riverside.—Liber Patents, II: 154 Jan. (Albany). This is part of the very extensive Damen patent. 15

Christoffel Hooghlant and François Rombouts are elected inspectors of white and brown bread baked in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 111. See Aug. 9, 1666; Oct. 18, 1670. 21

Jan Jansen van Brestede and Juriaen Jansen van Arverryck are asked to come to court where the necessity of the appointment of some persons to inspect and count pipe-staves and to inspect the packing of meat and pork is explained to them. When asked if they will accept such office they consent and take the necessary oath.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 113. Among the Duke's Laws, provision was made for viewers of pipe-staves, who were to decide whether they were "Merchantable both in respect of worm holes" and required dimensions. The packer of meat and pork was to see that the "whole halfe or Quarter" was packed, "that the best be not left out, and for fish that they be packed all of one kind." Each cask was required to be sound and well seasoned and packed full.—N. Y. Col. Laws, I: 56-57, 58-59. 28

Varkens (or Hog) Island is patented to Capt. John Manning by Gov. Nicolls.—Patents, I: 99, in office of sec. of state, Albany. This is now Blackwells Island. See II: 207, where 1667 should be 1668. Feb. 3

Gov. Nicolls grants Little Barn Island (now Randell's Island), and Great Barn Island (Ward's Island) to Thomas Delavall, the collector and receiver-general.—Liber Patents, I: 102; Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 495; Montresor's Jour., N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1881), 126. See Nov. 7, 1772. "

Abram de La Noy, having petitioned the mayor's court "to admit him as Schoolmaster" in the city, "and to grant certificate of privilege thereof," was granted his request, "on condition, that he submit himself to the orders of this Court, already enacted or to be enacted thereon."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 115, where the month "January" is an error. De La Noy probably succeeded Evert Pietersen, in 1686, as schoolmaster of the city school (see Dec. 5, 1671). 11

The mayor's court orders that hereafter no burgher of the city shall "be arrested by any Person or persons whatsoever," but that "all actions" against burghers shall "be brought in Court by summons," save that when a burgher does not appear upon summons "on the first Court day," it shall "be Lawful to arrest any such Burger by Writ;" also when it is evident that a burgher intends to depart with his goods from the city's jurisdiction, such arrest without summons is permissible.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 116, where the month "January" is an error. "

Isaac Bedlow receives a patent for land lying on the Island Manhattan, the westernmost boundaries beginning where the easternmost boundaries of the land lately granted to Thomas Hall & Co. end; so stretching eastward upon the same line 300 English rods along Hudson River, in breadth into the woods, 225 rods.—Liber Patents, II: 165 (Albany). 13

Gov. Nicolls, writing to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, says: a brother of Col. Lovelace has "Landed in Maryland but is now at Delaware upon his Journey to this place [see March 20], to whom his R<sup>ty</sup> hath given Power to succeed mee in this Government." He expresses satisfaction in being able to "returne by the first ship into England." He states further that permission has been given "that 3 Dutch ships yearly may trade hither and returne directly for Holland, the Act of Navigation being for a long time suspended in favour of this place alone" (see Oct. 23, 1667).—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 17. Mar. 2

Nicolaes Bayard, the city's secretary, complains to the mayor's court that the fee of five per cent. which was allowed him for selling goods at public outcry, does not cover the loss he sustained "by Receiving & telling out of the Wampum," and for this reason he asks for an increased fee. The court orders, therefore, that he "be allowed from henceforth off all goods, howes, Vessells, or Marchandizes" sold at public outcry within the city or its suburbs, as follows: eight per cent. on a house, vessel, or goods and merchandise, if sold in one lot and for not above 500 fl.; but only five per cent. on items that sold for more than 500 fl.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 119. 10

The New Harlem magistrates inform the governour that the reported sale of Horn's Hook "conflicts against the privileges where-with this Towh has been laid out," and "offer to pay what they have been sold for with the right of redemption."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 95. See Nov. 20, 1668. 15

Gov. Francis Lovelace by this time had arrived in New York (see March 2), as we know from the fact that on this date he and former Gov. Nicolls signed jointly a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of 20

- 1668 Connecticut, announcing their resolution to go on the following day to Stamford to meet him there.—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 17, in Mass. May
- 20 Hist. Soc. Regarding his commission, Andrews says: "The commission and instructions of Lovelace have never been discovered. Evidently he came over without instructions [N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 174-75], but he must have had a commission, as he refers to his own 'Commission & Authority unto mee given by his Royal Highnesse James Duke of York & Albany' [Exec. Coun. Min., II: 804 (1669); Ibid., I: 386 (1670); 372-74 (1673)]. We know that when Lovelace arrived Nicolls was still governor, and for several months coaxed Lovelace as his successor in the duties that would devolve upon him. Just before Nicolls left, in August, 1668, joint instructions were given to Capt. John Baker, as commander at Albany, by Nicolls and Lovelace" (Exec. Coun. Min., II: 387-90).—From Andrews, "Commissions to Governors in Am.," in Ann. Rep. Am. Hist. Assn. (1911), I: 493.

The consideration is 100 beavers and other considerations.—Liber Patents, III: 9 (Albany); Exec. Coun. Min., II: 514-15. The site of this house was the rear of the building at the present No. 88 Broad St.; the garden ran back to No. 80.—Ibid., III: 253. On May 17, 1672, the governor ordered that rent be paid to Capt. Salisbury from the date of proclaiming the confiscation.—Exec. Coun. Min., I: 124.

- May 134 Nicholas Varlett receives a patent by way of confirmation for a lot now covered by Nos. 36 and 38 Whitehall St.—See descriptions of Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82c, II: 278; and Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, II: 390; Liber Patents, III: 25 (Albany).
- 24 Instructions are issued to Cornelis van Ruyven, collector of the customs in New York City; to Isaac Bedlow, comptroller of the customs; and to Nicholas Bayard, surveyor of the customs.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 3.
- 25 Frederick Philips receives a patent by way of confirmation, in which is recited a transport to Philips by Augustine Hermans, on Oct. 12, 1666, of two certain "lots of land and a house Lott together with a fourth part of two houses belonging unto him and y<sup>e</sup> Heires of Adriana Curvile, deceased, the said housing and lots lying and being without the Land Port, the Great House being in the Tenure or Possession of Cornelys Aartsen and y<sup>e</sup> small one of Pieter Stoutenbergh, one of y<sup>e</sup> lots mark No. 1 being to y<sup>e</sup> southeast of y<sup>e</sup> Gardens of Johanne van Brughs and Gerrit Jans Roos, and to y<sup>e</sup> northeast of y<sup>e</sup> City wall, containing in breadth on y<sup>e</sup> north and south sides, 12 rods and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  of a Rod; on the west side, 32 Rods and on y<sup>e</sup> east side, 31 Rods.
- "The other Lott number 3 lying beynde a certaine brewhouse between the Lotts of Jan Vigne and Rachel Tienhoven and lastly y<sup>e</sup> house lott with number 1 lying in y<sup>e</sup> Great Wagon way to y<sup>e</sup> east of y<sup>e</sup> Great House aforementioned and to y<sup>e</sup> north of y<sup>e</sup> Lott of Claes Jans Reamaker and said Frederick Philips having since transported that parcel of Land Markt number 1 unto Pieter Stoutenbergh and y<sup>e</sup> fourth part of y<sup>e</sup> Great House and Lott then in the tenure or occupation of Cornelys Aartsen unto Guilaen Verplanck," he is confirmed in what remains.—Liber Patents, III: 40 (Albany). The "Great House" mentioned is the old Damen farm- house; the small house to the south was occupied by Pieter Stoutenbergh.—See Castello Plan, and C. Pl. 82, 82c, and p. 338, Vol. II.
- Ide Cornelissen van Vorst receives a patent by way of confirmation for a lot on the east side of William St., south of Wall St.—Liber Patents, III: 44 (Albany). On the modern city plan, this ground is covered by the building of the National City Bank.—See descriptions of Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, II: 332; and Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, II: 406.
- Johannes Verveelen, the ferry-man (see July 3, 1667), and the inhabitants of New Harlem, set forth in a petition to the mayor's court of New York, "that the road by Spiteudyvel" is being "used by travelers, whereby the fences there" are "thrown down and broken to the great injury of the Commonalty in general, whilst their cattle very often leap over them, but more especially to the prejudice of the Ferryman." They seek redress. The city bench, after consulting with Gov. Nicolls, issues the following order: "Whereas information is received by the W: Court, that among others also one John Barcker has passed with a great number of cattle and horse over the Spytudyvel, therefore the W: Court order that s<sup>d</sup> Barcker shall pay the ferry money of all horses and cattle conveyed by him over Spytudyvel, whilst the Ferry has been at Harlem, which Ferry moeety the petition<sup>r</sup>s shall employ for the repairs of the fences on Spytudyvel aforesaid; And the Ferryman is in like manner expressly ordered and charged to finish the house and corral according to his engagement at the earliest opportunity, on such penalty, as the Court shall find proper."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 130. Cf. Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 147-48. For a change in location of ferry, see March 2, 1669.
- Thomas Delavall reports to the mayor's court, that there has been some dispute between him and the labourers at the weigh-stalls in regard to their wages for "carrying grain and piling deals" (i. e., planks); and, because he would "not accede to their wishes," but told them he would refer the matter to the court, they had gone on a strike against his orders. These porters come into court and deny that they had refused him service. The dispute is settled by the court's order and the establishment of a stipulated schedule of fees for various kinds of work done by the porters.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 132.
- Roger Purchase, William Collett, Edward Hudson, and Anthony Snooke are appointed as carriers of all the corn, salt, planks (or "decles") imported or exported in or out of the city, for the inhabitants, at a salary to be allowed them by the mayor's court. They were sworn in on the 30th. This order did not prevent the inhabitants from carrying their own corn, etc., or having it carried by their own servants.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 134, 138.
- Several city traders inform the members of the bench, that they have information "that the Inhabitants of Albany Would Solicite to the Govern<sup>t</sup> that none but the Inhabitants of that place should trade there With the Indians, Contrarie to the privileges heretofore enjoyed by the Inhabitants of this Place," and request the court to advise Gov. Nicolls about it. The bench adjudges the prohibition "prejudicial to the Inhabitants of this Country in general" and rules that "the privilege of a free Trade" at Albany "ought not to be prohibited," since the people of Albany enjoyed the same privileges of trading in New York City and elsewhere as any other inhabitants of the province.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 138-39.
- The mayor's court resolves "to farm out the Burger excise of wine and beer and the butchering" within the city, and orders the secretary of the city "to announce the same by notices."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 141. On Aug. 17, the court ordered Hendrick Obe, "farmer of the Burger Excys," to "give in Security for the s<sup>d</sup> Excys, according to the Ten<sup>t</sup> of the Conditions, upon w<sup>ch</sup> the Excys was Lett out unto him."—Ibid., VI: 144.
- Augustine Hermans receives a patent by way of confirmation, which recites a ground-brief to Domingo Antonio, a negro, dated July 13, 1642. The description follows: "A certaine piece of land upon this island Manhattan lying and being beynde y<sup>e</sup> Bowery No. 5, stretching from y<sup>e</sup> Wagon way about west-and-by-north to y<sup>e</sup> Fresh Water or Swamp near to y<sup>e</sup> land of Thomas Sanders; north it is 36 rods and north-and-by-west 60 rods; then next to y<sup>e</sup> land of y<sup>e</sup> said Thomas Sanders to y<sup>e</sup> Swamp 20 rods; containing in all about 12 Acres or 5 Morgen and 505 rods." It also recites that Domingo Antonio is deceased and that the right title and interest in the land was purchased by Augustine Hermans from Jan de Fries, who had power to dispose of it.—Liber Patents, III: 71 (Albany).
- Augustine Hermans receives a patent by way of confirmation for a piece of land formerly of Hans Kiersted, on the north side of the 1668 "Waggon-way," beginning almost behind the "High Hill on Sept. 4 Aug. Thomas Sanders's Land," so passing between "the Negroes' lands" till it comes to Hendrick Thomsen's, containing about 36 acres or 18 morgens.—Liber Patents, III: 76 (Albany).

6 Augustine Hermans receives a patent (Liber Patents, III: 84, Albany) by way of confirmation of a conveyance to him by Elizabeth Tyssen, Oct., 1656. The land patented was outside the old Strand port, at Pearl, and Wall Sts. The house upon it, which had been built in 1653, is shown on the Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, II: 340. It stood at the present north corner of Pine and Pearl Sts., now covered by Nos. 171-173 Pearl St. The garden lay in the bed of Pine St.

10 Gov. Nicolls, on the eve of his departure for England (see Aug. 25), writes a letter of farewell to "the Governor and Assistants of the Colony of New Plymouth," expressing "acknowledgements of thankfulness and an assurance of the continuance of my respects to you, in a remoter place when you please to command them." He speaks of Lovelace, his successor, as one who will "supply my defects," and "whom you will find always ready to serve you as a good Neighbour."—Trumbull MSS., 61 E: 35, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

17 A new court of mayor and aldermen holds its first session. The new mayor is Cornelis Steenwyck; Isaac Bedloo is the only member left of the old bench, the new members being Capt. Mathias Nicolls, Ralph Whitfield, François Boon, and Christoffel Hooghtan. Capt. Manning is continued as sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 144. For Steenwyck's terms as mayor, see M. C. C., VIII: 149. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 381; ibid. (1864), 648, with portrait; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 50.

"The mayor's court resolves "that the Towns men of New York should be Listed & Divided in two bands Military, and to appear in Armes upon the Departure of the Right Hon<sup>ble</sup> Govern: Richard Nicolls," and the court, with the advice of the governour, chooses the following officers for the two companies, viz., Marten Cregier and Johannes van Brugh, captains; Govert Lookermans and Jacob Kip, lieutenants; Stephen van Cortlandt and Daniel de Hondcoultre, ensigns.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 144. See Aug. 25.

25 Col. Nicolls's departure being imminent, Mr. Maverick writes for him the following testimonial in a letter to Lord Arlington, principal secretary of state: "After his abode here four years (where hee hath lived with great reputation and honour) hee is now returning home. I must needs accompany him with this character; that hee hath done his Ma<sup>tie</sup> & his Royall Highnes very considerable service in these parts having by his prudent management of affairs kept persons of different judgments and of diverse nations in peace and quietnes, during a time when a great part of the world was in wars. And as to the severall Nations of the Indyans, they were never brought into such a peaceable posture & faire correspondence, as by his means they now are."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 174.

28 Gov. Francis Lovelace writes to Arlington as follows: "I have since happily accomplish my voyage and am now invested in the charge of his Royall Highnes territories, being the middle position of the two distinct factions, the Papist and Puritane. I should esteeme it as most singular favour, if your L<sup>ty</sup> would vouchsafe to send mee some instructions how I might steer my course, as would most advance the interest of His Ma<sup>tie</sup> and service of His Royall Highnes my most gracious master. Preparatory to which, I have received from my worthy predecessor Colonnell Nicholls [sic] the character that was fix betwixt you, and if you please but to commaund one of your L<sup>ty</sup> Secretaries to correspond with mee, I shall not fail to give your L<sup>ty</sup> an exact account (so farre as I can reach) of these parts of the world."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 174-75.

Sept. The first council under Gov. Lovelace is held.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 21. Record of his presence in New York as early as March 20 (q. v.) is found in the Winthrop Papers. In a letter to his friend Lord Arlington, dated Aug. 28 (q. v.), he wrote that he was then "invested in the charge of his Royall Highnes territories," although no definite date for the change in control from that of Nicolls to Lovelace is given.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 174-75. See also Cal. Coun. Min., 6.

4 The mayor's court received from the new governour, "a Warrant . . . for the Publishing of a day of humiliation to be held in this City on Tuesday Next ensuing being the 8th of this Instant month of Septbr, and was Published and fixed up at the Usual places."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 144. See also Ex. Coun. Min., I: 21. The warrant recites that a great and unusual sickness prevails, not only throughout the land in general but in New York in particular, whereby "Some are dayly swept away & many more lying on their languishing bedds, expecting each houre their dissolution."

It must be acknowledged "that of manifold impieties have been the sole cause of it not only by of great ingratitude for former blessings rec<sup>d</sup> but by an obstinate perseverance afresh in all manner of wickedness more particularly in that inordinate & intemperate way of drinking & all manner of Impietyes that attend it in those most frequent oaths, execrations & cursings to which some are lead."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 191-93. As to his disease, see Sept. 7.

Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, Johannes van Brugh, and Johannes de Peyster are elected by the mayor's court as overseers of orphans or "wemesters" for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 144. For the earliest "Guardians of Orphans," see Oct. 18, 1655.

7 Rev. Samuel Megapolensis writes to a friend asking aid in securing a letter of "dismission" from his work here. The small salary paid is mentioned, not over 500 guilders at most, which amount is irregularly paid, "little by little . . . in the unoccurrent money of this country. . . . The manner also in which the above mentioned sum is collected is unpleasant and degrading, and altogether unusual in our Dutch nation. They go around from house to house to collect the salary, and you may imagine the slights and murmurings occasioned thereby concerning the ministry and the ministers. More-over the first year I was here, I did not receive a cent of salary. Abominations and scandalous sins are daily committed here, and remain unpunished. . . . I also apprehend such modifications in the condition of the church, as I shall not be able to acquiesce in. The labors of the ministry are now much more burdensome than they ever were before under the Dutch government; for there are now five separate places in which we must render services.

"In reference to the church, and ecclesiastical matters generally in this country . . . little that is good can be said . . . I may say that the Lord begins to deal in judgement with his people. He has visited us with dysentery, which is even now increasing in virulence. Many have died of it, and many are lying sick [see also Sept. 4]. We are also threatened by the Indians . . . It appears [as] if God were punishing this land for its sins. Some years [ago] there appeared a meteor in the air. Last year we saw a terrible comet in the west, a little above the horizon, with the tail upward, and hanging over this place. It showed itself for about eight days, and then disappeared."—Eccles. Rec., I: 595-97. For other unusual displays of nature, see Feb. 17, 1666; Nov. 18, 1680.

Johannes Verveelen bids successfully for the position of farmer of the tavern excise in New Harlem. He is to be allowed to impose on the "inn-keepers for every anker of Brandy or strong drink, two guilders less on every anker than the Tavern excise in New York; for every Tun of common Beer two guilders less than in New York; and other liquor the Farmer shall have the privilege of graduating, as he may think proper."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 102.

The following are elected by the mayor's court as a new court of Harlem (see June 12, 1666), viz: Daniel Terneur, deputy sheriff; Pieter Roelofsen, constable; Johannes Verveelen, David de Marest, Resolved Waldron, and Kier Woutersen, overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 150.

"His Ma<sup>ty</sup> approving of the advice and Desires of the Council of Trade . . . for securing the Trade of the Plantations," orders that the edict of Oct. 23, 1667 (q. v.), granting permission for three Dutch ships to trade with New York for seven years, be revoked, and all passes granted by virtue thereof be annulled. Fearing, however, that his New York subjects "may be brought to some distresse for want of necessarys which probably may not be supplied them out of England this year," and out of consideration for those "who under the promise of the said passes may have been put to charge in making ready their ships," the king further orders that one ship from Holland may make one voyage thither this year. Other than this no foreign ship is to be allowed to trade with New York. In urging such revocation the British board of trade claimed that the three Dutch ships might carry so much "linen, Shoes, Stockins, Cloathes and other Commodities, comonly carried out of England with great advantage to this nation," as will not only supply New York but in great measure Virginia, Barbadoes, and New England as well, which would result in a great loss of customs and danger to the plantation trade and to English and Irish manufactures. Leave was later granted to one other Dutch ship and two Scotch ships to make one trip to and from New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 175-82.

The governour issues certain customs regulations: 1. Home products, such as all sorts of "Prouisions, horses, Cattle, Sheep, & all manner of wooden trade," for Jamaica, Barbadoes, or any of the "Cariby Islands," shall pay no customs.

- 1668 2. "Tobacco, Sugers, Cotten, Indico, fish, Salt, Braziletto, Feb.
Nov. Compechio wood & all other Commodities, being the proper product 16 18 or merchandise of these Islands, places or Territories, shall pay no Custom imported Potable liquors only Excepted w<sup>ch</sup> alone shall pay, custome at the Rates of 4 per cent in Currant money specie, or in goods equivalent."
2. No custom is to be paid on tobacco exported into any of his majesty's dominions but on exports into foreign parts a half penny per pound is to be paid "as in England."
3. Any heavers or peltry exported into his majesty's dominion in America shall pay "10<sup>s</sup> Cent." 4. English ships or those with English goods from other places shall only pay five per cent of all goods "in Specie imported." 4. "All Goods w<sup>ch</sup> have paid Customes may be Exported free from New Dutyes, neith<sup>r</sup> shall any man be Compell'd to unload upon p<sup>r</sup>ence of breaking bulke in the Road paying only for such goods landed as are lyable to pay."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 194-95.
See Oct. 18, 1669.
- 20 Daniel Tourneur requests that the inhabitants of New Harlem shall allow him, as a recompense for his services to the town, "Fifty Morgens of land lying upon Horn's Hook [see March 15], or to confirm of the bargain which is made by the purchaser and the possession of the same." Eight of the inhabitants express their willingness to pay their proportions of it and six refuse.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 108.
- 21 The governour's council issues an order to George Tippet against the "unlawfull Marke hee useth about cutting the Eares of Cattle see close, that any other Marks may be cutt off by it."—
Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26.
- " It is ordered by the governour that some persons be appointed to see about the "Passage at Spiting Devil for y<sup>e</sup> convenience of Travellers, and p<sup>r</sup>servacion of Cattle upon the Island, when the ferry at Harlem is to be removed."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26. See March 2, 1669.
- " The constable and overseers of New Harlem are ordered by the council to release their attachment of John Archer's cattle.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26, 205-6.
- Dec. Thomas Hall and Hendrick Willemsen, fire-wardens, present to 1 the mayor's court a bill of 150 fl. seawant, being "the expence incurred by them in having fire ladders made, etc. [see April 9, 1667]." They are ordered paid "without postponement or delay."

- 1669
- About this time, while in England (see Aug. 25, 1668), answering questions regarding the planters in the Duke of York's territories in America, ex-Gov. Nicolls states, among other things, that:
"The Governour and Concell with the High Sherife and the Justices of the Peace in the Court of the Generall assizes have the Supreame Power of making, altering, and abolishing any Laws in this Government. The Country Sessions are held by Justices upon the Bench, Particular Town Courts by a Constable and Eight Overseers. The City Court of N. Yorke by a Mayor ad Aldermen.
. . . Liberty of Conscience is granted and assured. . . All Causes are tried by Juries, no Lawes contrary to the Lawes of England."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 59, citing "Lond. Doc., II."
- Commissions are granted to Isaac Bedloo to be captain of a foot company; to Christopher Hoogeland to be lieutenant; and to Nicholas Bayard to be Ensign.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 804-5.
- In this year, Nathaniel Morton's New Englands Memoriall was published at Cambridge. Based largely on Bradford's history, it was the first strictly historical work issued by the New England press.—Church Catalogue, No. 606.
- Jan. The ordinance relating to the city's bakers is renewed by the 12 mayor's court, but the former penalty of 12 pounds sterling is reduced to 30 fl. in wampum.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 161.
- " The mayor's court makes publication by ordinance against the erecting of privies and hogs-pens on the street side or as an offense to neighbours.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 161.
- 26 The mayor's court orders "that all Persons that are Plantives in any Causes depending in this Court shall be Bound to take out at Least one Copy of What is Ordered or past in Court, each Court day, or by neglect thereof, that they shall Pay the Sec<sup>y</sup> for the Copy although non[e] be taken out."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 164.
- Feb. Evert Pietersen, "Schoolmaster and Precentor," comes again 16 (see April 28, 1668) before the mayor's court and delivers an account of his unpaid salary, which he claims from the city and for which he seeks payment; also a "further allowance for his future services." He says he will leave if these concessions are not granted.
The court resolves "to speak to the Governof [Lovelace] hereupon."
—Rec. N. Am., VI: 168. See Jan. 17, 1671.
- Lovelace confirms Nicolle's act of Dec. 16, 1664 (q. v.), giving freedom of worship to the Lutherans. In this he says that the Lutheran congregation has been at great trouble and expense in procuring a minister, "and having at length attained to their desires there being now arrived into these parts Mr. Jacobus Fabricius to be their Pastor," he not only permits Fabricius to exercise divine worship among the congregation, on their taking the oath "to be true subjects to his Majesty," but allows them to do so unmolested.
This permit is signed by both Francis Lovelace and Matthias Nicolls, secretary.—From Lovelace document in archives of St.
Matthews Lutheran Church, New York. This document, dated Feb. 20, 1668, is properly 1669.—See Kretzmann, Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 13. In about a year and a half, troubles in New York City were brought to a head by a petition presented to Gov.
Lovelace, June 29, 1671 (q. v.), by "diverse of y<sup>e</sup> Lutheran or Augustane Congregation," charging him with "severall Matt<sup>r</sup>s unbefitting one of his Profession."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 386.
- 22 Gov. Lovelace, with some of his council and others of the bench at New York, hold a court at New Harlem and issue, among other orders, the following: "It is this day Ordered, that a Convenient Waggon-Way be made between the City of New-Yorke & this place; to w<sup>ch</sup> end foure Com<sup>r</sup>s shall be appointed (viz two on each part) who are to View & consider of y<sup>e</sup> most convenient Passage to be made." The New York overseers for the current year, Thomas Hall and Gerrit Hendricksen, were named commissioners, with Daniel Turner and Resolved Waldron, of Harlem.
It was arranged that if Thomas Hall could not be present at the meetings of the commissioners he might send John Vigne as a "fitt Person in his Place." Both the patent of 1666 and that of Oct.
11, 1667, granted to Harlem, contain provisions for building a road between the two places, but it is evident that action was delayed. The commissioners were ordered to "view the said Way" on Feb. 25, and, having decided upon the location, to "immediately fall upon laying out the Way." The "Boores of the Bowery and parts adjacent were to "clear the way to be fitt for the passage of Waggons from New Yorke to the Saw-Kill, & y<sup>e</sup> Towne of Harlem, from thence to their Towne." It was expected that this "Way" would be laid out and cleared by the first of May ensuing.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26-28. On Feb. 24, Gov. Lovelace issued a warrant to the commissioners for the execution of this task, which he says
"hath heretofore bene Ordered & appointed but never as yett was prosecuted to effect."—Ibid., I: 230-31. This road to Harlem was the beginning of the Eastern Post Road, and in part of the Kingsbridge Road.
- " At a meeting of the governour's council at New Harlem, it is ordered that all horses and cattle belonging to New York and New Harlem which "shall be turned into y<sup>e</sup> Woods upon this Island shall have a marke of Distinction upon them." All those belonging to New York, the Bowery, and parts adjacent, are to have the New York brand and those from New Harlem a New Harlem brand. A person from each place is to be appointed and sworn to mark the stock which belong to the inhabitants, and "none other."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 28.
- 23 A committee is appointed "to view y<sup>e</sup> Lands, & to examine into, hear, & to determine the severall Matt<sup>r</sup>s & Cases in Difference between the Towne of West Chester, & Mr W<sup>m</sup> Willett about Cornells Neck [Black Rock, also called Cornhill's Neck], and also between them & Thomas Hunt about his Commonage & Watring Place upon Throgmorten's Neck & what else there may be about the Patent granted to Hugh Oneale & Mary his Wife for the Land comonly called the Jounkers Land." A footnote explains that about 1646 Adriaen van der Donck bought from the Indians, under a grant from Director-General Kieft, their unextinguished titles to the lands "as far as Papiramin, called by our people (Spyt den Duyvell), in Spite of the Devil."
- The tract was soon named "Colen Donck," or "Donck's Colony," and was referred to by the Dutch as "de Jonkheers Laadt," an English corruption of which is perpetuated in the Yonkers of to-day.
Vander Donck's widow later married Hugh Oneale.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 29-30.
- Johannes Verveelen (see July 3, 1667) having petitioned, on Mar.
Feb. 27, for the privilege of the new ferry at Spuyten Duyvil (see 2 1669 Ex. Coun. Min., I, 222), and Gov. Lovelace having referred the Mar. 2

 2 as follows: That "the ferry at Harlem" was farmed out to Verveelen
 "for the Terme of five Yeares;—and now removed to the Wedding [wading]-place three yeares before the expired time;" that Verveelen had been "at Considerable Charge in Settling the s<sup>d</sup> ferry;" therefore, the city bench recommends "that the said ferry at the Wedding place should be granted to Verveelen "for the remainder" of the "three yeares," on condition of his removing "his habitation" there, or settling "a sufficient person in his room to attende the said ferry," and also "Keepe and Deliver up Annually an account of the Incomes of the s<sup>d</sup> ferry."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 170.
 See June 2.

" The curators of the estate of Rachel van Tienhoven, Isaac de Forest, and others having property on the Strand near the graft (now Pearl, below Broad Street) complain, in a petition to the mayor's court, that they have suffered "great damage," and dread yet more, because "the corner wall alongside Hans Dreper's house" has not been "built up," and request that it be built by the city.
 The court promises to see that "the demanded corner wall" is "built up by the first opportunity."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 170.

30 An order from the mayor's court is sent to the deacomy of the city to deliver to the court an account "of the receipt and expenditures of the salary of the Preacher of this City received by them for some yeare hence."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 174.

Apr. "Gov. Lovelace appoints a horse race to take place in May.
 1 Subscribers to be taken for a crown in silver or the value in good wheat; the list of subscribers to be sent to Capt. Salisbury." Gov.
 Nicolls had appointed a race the year before; not so much, as he said, for the divertisement of youth as to encourage the bettering of the breed of horses, which through great neglect was impaired.—Onderdonk, Queen's Co. in Olden Times, 6, citing Orders, I; N. Y. Col. Docs., XVI: 620.

6 A petition is read and considered in the mayor's court from "the householders and some of the inhabitants" of the city, in which they complain, "in substance," that Cornelis van Ruyven, Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, and Allard Anthony "were busy to the prejudice of the Commonalty in general, in fencing in a parcel of land lying between the boweries" of Vander Grift and Anthony
 "and the Great Kill [see explanation below], whereby the pasture of the cattle" was being "much abridged." The petitioners had requested from Gov. Lovelace (who referred them in turn to the mayor's court), an estoppel on the act complained of; and the city bench now orders Van Ruyven, Vander Grift, and Anthony to make answer at the next court day.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 176. They made their answer on the 27th, and a copy thereof was furnished to the petitioners to make answer on the succeeding court day.— Ibid., VI: 179. On May 18, "the farmers and householders beyond the Fresh Water" delivered their reply to the court, and the other party was furnished a copy thereof.—Ibid., VI: 181. Not until June 22 did the city bench give in its report to Gov. Lovelace, in which it said, "That M<sup>r</sup> Van Ruyven & Comp<sup>s</sup> Thomas Hall & Comp<sup>s</sup>, & others that have obtained patents for Lands about the Great Kill, since the Reducing of this place und<sup>r</sup> his May<sup>ties</sup> Obedience, shal enjoy & fence in soo much of their Lands, as they shall be able to manure, besides a reasonable proportion of Land, to be allowed them, for a p<sup>t</sup>icular pasture, provided that they do not Cutt of the Passages out of the Woods to the Waterside, but to leave openings at every one or 200 Rods distance, for Common Rnads to the Waterside; and concerning "the other particuler Pastures Whereof Compl<sup>t</sup> was made," the court adjudged they were "granted, possessed & fenced in, some 20 & others 30 Yeares since," therefore in tenure by prescription. The final disposition was left to the governour's consideration.—Ibid., VI: 183. The Great Kill ran along the present Gansevoort St., which was at one time called the "Great Kill Road." The farms mentioned in the complaint lay west of Broadway and between Christopher and 23d Sts.

" Jacob Barentsen Kool is admitted as a porter of the weigh-house, in the place of Jacob Daniels, who is about to depart from the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 177. On Aug. 3, Albert Leendertsen was likewise admitted as a porter, and on that day, both of them took the oath of fidelity "at the hands of the Mayor . . . as wine and beer carriers."—Ibid., VI: 188, 191.

10 The mayor's court, with the advice of Gov. Lovelace, orders, "that for the future all those that shall Call a Speciall Court shall pay for the same fourty shillings in Zilver or the Vallue thereof in Wampum."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 178. See July 13.

The mayor's court orders "that from henceforth all persons that shal have any actions depending in Court, to be Tryed and determined by a Jury, shall be bound to deliver a declaration in Writing in the office, 8 days before the day of Tryal upon Penalty of a Non Suite."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 179.

A certificate of this date is issued by Gov. Lovelace to John Archer in the following form: "These are to certify all whome it may concerne That I have given leave to John Archer to settle sixteene families upon the Maine near the wading place according to directions formerly given and that what agreem<sup>t</sup> hee shall make wth y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants as to their proporcons of improvable Land and hamelotts, I shall bee ready to confirme, but doe despite the Setting out the utmost bounds for their Range, untill I shall come once more upon y<sup>e</sup> Place after w<sup>ch</sup> I shall graunt a patent for their further assurance."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 424.

On complaint of Nicolaes Bayard, the treasurer of the city, the mayor's court orders Hendrick Obe, "the late Collect<sup>r</sup>," to settle his accounts with the treasurer within eight days.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 181.

In accordance with the recommendation of the mayor's court, March 2 (q. v.), Gov. Lovelace issues the following order: "Whereas it hath beene resolved and concluded upon that the Ferry at New Harlem shall be removed to a nearer and more convenient passage to and from this Island and the maine, which is found to bee at a Place called Spitting duvell And Johannes Verveelen who hetherto hath kept the Ferry at New Harlem aforesaid being found the fittest person to be employed therein, that will undertake it both in regard of the Charge hee hath beene already it [at] and his Experience that way. These are to authorize and Empower him the said Johannes Verveelen to repaire to the said place at Spitting duvell and to cause a fence to be made for keeping all manner of Cattles from goeing or Coming to or fro the said passage without leave or paying therefore and at his best conveniency to lay out a place upon that peece of Land called Papirinum on the meane Side near unto the said passage for his habitation and accomodations of Travellers for the which hee shall have a patent and Articles of Confirmation."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 223. See Sept., 1666; 1683; and Aug. 10, 1685.

The ferry from New York to Communipaw is leased by Gov. 25 Carteret, of N. J., to Pieter Hetfelsen for three yeares, he to be "the only and constant ferryman," with the privilege of renewal at the expiration of the lease unless the inhabitants of the "townes aforesaid have any just Exceptions against him." All persons are prohibited from usurping Hetfelsen's right under penalty of a fine of ten shillings and the additional ferriage which they may have collected.
 Such fines are to be paid to the regular ferry-man. Any person may, however, keep his own boat or canoe for the use of himself or his family and their own goods. The ferry-man must maintain one good and "sufficient" boat or more and, while expected to provide transportation at any time is particularly enjoined to arrange with the inhabitants of Bergen and Communipaw for three days of the week when at appointed times he will be at their service. It is arranged that the governour and family are to have free transportation as are also public messengers from the governour or those authorized by him. The ferry rates are as follows:

"There shall be paid to the ferryman six stuivers a head wampum for every passenger.

"For his freight Extraordinary at all other tymes iff but one man 4 Guilders in Wampum, but iff by night and unseasonable weather as the parties can agree.

 whole barril 20 Stivers for all other goods & Lieg<sup>s</sup> in cash propo-rtionable.

"For cow 3 guilders, for an ox 4 guilders in Wampum

"For a hogg or sow 15 Stivers in Wampum

"For sheep 15 Stivers a head in Wampum."

The ferry-man must also ferry over any person for four guilders in wampum, except "what is before excepted."—Winfield, Hist. of Hudson Co., N. J., 234-36, citing E. J. Rec., III: 27. See Dec. 22, 1661.

- " Samuel Maverick writes to Col. Richard Nicolls at Whitehall (in England), thus: "Now give mee leave to acquaint you a little how things goe here at Yorke. Tryalls have been made severall times this spring for cod fish, wth very good success; a small ketch sent out by y<sup>e</sup> Governour hath foued severall good fishing banks; amongst y<sup>e</sup> rest one not above 2 or 3 leagues from Sandy Hook on which in a few hours 4 men took 11 to 12 hundred excellent good Codd the last time they were out, and most of y<sup>e</sup> vessels that goe to and from Virginia take good quantities. That vessell is to goe from Newfound Land to gett fishermen lines hookes and other necessarys for fishing: I doubt not but this Coast will afford fish in abundance.
- "On y<sup>e</sup> East end of Long Island there were 12 or 13 whales taken before y<sup>e</sup> end of March, and what since we hear note; here are dayly some seen in the very harbour, sometimes within Nutt [now Governors] Island [see Pl. 19, Vol. I, where a spouting whale is pictured]. Out of the Pinnacle the other week they struck two, but lost both, the iron broke in one, the other broke the warpe.
The Governour hath encouraged some to follow this desigee. Two shallops made for itt; but as yett we doe not heare of any they have gotten.
- "The Governour with some Partners is building a ship of 120 tunn, by Thomas Hall's house [at Turtle Bay]; she is well onward and may be finished in August; another of 60 or 70 tunn is building at Gravesend.
- "Nutt Island, by y<sup>e</sup> making of a garden and planting of severall walkes of fruite trees on it, is made a very pleasant place.
- "The Old House is pulling downe, w<sup>ch</sup> proves soe exceedingly defective above what could be imagined, that I thinke it must [be taken] down to the bottoome, and will prove a tedious and chargeable piece of worke. [Cf. "Old Hospital," Oct. 16, 1680.]
- "There is good correspondence kept between the English and Dutch, and to keep it the closer, sixteen (ten Dutch and 6 English) have had a constant meeting at each others houses in turnes, twice every week in winter, and now in summer once; they meet at six at night and part about eight or nine."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 182-83. On Oct. 15, Maverick again wrote to Nicolls:
- "The ship was lauched 14 dayes since and is a very strooge and handsome vessell, but costly; she is named the Good Fame, of New Yorke. The house is come to covering; it is a handsome fabricke and wel contrived, but mens wages soe high as that it cannot be expected it should come of cheape. The flux, agues, and fevers, have much rained, both in cittie and country, & many dead, but not yett soe many as last year."—Ibid., III: 185.
- 6 Nicolaes Jansen, Jan Jaosce van Bresteede, and Hendrick Bosch are elected by the mayor's court as fire-wardens of the city.—
Rec. N. Am., VI: 184. For the first incumbents following the English occupation, see Oct. 3, 1665; see also Dec. 1, 1668.
- "The overseers of highways (see April 16, 1667), whose term of office had expired, are continued by the mayor's court "until further order," as the court expects to appoint "some new Overseers
... for the branding of horses and cattle."—Rec. N. Am., VI:
185. The new appointments were made Jan. 25, 1670 (q.v.).
- 13 The mayor's court orders that the city marshall's fee "out of the money paid for a Speciall Court" (see April 10), shall be four guldens wampum.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 188.
- 31 In regard to a land dispute between John Archer and William Betts, George Lippett, etc., the governour's council orders:
"That Jacques Courteyou [the surveyor] be sent to view & lay out Archers thirty Acres, & y<sup>e</sup> Remaind' to bee to them [see July 7, 1670]; & if they have cutt & carried away any Hay belonging to Archer, they are to returne soe much, hee paying them for their paines.
- "That some Proportion be layd out for the ferryman M<sup>r</sup> Verveelen.
"That Archers bee good Substantiall Meadow, & Betts &c: to have the rest."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 33-34.
- Perewyn, the sachem of the Hackiosack, Toppan, and Staten Island Indians, appears before the governour's council, desiring that the "friendship and amity" existing under Gov. Nicolls may be continued under the present governour. He is assured it will be continued as long as they carry themselves well. Gov. Lovelace is requested to hold a band of seawaot as a pledge that the Maquesses have made a peace with the nations of the sachem. The governour is also informed that if any tribute has been demanded of Chris-tianso fishing upon the Hudson River, it has been done without the order of "y<sup>e</sup> Cheife persons amongst them."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 35-36.
- Jean (Johaanes) de la Montagne receives from the Indians a confirmatory deed for "the Point named Rechawanis, bounded between a stream which runs to Montagne's Flat; with the meadows from the bend of the Hellegat to Konaade Kough."—Harlem Recs.

Montague's Point, later called Benson's Point, lay between the present 98th and 107th Sts., approximately, and extended from about the line of Fifth Ave. to the Harlem River.—See The Maanats Maps, II: 193-94; C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 966; Pl. 178, Vol. III.
- Daniel Dillon, a lad about 16 years of age, attempts to set on fire the house of William Paterson, about eight o'clock at night,
"by putting a brand of fire under the door" of the house. The lad was found guilty by the mayor's court, on Sept. 2, and condemned to be taken to "the Ordinary Execution place" and given "twelve Slashes;" to be held in prison at the pleasure of the court, and then "to be banished out of this City and the Suburbs thereof during his Life."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 194. This house was on the corner of Coenties Alley and Pearl St., on the opposite corner from the city hall, and was included in the original grant of Thomas Willet, of 1645.
- Gov. Lovelace having recommended to the mayor's court "to Consider who are persons qualified to haue the Benefit of Commoa-ge on this Island Manhat<sup>t</sup> and how farreit should extend to any Particular persons as by his hono<sup>r</sup>'s Order bea<sup>r</sup> date the 8 day of July last past May appear," the city bench reports "that al persons by vertue of the Order published the 18th of May last past, are qualified to have the Benefit of Commoaage uppon this Island, provided the persons be actual Inhabitants of this Corporation and the Cattle be Really their owne;" therefore, the court does "not Judge it Expedient, as for the present, to Make any Alteration in the s<sup>d</sup> Order."
—Rec. N. Am., VI: 193-94.
- The articles of agreement for "y<sup>e</sup> settling of a Ferry at y<sup>e</sup> place Comonly called Spiting Devill betweene this Island Manhatans & New Village called Fordham" are agreed upon between Gov. Lovelace and the ferry-man, Verveelen, instead of between the mayor and Verveelen as was the case in leasing the Harlem ferry (see July 3, 1667). The terms provide that Verveelen "shall Erect & provide a good & sufficient Dwelling house, upon y<sup>e</sup> Island or Neck of Land knowne by y<sup>e</sup> name of Papiroinman, where hee shall be furioh<sup>t</sup> wth three or fewer good Bedds, for y<sup>e</sup> Entertainement of Strangers, & as many wth stabling & stalliog." He must have "a sufficient & Able boat for y<sup>e</sup> Transportation of Passengers Horses & Cattle upon all Occasions." The "Passse upon y<sup>e</sup> said Island ocare unto Spiting Devill" must be fenced and have a gate and lock so that no person can enter or leave without the ferry-man's permission. He must bear one-third of the cost of building a bridge over the meadow ground to the town of Fordham, "who are to be at y<sup>e</sup> remaind' of y<sup>e</sup> Charge themselves." Either the ferry-man or his deputy is required to be ready to provide transportation at all seasonable hours, and in case of emergency where "y<sup>e</sup> Publique affaires are concerned" he is to be ready whenever called upon. A fine is to be imposed for neglect of duty. In return for these requirements, the ferry-man is to receive Papiroinam (see June 2, also Papiroinamin in Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 967) and the meadow ground adjoining, whatever building hee shall erect thereon, and the profits of the ferry for a period of 11 years. At the end of this time hee or his heirs are to have preference in leasing the ferry (see Dec. 30, 1680). In case of lease to other parties, such satisfaction for buildings, boats, etc., as two disinterested persons agree upon, is to be granted him. At the 1669 expiration of the lease the house must be tenantable and boats, Sept. fences, and gate in repair. A table of rates is agreed upon. It is provided that messengers from governour or magistrate engaged in public business are to be exempt from transportation fees, as are persons summoned to arms in cases of emergency. Cattle for exhibition at a "Fayre" are also exempt; Verveelen is to be constable of Fordham for one year. The amount to be paid for quarterly is left a blank.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 227-29. Some changes in fees from the Harlem rates are made: for one night's lodging in a bed with sheets, sixpence are charged; without sheet, twopence; for feeding a horse one day or night with hay or grass, sixpence; cattle, threepence; transportation rates include, for a single person, one penny silver; man and horse, sevenpence silver; single horse, sixpence; for a "Turn wth his boate where there is 2 horses ro <sup>d</sup> & for any more quantity 4 <sup>d</sup> p peice & if they be driuen over halfe as much;" for a boat load of cattle as much as for horses and as much for single cattle as for a horse; for droves of cattle to be driven over, and opening the gates, twopence apiece.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 225. This ferry crossed Spuyten Duyvil Creek at a point west of the present Kingsbridge Ave., near Riverdale Ave.—See Landmark Pap Ref. Key, III: 943.

Oct. The mayor presents to the city court bench a letter, written on 5 July 10, by James, Duke of York, "directed to the Mayor Aldermen and Inhabitants of New Yorke," in which the duke acknowledged the receipt of the corporation's letter to him, of Aug. 17, 1668, "by the hands of Colloanel Richard Nicolls," on his return to England. The duke promised to endeavour to promote the welfare and prosperity of the city, in which he realized lay his own interest as well as that of the people.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 199.

The duke's letter having been read "in open Court," the mayor orders "that Proclamation should be made for the Withdrawing of the People out of the Court." This is done, and then an order of the Duke of York, dated July 4, 1669, and addressed to Gov. Lovelace, is presented to the court by Capt. Matthias Nicolls, the governour's secretary in council. In this order, the duke said: "I have thought fit to appoint two Seales to be made, the one for the Province and the other for the Corporation of New Yorke (which I have sent unto you by M<sup>r</sup> Thomas de Laull) and to Direct that they shall be made use of upon all occasions, for Sealing of Warrants, Writs, Executions, Patents, Grants, and all other Public Acts and Instruments, w<sup>ch</sup> any Wayes Concerne either the Province or Corporation of New Yorke respectively, For w<sup>ch</sup> this shall be Yof Warrant." Dated "at St James this 4th of July 1669."—Ibid., 199-200. See, further, April 6, 1675. Broadhead, II: 158 (footnote), says: "The seal of the province of New York, thus authorized by the Duke of York's warrant of 4 July, 1669, to be used for all public instruments, was so used until replaced by the new seal which James the Second substituted for it on 14 August, 1687: Col. Doc., III, 427."

Capt. Lovelace, brother of Gov. Lovelace, comes before the mayor's court, and declares he was sent by the governour to present to the mayor and aldermen "a Letter" from the governour, "with a Seal for the Corporation [see Addenda], with a Silver Mace, and Seven Gownes for the Mayor, Aldermen & Sheriff, sent from his Royall Highnesse," the Duke of York, to the governour, "to be presented" to the court. The governour's letter, which appears under date of the following day (Oct. 6), is "opened and Read in open Court." In it Gov. Lovelace said that, "as a Peticuler Testimony" of the Duke of York's "grace and fauour" to the city of New York, he, the governour, had been commanded to present, on the duke's behalf, "a Public Seale for the Corporation, a Silver Mace, and Gownes both for the Mayor & Aldermen," and, that although the duke esteemed "some of these, but as the Gayety and Circumstantial part of Government," yet, they might be assured that "more essential and Substantial" matters would "receive all encouragement and hartey assistance from him." And, added Gov. Lovelace, "I doe assure You that Wherein I may, any Way be Serviceable to You, I shal Cheirefully apply my mind to it, whoe professe no higher Cogitations then what shal tend to My Royal Masters Intrest, and the Public Welfare of those Comitted to my Charge; If therefore You will Consider of Somme Methode for the better regulation of Yf Corporation and present it to me, What I find reasonable and practicable, I shall Willingly allow of, and What appears above my Strength, I shall with the best Convenience transmit over to Receive his R: H: assent, from Whom I doubt not, but you will have such Satisfaction, as is agreeable to Yof Necessities and desires."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 198-99.

Oct. From double nominations made on the preceding day by the mayor's court, for a new bench for the ensuing year, Gov. Lovelace appoints and commissions Cornelis Steenwyck, mayor; Thomas Delavall, Matthias Nicolls, Cornelis van Ruyven, John Laurence, and Nicolaes de Meyer, aldermen; and Capt. John Manning, sheriff. Their commissions ran from this date until Aug. 14, 1670.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 200-1. In a letter to the mayor's court, dated Oct. 6, Gov. Lovelace promised that if they would "consider of Somme Methode for the better regulation of Yf Corporation and present it to me, What I find reasonable and practicable, I shall Willingly allow of."—Ibid., VI: 198-99. The return to the Dutch custom of double nominations for court officials would seem to be an attempt towards such "better regulation."

Gov. Francis Lovelace states that he has received letters from the Duke of York in approbation of "y<sup>e</sup> Tolleration given to y<sup>e</sup> Lutheran Church" in New York, and that the Lutherans are not to be molested in their worship.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 626, copied from MS. Records of Court of Assizes, II: 424.

It is ordered that tobacco exported for Europe shall pay two 18 guilders wampum per hogshhead; that sugar exported "from these parts thither" shall "pay 2<sup>d</sup> per Cent. in Beaver;" that beavers to be exported to Europe shall pay but 7/8 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. and that all other gross goods exported as before shall pay 1 1/2 per cent.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 39-40. See Nov. 18, 1668.

Several petitions from towns on Long Island are received by 20 Nov. Gov. Lovelace. The grievances against which they sought redress were especially noted in the petition from Hempstead, which was considered by the court of assizes. Among the things sought were regulation of the prices of what they bought as well as what they produced; wampum to pass "for current pay at 6<sup>d</sup> a penny or else not to be made use of at all;" "a better attendance at y<sup>e</sup> Ferry at New Yorke that men may not be so long detained to their great damage;" that "all harbors, creeks & coves" in the province be made available "for any shipping or Vessells to come into & trade free;" the establishment of weights and measures according to the English standard only, and a provision that such cattle as they slaughtered and brought over to the city, or goods which they bought in the city, should be free of custom duties. These requests were rejected in most cases. The publication of ferry regulations was promised speedily.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 631-33.

Warner Wessells is chosen by the mayor's court as constable of 16 the city during the mayoralty of Cornelis Steenwyck. He took the oath of office on Dec. 7.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 203, 208.

The Harlem court orders that no animals except calves shall be 25 pastured in the common "calve pasture" lying "North of the Village." Penalties are fixed for disregarding such order and for leaving the gate open. Before the last of March each person using the common pasture is to make his share of the bridges in the two meadows.—Harlem Rect. (MS. translation), I: 149-50. In a court case of April 23, 1672, mention was made of the community "making tight the fence of the calf pasture."—Ibid., I: 186-87.

The following new court of New Harlem (see June 12, 1666) Dec. 7 is elected by the mayor's court, viz: Jacques Croisson, constable; Resolved Waldron, Kier Woltersen, Claude La Metre, and Johannes Verdelje, overseers. Woltersen left soon after the election; hence, on Jan. 25, 1670, Joost Oblinus was elected to the vacancy.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 207, 213.

The first printed description of New York in the English language, written by Daniel Denton, was published in London in this year. The scope of the work is indicated by the title page, which reads: A Brief Description of New York Formerly Called New-Netherlands. With the Places thereunto Adjoyning. Together with the Manner of its Situation, Fertility of the Soyle, Healthfulness of the Climate, and the Commodities there produced. Also Some Directions and Advice to such as shall goe thither: An Account of what Commodities they shall take with them. The Profit and Pleasure that may accrue to them thereby, likewise A Brief Relation of the Customs of the Indians there. Parts of his vivid and laudatory descriptions follow:

"And first to begin with the Manahatens Island, so called by the Indians, it lieth within land betwixt the degrees of 41. and 42. of North-latitude, and is about 14 miles long, and two broad. It is bounded with Long-Island on the South, with Staten-Island on the West, on the North with the main Land: And with Connecticut Colony on the East-side of it; only a part of the Main Land belong-1670 ing to New York Colony, where several Towns and Villages are settled, being about thirty miles in breadth, doth intercept the Manahatans Island, and the Colony of Connecticut before mentioned. New-York is settled upon the West-end of the aforesaid Island, having that small arm of the Sea, which divides it from Long-Island on the South-side of it, which runs away Eastward to New-England, and is Navigable, though dangerous. For about ten miles from New York is a place called Hell-Gate, which being a narrow passage, there runneth a violent stream both upon flood and ebb, and in the middle lieth some Islands of Rocks, which the Current sets so violently upon, that it threatens present shipwreck; and upon the Flood is a large Whirlpool, which continually sets forth a hideous roaring, enough to affright any stranger from passing further, and to wait for some Charon to conduct him thorough, yet to those that are well acquainted little or no danger; yet a place of great defence against any enemy coming in that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, and necessitate them to come in at the West-end of Long-Island by Sandy Hook where Nutton-Island doth force them within Command of the Fort at New York, which is one of the best Pieces of Defence in the North parts of America.

"New York is built most of Brick and Stone, and covered with red and black Tile, and the Land being high, it gives at a distance a pleasing Aspect to the spectators. The Inhabitants consist most of English and Dutch, and have a considerable Trade with the Indians, for Beavers, Otter, Raccoon skins, with other Furs: As also for Bear, Deer, and Elk skins; and are supplied with Venison and Fowl in the Winter, and Fish in the Summer by the Indians, which they buy at an easie rate; And having the Countrey round about them, they are continually furnished with all such provisions as is needful for the life of man; not only by the English and Dutch within their own, but likewise by the Adjacent Colonies.

"The Commodities vented from thence is Furs and Skins before-mentioned; As likewise Tobacco made within the Colony, as good as is usually made in Maryland: Also Horses, Beef, Pork, Oyl, Pearl, Wheat, and the like.

"Thus have I briefly given you a Relation of New-York, with the places thereunto adjoining; In which, if I have err'd, it is principally in not giving it its due commendation, for besides those earthly blessings where it is stor'd, Heaven hath not been wanting to open his Treasure, in sending down seasonable showers upon the Earth, blessing it with a sweet and pleasant Air, and a continuation of such Influences as tend to the Health both of Man and Beast; and the Climate hath such an affinity with that of England, that it breeds ordinarily no alteration to those which remove thither; that the name of seasoning, which is common to some other Countreys hath never there been known; That as I may say, and say truly, that if there be any terrestrial happiness to be had by people of all ranks, especially of an inferior rank, it must certainly be here: here any one may furnish himself with land, and live rent-free, yea, with such a quantity of land, that he may weary himself with walking over his fields of Corn, and all sorts of Grains: and let his stock of Cattel amount to some hundreds, he needs not fear their want of pasture in the Summer, or Fodder in the Winter, the Woods affording sufficient supply. For the Summer-season, where you have grass as high as a mans knees, nay, as high as his waste, interlaced with Pea-vines and other weeds that Cattel much delight in, as much as a man can press thorough; and these woods also every mile or half-mile are furnished with fresh ponds, brooks or rivers, where all sorts of Cattel, during the heat of the day, do quench their thirst and cool themselves; these brooks and rivers being environ'd of each side with several sorts of trees and Grape-vines, the Vines, Arbor-like, interchanging places and crossing these rivers, does shade and shelter them from the scorching beams of Sols fiery influence: Here those which Fortune hath frown'd upon in England, to deny them an inheritance amongst their Brethren, or such as by their utmost labors can scarcely procure a living, I say such may procure here inheritances of lands and possessions, stock themselves with all sorts of Cattel, enjoy the benefit of them whilst they live, and leave them to the benefit of their children when they die: Here you need not trouble the Shambles for meat, nor Bakers and Brewers for Beer and Bread, nor run to a Linnen-Draper for a supply, every one making their own Linnen, and a great part of their woollen-cloth for their ordinary wearing: And how prodigal, if I may so say, hath Nature been to furnish the Countrey with all sorts of wild Beasts and Fowle, which every one hath an interest in, and may hunt at his pleasure; where besides the pleasure in hunting, he 1670 may furnish his house with excellent fat Venison, Turkeys, Geese, Heath-Hens, Cranes, Swans, Ducks, Pidgeons, and the like: and wearied with that, he may go a Fishing, where the Rivers are so furnished, that he may supply himself with Fish before he can leave off the Recreation: Where you may travel by Land upon the same Continent hundreds of miles, and pass through Towns and Villages, and never hear the least complaint for want, nor hear any ask you for a farthing: there you may lodge in the fields and woods, travel from one end of the Countrey to another, with as much security as if you were lockt within your own Chamber; And if you chance to meet with an Indian-Town, they shall give you the best entertainment they have, and upon your desire, direct you on your way: But that which adds happiness to all the rest, is the Healthfulness of the place, where many people in twenty years time never know what sickness is: where they look upon it as a great mortality if two or three die out of a town in a years time; where besides the sweetness of the Air, the Countrey itself sends forth such a fragrant smell, that it may be perceived at Sea before they can make the Land: where no evil fog or vapour doth no sooner appear, but a North-west or Westerly winde doth immediately dissolve it, and drive it away; What shall I say more? you shall scarce see a house, but the South side is begirt with Hives of Bees, which increase after an incredible manner. That I must needs say, that if there be any terrestrial Canaan, 'tis surely here, where the Land floweth with milk and honey."—Denton, Brief Description of N. Y., 2-3, 17-19.

A large manuscript map of Long Island, including Mauhattan Island, drawn in this year by Robert Ryder, is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. For its reproduction, see Ex. Coun. Min., I: opp. p. 237.

In this year, the region east of the Penobscot was surrendered to the French.—Winsor, op. cit., IV: 161.

Capt. Matthias Nicolls, secretary of the province of New York, informs the mayor's court that Gov. Lovelace intends "to build a house upon the lot, adjoining next unto the State-house [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley, or the present 65-67 Pearl St.], and to make s<sup>d</sup> house to be an Inn or Ordinary;" and, if the court does not consider it prejudicial to the city "to allow his hon<sup>or</sup> to build the upperpart of the house something over the passage of the Towne" which lies "betwene the Statehouse & the s<sup>d</sup> Lott," he intends to do so, as also to "make a doore to go from the upperpart of the house into the Courts Chambers." The court, "uppon mature Considerat<sup>ion</sup>," allows the governour's proposals, and orders that it be so recorded.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 215. On March 7, 1671, Gov. Lovelace inquired of the mayor and aldermen whether they would sell him "the Vacant Strooke of ground" which lay "betwixt the Statehouse and the New House" he had built. The city court thought it "fit to Leave it to his hon<sup>or</sup>'s discretion to pay to the Towne for the said ground" whatever he considered proper, provided, however, that he did not cut off the "Entrie into the prison door or Common Goale."—Ibid., VI: 287. This has been called the first English tavern in New York City, but this contention is untenable.

The carmen or carters and the shoemakers of the city are summoned to appear before the mayor's court. Complaints have been made to the court that "several of the Karmmen" did not "performe their duty in taking good care for the goods;" they carted "for the Burgers & Strangers," and that some of them "many times" used "ill and had Language to the Burgers." Evidently the shoemakers or tanners have been summoned as the chief complainants. The court, on Feb. 8, took up the matter and warned the carmen to desist from their incivility, or they would, upon a recurrence and proof thereof, be summarily stripped of their privileges.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 216, 217-18.

Cornelis Barentsen was the only official grain measure of the city at this time. He asks the mayor's court to appoint Jan van Gelder as an additional grain measure; at the same time he requests that the measuring of grain be forbidden to all others, and that the "fees for measuring be raised and something be allowed for round measure." The court appoints Van Gelder; reserves the right of everyone to measure his own grain, and disallows any change in the established fees or extra allowance for "the round measure."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 214-15. Van Gelder, however, had not been sworn in by March 15, when Barentsen complained to the court against him for making too much money at his expense. The court decreed that Van Gelder should turn over one-half of his collected fees to Barentsen, and that Barentsen should "in future be preferred in the measuring," depriving Van Gelder therefrom, unless Barentsen was "absent at work elsewhere" or when "more 1670 than one parcel of grain must be measured at the same time;" in Jan. any case Van Gelder must be "previously taken the oath of 25 fidelity."—Ibid., VI: 224-25.

A former city ordinance (see order of council, Feb. 22-23, 1669) made provision for the branding of all the horses and cattle on Manhattan Island, and for the appointment of some persons as overseers to put the same in operation. The mayor's court now appoints, as overseers for the city and of the farmers "thereunto belonging," Jan Jansen Langestraat and Ariaen Cornelissen; and two others, Resolved Waldron and Daniel Terneut, for the town of New Haer-lem. The clerk of New Haerlem is also designated to be "Recorder" to the overseers. This body was under the jurisdiction of the mayor's court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 215-16. See March 5.

29 The elders and deacons of New York City write to the classis of Amsterdam urging them to send another minister. Dominie Megapolensis having recently died, and Dominie Driusius being "afflicted with a weakness of memory." The congregation, through the above-mentioned supplicants, urges that, if possible, Rev. Henry Selyns be returned to them (see March 16, 1671). His faithful ministry, pious life, kind and affectionate intercourse, and peculiar zeal in instructing and catechizing have left a deep impression upon his former parishioners.—Eccles. Rec., I: 607-8. See June 5.

Feb. The governor issues an order at Fort James that William Betts, 10 George Tippet, and John Hedyer shall join with the rest of the town of Fordham in making a "Cawsey" over "ye Marshy ground betweene Pappirinnion & ye Town of fordham," and in making a "Convenient bridge over Bronx Ryver, wth a Gate on Eastchest Syde to hind<sup>r</sup> their Hogs from coming over. In consideration whereof & for their Incouragem<sup>t</sup> it being a new Plantation, they shall have ye liberty & priviledg of having ye Passage of ye Ferry free to & fro for themselves, Horses, Hogs & Cattle for & duering ye space of tyme Johannes Vervelen ye p<sup>s</sup>ent Constable or his Assigns shall enjoy ye Ferry, as by agreem<sup>t</sup> betwene us is sett downe."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 441.

"A parcel of "Land & Meadow Lying on the north side of Mes-patis Kills Commonly Called Dom<sup>s</sup> hoeck" (Dominie's Hook—see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965) is sold at auction by the vendue master, Nicholas Bayard, for the heirs of Anna Bogardus (Anoëke Jans) to John Sharp. On April 12, Bayard made complaint to the mayor's court that Sharp had not fulfilled the conditions of the sale.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 231-32. See Dec. 5.

Mar. "Whereas by a former act of this Court, it was ordered, that all 5 horses and Cattle permitted to feed in the Commonns of this Island, should be branded with the Townes mark, at or before the Last day [15th] of octob<sup>r</sup> last past [1669] wch<sup>s</sup> d<sup>y</sup> octob<sup>r</sup> hetherto is omitted to be put in Execution;" therefore, the mayor's court "thought fit, to suspend" the operation thereof "from the 5th Last day of octob<sup>r</sup> to the first day of May next ensuing [1670]," and the same overseers or branders who had been appointed on the previous Jan.
25 (q. v.) are now authorized de novo.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 223.
The instructions given to the overseers or branders throw considerable light upon the system of branding and commonage.
Only horses or cattle that had been branded with the town's mark were to be allowed to "feed in the Commons" on Manhattan Island; the only stallions to be admitted were those that they approved, except that at least six of them were to "be Continually Kept in the Commonns;" the overseers were required to make an exact record of all the horses and cattle they branded, showing the colour and marks, as well as owner's name of each.
Two appointed days of each week were to be fixed upon for branding days, and "notice thereof" was to be given to the inhabitants "by fixing up of Bills for that purpose." The branders of New Haerlem were required to "bring in an acct to the Recorder general every quarter of the Year, and the branders of the City every month," of the branding they had done. They were to receive their pay out of the branding fees established by the court. All money from fees was to be "first delivered into the hands of the Recorder general," who, having issued a statement of the accounts half yearly, was to "pay to the Branders and Recorder of New haerlem 2 parts, and to the Branders of New Yorke and the Recorder general [i. e., himself] 3 parts of the 5th fee; and the Remainder to be Left at the disposal" of the mayor's court.—Ibid., VI: 222-23. See June 7.

7 A monopoly of the catching of porpoises for 12 years in the Lower Bay, between Coney Island and Gravesend Bay, is granted to Francis de Bruyn and his associates.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 633.

Gov. Lovelace issues a proclamation for "ye keeping a Punctuall tyme for meeting at ye Exchange." Whereas "amongst ye severall Implomy<sup>t</sup>s ye Inhabitants of this City are Convariant in that of ye merchants appears ye cheifest & most important," it is proposed that a "fit tyme & place" be appointed where "Merchants (whether strangers as well as Townesmen) & other artificers may resorte & discourse of their severall affaires according to ye universall custome of all maretyme Corporations." The governor and council order that "friday . . . betwene ye houres of Eleauen & Twelve before noone shall always be ye tyme, & at or neare ye Bridge (for ye p<sup>s</sup>ent) to be the Place where all merchants shall meet as to an Exchange to conferre about their severall affaires
. . . & that daily notice thereof be giuen by ye ringing of a bell when they should come on, & when they should goe of & that care be taken by ye Mayo<sup>r</sup> of this City that no interrupcion or disturbance be giuen to any one that shall frequent that Exchange & likewise that M<sup>r</sup> Mayo<sup>r</sup> cause a solemn publication to be made of this Ord<sup>r</sup> at ye Towne house of this City."—Court of Assizes, II: 478 (N. Y. S. L.). From a typewritten copy, in the N. Y. Pub. Library, of the original, which was destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany in 1911. "Thus the first merchants' exchange of New York came into existence, holding its meetings in the open air near the site of the great Stock Exchange building of to-day and (almost) on the very spot, the junction of Broad Street and Exchange Place, where that peculiar New York institution called the 'curb market' now [1909] likewise does its business out-of-doors."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 70.

The original Charlestown, S. C., is founded, on the western bank of the Ashley River.—Winsor, op. cit.: V: 307. For its removal to the present site, see 1680.

Johannes de Peyster, Isaacq Greverael, Contraet ten Eyck, and Hendrick Willemsen are appointed overseers "for the Laying out and Paving of the Streets." The instructions given to them by the mayor's court required them "to order that the Streets wch<sup>s</sup> are to be paved be laid out as level and even as possible" and "according to the Convenience of the Streets;" that "the passage be Raised about one foot higher then the middle of the Streets to the end the water may take its Course from the passages towards the Middle of the Streets aforesaid;" and provision that, "in Case the Neighbours" were "inclined towards the paving of the Whole Streets," they had "Liberty so to do, provided that all the Neighbours" agreed in unison to do so. Every person concerned was "required & Strictly Charged to obey the orders" of the overseers in conformity with the ordinance.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 228-29. On May 18, the mayor appointed Abram Janssen, master carpenter of the city, an associate of the overseers of the streets of the city, for the proper laying out and opening of streets; because the overseers had requested the appointment of one of the carpenters who understood the work.—Ibid., VI: 235. This board was entirely distinct from the overseers of roads and fences (see March 1). In N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 78, the two are apparently confused.

The final deed of conveyance of Staten Island from six listed Iodians, "on ye behalfe of themselves" as the True Sachems Owners & lawful Indian Proprietors of Staten Island & all o<sup>r</sup> Indiaas ay way concerned ther[e]of," to Gov. Lovelace, is signed. On April 15, in the presence of the governor and Capt. Manning, the secretary, the deed was again "delivered & acknowledged," before
"the young Indyan<sup>s</sup> not being present at the Eosealing & delive [ry] of the deed on April 13. The "young Indyan<sup>s</sup> were boys and girls from six to twenty years of age.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 338-42 (where the first and last pages are reproduced).

This final deed was the result of a series of parleys with the Iodians regarding a deed of July 10, 1657, which appeared in the "Old Dutch Records" together with the "Consideration Agreed upon" and all the "Indyan<sup>s</sup> Names & Markes who sold it." When the Indians who appeared before the governor are asked why they will again sell the island, since it was sold 40 years ago, "They say they sold but part; It's told them that it appears upon Record that it was sold; They being told that since these now would sell the Land againe after it had been sold 40 yeares agoe, their Children 40 yeares hence may doe y<sup>e</sup> like; They say still that then only part of it was sold, so they continued on it, but now if they shall sell it all, they will goe off & leave it. The English finally admitted that,
"though there was an Agreement yet nothing of it was paid, for they did not goe off the Island." (It is stated in N. Y. Col. MSS., XII: 61, 69, that the date of the deed was 1657, but that the purchase was

- annuled Dec. 22 of that year.) The English added: "if they will now go all off, That Agreement shall be made good to them."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 43-45. At a second meeting, two of the Indian signers of the deed of 1657 were present, and, the matter of the early agreement being again discussed, the Indians refused to accept its terms and presented their own demands.—Ibid., I: 45-46. After further barter, terms satisfactory to both parties were agreed upon, which included payment to the Indians of 400 "Fathom of Wampom," 30 "Match Coates," "Eight Coats of Dozens made up," 30 shirts, 30 kettles, 20 guns, 1 firkin of powder, 60 bars of lead, 30 axes, 30 hoes, and 50 knives. Another provision was that "Queromer who was Employed to bring the Indyans together is to have a Blanckett, & a fathom of Duffells." The Indians agreed to leave the island upon receiving their pay. "The Persons present & concerned strooke hands upon the Bargaine." A memorandum in connection with the deed states "That Two or Three of y<sup>e</sup> said Sachems their heires or success<sup>rs</sup> or so many Persons Employed by them shall once every year (vizt) upon y<sup>e</sup> First day of May yearly after their surrend<sup>r</sup> repair to this ffort to acknowledge their Sale of the said Staten Island to y<sup>e</sup> Governour or his Successors to continue a mutual friendship betweene them."—Ibid., I: 343. See May 2. This indenture deed was burned in the Capitol fire at Albany, in March, 1911. There is, however, a duplicate copy, with the addition of Lovelace's signature, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.
- Gov. Lovelace issues a warrant which appoints "M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Lovelace & M<sup>r</sup> Matthias [Nicolls] to repayre this day to Staten Island there to take possession by Turfe & Twigge & y<sup>e</sup> surrend<sup>r</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> said Island by y<sup>e</sup> Indian Sachems & Proprietors in y<sup>e</sup> name of his Royall Highness according to y<sup>e</sup> Teo<sup>r</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> bill of Sale & Purchase" (See April 13, 15).—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 344.
- The Hudson Bay Company is chartered. See Addenda.
- Jan Vincent and Harmanus Koninck are charged by Constable Warner Wessels with dereliction in not aiding him "in bringing a drunken Indian to the Statehouse." The mayor's court condemns them to a fine of six guilders seawant, each, one-half for the poor fund, and the other half for the use of the church, as well as to pay the costs of the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 233.
- The fire-wardens of the city are ordered by the mayor's court "to cause all the fire buckets heretofore provided for the City to be brought to the City Hall and to deliver in at the next Court day a pertinent list of all the fire apparatus remaining in their charge and hands."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 235. See April 9, 1667, for their earlier order.
- The governour appoints Thomas Lovelace and Paul Leenderts to be collectors and receivers of all "goods effects or Debts" belonging to the West India Co.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 518-19.
- The court at New Harlem appoints as tavern-keeper Cornelius Jansen, on condition that he make provision for the "going and coming men" (travellers), and that he take oath not to sell any liquor to Indians. The appointee accepts.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 144.
- A letter of this date indicates that the Dutch church was still "destitute of preaching" and the administering of the sacraments (see Jan. 29). Prayers were offered each Sunday morning and afternoon and the "Word of God and a sermon were read by the chorister Evert Pieterse." Every two weeks Dominie Polhemus, who was over 70, preached a sermon on a week day, and administered the sacrament of baptism to children. The letter adds: "We hope that by your speedy help, this anxious congregation may be supplied with a suitable minister." An act obtained from the governour (see Jan. 28), which designated the compensation for a minister as 1,000 guilders, free house rent, and firewood, was enclosed with the letter.—Eccles. Rec., I: 610-11. See March 16 and 28, 1671.
- Resolved Waldron, Lubbert Gerritsen, Dirck Siecken, and Jan Cornelissen, acting as "agents of the housekeepers and farmers dwelling" on Manhattan Island (see Jan. 25), petition the mayor's court "regarding the marks of all the horses and cattle." Decision is reserved until the 21st. The ordinance provides for branding all horses and cattle above one year old, which the petitioners say is not feasible, and seek to have the age fixed at three years; moreover they request a release from the branding fees, and instead offer "to observe the marks and brands by villages, without receiving any fees therefor." The court conceded the request on condition that the petitioners would "take care, that the Placard relating to the marking of horses and cattle be duly executed and that the petitioners provide and find a fit person, by whom the register is properly kept, and finally to pay the expenses incurred in the manufacture of the branding irons."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 237-38, 239-40.
- "Upou complaint of the common council that the stapleright of Manhattan was constantly ignored by vessels not belonging to New York, the governour decreed that, as in Dutch days [see March 9, 1660], no goods should be carried up the river unless their owners possessed burgher-right in the city and, unloading their cargoes, paid recognitions there."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 69; Ex. Coun. Min., II: 522-23. The order was revived March 9, 1671.—Ibid., II: 523.
- The elders and deacons of the Dutch church having petitioned the mayor's court for "an able Orthodox Minister," of which they are now "Wholly destitute," the court laid the case before Gov. Lovelace, who now gives his official assent to bringing over a minister from Holland; also to a guaranty that he "receive a Competent Salary or Allowance for his Exercising the Ministeriall function," amounting to 1,000 guilders, Holland money, per annum, as well as "the accomodation of a Convenient dwelling house, Rent free, Together with his Provision of fire Wood Gratis." These perquisites, of course, were to be met by an annual levy upon the inhabitants.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 240-41. See July 11, 1678.
- A long standing dispute between John Archer and Betts, Tippet, and Heddy (see Nov. 6, 1668), regarding a 30-acre meadow claimed by Archer out of land sold by Elias Doughty, is settled by the governour's council. Archer is to have the meadow as formerly set off by "Cotileau [Cortelyou] y<sup>e</sup> Surveyor," and since surveyed by Robert Rider.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 52, 215.
- The Treaty of Madrid, between England and Spain, settles the boundaries of their respective possessions in America on the basis of possession.
- Petrus Stuyvesant complains to the mayor's court that he is being "abridged in the execution of some of his lands from the public fence."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 245. See Feb. 28, 1671.
- In the mayor's court, "The Overseers of Roads and Fences" complain that Bastian Eliisen, Jan Kyckuyt, Gerrit Hendricksen, and Augustine the negro, have failed "to maintain their quota of the Common Strand fence" (along the Hudson River), which neglect results in "great damage . . . done daily to the grain." The defendants reply that the fence is "down," and the cattle swam "around the fence at high water." The court refers the matter to Jan Cornelissen and Arend Leendertsen, to hear the case debated and render a report.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 245.
- A license is granted to Jacob Meurs, of Amsterdam, to publish De Nieuwe en Onbekende Weereld: of Beschrijving van America, by Arnoldus Montanus; its title-page bears the date 1671 (see I: 142). This book contains the well-known Montanus View of New York (Pl. 6, Vol. I), and this description: "On the Mannhattans island stands New Amsterdam, five miles from the Ocean: Ships run up to the harbour there from the sea with one tide. The city bath an earthen fort. Within the fort, and on the outermost bastion towards the river, stand a wind mill, and a very high staff, on which a flag is hoisted whenever any vessels are seen in Godyn's bay. The church rises with a double roof between which a square tower looms aloft. On one side is the prison, on the other side of the church the governour's house. Without the walls are the houses mostly built by Amsterdammers. On the river side stand the gallows and whipping post. A handsome public tavern adorns the farthest point. Between the fort and this tavern is a row of suitable dwelling houses: among which stand out the ware houses of the West India Company." This translation is from Dac. Hist. N. Y. (4to edn.), IV: 75. This book was issued also in an English and a German edition. The English edition, America, contains a somewhat different description, ending thus:
- "After His Majesties Restauration, His Majesty being truly inform'd of his just Pretences to all that Usurp'd Territory call'd New Netherland, (the same having been formerly part of New England) and of how great prejudice to the Act of Navigation, and how dangerous Intruders the Dutchmen are generally upon other Princes Dominions, what mischief might ensue to all our English Plantations in time of War, if the Dutch were permitted to strengthen themselves in the very heart of His Majesties Dominions, being Masters of one of the most commodious Ports and Rivers in America: His Majesty resolv'd to seize upon the same, as his undoubted Right, and in May 1664, having design'd four Commissioners to the perfecting of Affairs in New England, Colloanel

1670 Richard Nichols, Sir Robert Carr, George Cartwright, and Samuel July Mawrick [Maverick] Esquires, with three Ships of War to convey 18=28 them to Boston: The matter was so order'd that the same Ships serv'd for the reducing of the Town and Fort of New Amsterdam, upon conditions, advantageous to His Majesty, and easie to the Dutch."

The town is "plac'd upon the neck of the Island Manhatans, looking towards the Sea; encompass'd with Hudson's River, which is six Miles broad; the Town is compact and oval, with very fair Streets and several good Houses; the rest are built much after the manner of Holland, to the number of about four hundred Houses, which in those parts are held considerable: Upon one side of the Town is James-Fort capable to lodge three hundred Souldiers and Officers; it hath four Bastions, forty Pieces of Cannon mounted; the Walls of Stone, lin'd with a thick Rampart of Earth; well accommodated with a Sprig of fresh Water, always furnish'd with Arms and Ammunition, against Accidents: Distant from the Sea seven Leagues, it affords a safe Entrance, even to unskilful Pilots; uoder the Town side, Ships of any Burthen may Ride secure against any Storms, the Current of the river being broken by the interposition of a small Island, which lies a Mile distant from the Town.

"About ten Miles from New York is a Place call'd Hell-Gate, which being a narrow Passage, there runneth a violent Stream both upon Flood and Ebb; and in the middle lie some Rocky Islands, which the Current sets so violently upon, that it threatens present Shipwrack; and upon the Flood is a large Whirlwind, which continually sends forth a hideous roaring, enough to affright any Stranger from passing farther, and to wait for some Charon to conduct him through; yet to those that are well acquainted, little or no danger. It is a place of great Defence against any Enemy coming in that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, and necessitate them to come in at the West end of Long-Island by Sandy Hook, where Nutten Island forces them within the Command of the Fort at New York, which is one of the best Pieces of Defence in the North parts of America. It is built most of Brick and Stone, and cover'd with red and black Tyle, and the Land being high, it gives at a distance a pleasing prospect to the Spectators. The Inhabitants consist most of English and Dutch, and have a considerable Trade with Indians for Beaver, Otter, and Rackoon-Skins, with other Furs, as also for Bear, Deer and Elke-Skins; and are supply'd with Venison and Fowl in the Winter, and Fish in the Summer by the Indians, which they buy at an easie Rate; and having the Country round about them, they are continually furnish'd with all such Provisions as is needful for the Life of Man, not only by the English and Dutch within their own, but likewise by the adjacent Colonies."—Ogilby, America, 169-70.
This is an almost identical copy of Denton's description, published in 1679 (q.v.). Denton correctly uses the word "whirlpool," while Ogilby has used erroneously the word "whirlwind" in describing Hell Gate.

Wereld: of Beschrijving van America, Ogilby's America*, and Denton's

Gov. Lovelace issues the following order in behalf of Isaac Bed-low: "Whereas Mr Isaac Bedlow hath made very good Improvement upon a Certaine Little Island in y<sup>e</sup> Bay near this City commonly called Oyster Island for y<sup>e</sup> w<sup>ch</sup> he hath a Patent granted by Col<sup>l</sup> Richard Nicolls, & at his request I have given it a New name that is to say y<sup>e</sup> name of Love Island." Therefore he grants "that y<sup>e</sup> said Island now called Love Island shall be a Priviledged place Where no warrant of Attachm<sup>t</sup> or arrest shall be of force or be served unless it be by y<sup>e</sup> peace of Criminal Matt<sup>r</sup>s."—*N. Y. Col.

An inventory of the estate of Jacob Wolphertsea van Couwen-hoven, deceased, is delivered to the mayor's court by the curators thereof, together with a petition from the curators in which they requested "further and more special order for the sale of the surrendered real and personal property and how to proceed further for the advantage of the estate." The curators are given power "to proceed with the sale of the goods, real and personal, on condition that the fence of the lot of the Great House on the Heere Gracht . . . be drawn back and set on the common line of the above-named Gracht."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 252. This property on the Gracht was at the north-east corner of Broad and Stoege Sts., and ran back to the present South William St.—See Castello Plan, II: 304-5.

Whereas the governour has received several requests from the inhabitants of Westchester, urging the removal from their jurisdiction of Katherine Harrison, because of an "apprehension they haue of her grounded upon some troubles she hath layed und<sup>r</sup> at Wethersfeild upon suspition of Witchcraft," he now decides that the matter shall go over to the next general court of assizes, and that the Widow Harrison and her children shall be allowed to remain "without disturbance or molestation." Reasons for the accusations against her do not "so clearly appear unto me, Yett notwthstanding to giue as much satisfaction as may be to y<sup>e</sup> Comp<sup>ts</sup> wh<sup>o</sup> p<sup>r</sup>sent their feares to be of a publique Concerne, I haue not thought fitt absolutely to determine y<sup>e</sup> matt<sup>r</sup> at P<sup>r</sup>esent."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 392-93. See March 23, 1675.

"All these proceedings [regarding witchcraft] were taken at common law, or under the English Statute of James I. No law against witchcraft has been found on the statute-book of New York. At the same time, there is no room for doubt that the principal clergymen then in the colony were firm believers in witchcraft, and it may fairly be presumed that far the greater portion of the community shared in their faith." Cotton Mather says that the opinions of Dutch and French ministers in New York, "while the storm of delusion on the subject was raging in Massachusetts, contributed to destroy the authority of the 'spectral testimony,'" then too much in credit there." Several victims of persecution in Massachusetts found refuge in New York, a fact "which constitutes a part of the history of the Empire State of which she may well be proud."—*Hist.
Mag.* (2d ser.), VI: 215, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 274-76.

William Beekman purchases from Anna Hall, widow of Thomas Hall, a piece of land with a dwelling-house, brewery, brew-house, brewing implements, milk-house, horse-mill, and other buildings thereon, together with one-half an orchard, all at the east end of Smiths Valley and on the north side of the King's wagon-road.—
Book of Mortgages (1665-1675) in the Hall of Records, 83-85. This property was on both sides of the present Beekman St.—Innes, New Amsterdam and its People, 328.

The sheriff complains to the mayor's court that "divers persons" have suffered "great damage" because Jan Hendricksen (Steelman, alias) Coopal, and Thomas Wandel have up till "the present time failed to construct their wall on the waterside [East River, now Pearl St.], according to previous order." The court gives the two delinquents six weeks time in which to build up "their Walls" or suffer a fine.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 259. The order did not meet with compliance. Steelman died soon afterward (see Castello Plan, II: 322).
Complaint against Wandel was made again on May 16, 1761 (q.v.).
For similar case of Jacob Flodder, see May 19, 1665.

Upon complaint of the overseers of the public roads on both sides of the Fresh Water, the mayor's court orders "that all the carters of this City, who use the Roads over the Fresh Water, whether in drawing firewood from the public woods or otherwise, shall be bound to aid in repairing said roads, as well as the country people."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 259.

Pieter Schaafbaeck, the city jailer, is given 50 guilders advance in his salary per annum.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 260. See Oct. 24, 1671.

Harry Nuton (Newton), one of the sergeants of the mayor's court (see July 9, 1667), is accorded a raise in salary of five pounds per annum for bearing the mace.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 260, 348.

From nominations made on the 10th by the mayor's court, Gov.
Lovelace now appoints Capt. Thomas Delavay mayor for another year; Capt. Matthias Nicolls, John Laurence, Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, Johannes van Brugh, and Isaacq Bedlow, aldermen; and Allard Anthooy, sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 262-62.

The city has been "at excessive Charges towards the renewing & repairing of the Great Bridge" (see description of Pl. 25, I: 244), and the mayor's court adjudges that all those who use the bridge shall contribute towards its upkeep. A revenue tax is imposed, therefore, "upon all Horses, Mares or Guildens" that are "to be Shipt & Exported" from the city to Virginia, Maryland, or any other outward Plantation; and Philip Johas is appointed by the court as haven-master "to Collect & receive the said Imposition to the Use of the City."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 262-63.

Lourens vander Spiegel is chosen constable of the city by the mayor's court and takes the oath of fidelity.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 265.

John Fassacre petitions the mayor's court for "some support in his sickness," and the court commends him to the deacons of the Dutch church of the city "to allow the Petitif some support, and to enquire Concern<sup>g</sup> the deceaze and Condition of the Petitif, and the

- Oct. 18 Claes van Eilsant, Jr., is appointed by the mayor's court "in his father's place as undertaker and sexton" of the city, "together with auctioneer of sales."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 266. For his dismissal from a former office, see July 9, 1667.
- " Complainants to the mayor's court about infractions of the ordinances concerning the baking of bread in the city (see Aug. 9, 1666) cause the court to appoint Christoff Hoogland and Timotheus Gabry as "Censurers of all the Bread . . . Baked, And put to Sale by any Publick Baker" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 266.
- 22 An order, not preserved in the records, is issued regarding bridge-money for horses.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 59-58. The court of assizes of 1666 ordered that a person should be appointed for this purpose and to prevent abuses. On Sept. 20, 1671, Ralph Warner was appointed "to take Cognizance of all Horses or Mares that shall come to y<sup>e</sup> ferry or parts adjacent to be Transported out of this Governm<sup>t</sup>, And that you Record the Attestations from whence they come, together wth their Markes & Colours, and receive y<sup>e</sup> Salary allowed for y<sup>e</sup> same."—Ibid., I: 57, footnote, citing Gen. Entries, IV: 35.
- 23 "Hendrick Jansen Vandervin is accepted as Voorleser and Schoolmaster [at New Harlem] for three years for 400 florins yearly in Sewant, or in gratia at the price in Sewant." Sixty loads of wood are promised "the voorleser" by seven of the inhabitants.—Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), I: 159. The records contain a list of 16 inhabitants assessed to raise the above 400 fl.—Ibid., I: 178.
- Nov. Gov. Lovelace publishes an order that any persons who shall henceforth "steale or take away any Canoe or boate [see Feb. 13, 1672] . . . or shall Curre any Painter or Cordage belonging to any boat or Vessells in this harbour or elsewhere wth in y<sup>e</sup> Governm<sup>t</sup> . . . shall be liable to a Severe fyne Imprisonment wthout bayle or Mainprise or Corporall punishment according to y<sup>e</sup> Demerits of y<sup>e</sup> fact."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 397.
- 29 "Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, one of the "Wees masters" (orphan-masters—see Sept. 4, 1688), having left the province, Cornelis Steenwyck and Johannes van Brughe are now appointed by the city bench as orphan-masters for the ensuing year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 272.
- " The public carmen or carters having petitioned Gov. Lovelace that their number be fixed and limited, as was done in the case of the public porters, and the governor and council having referred the matter to the mayor's court, this court now grants the request upon condition that the carters be diligent in serving the public and give their assistance in filling up "the breaches in the high ways, in and about y<sup>e</sup> City;" also, "that they by turns weekly on every Saturday in the afternoon" shall "Kart the dirt from all the Paved Streets and Convey it to some Convenient place," appointed for that purpose, and that "the dirt be throwne & Loaden upon the Cart by the owners or tenants of the howses in the s<sup>t</sup> streets." The carters' fees for a load of goods transported within the city's gates is fixed at ten st. in seawant.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 272-73. See April 16, 1667, and Feb. 13, 1672.
- 30 Public officials of the city are not required to pay the burghers' excise on consumption of drink in their own households, as is shown by an order of the mayor's court, on behalf of the city's constable.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 274-75.
- Dec. "The House in Pearle-Street being forfeited in the last Dutch 1 Warre, is Ordered to be sold."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 63. This is undoubtedly the tobacco warehouse, managed by Augustine Herrman for Peter Gabry and Sons, of Amsterdam, which adjoined the "pack-huys" of the West India Co. Both houses were confiscated in 1664, at the time of the surrender of New Amsterdam. Later the tobacco warehouse was occupied by Capt. William Dyre, collector of the port.—Lanes, New. Am. and Its People, 52-55.
- 5 Mr. Sharp excuses himself for not conforming to the conditions of the sale to him at auction of Dominik's Hook (see Feb. 10) by confessing that he "was in Drinke, & without Reason & several
- Incumbrances upon the Estate." The governor's council orders Dec. that he pay back to the auctioneer all the "Pluck-Money" paid out at the sale, the charges then expended in the house, and 200 guilders 5 damage to the persons who exposed the place for sale, who may then dispose of it as they desire.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 64-65.

1671

The description of the funeral solemnities of William Lovelace, nephew of Gov. Lovelace, is of interest as presenting an early and unusual picture of the social customs in the colony during the early days of English administration. The original document was found among a number of miscellaneous papers known as the Ashmolean manuscripts, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, Vol. 846, folio 54, number XI. It is written on both sides of a quarto sheet of seventeenth century paper in the hand of the period, and appears to be a memorandum of the occurrence, probably written in New York and sent or taken to England later. It was printed in the Am. Hist. Review (1903-4) thus:

"The funeral Solemnities at the Intern<sup>t</sup> of Mr Wm Lovelace at New York in America 1671

"At the Interim<sup>t</sup> of the Corps 30. peices of Ordnance more fired."—Am. Hist. Review, IX: 522-24.
- For the description of N. Y. by Mootanus (cited in I: 143), see July 28, 1670.
- Jan. The mayor's court considers it necessary to appoint a public executioner in criminal cases, and chooses Benjamin Johnson, "who accepted to serve the Court therein" at 60 guilders in seawant per annum, in quarterly payments, each quarter in advance.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 279-80.
- 9 The governour's council decides against John de Decker, one of the council of New Netherlands, as regards his request for remuocration for ten negroes and salary due him from the West India Co. He is, however, granted 120 acres of land on Staten Island in consideration of his trouble in coming from Europe to settle his affairs.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 60, 65, 67; II: 447-49.
- 17 Evert Pietersen complains to the mayor's court that he cannot collect 350 fl., "due unto him from Stoffel Van Laer upon an assignment of the Late M<sup>r</sup> Mayor." The court orders Van Laer to pay him "within the space of eight dayes" (see Dec. 5). Prof. Kilpatrick believes that this "assignment" was a debt due the city from Van Laer and that it was made payable to Pietersen as part of a long promised compensation (see Feb. 16, 1666) for teaching services.—Kilpatrick, The Dutch Schools of New Netherland, 145.
- Feb. The mayor's court names the following officers for the town of Haerlem: Pieter Rodolfsen, constable; Daniel Terneur, Resolved Waldroo, David de Marest and Johannes Verelje, overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 282. See June 12, 1666.
- 24 It is resolved that henceforth the haven-master, instead of the sheriff, shall have authority "to Arrest or Attach any Person Goods, or Vessells upon the River, or in this Harbour."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 75-76.
- 28 The residents in the Smith's Valley request the mayor's court that "the Highway about the Water-gate" may be repaired. For location of the Smith's Valley and Water-gate, see Pl. 8, Vol. I. The court appoints two of the aldermen "to take a View and Inspection of the said highway, and to propose how the same best may be repaired, as also to take a View of the Corner Waal W<sup>ch</sup> the Towne is to make before the house of Long Mary, and to cause 800 much wood to be Cut and brought downe to the place wherewith the<sup>d</sup> Wall may be finished."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 285-86. O'Callaghan's note says: "This was the beginning of the construction of the present Coentseis Slip (see Pl. 30, Vol. I). Long Mary's house or tavern [being] on the N. side of Pearl Str. near the head of the Slip, where a wharf was now built." See, further, Sept. 19.
- " The overseers of highways and fences answer Stuyvesant's complaint (see July 12, 1670) and request the court "to appoint some persons to inspect the matter and to give their decision on the fence in question;" whereupon, the court names Pieter Stoutenburg, Jan Vigne, and Jacob Kip "to inspect the matter, to hear parties arguments and to decide thereon and hand the same in on the next Court day in case of non-agreement."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 285.
- Mar. Philip Johns is appointed haven-master to board vessels on their arrival and record where each ship comes and whither bound and the kind of lading; he must notify the master to make due entry of ships and goods and not allow a vessel to leave port without a certificate of clearing.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 513-14.
- 6-16 A minister for the Dutch church in New York is finally chosen, in the person of the Rev. William Nieuwenhuysen. Rev. Selvo, whose appointment was desired by the church (see Jan. 29, 1670), was not willing to return, and all the other candidates in Amsterdam were summooned to hear the governour's proposals as to salary "Expressed their opinions thereon, but none of them would listen to the proposal for such a service."—Eccles. Rec., I: 614-17. The new incumbent evidently gave satisfaction, as is indicated in a letter from New York in 1672: (Domine Nieuwenhuysen arrived last July.) "His person is very agreeable to us, and his gifts fully satisfy the Congregation. He labours daily and diligently in edifying our people, either by preaching God's Word, or by catechising the young."—Ibid., I: 624.
- 7 The windows of the city hall having been set on fire "about two a Clock in the Night," and Haas Dyckman having been imprisoned on suspicion of being an accessory in the incendiarism, the mayor's court now tries him, and finds the evidence inconclusive. The court holds, however, that circumstantial evidence points to his participation, and lays him under "great Suspition," and therefore orders him banished forever from the city and province within eight days, or to suffer "the penalty of death," if "found hereafter" in the province.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 287.
- " Two of the emancipated negroes, Domingo and Manuel Angola, are summooned before the mayor's court and "informed, that divers complaints were made" to the court, "that the free negroes [whose farm lot lay on the present Lafayette Street and Bowery, in the neighbourhood of the late Astor Library site] were from time to time entertaining sundry of the servants and negroes belonging to the Burghers and inhabitants" of the city, "to the great damage of their owners." They are charged by the court henceforth "not to entertain . . . any servants or helps, whether Christiaos or negroes on pain of forfeiting their freedom in case it were again found, that they have harboured any servants or helps of others longer than 24 hours," and "they were likewise ordered to communicate" this edict "to the other remaining free negroes."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 286.
- " The bakers of the city, summooned before the mayor's court, are asked "whether they thought it Conveoient that the Corae might be Traosported" from the city "to forraige parts as heretofore hath been practicable." They reply that if exportation were allowed it would be impossible to supply the city with bread during the following summer, and request an estoppel on exportation, "except it was made to flower or Bread by w<sup>ch</sup> Coopers and other Mechanics and other Laborers" could "in som[e] part gett their Livelihood." The court then thinks "fitt to Communicate" with Gov. Lovelace in the premises.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 287. On the 9th, the governour ordered that so "wheate in Graioce" be exported for a year.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 519-20.
- " Evert Pietersen and Hillegoet Joris, his wife, request the mayor's court to appoint "some persons to compose if possible the differences arising between" her "and her children by a former marriage relative to their father's property." The court appoints Cornelis van Ruyven and Johannes de Peyster to try to reconcile parties or report their proceedings and award back to the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 286.
- 9 Dominic's Bowery is conveyed to Col. Francis Lovelace, governour of New York (Liber Deeds, B: 181, New York), from whom the title passed to the Duke of York, and then to the crown. It became part of the land which was successively known as the Duke's Farm, King's Farm, and Queen's Farm.—Bogardus vs. Trinity, Sandford's Chan. Rep., IV: 725-26. See March 27, 1667, and Aug. 6, 1674.
- 28 On account of the weakness and decline of Rev. Samuel Drisius, the Rev. Ægidius Luyck has "several tymes" officiated in his place, "with good satisfaction" to the city fathers and the people. He is now thanked by the mayor's court, which requests him to continue his services "until further order." He accepts their offer, and the court then agrees "that from henceforth on Sabbath dayes y<sup>e</sup> Word of god" shall be taught in the forenoon by Drisius and in the afternoon by Luyck.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 292.
- " The city's porters (or public labourers) of corn, planks, etc. having petitioned the mayor's court "that no Corne, Salt or planks" may be carried, save by themselves (since "many of the Inhabitants" employ "other labourers"), the court gives them a restraining order, which, however, permits an owner "himself or by Servants or Negroes of his owne" to handle his corn, planks, or salt.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 292.
- Apr. With the appointment of new overseers of roads, another attempt is made to render passable the road between New York and Harlem (see Feb. 22, 1669). The magistrates of New Harlem and the overseers of highways beyond "Fresh Water" are ordered by the mayor's court to "lay out together the most suitable road and that then, on the first day of the next coming month of May, the said road shall be made fit for use by the inhabitants of the Village of Haerlem and the house holders both on this and the other side of the Fresh Water, each for his limits; and that on such penalty as shall be fixed by said Magistrates and Overseers."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 296.
- " The mayor's court orders that for the future no wine shall "be delivered by any Merch<sup>t</sup> out of his house or Celler, upon any Tappers or burgers bill, without a sworne porter be present."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 293.
- My 16 Several inhabitants of the city, who have been at expense in

 May have been daily damaged in their rights "by reason y<sup>e</sup> Walls w<sup>ch</sup> Gelyne Verplanck & Thomas Wandel" were to make, were "not made up" (see Sept. 27, 1670). The mayor's court now orders these persons to make up their wall "with all expedition" or suffer a fine for further neglect.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 301. See July 16.

" Capt. Marten Cregier asks the mayor's court to devise a plan for choosing a lieutenant for his militia company, in place of Govort Lockermans, who has died; and that an order be promulgated for fining members of the militia who failed to appear at the place of rendezvous "on proper summons or beat of the drum." The court decides that the office of lieutenant shall be filled by the remaining officers of the burgher corps sending in a double nomination to the mayor, who will "effect the election from said nomination by the Governor." Unwilling or negligent members of the burgher corps are to "be mulcted in a fine of fifty guilders zewant to be applied" as the officers deem proper.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 299-300.

" Rev. Samuel Drisius, in a petition on his own behalf, as well as for the widow of Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, deceased, has informed the mayor's court that divers "persons" are yet "in arrears to the previous allowance of the Preachers" of the city, notwithstanding the court's order of Feb. 11, 1669, requiring those in arrears to pay up within two weeks' time, "on pain of execution." The court now orders "the Beadle of the Church, Willem Verscheuren," to "speak to all persons who by the list delivered in" are yet in arrears, and to "note down the answer of each in particular in the margin of the list and deliver it in to Court on the Next Court day."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 300.

18 William Beckman is granted a commission as lieutenant to succeed Goovort Lockermans, deceased.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 90.

June Gov. Lovelace appoints John Laurence, Capt. Lovelace, and 5 John Pell, commissioners to inquire and report regarding the differences among "y<sup>e</sup> Persons of the Augustane or Lutheran Profession."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 585. See June 29.

7 The appearance of "great Quantities of unmarked horses and Cattle . . . found in the Common Woodlands" on Manhattan Island, in violation of the express orders of the mayor's court (for such an order emanating from the governour's council (see Feb. 22, 1669), causes the court to declare that the official branders shall give notice that all horses and cattle must be branded within six weeks' time with the marks of either the city of New York or the town of Haerlem, otherwise to be deprived of grazing "in the Comon Woods" of the island; that if after that time they remain unmarked and unredeemed by owners, they shall be sold at public auction after due notice three times by outcry.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 351-52. See Dec. 5.

19 A bill for the construction of a stone well "in the State-House-Yard" is this day ordered to be paid.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 308. See July 11. For an earlier well, within the fort, see Feb. 14, 1667.

21 At a meeting of the council for plantations, Col. Cartwright, one of the Commissioners from New England, reports "as to their numbers that there were Men able to bear Arms" that there are 1,500 men in "new Yorke Long Island and New Jersey."—Jour. Coun. for Plantations, I: 45-46.

29 Gov. Lovelace takes action regarding certain matters in connection with the Lutheran Church: 1. In response to a petition from Christiaen Peters, who had bonded himself to Asser Levy (mortgagee of Cornelis Jansen Pluvier) for a "certaine Sume of money due for a House w<sup>ch</sup> was bought for y<sup>e</sup> use & Benefit of y<sup>e</sup> Congregation in Gef<sup>ll</sup>" (see Castello Plan, II: 224-25), he orders that all "persons of that profession who have consented or subscribed to y<sup>e</sup> payment for the Church-House, that they pay their proportions according to Agree<sup>mt</sup>, and likewise that they pay or cause to be paid unto y<sup>e</sup> said Magister their Pasto<sup>r</sup> their proportions of his Salary, untill y<sup>e</sup> time of their late publique Disagre<sup>mt</sup>." See Oct. 17, 1673, for order to demolish church.

2. The hearing of charges against Jacobus Fabricius (see Feb. 20, 1669) "by divers of his congregation" is deferred until July 6.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 585-87; Mortgages, 1654-60 (trans. by O'Callaghan), 129. Levy brought suit against Pieters in the mayor's court, and that court, on Dec. 20, ordered that satisfaction be made to Levy, otherwise a judgment would be entered and Levy should then "have his remedie against those of the Lutheran Church."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 351.

The building referred to in these proceedings was the house of Cornelis Jansen Pluvier (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929).—June Liber Deeds, A: 113 (New York). With other structures standing too close to the city fortifications, the Lutheran Church was ordered demolished by Gov. Colvoco on Oct. 7/17, 1673 (q. v.). For the new site of the Lutheran Church, see May 22, 1674. See also 1684.

"y<sup>e</sup> Lane Called the Maegdepacie" (Maiden Lane) is mentioned in a conveyance recorded in Orig. Book of N. Y. Deeds, temporarily deposited by the city in N. Y. Hist. Soc., and pub. in Collec<sup>t</sup>ions (1913), 9.

By a bill of sale of this date (recited in Liber Deeds, I: 126, Albany), John Smedes becomes possessed of a farm or bowery heretofore belonging to "Cornelys van Tynhoven" deceased, whose heirs and representatives, Peter Stontenburgh, Lucas van Tienhoven, and John Vigne, transport the same to him. For ground-

Because some members of the Lutheran congregation desire not only to have "nothing more to doe wth their said Pasto<sup>r</sup>, nor that hee may more molest them;" but also that some person may be appointed to supervise their accounts and collect the subscription money (see June 29), Gov. Lovelace appoints John Laurence to receive all subscriptions, and to make an inventory of "all such Vtenills as doe belong to y<sup>e</sup> Church."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 588. This case had been brought up on June 29.—Ibid., I: 94-95.

Gov. Lovelace having recommended by letter that the mayor's court, together with some of the officers of the church, should "take into Consideration how y<sup>e</sup> Salary for y<sup>e</sup> Expected Minist<sup>r</sup> from Europe [see March 16] may be Raised," the court now appoints "a private Court to be held on fryday Next being y<sup>e</sup> 14th of this Instant in y<sup>e</sup> afternoon at — a Cloq<sup>ue</sup>," and requests that the "Late Aldermen together wth y<sup>e</sup> present and y<sup>e</sup> Late Church Officers" should "give their attendance . . . to Consult wth them Concerning y<sup>e</sup> premises."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 308-9. "In Obedience, To his Honor y<sup>e</sup> Governo<sup>r</sup> Letter and in pursuance of this Courts Order thereupon," this "private Court" met on the 14th. After the presentation of various proposals and debate thereon, "It was Mutually Condensed unto for to Returne for advise," "That it wou<sup>ld</sup> occasion a Great discontent amongst the people, to be both taxed & to pay Excyses;" and, therefore, it was proposed, "that y<sup>e</sup> Grand Excyse should be something Raised, & that an imposition should be Laid upon Rom going for Albany & Esopus and that y<sup>e</sup> selling of Licq<sup>ue</sup> to the Indians should be p<sup>er</sup>mitted" as it was "throughout all the governm<sup>t</sup> and some Excyse or Imposition should be Raised thereupon, or Otherwise that all the Excyses should be totally abolished; and a Gennal tax for all towne Charges be made."—Ibid., VI: 310-11.

Benjamin Johnson, the city's executioner of criminals, presents to the mayor's court his account of disbursements for making a stone well in the yard of the city hall (see June 19) amounting to fl. 194: 10 in seawant. The court approves the account and directs its payment by the secretary.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 308.

The court puts Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt in charge of "the Care and Management in Cansing the Warff or Wall on the Waterside before Gelyne Verplanck whose as farr the Townes part doth reach" to "be finished and Made up; And M<sup>r</sup> Johannes van Brugh to have the Managem<sup>t</sup> in Repairing of the Half Moon before the State house."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 315. This "Half Moon" (battery) would be, on modern plans, on the south side of Pearl St., east of Coenties Alley.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Gov. Lovelace grants the petition of the Lutheran minister (see June 29), Jacobus Fabricius, "to give his Congregation a Valedictory Sermon, and to Install the new-Come Minist<sup>r</sup> [Barnardus Arentius], according to y<sup>e</sup> Custome used by those of their Religion."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 588-89.

Gov. Lovelace orders "all Persons of this City [New York] who Profess y<sup>e</sup> Art of Chyrurgery & Physick or any others who have Skill & Judgm<sup>t</sup> therein" to hold a consultation in Pearl St., over the illness of the widow of "William y<sup>e</sup> Old ferry-Man of Gommipau" (now Jersey City), who was troubled with "a sore Legg," for which she had been a long while under treatment.—General Entries, IV: 46 (N. Y. State Library, manuscript volume destroyed in capitol fire in March, 1911).

The decision of the mayor's court to transfer the village court of Fordham to Haerlem is recorded thus: "All small Differences, w<sup>ch</sup> for the future shall happen to fall out at fordham . . . shall be Decided at Haerlem by y<sup>e</sup> Magistrates of fordham Wth y<sup>e</sup> 1671 Assistance of two of ye Magistrates of Haerlem." A case may be Sept. 8 tried at Fordham only when "those of firdhom will be at ye Charge to Satisfy ye Magistrates of Haerlem for Comming up to their Towne of Fordham." This change was made because of a petition from the inhabitants of Fordham against John Archer who ruled and governed over them "by Rigur and force," or against any one else who "should disturb ye peace" of the settlement. On this very day, Archer had been before the city court charged with mowing and removing grass from another man's claim; pulling down fences whereby damage resulted to the enclosed corag; and throwing the furniture out of doors whereby the plaintiff suffered much "loss and damage." Archer is ordered to "behave himself for ye future Civilly and quietly agst ye Inhabitants of ye s<sup>d</sup> towne."— Rec. N. Am., VI: 324-26. See Feb. 13, 1672.

19 " Gov. Lovelace, in a letter, recommends to the mayor's court, "that ye former Ord<sup>r</sup> Concerning ye paving of Streets might be put in due Execution against those that are defective therein and that some Order might be made that ye warfes on ye Waterside might be finished and ye mote or here-Craight might be made up in such a forme" as Johannes de Peyster had already begun before his house. The court, therefore, appoints Allard Anthony, the sheriff, Nicolaes de Meyer, and Frederick Philipse (Flipse) to take a View of ye s<sup>d</sup> streets, and to Cause those that are Defective therein to finish ye same and further to take a view of ye s<sup>d</sup> Warfes and here Craight, according to ye ten<sup>n</sup> of his honn<sup>r</sup> Letter and to give their advice thereupon att ye Next Court day."— Rec. N. Am., VI: 329-30. See Jan. 23, 1672.

" The mayor's court orders two of the aldermen to see to it that "the Corners of the Streetes and other defective places, w<sup>ch</sup> must be made or repaired at the Towne's Charge, . . . be finished and Completed."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 329.

" The mayor's court orders "that no Tapper or Inkeeper" shall "sell any Drink to Saylor or Mariners except the Mast<sup>r</sup> or Merch<sup>t</sup>" has "past their word for the paiement thereof."—*Rec.
 N. Am.*, VI: 326. This order has become necessary, apparently, because of a statute of the Duke of York's laws preventing tappers or inkeepers from recovering for debt from "Saylor in Pay." The purpose of the original statute was "To prevent many miscarriages which are frequently comitted by Saylor, by their immoderate Drinking and other vaice expences in Ordinarys, whereby the Master and Owners of the vessels to which they belong may be prejudised, by Arresting and detaining such Saylor for Debts when their Shipp are ready to sett Sayle."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 62.

" The mayor's court allows the public carters eight s<sup>p</sup>. per load "for the Worke done for the Towne in filling up the Warfe before Long Marie's."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 329. See Feb. 28, and Sept. 17, 1672.

26 The governour grants the request of the Dutch Church that they be empowered to levy a tax "amongst ye Inhabitants, and those that shall frequent ye Church . . . for ye Maintenance of their Minister or Minist<sup>r</sup>s, ye Clarke, or other Offic<sup>r</sup>s of ye Church, & ye poore, As also for ye reparacion of ye Church as Occasion shall require." The present elders and deacons are given power to levy such a tax.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 617-18. See March 21, 1672.
 Prof. Kilpatrick sees in this event a transition "from city support of the school during the Dutch régime to church support of the English period." He bases his conclusion on the understanding that "ye Clarke" must be Evert Pietersen (see Feb. 16, 1669), "the voorlezer."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 146. It may be added that the governour's action, cited above, had been preceded by action of the city bench on at least two different occasions (see April 25, 1665, and Feb. 16, 1669), in submitting to him the question of the schoolmaster's compensation. For a comparison of the interest in education on the part of Dutch and English rulers, see Griffis, The Story of New Netherland, chap. XVIII.

Oct. 7 One of the orders derived from the general court of assizes at its present session, and that of a year ago (Oct. 5, 1670), requires that any hogs brought dead to this place shall be well salted and packed in casks or smoked or dried. Such meats have often arrived frozen, in which case they were not "Capable of preserving by Salt," and it "being not discernable how longe they have beene killed . . .
 tends much to ye disreputacion of that commodity when sent abroad, & of ye Merchants who Expose it into warmer Clymates."— Col. Laws N. Y., I: 84-85. Such an order explains the need of a cure-master (see March 11, 1673).

preceding day, Gov. Lovelace names the following city bench: Oct.
 Capt. Matthias Nicolls, who succeeds Capt. Delavall as mayor; 13 John Laurence, Thunias Lovelace, Cornelis van Ruyven, Johannes van Brugh, and Isaack Bedloo, aldermen, and Allard Anthony, sheriff, to serve for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 332-34. Lovelace and Van Ruyven are the new members (see Oct. 13, 1670). For Nicoll's terms as mayor, see M. C. C., VIII: 149; for brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 383; Wilson, *Mem. Hist.
 N. Y.*, II: 50.

The ship "Expectation," commanded by Isaac Melyn, 21 is boarded by George Spurre, Humphrey Davenport, and accomplishes, under pretence of seizing the ship for the king. As this was a breach of the peace and in direct disobedience to the governour's order, a commission was appointed, on Oct. 25, to "heare and Determine" the matter.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 102-3. See Jan.
 18, 1672.

Pieter Schaeffhanck, keeper of the city jail, is advanced in 24 salary by the mayor's court from 150 to 200 guilders per annum, beginning with Oct. 13, and the secretary is instructed to advance him enough money for "a new Coat."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 340-41.
 For previous increase, see Oct. 10, 1670.

"John Fulsnahe" (Fossacre) asks the mayor's court again for "some support & Relief in his Sicknesse," and the court recommends him again "to the Deacons of this City to inquire and examin into the truth of s<sup>d</sup> petition and to make a Returne thereof" to the court, meanwhile allowing him "some support in his Sick-nesse."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 340. See Dec. 5.

Proclamation is made by Gov. Lovelace requiring "all Persons Nov.
 that have for ye space of six Months been Inhabitants, either House 9 Keep<sup>r</sup>s or Lodgers in this City [New York] or any part of his R.
 Highness Dominions, who have Intent to Transport themselves in any Ship or Vessel out of this Governm<sup>t</sup>" to register their names at the office of the secretary and obtain a passport. This is done because some inhabitants want to board ship for the Carolinas.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 658-59.

Commissioners are appointed to "view & state all Acco<sup>t</sup>s either Dec.
 of the West India Company or the Towne, as to their Debit & 5 Credit, & make Report thereof how they shall finde the same to the Governour." This is necessary so that the governour may act with justice in the case of Cnenraet ten Eyck and Boel Vloeffossen, trustees for an orphan's estate, part of which has been lent to the burgomasters for the use of the town. On account of the change of government, these funds have become unavailable, and the trustees are compelled to pay from their own pockets apprentice fees for the orphan, "w<sup>ch</sup> proves a great p<sup>r</sup>judice & Detriment unto them."—
Ex. Coun. Min., I: 111-13.

The governour's council orders that all persons bring in their claims to unfenced or deserted lots or ground before the first or second of March, that orders may be issued regarding fencing, improvements, or buildings.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 116; II: 632-33. A proclamation to this effect was issued by the governour on Jan. 25, 1672.—Ibid., II: 632-33.

The governour's council decides to organize a third militia company in New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 15. The court of mayor and aldermen, at the request of the governour, nominated officers for this new company on Jan. 23, 1672 (q. v.). For the formation of the other two companies, see Aug. 17, 1668.

Evert Pietersen complains to the mayor's court that Stoffel van Laer has not yet complied with the court order of Jan. 17 (q. v.).
 Failure on the part of the sheriff to secure satisfaction from Van Laer will result, the court declares, in an execution being "Issued out agst the Effects of the Sheriff himself."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 347.
 No additional record appears. In a list of "the best and most affluent inhabitants of this city," published in 1674 (*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, II: 699-700), Pietersen's name, assessed at 2,000 guilders, is found. It seems probable, therefore, that he was duly compensated either by city or church (see Sept. 26). Prof. Kilpatrick thinks he continued as schoolmaster until 1686, when Abraham de Laney was appointed to act in his place as "clerk, chorister, and visitor of the sick."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 147.

The governour's council grants but one year's pay to Rev. 11 Samuel Driusius, in response to his request for the arrears due him covering a period of two years. The deduction is because of his disability during at least half of that time. The council, however, recommends the deacons and elders to make him such further compensation as they may judge meet.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 110-11.

1671 The Governor's council approves the proposal of the French Dec. minister, Rev. Jacques Roulland, who is going to Europe and plans 5 to bring back with him some "families of French Protestants."
 The council decides to give him all encouragement.—Ex. Coun. Min., I, 116; II, 61.

" It is ordered by the mayor's court that 12 st. in heavers be paid per ton on all logwood or "Brazilletto" shipped from this city to Europe.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 348.

" John Fossacre, who lived on Long Island, in Westchester, and at
 " Onckeway" (Fairfield, Conn.), for about 18 years, and has come to New York City "since the Luterish dominie preached here," and is "a Member of their Church," being indigent; and the deacons of the Dutch church of the city having reported to the mayor's court that, being a Lutheran, Fossacre ought to be maintained by that denomination, the court orders the deacons of the Lutherans to appear on the next court day.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 348. See Dec. 21.

" The mayor's court, upon complaint of several inhabitants that various persons are committing the abuse of "casting filth before their houses," orders John Sharp to make "Knowne to the Sheriff, the Names of the persons wch Carried the dirt from his house or that otherwise the Court shall Looke upon the s<sup>d</sup> Sharp himselfe, to be guilty of y<sup>e</sup> same."—Rec. N. Am., VI, 349.

" The mayor's court orders "that all Bakers" of the city, who make flour "to be exported out of the Governmt'" (see March 7) shall "brand their Markes upon all the Caskes" which they deliver to the merchants.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 347.

" Jan Jansen and Abram Pietersen, coopers, are appointed by the mayor's court as "Sworne Censurers and Packers of Beefe and Porke" in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 348. See Jan. 28, 1668.

" Arian Cornelissen and Jan Langestraet, the branders of horses and cattle on Manhattan Island, complain to the mayor's court that, in violation of the court's order of June 7 (q. v.), "several unmarked horses & Cattle" are "Kept in y<sup>e</sup> Common Woods of this Island," some of which have been "brought up, and Cryed Out by y<sup>e</sup> Common Cryer," but no owners appeared to claim them.
 The court maintains that if, after three proclamations made by the common crier of the city, no owner appears, the branders are authorized to sell the horses or cattle at public auction, holding the proceeds subject to the court's directions.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 349.

20 On the 20th, the court ordered the sale of "the Stray horses" to be held on the afternoon of the succeeding Saturday.—Ibid., VI, 351.
 " The mayor's court orders the marshal, Henry Newton (Nuton),
 "to give Warning to the Neighbourns betwene the State howse and the Graft, to cause their proportions of the Waal before their houses to be finished & fld up."—Rec. N. Am., VI, 351.

21 The deacons of the Dutch Church complain to the court that they have been "Charged with some of the poore of the Lutheran profession [see Oct. 18, 1670, and Oct. 24 and Dec. 5, 1671]; notwithstanding a Collection" was "made for the poore in the s<sup>d</sup> Lutheran Church;" also that the deacons of the Lutheran Church did not "according to Custome in a Publick Meeting deliver up their acc<sup>s</sup>;" showing "how they have disposed of the monney soo Collected." The court summons the deacons of the Lutherans and hears their answer to the complaint. The court then orders, "that each Church should for the future Maintaine their owne Poore; and that the Deacons of the s<sup>d</sup> Lutheran Church should yearly deliver up their Acc<sup>s</sup> in a publick Meeting in the same Manner as in the reformed Christian Church of this City until this day hath bene practicable" (practised). The court also allows the Lutherans release from any further assistance to "J<sup>no</sup> fossicker [see Dec. 5], til further order."—Rec. N. Am., VI, 352-53.

28 At a court-martial held at Fort James, Melchior Claes, a soldier accused of theft, is sentenced to "run the ganleope and to be kicked by the marshal out of the fort."—Cal. Hist. MSS. Eng., 7.

— In a book published this year in London, New York is described as follows: "Here is one very considerable Town, first built by the Dutch and called New-Amsterdam, which name is now changed to New-York: It is well seated both for Trade, Security, and Pleasure, in a small Isle called Mahatan, regarding the Sea, made so by Hudsons-River, which severeth it from Long-Island, which said River is very commodious for Shipping, and is about two Leagues broad. The Town is large, containing about five hundred well-built Houses; and for Civil Government, it hath a Mayor, Alderman, a Sheriff, and Justices of the Peace for their Magistrates.

For the further security of this Town, here is raised a Fort called James-Fort, which is very strong, and well Defended and Maintained with Men, and Ammunition. The town is Inhabited by the English, and Dutch, and hath a considerable Trade with the Indians, for the skins of Elks, Deer, Bears, &c. Also for those of Beaver, Otter, and other Furrs; and both likewise enjoy a good Trade with the English."

The work contains three maps: "Map of the Island of Jamaica," "General Map of Carolina," and "A draft of the sea-coast and rivers of Virginia, Maryland, and New-England." The last named map shows Long-Island and Manhattan Island; the mainland is marked
 "New York."—Blome, Description of the Island of Jamaica . . .
 (1672), 167-73; see also his Present State of His Majesties Isles . . . (1687).

William Edmundson writes in his Journal of a meeting of Friends held in New York, probably the first Friends meeting held under a roof in the city: "When I was clear there [Maryland], I took Passage by Sea, and about Ten Days after, landed safe at New-York, where no Friends lived. John Evans of Jamaica, being in my Company at that time, we lodged at a Dutch Womens House, who kept an Inn, and I was moved of the Lord to get a Meeting in that Town; for there had not been one there before; so I spoke to the Woman of the House to let us have a Meeting, who was very willing, and let us have a large Dining-Room; also furnish<sup>t</sup> it with Seats. We gave notice thereof, and had a brave large Meeting, some of the Chief Officers, Magistrates, and leading Men of the Town were at it, very attentive they were, the Lord's Power being over them all, several of them appear<sup>d</sup> very loving after the Meeting, the Woman of the House and her Daughter being Widows, both wept, when We went away."—Edmundson, A Journal, etc., (London, 1713), 63-64. For regular meetings of Friends, see Oct. 12, 1681.

Martin Hoffman (or Hoofman), having been chosen by the Lutherans of New York City to go to the Lutherans on the Delaware for the purpose of soliciting contributions there for the erection of "a House for their Church to meet in," in New York City, is granted passports and authority to do so by Lovelace. In this order Lovelace refers to the request he had received from "y<sup>e</sup> Minist<sup>r</sup> & Offic<sup>r</sup>:" of the Lutheran congregation for his "Lycence to build & Erect a House for their Church to meet in."—*Ex.
 Coun. Min.*, II, 589-90; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII, 494. The original order, signed and sealed by Lovelace at Fort James, is now preserved among the Lovelace documents in the custody of St.
 Matthews Lutheran Church. Beginning "To all whom this may concern," it recites: "Whereas ye Ministers and Officers of ye Church of ye Augustine Confession or Lutheran Congregation in ye city under ye protection of his Royal Highness ye Duke of York have requested my license to build and erect a house for their Church to meet in, towards ye which they to All or ye most of their profession will in some measure contribute . . ."—Lovelace gives notice that Hoofman has his permission to leave New York by the sloop of Capt. Martin Creiger, bound for South River, Delaware, for the purpose above stated, provided "it doth no way tend to make Division or Disturbance amongst ye people. . . ." See Oct. 7/17, 1671.

Gov. Lovelace notifies the collector of customs to give the ship
 "Expectation" (see Oct. 21, 1671) her dispatch as she has been declared a free ship by a special court of oyer and terminer.—*Ex.
 Coun. Min.*, II, 612.

23 The sheriff is ordered by the mayor's court to "make a strict equaire after all Strange persons" who have come to "live within" the city "Contrary to Order," and that they be summoned before the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI, 356. See Sept. 11 and Dec. 12.
 This is, perhaps, the earliest suggestion leading to the later ordinance concerning "Strangers" (see March 15, 1784).

The sheriff is instructed by the mayor's court to search out such persons as tap without a license, and to cause them to be fined.— Rec. N. Am., VI, 356. One of the regulations regarding innkeepers and "ordinaries" contained in the Duke's Laws required that each "Common Victucler" or "publique Seller of wine Beare, Ale or strong waters by retail" should have a certificate of good behaviour from the constable and at least two overseers of his parish and a license first obtained from two justices of the peace in the sessions.
 —Col. Laws N. Y., I, 39.

The mayor's court orders the sheriff to give notice to all persons in default "of Making or paving their proportions of the Streetes [see Sept. 19, 1671], that they Cause their said Streets with all 1672 possible Expedition to be finished."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 356. See 23 June 11, for further orders.

The court of mayor and aldermen, at the request of the governour, nominates officers for a third company of militia (see Dec. 5, 1671).—Rec. N. Am., VI: 357. See Feb. 26.

Feb. Peter Stuyvesant, former director-general of New Netherlands, dies and is buried in a vault under the chapel on his estate.—Spooner, Hist. Fam. of Am., III: 137; Van Rensselaer, Hist. of City of N. Y., II: 94-95. The vault is now (1920) in St. Mark's Church, which was erected on the site of the chapel.—Mem. of St. Mark's Ch. in the Bowery, 179. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933; 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 140-42.

13 The mayor's court takes "into Consideration the Memorandum sent to this court" by Gov. Lovelace, and orders:

1. That Jan Jansen van Brestede and Pieter Abramsen be "sworne packers and viewers of all meat" within the city;

2. That "the former Order against the Stealing of Boats and Canoes [see Nov. 5, 1670] . . . be renewed with greater penalties [see Oct. 2-7] to those that are Culpable, and reward to the informers;"

3. That the sheriff be "required to Cause the former orders Concerning the paving of the Streets [see Jan. 23] to be put in Execution."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 355-56. See March 5.

" Gov. Lovelace recommends to the mayor's court "to Cause a Civill agreeem't to be made wth the Carmen " of the city for carting stone or other materials " towards the Repairing of the fort " (Fort James). The court, therefore, appoints Capt. John Manning and Sheriff Allard Anthony " to agree wth the s<sup>d</sup> Karmen for as Civill prices as possible."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 360.

" The public carters of the city, by a city court order, of Nov. 29, 1670 (q. v.), had been limited in number and given a monopoly, on condition of performing certain public services in return. Several of these conditions had been violated, and complaints having reached the ears of the court, this body now again confirms them by name and prescribes new articles for their government. They are required to "fill up the breaches in Highways in an[d] about" the city, as well as to perform such "other public works," gratis, as the magistrates command them to do; to cart the dirt from all the paved streets in the city on every Saturday afternoon, conveying it to convenient places assigned for that purpose; but with the understanding that the owners or tenants of houses will deposit their own dirt in the carts, etc. These articles were recorded in both English and Dutch.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 360-61. Charles Floyd was chosen as the overseer of the carters.—Ibid. VI: 363.

" Gov. Lovelace "at divers times" (Feb. 22, 23, 1669; April 18, 1671) has recommended to the mayor's court, and that court has in turn "ordered the Overseers as well of Harlem as the suburbs hereabout, to construct the road" between New York City and Harlem; yet that road is "still found unfinished, for which reason many complaints" have arisen. People who have of late wished "to travel over that road on horseback" have "been in danger of losing their lives by the neglectful keeping of the said road." These things have moved Lovelace to "earnestly recommend . . . again the construction of the aforesaid road," with expedition. The city bench now appoints Cornelis van Ruyven and Isaacq Bedloo' aldermen, to be associated with the overseers of roads, and "to impose such fines" on delinquents as they deem necessary, and the overseers of the immediate suburbs of the city are made supervisors over that part of the road which the town of Harlem was to maintain, while the overseers of Harlem are to be supervisors over the part of the great highway which the suburbs of the city must keep in repair.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 361-62.

" Disorders in the town of Fordham have led to complaints to the mayor's court. For that town ("in y<sup>e</sup> Corporation" of New York City, but too far off from any constable or overseers), Mayor Matthias Nicolls appoints Johannes Verweelen constable and clerk; and Jan Pieterse Buys and John Heddy overseers, during his own mayoralty.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 362. See Sept. 8, 1671.

14-24 William III is chosen captain and admiral-general of The Netherlands. On July 3, he was declared stadtholder.

25 Dirck Siecken receives from Governour Lovelace a lease of a tract of land in New York outside the land gate, called the Old Company's Bowery and Dominic's Bowery, at a yearly rental of 600 guilders, wampum.—Land Papers, I: 44 (Albany). The witnesses are Christoffel Hoogland and Pieter Jacobs Marius. The document is signed by N. Bayard, Secy.

Gov. Lovelace recommends that the soldiers of the town be divided into three equal groups as regards quality and numbers; after which, Capt. Martin Cregier is to draw lots for his company, then Capt. Johannes van Brugh, and lastly Capt. Isaac Bedloo. This method is selected for forming the new company of foot soldiers (see Jan. 23).—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 634.

Because it has been charged "that some of the Officers" of the city government exact larger fees than the law allows, the mayor's court decrees that henceforth no fees shall "be leyed by execution, except the acct<sup>s</sup> of the fees" be "stated or siged" by the mayor or his deputy.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 363-64.

Continuing its action of Feb. 13 (q. v.), on the recommendation of Gov. Lovelace, the mayor's court agrees that retailers of liquors and other drink shall in future take out their licenses annually, on March 25; that orders concerning the use of English weights and measures, being derived from the court of assizes, would more properly be promulgated by renewal by Gov. Lovelace, since their application is for the whole province; that the mayor has undertaken to draft an order in regard to slaughtering; and that the mayor's court shall meet at the state house or city hall on every Monday and Friday afternoon at about four o'clock, "to make a draught for a Charter" for the use of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 364.

By order of the mayor's court, of July 2, 1667 (q. v.), provision has been made for the upkeep and repair "of the Great Bridge" of the city (see Plate Description, I: 244), from an incoming ship tax and an impost on exports. The court now appoints Ephraim Herrman, a son of Augustine Herrman, who is the city clerk, to be also the collector of the revenues, for which he is to be accountable to the city treasurer. Herrman is allowed ten per cent. of the "Bridge Monney" as his fee.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 364-65.

Rev. Egidius Luyck (see March 28, 1671) is allowed by the mayor's court a gratuity of 400 guilders seawant, "for Preaching before Dom<sup>s</sup> Newenhuysen's Arrival."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 365. Rev. Wilhelmus Newenhuysen was minister of the Reformed Church in New York from 1671 to 1681.—Corwin, Manual, 837.

A letter of this date from Charles II is addressed to the Colony of "Massachusetts in New England To be Communicated to the Rest of our Collonys there." In this letter the king says: "Haveiog taken into our Consideration the Ill that have times heretofore befallen the Shippis of our good Subjects in their returns from our Plantatious in the West Indies chiefly through their coming from the Said Plantatious Scattering, and at uncertaine times whereby they have come Vpon the Coasts of England, or Ireland, at Seasons when they have found none of our Shippis of Warr there, whereas if there were certaine Prefixed, and Observed for their returne, care might be taken to Secure the Coast at the Season of their arrival by Some Shippis Extraordinary to be employed for this Purpose, Wee have therefore thought fitt out of the Princely Care of the good of our People to appoint certain Seasons in the year, at which only Shippis be permitted to Returoe from Boston and other Ports, to England, or Ireland, Vnless Such Shall be employed for our Emediat Service, Either as men of Warr or for carryinge Packdits or the licke Extraordinary Occasions, which Seasons Wee have thought fitt to be the 24th of March, the 24th of June and 24th of September, and Our Will and Pleasure is that you take Care that all Such as Shall be Redy to Sayle at any of the said times, doe enter Bond before you to use their Vtmost Endeavours to keepe Company, and defend each other duringe their Voyage home-wards, and for the better doinge thereof you are to appoint one of the Comanders of the Said Shippis to be Admirall of the flecte, whome the others are to Observe and follow, that Soe in case they be attempted in their Voyage they may be in the better Condition to defend themselves, And if any Shall be disobedient to these our Commands, You are to Compell them to the Observance thereof, and punish them in such manner as may deter others by their Example, you are further to direct them when they shall be near the Coast of England, if they Shall not have Mett with Some of our Shippis of Warr in the Soundings, by which they Shall have vnderstood the Estate of affaires with our Neighbours, and be from thence encouraged to proceed to their Respective Ports, that they indevour to touch at the first Port of England, there to Receive further information for their guidance." Each governour is also warned to make timely provisions for the safety and defence of his respective ports, and for the protection of the shipping that may be within his harbours.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 694-96. See May 24.

Lovelace grants a patent to Allard Anthony, for the land "near 13

- 1672 the Bowry heretofore called the Burgomaster's Bowry," and called Mar. 13 "by the Indian name of Sappohanagan, otherwise Northwyck or noiwths" (the later Greenwich).—In Warren Papers (N. Y. Hist. Soc.). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.
- 17-27 England declares war on Holland.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 185; Ex. Coun. Min., II: 737-38.
- 21 A petition of the church-wardens of the Dutch Church within the fort is read in the mayor's court, in which they represent the necessity of having the roof of the church in the fort renewed, and seek the aid of the court "for this work by furnishing as much money from the City's revenue" as possible and also by asking Gov. Lovelace for a contribution "from the public fund of the Province." The court, having considered the matter, "with the previous knowledge" of the governor, allows, "from the City chest," 500 guilders seawant.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 367-68. In reply to Lewin's report on the government of New York, Andros says: "The taking the Tyles off the great house and shingling it, was in imitatioe of what was done to the Church by the Inhabitants in my Predecessor's time to prevent Leakage by reason the Tyles were usually broken when the Gunns were fired."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 311. A glance at this church, as it appears in the Visscher View of 1651-5 (Pl. 8-a, Vol. I), and the Restitutio View of 1673 (Pl. 8-b, Vol. I), will show that the roof had been very considerably altered between those years. Furthermore, Montanus, writing probably in 1679, refers to the church as rising "with a double roof between which a square tower looms aloft." Therefore, it seems very safe to conclude that the change from a single to a double peaked roof, as well as the shingling, followed this appropriation by the city.—See description of Pl. 8-b, I: 153.
- Apr. 24 The governor issues orders for raising a troop of horse. Cornelis Steenwyck is named captain, to take the "Subscriptions of all such Persons as shall voluntarily enlist themselves within this City and Precincts, as also at y<sup>e</sup> Bowery, New Harlem and ffordham." Capt. Dudley Lovelace is to serve as lieutenant, and Gabriel Minvielle as cornetist.—Ex. Coun. Min., 636. See May 6.
- 30 The sheriff has lodged a complaint in the mayor's court against several persons who were delinquent in paving their streets as required by ordinance (see Jan. 23), and also making their sheet piling (see Sept. 25, 1656) on the Strand. Gelyn Verplanck claims that Oloff Steensen van Cortlaend is "obliged to pave before his own house;" the widow of Burger Jorissen promises "to make her share of the street and sheet piling;" Nicolaes Backer promises to pave his street as soon as his neighbours pave theirs; Gelyn Verplanck and James Matheus ask to be excused from "levelling their street until their cellars" are finished, promising to do so shortly; John Rider and Thomas Berryman are "ordered to pave their portion of the Winckel [Market] Street;" Sibout Claessen is "willing to make his sheeting provided the Govern<sup>r</sup>" will "restore to him the stone, which he brought for that purpose to the place" and had been "loaned by him;" Sybrant Jansen has "left only one opening to enable him to fill in his wall from the Strand" and promises "to close that as soon as his neighbours" begin "to fill in;" Tryntie Clocq declares she is "unable to fill in her part of the wall," and the court agrees to look into the best manner of filling in her share, "since her portion of the wall" is "so large," and she, a widow, is unable to undertake it. Then the court decrees that all who have "failed to pave their streets and sidewalk pursuant to the Placard," shall "complet the same without delay," or suffer the prescribed penalty for infraction. A commission is appointed to see that the work is "prosecuted and completed with all possible expedition," as well as to "take into consideration, what streets or ways" need "to be paved besides those designated" in the former placard, and to give their advice, "how and in what manner the wall in front of Tryntie Clocq and the adjoining lots" shall "be filled in."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 370-71. See, further, June 11.
- May 6 To facilitate the measure of raising a troop of horse (see April 24), the governor gives permission to Capt. Steenwyck and his officers to "Enlyst such and soe many Volunteers out of y<sup>e</sup> Companies of foot . . . as are capable to set themselves forth wth Horses, furniture, & Armes," provided that not more than five or six be taken from each company.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 637.
- 24 In conformity with the orders of King Charles's letter of March 10 (p. v.), the governor's council orders that the king's commands in relation to "y<sup>e</sup> Navigation of Vessells from this Port for Europe shall be duly & punctually observed." It is further decided that for the "Security of Shipp after they come here, . . . all Care shall be taken & besides the fort a Battery in y<sup>e</sup> most convenient Place of the City shall be made, to secure all Shipp in the Road;" and, finally, it is resolved, that the whole government shall be put into a posture of defence, for which the governor will "please to propose a modell."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 128-29. Cf. Col. Coun. Min., 16. For orders to shipmasters, see June 27.
- 27 Gov. Lovelace reviews the three militia companies of the city at the Windmill Hill, which was the place of general rendezvous.—O'Callaghan, "Notes on Windmills" (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For Windmill Hill, see "Caticmuts Hill," Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965.
- June 10 The governor's council decides that the "Garrison in Pay" be continued until further orders.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 130.
- 11 Jonas Bartelsen, the weighmaster, informs the mayor's court that several of the weights that belong to the weigh-house are worn out, and so under weight. He asks that censurers of the weights be appointed by the court "to bring them to the exact Weight of the Standard." The court appoints Juriaen Blanck and Albert Bosch, a cutter, to censure not only the weights at the weigh-house but also all of the weights owned by any of the merchants and inhabitants of the city. This order, so far as it applied to the weights owned by the inhabitants, was immediately recalled; but, on July 2, Bartelsen again asks for the order for perfecting the weights in the weigh-house "be put in due Execution," which the court now ordered to be done "forthwith" by Blanck and Bosch.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 374, 381.
- " Jan Cornelisen d' Ryck, Seryva Lourens, Jacob Leendersen, and Gerrit Hendricksen are appointed by the mayor's court as overseers of fences and highways, "as well on this as on the other side of the Fresh Water" for the ensuing year, two of whom shall "continue the next year and two new be elected in the places of those retiring."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 374-75. The new feature of retaining always two men of experience on the board is worthy of note, as is also the increase of one member (see April 18, 1671).
- " Because persons daily bring suit in the mayor's court, yet at the time of a hearing fail to appear in person or by an attorney to prosecute, the court orders that if the plaintiff hereafter fails to "appear to prosecute his Action at the first Court day after hee Entred his Action," he shall be nonsuited and pay the costs.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 376. See Oct. 12.
- " Gov. Lovelace has "several times" recommended to the mayor's court "The Making up of y<sup>e</sup> Mote or Graft" of the city, and the court now declares that this work shall be performed by the owners of the houses and lots lying about or along the mote, or else by their tenants, as follows, "from y<sup>e</sup> Waterside upwards to the bridge over against y<sup>e</sup> Stone Streete [i. e., so much as ran east of the present Broad St.; a bridge crossed the Gracht or Canal to Brewers St. or Stone St., west of Broad; Jochem Beekman had his lot on the S. E. corner of Broad and Beaver] to be Repaired and made up in y<sup>e</sup> same bread[th] & forme as heretofore it was made. And from thence upward to y<sup>e</sup> Corner of y<sup>e</sup> Lott of Jochem Beekman to be made & finished in y<sup>e</sup> same forme & manner as M<sup>r</sup> Johannis de Peyster has already begun it, "to be made & finished the s<sup>d</sup> owners of y<sup>e</sup> houses & Lotts or y<sup>e</sup> Tennants for y<sup>e</sup> Owners accounts w<sup>ch</sup> in y<sup>e</sup> space of two months next Ensuing y<sup>e</sup> date hereof." Also "from y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Corner of Jochem Beekman upwards to y<sup>e</sup> Corner of y<sup>e</sup> Lane by M<sup>r</sup> Jacob Kip [this lane is now Exchange Pl. and this order shows that the Gracht or Canal extended then up Broad St. as far as this point] in y<sup>e</sup> same forme & manner as before it is Express to be made & finished w<sup>ch</sup> in the space of Three Months next Ensuing the date thereof upon Penalty of—to be forfeited & paid by all those that shall be found defective in the finishing of their severall proportions of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Mote."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 377-78.
- " After approving the report of the commission appointed April 30 (p. v.), the court orders "that the Street called the Slyck Steegh or Dirty lane, from the house of Adrian Vincent to the house of Hendrick van Doesburgh, and from the small house of David Jochems to the Lott of Jacob van Couwenhoven deceased," shall be "Paved with Stones before the latter end of September Next ensuing;" also, within the same time, that "the Street Called the Prince Street [that part of Beaver St. between Broad and William Sts.] from the houses & Lotts of M<sup>r</sup> Mayor [Capt. Matthias Nicolls] & Jochem Beekman, to the houses & lotts of M<sup>r</sup> Bedloo & the Widow of Reyer Steffels" (see Sept. 17), shall be paved likewise; also, "a Strocke or foot path" is "to be paved before the front of the houses," extending "from the house of M<sup>r</sup> Bedloo at the Waterside to the house of Cornelis van Borsum, and from thence to the house 1672 of Mr Steenwyck;] also "from the house of Dum<sup>e</sup> Nieuwenhuysen to the State house." In regard to "filling up the Gapp before June 11 Trynck Clocks," the court consents that she may "make use of the ground lying next to bur lot" and will aid her "in the filling up of hur proportion."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 375-76. The first suggestion of the city's constructing a sidewalk is observed in this order.

Fernow says, in a note (on p. 375): "Slyck Steegh, the dirty or miry alley, was that part of the present South William Str., East of Broad as far as Mill Lane or Street, a passage now closed, but formerly running from Broad Str., East betw. Beaver and South William to near William and then turning with an angle into South William. Vincent's lot was on the N. E. corner of Broad Str. and the Slyck Steegh, the S. E. corner being the Couwenhoven lot. David Jochems' lot was on the South side of the Steegh, extending to Stone Str. and van Doesburg's on the North side, about opposite to where Mill Lane came into South William Str., to which the Steegh extended at this time. This was the extent of the proposed improvement."—See Key to the Dutch Grants, II: 396-97, and Castello Plan, II: 293-95.

24 The governour's council decides that a new order shall be made regarding the transportation of corn, to be founded upon the order of the court of assizes.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 137. See Oct., 1672.

" The governour orders that thanks be given to the inhabitants of Hempstead for their contribution towards repairing the fort, which is "very well approved of;" and also for their good "Example & forwardness therein." At the next meeting, July 1, when a report of the contribution from the inhabitants of the east end of Long Island was received, the governour noted that in his reply he would "take notice of the meanness of their contribution & the seeming condition of it."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 139-40.

26 Gov. Lovelace, writing to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, says: "By letters I reccead from holland I am assur'd of the seasure of all our vessells that ware unfortunately in their Ports being 4 in number viz My Ship the Fame, Mr Delavals the Margrite Mr. Stenewick the James and Frederick Phillips, the Frederick, they are as yett but vnder an Arrest being not proceeded soe frarre [far] as to a Confiscation, we hope the 32 article of Agreement at Breda [see July 31, 1667, for signing of treaty], will secure us there being a particular provision made against the inconveniency of a Suddaine rupture by allowing all Subjects 6 months Liberty to withdraw their estates, after A Stroke is strook, however, wee must attend with Patience."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 169; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 669.

" Lovelace writes to Gov. Winthrop concerning Isaac Ratt, his cook, who has run away, and asks Winthrop to send him back if he lands in a canoe in Connecticut. He describes Ratt as "notoriously marked having the use butt of one hand, y<sup>e</sup> left being split in two, he is of a light brown Hayre, & in gray clothes."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 669.

27 Acting in conformity with orders from the king (see May 24), Gov. Lovelace issues notice to all masters of vessels that March 24, June 24, and Sept. 24 are to be the dates of sailing for vessels homeward bound to England, so that convoys may be awaiting them. For still greater protection, vessels are to endeavour to keep "Company and Consortship together" with such others as belong to England or her allies.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 698-99.

July 1 The milling facilities of New York are so inadequate that the city bakers complain of their inability to have enough grain ground to supply their p'sent Want for y<sup>e</sup> Shipping outward bound & such like Occasions." They therefore ask for the privilege of sending their grain to Milford, Connecticut, or to other outside places. Permission is given, with the understanding, however, that they are to bring back in flour or meal the whole produce of the grain carried away, which is to be inspected by the haven-master.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 142. At this time there were only two mills in operation,—the Garrison mill in the Commons, and the water-mill erected, in 1658, by Pietersen at the outlet of the Collect.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961-62.

" A lease of the ferry from Long Island is granted by the provincial government to Ariantje Blecke, the widow of Joannes Nevius, who was the former incumbent. She is to be allowed "in dispose of her time in the said ferry" to any fit capable person if she wishes.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 143. For the transfer of the ferry privilege from the provincial to the municipal government, see Nov. 9, 1683.

General Entries, IV: 155, N. Y. State Library (manuscript volume destroyed in Capitol fire in March, 1911). This is a very early use of "doctor" in New York. Dr. F. H. Bosworth, in his monograph on "The Doctor in Old New York," in Historic New York, II: 294, thought "the designation of doctor" did not come "into use in America until about 1769."

A war warning from the mother country causes Gov. Lovelace to send an appeal to the mayor's court for aid in putting New York in a posture of defence. His especial plea is for voluntary contributions towards repairing the fort. Similar solicitations to Long Island and Fordham have met with most pleasing compliance. He promises the city officials that if in return he can gratify them "in anything that may be advantageous to y<sup>e</sup> Corporation," he will gladly "embrace y<sup>e</sup> Occasion." Thomas Lovelace, Capt. Richard Morris, Capt. Manning, Allard Anthony, Thomas Gybbs, and Francis Rombout are appointed commissioners to receive subscription money and use it according to instructions from the governour. The contributors are listed in Ex. Coun. Min., their offerings including beavers, beer, bread, work, corn, wheat, half a nutton, lime, rye, peas, raccons, wampum, and seawant.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 699-709. A later appeal for aid was sent to Albany.—Ibid., II: 711. See July 11 for instructions to the commissioners, and Aug. 8 for contribution of the mayor's court.

The mayor's court orders that the "Buckets & Other Instruments for fire belonging to the Towne shall be brought to the State house within 14 dayes."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 382. See Jan. 30, 1674.

6 After the reading of a letter announcing the declaration of war with Holland, it is decided that a proclamation of the war shall be issued the following Tuesday about ten or eleven o'clock in the morning at the fort gate and the state house (see July 9). Consideration is to be given to the order for seizing ships, goods, and estates belonging to the states-general; and matters of fortification and protection are to be vigorously prosecuted. Suggestion is made that the council be enlarged, but a footnote states this was not accomplished.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 144-45.

9 Upon receipt of the declaration of war against the "States General of the United Provinces, dated at Whitehall the 4th of April 1673 [sic]" the mayor's court executes the order of Gov. Lovelace to proclaim the same at the state house (see July 6).—Rec. N. Am., VI: 382; Cal. Coun. Min., 17.

11 The governour issues instructions to the commissioners who have in charge the repair of Fort James (see July 3 and Oct. 2-7). Their officers are to consist of a "Charye-man," to preside as president of the commissioners and to affix signature to letters, warrants, etc.; a young man for a Clerke to Record fairly what shall be transacted by you; and a treasurer to keep "all y<sup>e</sup> goods that are contributed, & to issue out Payment when Occasion shall serve, to whom a moderate Allowance may be made for his Care & Trouble."

Goods are to be called for; accounts are to be kept of the workmen and their wages and also of the defaulters, "that no idle Person be obruded on you;" and all bills are to be examined. The commissioners are to have also a general oversight of all things "that may best tend to y<sup>e</sup> carrying on of the Work."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 709-10.

16 Liberty is granted to Dr. Henry Taylor "to transporte a parcell of Wheat to Boston to make payment for a Chest of Medicam<sup>ts</sup>."—General Entries, IV: 167, N. Y. State Library (manuscript volume destroyed in Capitol fire in March, 1911).

23 Voluntary contributions for the repair of Fort James, "the Chief place of defence wth in this Governm<sup>t</sup>," have been agreed upon by "the several Ridings upon Long Island," and "divers good Summs given towards the same," as also by the city of New York (see July 3). The mayor's court now orders "that Notice be given to the Inhabitants of haerlem, that as Members of the same boddy" (as the corporation of New York City) they shall "summon their inhabitants together & take an account of their Voluntarie Subscriptions towards this Generall worke, and that they returne the same as soon as conveniently may be" to the mayor, or one of the aldermen of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 385. See Oct. 8.

Aug. 8 Gov. Lovelace replies to the requests from the governour and council of Massachusetts that "wee as y<sup>e</sup> Neighbor<sup>s</sup> & Subjects of one Gracious Sovereigne may have free Egress, & Regress upon Hudsons River for Transportacon of People and Goods;" and that some place, acceptable to both colonies, to "y<sup>e</sup> Northward of his Highness the Duke of Ynkes Territories beyond New Yorke, . . . on that side of our Colony nigh Hudsm's River" may be

- 1672 decided upon, suitable for a Massachusetts settlement. Lovelace Aug. writes that he has referred the two matters to the Duke of York.
 8 Navigation on the Hudson had been restricted to New York vessels June 27, 1670 (q. v.).—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 662-66. See also Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 188-89.
- Sept. The mayor's court declares that "the highway on the Waterside 17 betwixt the State House & Tryntic Clox" (i.e., Pearl St., from Coenties Alley to William St.—see April 30) is "soo washed away that the passengers" are "in danger of some Mischiefe," and that it is "necessary that the sd highway be forthwith repaired and made Levelled." But the court adjudges that it is too large a job to be completed before the winter, and orders, therefore, "that y<sup>e</sup> owners of the sd houses abutting upon the sd highway or the tenants for the owners accounts" shall "cause a footpath of six ffoote in breadth to bee made each before their houses & Lotts within the space of fouere Weekes after due warning" has been given to them "& for the filling up of the Rest the Court" shall "take some course that the owners . . . bee assisted by the Towne."— Rec. N. Am., VI: 388.
- " Jan van Gelder, a street-paver, complains to the mayor's court that Geertie Stoffels refuses to pay him what he has earned "in making the street before her lot in Prince Street" (see June 11), being the sum of fl. 729, and he demands a judgment against her, as he has made the street "by order of the Mayor." The court orders her to pay him forthwith, or suffer an execution.—Rec. N.
Am., VI: 388.
- Oct. — An order is issued by the court of assizes "That y<sup>e</sup> Prohibition for y<sup>e</sup> Transportation of Corne [see June 24] for this year be repealed; & it shall bee lawfull for any Man to transport Corne to Boston, or any place out of the Governm<sup>t</sup>, as long as the price of Merchantable Winter Wheat shall be 4s:6d & Summer Wheat 4s in Silver or above . . . And what Strangers shall come to purchase corn here, they shall not buy it under 4s & 3s:6d in Silver, or Goods Equivalent."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 137, footnote.
 See April 29, 1673.
- 2 An order is issued at the general court of assizes which increases the severity of the punishment for stealing hogs or canoes (see Feb.
 13). For the first offence, beside the fine to be imposed by the court, the offender is to have one of his ears cut off, "as an Example to all others;" and for the second, he is to receive still more severe punishment, such as the court shall direct.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 95.
- " By reason of the extraordinary Occasion of Restoration of the forte in the City of New York [see July 3], . . . every Towne and corporation within this Province, as also particular persons have by their free Consents and Subscriptions contributed towards the same," and because of the disproportioned cost of collecting some of the subscriptions, it is ordered: "That the Charge of Collecting and transmitting the Contribution aforesaid to this City or the ferry [sic] shall be borne by each respective Towne or distinct Person who hath subscribed the same," and that the payment be made before the feast of Christmas next.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 96.
- 2-12 Zeelant authorities secretly plan to capture New Netherland.— See Nov. 21, and Addenda.

- " The members of the mayor's court resolve "to Contribute towards the reparation of the fort" (see July 3), 1,000 guilders seav-ant, "to be pd equally betwixt them and Ordered the Secretary to give an acc<sup>t</sup> thereof" to Gov. Lovelace.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 392.
- " Jan Jansen van Brestede, Evert Duyckinck, and John Cooley are appointed by the mayor's court as fire-wardens of the city for one year, to view the chimneys in the city and its suburbs, fine owners whose chimneys are defective or unclean, and look after the care of the hooks and ladders; assembling them safely in "some Convenient place," as they judge proper.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 393. See Dec. 26/Jan. 5, 1674.
- " Complaint is made to the mayor's court that the farmers of the small or burghers' excise are still negligent in paying and satisfying their arrears, which prevents the city treasurer from paying the city's workmen and labourers their wages as shown by vouchers.
 The court orders the farmers to pay within eight days, or, if derelict, the sheriff shall levy by execution against them.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 393.
- 12 The court further resolves that when defendants hereafter fail to appear either in person or by their attorneys at the first ensuing court day after their summons or arrest (see June 11), the case shall be determined and judgment be given upon the complaint, if the plaintiff "entred his action & left a Copy of the declaration in the office" of the city "at least four dayes before the Sitting of the Court." And, so as to prevent unnecessary charges, in cases for the recovery of small debts, the court decrees "that all cases under the Value of fourthy Shillings" shall "bee determined by the Mayr or any one of the Aldermenn," and that henceforth no attorney shall be retained or allowed in the court in actions under the value of 40 shillings, except it be "at the proper cost & Charge of the party that Retayned him."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 393-94.
- " The mayor's court nominates the following double list of persons to succeed them for the ensuing court year: John Lawrence and Mathias Nicolls for mayor; Olofi Stevens Cortlant, Johannes D'Pyster, William Darvall, Francois Rombouts for aldermen; and Allard Anthony for sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 394. For the names of the new bench, headed by John Lawrence as mayor, see Ex.

- " From this date to Aug. 17, 1673, a period of over two months, the records of the mayor's court are missing. On July 5, 1709, Lieut-Gov. Ingoldesby wrote to the lords of trade: "I am very well informed that when the Dutch took this place from us, Several Books of Records of Patents and other things were then lost."—N. Y. Col.

- " A proclamation is issued by Gov. Lovelace regarding a monthly post between New York and Boston, to start Jan. 1: "If any therefore have any Letters or small portable Goods to bee conveyed to Hartford, Connecticut, Boston or any other parts in the Road, they shall be carefully delivered according to the Directions by a sworn Messenger and Post, who is purposely employed in that Affayre; In the Interim those that bee dispos<sup>d</sup> to send Letters, lett them bring them to the Secretaries Office, where in a lockt Box they shall be preserv<sup>d</sup> till the Messenger calls for them. All persons paying the Post before the Bagge bee seal'd up."—Ex. Coun.
Min., II: 794. See Feb. 14, 1665, and Jan. 22, 1673.
- " Gov. Lovelace writes to Gov. Winthrop regarding the post between New York and New England (see Dec. 10): "This person that has undertake the employment I conceived most proper, being both active, stout, and indefatigable. He is sworn as to his fidelity. I have affixt an annual salary on him, which, together with the advantage of his letters and other small portable packes, may afford him a handsome livelihood. Hartford is the first stage I have designed him to change his horse where constantly I expect he should have a fresh one [y<sup>e</sup>, lesser [ledger in original]. All the letters outward shall be delivered gratis, with a signification of Post Payd on the superscription, and reciprocally, we expect all to us free. Each first Monday of the month he sets out from New York, and is to return within the month from Boston to us againe. The maile has divers baggs, according to the townes the letters are designed to, which are all sealed up 'till their arrivment, with the seal of the Secretaries Office, whose care it is on Saturday night to seal them up. Only by-letters are in an open bag, to dispense by the wayes . . . I shall only beg of you your furtherance to so universall a good work; that is to afford him directions where and to whom to make his application to upon his arrival at Boston; as likewise to afford him what letters you can to establish him in that employment there. It would be much advantageous to our designe, if in the intervall you discoursed with some of the most able woodmen, to make out the best and most facile way for a Post, which, in process of tyme would be the King's best highway; as likewise passages and accommodation at Rivers, fords, or other necessary places."—Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 197-98. The original letter is in Trumbull MSS., XXII: 110, in Mass. Hist. Soc. See cluding that of a canoe. Johnson is condemned to receive 39 lashes, standing with a halter about his neck, to have one of his ears cut off, and to be banished; Faulx is to have 25 stripes and be banished, with the threat of losing an ear should he ever return;

 "y<sup>e</sup> Boy Essex" is let off with ten stripes, but warned that a repeti-

22 Gov. Lovelace issues various instructions for the guidance of the new post master (see Dec. 10, 1672):

"In the first place you are to take yo<sup>r</sup> Oath of fidelity w<sup>ch</sup> the Secretary shall administer to you, your Duty as to the General is included in that Oath.

"Next, you are to comport yo<sup>r</sup> selfe wth all Sobriety & Civility to those that shall intrust you, & not exact on them for the prices both of Letters and Pacquets.

"You are principally to apply yo<sup>r</sup> selfe to the Governo<sup>r</sup>s especially Governo<sup>r</sup> Winthrop, from whom you shall receive the best Direction how to forme yo<sup>r</sup> best Post-Road.

"You are likewise to advize where the most commodious place will bee to leave all the by-Letter<sup>s</sup> out of yo<sup>r</sup> Road, w<sup>ch</sup> when having it once well fixt, you are not only to leave the Letters there, but at your returne to call for Answers, & leave a Publication of your Resolutions, the w<sup>ch</sup> you must cause to be dispersd to all parts, that soe all may know when & where to leave their Letters.

"You are to give mee an Acco<sup>t</sup> of Negotiation at this time to the end I may be satisfied of all your proceedings, & bee able to assist you if Occasion shall require.

"Where you think it requisite you are to marke some Trees that shall direct Passengers the best way, & to fix certaine Houses for your severall Stages both to bait & lodge at.

"When any persons are desirous to travaile wth you, you are to treat them civilly, & to afford them yo<sup>r</sup> best help & assistance, that I may heare noe Complaint of you.

"You shall doe well to provide yo<sup>r</sup> selfe of a Spare Horse, Horne, good Port-Maultes, that soe neither Letters nor Pacquets receive any Damage under yo<sup>r</sup> hands.

"There are some other Consideraco<sup>n</sup>s w<sup>ch</sup> I shall forbear to mention till yo<sup>r</sup> returne, & I receive a further Account of you, and soe God bless all yo<sup>r</sup> honest Undertakings.

"ffrao: Lovelace.

"You are also to detect & cause to be apprehended all fugitive Souldyers & Servants runn away from these parts."

The postmaster's "oath of fidelity" follows: "You doe Swear by the Everlasting God, that you will truly & faithfully discharge the trust reposed in you as a Post Master, and that you will neither directly nor indirectly detayne, conceale, or open any Letters, Packetts, or other Goods committed to your Charge, but carefully, & honestly deliver or cause to be delivered all such Letters Packetts or other Goods to the Persons they properly belong unto, & that you will make all the Expedition in passing and repassing the severall Stages wth all speed, & to make noe more stay than necessarily belongs to the refreshing your selfe and Horse, & in all things truly & soberly to comport yo<sup>r</sup> selfe, so as belongs to the trust reposed in you, and as a Post Master ought to doe."—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 543-44; Ex. Coun. Min., II: 795-96.

27 Benjamin Johnson and Thomas Faulx, since their trial on Jan. 15 (q. v.), have been imprisoned in the "State House." In response to a petition of the prisoners for release, the governour's council paroles Johnson on condition that he shall not come nearer the city than his own home and that he again surrender himself to the sheriff, March 1. Faulx is to be banished at the first convenience and to remain in custody meanwhile.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 163-64.

"The governour's council recommends to the mayor's court to find some expedient for clearing the town of hogs, "that they bee ooe longer a Nuisance to the Neighbourhood."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 164. See Aug. 18/28.

Mar. 11 The governour ratifies the action of the mayor's court concerning a "Packer, Viewer, & Gager of all Goods in Casks." Richard Elyott, the cooper, is appointed. He is to receive sixpence per barrel for packing beef and pork and threepence for viewing it as cure-master (see Oct. 7, 1671); while Christopher Hoogeland, as care-master of bread and flour, is to receive fourpence per barrel for viewing and brandying casks of these articles with the "Cities Brand-marke," and one shilling per hoghead or puncheon, with proportionate pay for larger or smaller casks, for "Gaging of Liquids or Dry Goods."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 790-92.

29 The English Test Act is passed. All persons, holding any civil or military office in England, Wales, Berwick, Jersey, or Guernsey, shall be required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy; shall publicly receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England; and shall declare disbelic in the Romish doctrine of "Transubstantiation." The Duke of York, having secretly been a Catholic for some time, now openly declares his faith and "in a flood of tears" gives up the offices he holds, including that of lord high admiral of England. This enumeration does not include his jurisdiction in the American colonies, and they are not included in the act.—Brothead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 201-2. In 1691, under William and Mary, the act was applied to New York.—Ibid., II: 726-28. See Slaughter's instructions, Jan. 31, 1690. The Test Act was repealed on March 9, 1828.

Apr. 29 It having been found that the price of corn does not amount to the value proposed in the act of Oct. 1672 (q. v.), and that on account of the hard winter much grain has been consumed, the permission to export wheat is suspended and the embargo of 1671 (q. v. March 7), is confirmed.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 176. See June 24.

May 15 Gov. Winthrop's letter concerning the continuation of the post to Milford is read in council. It is ordered: "That hee [the post-rider] bee employed to goe to Milford, but not to be putt in practice till a Returne from Boston" (see Dec. 10, 1672).—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 178.

June 7-17 Joliet, despatched by Frontenac from Quebec to explore the Mississippi, having been joined by Marquette at Mackinaw, reaches that river. See Addenda.

12 The governour's council orders that "all Customable Goods w<sup>ch</sup> shall bee Landed in this Port or any other part of yo<sup>r</sup> Govern<sup>mt</sup> shall pay the Vsuall Customes for such Goods without any Rebate upon their Transportaco<sup>n</sup> else where. And Consideraco<sup>n</sup> being likewise had, that at this juncture & Season (being a time of Warr) little or noe Shipping Arrives here, soe that yo<sup>r</sup> p<sup>re</sup>sent Incomes of Custome is very slender, . . . noe Bills of Store shall bee granted . . . Although in better times the Governo<sup>r</sup> will bee pleased to Gratify that way such as may deserve the same."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 182-83.

"The governour's council agrees with a proposal of Dominic Nieuwenhuyzen in proclaiming a fast for this city and island on "Wednesday fortnight next."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 182.

24 The governour's council issues a proclamation increasing the value of wampum, in the hope of adding to the amount in circulation. Instead of eight white and four black beads, six white and three black shall pass for the value of a st. or penny, and three times "soe much yo<sup>r</sup> Value of Silver." Proclamations to this effect were sent to Long Island, Albany, Esopus, and Delaware.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 184-85. Cf. Beauchamp, Wampum and Shell Articles used by the New York Indians (Albany, 1901), 351-56.

"The governour's council issues an order whereby merchants sending off casks of bread or flour on their own account may mark them with a "known Marke" of their own; but such merchandise of this character as comes to the weigh-house to be delivered to strangers shall be branded with the public mark. The cure-master is to be retained in his office unless he wittingly commits fraud."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 186.

"Prohibition against grain exportation (see April 29) is to continue until the next court of assizes.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 186-87.

July 11 The governour's council orders that, during the ensuing year, the excise shall be removed from small beer, hogs, beef, and all manner of flesh, whether killed here or elsewhere. An increased excise is ordered upon strong liquors.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 187-88. See A.

29 John Allyn, secretary of Connecticut, in a letter to his friend Fitz-John Winthrop, thus describes the visit to Hartford of Gov. Lovelace of New York: "The Governo<sup>r</sup>, Col. Lovelace, & Capt<sup>n</sup> Nicolls, wth three servaunts, came to Hartford on Fryday eve, & stayd till Tewsday morning. They were entertained at the Governo<sup>r</sup>'s house, I believe to good content. At their departure out of towne, Capt<sup>n</sup> Clarke wth his troope & most of the gent<sup>l</sup> here wayted upon them to Matthebesset River & then gaue him of farwell. M<sup>r</sup> Willys, wth Capt<sup>n</sup> Treat & two men, wayted upon them to New Haven."—Winthrop Papers, 6th ser., III: 435, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections. It was during Lovelace's visit to Connecticut that New York was captured by the Dutch (see July 30/Aug. 9, 1673).

30= Aug. 9 New York is recaptured by a Dutch fleet under Evertsen and Benckes. The fort was soon after named "Willem Henrick," and the city "Niew Orange" (see Aug. 7/17).—Harlem Record. (MS.), III: 90, in N. Y. Pub. Library. There is no official minute of the capture in the records of English New York (see Oct. 12, 1672). The story of the surrender, however, is obtainable from several sources, the two most detailed of which are "An Exact Acco<sup>t</sup> of all the Proceedings, of the Military Officers of Ffort James from yo<sup>r</sup> 28th 29th 1673 & 30th of July, 1673," signed by Capt. Manning and Thomas and July Dudley Lovelace, which is printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4<sup>to</sup> ed.), 30- III: 59-62, and the account of John Sharpe, in Winthrop Papers, Aug. 6th ser., III: 436-44, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections.

9 The double date (or fraction) marks the reappearance of the Dutch calendar. To avoid confusion both the Old Style (numerator) and New Style (denominator) dates are given during the New Orange period.

The news of the arrival of the Dutch fleet off Sandy Hook, Monday, July 28, was brought to the fort from various sources. Gov. Lovelace's brother Thomas came from Staten Island in a canoe, "against a swelling sea;" an hour later came a messenger from Gravesend reporting ten sail; about eleven at night, another boat from Staten Island brought word of 19 ships in the bay, while two hours later the reported number was increased to 21 by a messenger from "Nevesinckes," New Jersey, 30 miles away.

In the absence of Gov. Lovelace, who was on a visit to Connecticut (see July 29), Capt. Manning took charge. An express was immediately started to inform the governor; warrants were sent to Long Island requiring the militia companies there to repair to the fort; the beacons were fired; a scout was sent out to gather further details as to the fleet; and an attempt was made to put the cannon and ammunition in order.

On Tuesday morning, "prouision, beare [beer], bread, liquors & such like necessaryes" were brought into the fort and an order was given to the sheriff to bring in the ladders, "w<sup>ch</sup> he alsoe neglected & kept them for y<sup>e</sup> Enemye." About eight o'clock, Tuesday night, the soldiers who were upon the fort walls shouted "There they beel! there they beel! . . . we saw them at length very farley sayle in, one after an other, till we told 21 sayle," which anchored near Staten Island for the night.—Winthrop Papers, op. cit., III: 436-39.

Upon the eve of attack by such a force, the garrison is described as having but "4 Spunges Ramers for all the Gunns of the fiart the platformes and carriages was alsoe Badd either the Carriages Broake or they could not bring them to pass againe their was neither Bedd Spade Hanspike or other material to help to defend us [There were] 4 Bastions 10 Gunns upon every Bastion 4 Curtains each Curtaine near 80 paces long and we had but between 70 and 80 men to help to maintain y<sup>e</sup> whole ground."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4<sup>to</sup> ed.), III: 62.

Next morning, Wednesday, "wee very cherefully made our selues as ready for a brush as wee were able; but God knowes all we was in uaine tho our hearts were good; for in all this tyme we had not a man from Long Iland, tho they were expected, nor more than a douzen men from y<sup>e</sup> Towne,—y<sup>e</sup> Duch standing neuter,—a high shame for English men, who have allwayes borne y<sup>e</sup> garland as to poynt of hono<sup>r</sup> and valour, that in such an eminent occasion they should draw their necks out of y<sup>e</sup> collar to saue a few dirty goods, . . . when it stood them in hand, unless they were voyde of all loyalty, to buckle on their armour in defence of their King & Country, as well as to preserve their owne rights & imunities."

About ten o'clock, a boat, flying a flag of truce and containing Capt. Carr, Mr. Lovelace, and Mr. Sharp, set out for the Dutch fleet to demand a reason for their presence and to "treat with them amicably and friendly." About half way out they met a small Dutch boat bearing a flag of truce bound for the fort and carrying the following message: "My Lord,—The forces of warr now lying in yo<sup>r</sup> sight are sent out by y<sup>e</sup> High & Mighty States General of y<sup>e</sup> United Provinces and his Serene Highness y<sup>e</sup> Prince of Orange far to destroy their enemies. Wherefore we have sent you this summons, to y<sup>e</sup> end y<sup>e</sup> you doe surrender unto Vs y<sup>e</sup> Fort called James, promising good quarter; uppon default whereof we shall be forced both by sea & land to prosecute our order in such manner as we shall see to be most advantageous for y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> States General and his Serene Highness y<sup>e</sup> Prince of Orange. Dated on board y<sup>e</sup> ship Swanenburgh, riding betwixt Staten Iland and Long Iland, this 9th of August, 1673.

[Signed] "Cornelis Eversende Junge
 "Jacob Benckes."

Capt. Manning, feeling that his only hope lay in delay, "kept y<sup>e</sup> trumpeter here two or 3 hours, treating him with meete, drinck, wine, & such accommodations, thinking that they would not weigh anchor to approach y<sup>e</sup> Fort till they had received an answer; w<sup>ch</sup> notwithstanding they did, both winde and tyde being fayre for them."—Winthrop Papers, III: 439-41. The Dutch realized the danger of delay, for "When their fleets was cometh in Sandioock several of y<sup>e</sup> Dutch went on Board them from Vtrecht and flatbush upon Long Iland and Informe them of the absence of our Governour and weakness of our Garrison and y<sup>e</sup> number of our men."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4<sup>to</sup> ed.), III: 62. This served to confirm the testimony obtained from a sloop off the coast of Virginia, where the Dutch had taken eight English merchantmen and sunk five. The captain of the sloop tried to mislead the Dutch by representing an able defence for the city, "w<sup>ch</sup> made them resolute to steere another course, & not goe to New Yorke;" but one of the passengers voluntarily declared "New Yorke was in no condition to defend itselfe ag<sup>t</sup> the Dutch, that they had few canons mounted and those that were upon such rotten carriages that one discharge would shake them to peeces & dismount the Canon; that there were but few men in armes in the fiart, that any considerable number could not be easily drawne together, that the Govern<sup>r</sup> was absent, being gone to C<sup>o</sup>necticut to visit Govern<sup>r</sup> Winthrop all w<sup>ch</sup> encouraged the Dutch to visit that place."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 213. For a statement of the general instructions under which the Dutch fleet was operating, see Aug. 14/24.

When the fleet was near Nuttern Island, almost within shot of the fort, Manning sent back their trumpeter with the following answer: "My Lords,—I have received by yo<sup>r</sup> trumpeter a summons w<sup>ch</sup> declares you are sent from y<sup>e</sup> High & Mighty States General of y<sup>e</sup> United Provinces and his Serene Highness y<sup>e</sup> Prince of Orange, to demand a surrender of this his Majestyes garrisons, but there being some gentlemen from hence who are treating with you, I gieve you this answer, y<sup>e</sup> upon returne of those gentlemen I shall send you a positiuve answer, eyther of y<sup>e</sup> surrendering, or non-surrendering of this his Majestyes garrison. Dated at Fort James in N: Yorke,—this 30th of July, 1673. [Note difference in dates of the Dutch and English epistles.]

[Signed] "John Maning."

Upon receipt of this note, the Dutch sent the Englishmen back to the fort saying they would grant half an hour for their reply. They "turn'd up y<sup>e</sup> glass and kept on sayling, telling our men at their departure that when y<sup>e</sup> half hour was expired they would fyre a gun as a warning peice to minde us of our answer." True to their promise, the gun was fired and, as they were about to anchor before the fort, Mr. Sharpe, in hope of further respite, was dispatched with the following:

"My Lords,—For the persumation of y<sup>e</sup> burghers of this city, whom we have promised to protect, we desire you to forbear all acts of hostility till y<sup>e</sup> morrow morning at 10 y<sup>e</sup> clock, at w<sup>ch</sup> tyme we shall send you our articles and our resolution thereupon. Dated at Fort James in N: Yorke, July 30th 1673. One of y<sup>e</sup> clock in y<sup>e</sup> afternoone. [Signed] J. Maning."

The enemy, however, would parley no longer, and, with the grant of another half hour, again turned up the glass. This time having expired, and they seeing "noe returne from us, but all our coloures on y<sup>e</sup> contrary flourishing upon every bastion of y<sup>e</sup> Fort, they fyred two guns to leeward as warning peices to get their men on shore, the w<sup>ch</sup> those upon y<sup>e</sup> works easily perceived." The firing between fleet and fort lasted for about an hour, when a flag of truce was put upon the walls, and later the "flagg" was struck and three men were sent out to meet the enemy, who were "marching downe y<sup>e</sup> broad way towards y<sup>e</sup> Fort."

After some parley, the following articles of surrender were guaranteed by the Dutch:

"1. That all y<sup>e</sup> offi<sup>r</sup>s & sold<sup>r</sup>s in y<sup>e</sup> Fort shall march out wth colours flying & drums beating.

"2<sup>d</sup> That y<sup>e</sup> Fort, wth all y<sup>e</sup> artillery armes & ammunicon, shall bee delivered up unto y<sup>e</sup> Dutch Gen<sup>l</sup> or Comander, or to them who shall be there unto appointed.

Contrary to their promise, however, they put a "Guard upon and made us prisoners in y<sup>e</sup> Church and fell plundring of all the Bagg and Baggage and y<sup>e</sup> next Mornning put us on Board severall of their Shippes of Warr and soe carried us some to Newfoundland and y<sup>e</sup> Fortiniquall Ilands where they Inhumanly left us and some to Cales w<sup>ch</sup> we have not heard from as yett."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4<sup>to</sup> ed.), III: 62.

1673 Despite the 600 or 700 shots received, but one man at the fort July was killed. The damage to the Dutch could not be definitely 30- ascertained, although one or two of their "chiefe ships" had to be
 Aug. mended, and it was reputed that 18 men were killed or wounded.— 9 Winthrop Papers, III: 444. Cf. N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 198-207, for various documents concerning the capture.

Still another account of the episode appears in a letter of Capt. Robert Treat, written at Milford, Connecticut, Aug. 2, to Gov. Winthrop. Treat had met a soldier from the fort at Eastchester, who said that 14 of the fleet of 20 Dutch ships "hald [hauled] up in hutson's River as close under the forts as euer they Coude like a halfe moone And demanded the surrendering of the place to Them." Capt. Manning and Capt. Carr desired "24 howrs time" to answer, but "the Dutch would give but one howr and when that howr & a little more was expired they entered in gagem<sup>t</sup> . . . and poured out such violent showers and thundering balls from their roaring cañons that came so thick and so hot y<sup>t</sup> it did almost beat them off [from their works and under their cannons safely landed 800 soldiers ready to storme from y<sup>e</sup> land also . . . w<sup>ch</sup> when they saw their attempts they took down their Jack & . . . desired a parle . . . they Marcht out wth drum & colours flieing into y<sup>e</sup> high Street and there laid down their armes . . . all is done & ouer in one howrs time with the loss of one man on each side and very little hurt done to fort or towne y<sup>e</sup> most is said to be in y<sup>e</sup> end of the church."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 73.

New Amsterdam, as it appeared at the time of its re-capture by the Dutch, or very shortly thereafter, is shown in an inset view accompanying a map of New Netherland issued at about this time. The view is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 8-h, and the map in Vol. I, Pl. 16-a.

31= Gov. Lovelace, writing to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut concern-Aug. ing the Dutch attack, calls "y<sup>e</sup> Dutch approach" particularly 10 "unwelcome" because he happened to be away (see July 29). He says: "They appeared at first with 10 sayle afloats 17: yest<sup>r</sup> day about 5 or 6 of y<sup>e</sup> clock they stormt it, a hot dispute (it seems it was) how y<sup>e</sup> success was I cannot as yet learne. they I understand have breakfast on all my sheep and Cattle at Staten Island." He further states that he is "hastening now over to Long Island to raise y<sup>e</sup> Militia there."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 170.

Aug. John Winthrop, Jr. writes to his son, Fitz-John Winthrop, regard-2=12 ing Gov. Lovelace as follows: "I received yesternight by a post sent express, a letter frō Gov<sup>r</sup> Lovelace, who was in his returne towards N. Yorke [see July 31/Aug. 10] as far as M<sup>r</sup> Richbells (when he wrote y<sup>t</sup> letter) about 40 miles frō N. Yorke. He went hence on Tuesday last and was at N. Haven y<sup>t</sup> night, and next morning had the first intelligence of the fleet appearing, before it was knowne who they were. I send you the full extract of that letter, & know nothing more than what is therein conteyned, only by a letter frō M<sup>r</sup> Gold of Fairefield, of the same day, am informed y<sup>t</sup> he had a report that the Dutch had landed 3000 men vpon Manhatas lland, but heard not the certainty. . . . We heare also that a sloope newly frō Virginia to Boston bring ill newes that such a Dutch fleet have bene at Virginia and there burnt six and taken six of the English merchant ships."—Winthrop Papers in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, VIII, 5th ser., pt. 4, 150. The original is in the Winthrop Papers in Mass. Hist. Soc., Vol. V.

" Capt. Anthony Colve is commissioned by Commanders Benckes and Evertsen "as Governor-General to hold the supreme command over this conquest of New Netherland."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 609-10. The Dutch council of war, consisting of the three men named above, appoints Cornelis Steenwyck as councillor in New Netherland, and Cornelis Ewoutsen "to superintend the gunners and ammunition of war, and to take good care of the laborers." The various commissions and appointments were recorded Sept. 19.—Ibid., II: 610-11.

" The members of the city court and principal burgher officers, having been summoned before a meeting of the Dutch commanders and council of war, "at the City Hall of the City of New Orange" (formerly New York), are "absolved" . . . from their oath previously taken to the English Government" and are ordered to "do their duty, so that no disorder" shall be committed, "until the government and Magistrates" of the city are "restored by the Admirals and Council of War."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 395; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 572.

5=15 Israel Chauncy, writing to Gov. Winthrop (the letter is dated Stratford, Aug. 5, 1673), says: "The taking of N-yorke, with the effusion of so little blood is a matter much wondered at: it is very strange that they should be in no better preparation to encounter with an enemy, they had very few Guns that were upon field Carriages, and those after they were once shot off (as it is reported) unfit for further service the carriage breaking."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 131.

A letter from Hartford is sent to New York expostulating against the Dutch demand for submission on the part of the towns on the eastern end of Long Island, and the seizure of a vessel belonging to "one off of people." The letter further tells that messengers are being sent "to know your further intentions, & wee must lett you know, that wee & Confederates the united colonies of New Englant, are by Royall souerayne Charles the second made keepers of his subjects liberty in these partes & doe hope to acquitt o'selves in that trust through the Assistance of all mighty God, for the Preservation of his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Colonies in New England."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 584-85. See Aug. 14/24; and Addenda.

The transition of the form of government of the city, now called New Orange, by which a bench of schout, burgomasters, and schepens superseded the English system of sheriff, mayor, and aldermen, which had been in operation since June, 1665, was brought about as follows: On August 13, Commanders Evertsen and Benckes instructed Cornelis Steenwyck to have orders issued for calling the burghers of the city together so that "four or six" of them might be chosen as a delegation to confer with them and a council of war on the following morning. The commonalty was accordingly "convoked at the City Hall" and chose six deputies. On the 15th, the deputies met the commanders and council of war at Fort Willem Hendrick, and were then requested "to convooke the Commonalty" again, without delay, at the City Hall, for the purpose of nominating "six persons for Burgomasters and fifteen for Schepens," who were to be drawn "from the wealthiest inhabitants and those only" who conformed to "the Reformed Christian Religion." From these nominees, whose names were submitted by the city's deputies on the 16th, and all of whom as candidates first "took the oath of allegiance" to the Dutch authority, the commanders and council of war chose, on the 17th, the following persons as the first city bench under the new order, viz. Anthony de Milt, schout; Johannes van Brugh, Johannes de Peyster, and Ægidius Luyck, three burgomasters; and Willem Beckman, Jeronimus Ebbingh, Jacob Kip, Lourens vander Spiegel, and Gelyv Verplanck, five schepens. Proclamation of these appointments was made on the 18th. The members of the bench took the oath of office, agreeing to "administer good law and justice between parties in cases brought before" them; to "promote the welfare" of the city and its inhabitants; "in all things defend the upright and true Christian Religion agreeably to the Word of God and the order of the Synod of Dordrecht taught in the Netherland Church;" and "in all circumstances obey, maintaain and help to maintain the Supreme government" in authority, "and prevent," as far as they were able, "everything" in "conflict with it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 573-75; Rec. N. Am., VI: 395-98.

The Benckes and Evertsen Charter (so-called) of New Orange closes with the words "Done fortress Willem Hendrick, this 17th August A<sup>o</sup> 1673." This is an early, if not the earliest, reference to the fort by this name. It was Fort James under Nicolls' rule, and Fort Amsterdam prior to that. The reference is to be found in the translation from the New Orange Records in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo. ed.), I: 604-5. See Sept. 8, 1664; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944.

The Dutch council of war, by proclamation of this date, seizes "all the houses, goods and effects with the outstanding debts in this country remaining and belonging to the Kings of England, France and their subjects." On Sept. 10/20 (q. v.), this was affirmed, and the new condition added, "together with the houses, lands, goods and effects belonging to the Duke of York, his late Governor, and Auditor-General, and all other his Military officers in this country, as we do hereby confiscate them for the behoof of their said High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness [Prince of Orange], excepting alone the goods and effects belonging to the actual inhabitants of the neighboring Colonies of New England, Virginia and Maryland who for sufficient reasons are as yet excepted from this Confiscation."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 611-12.

" The newly organized board of burgomasters and schepens send Schout de Milt and Burgomaster Luyck to the Dutch naval commanders "to confer with them on some necessary matters." Having fulfilled their errand, they returned and reported that

- 1673 "they were expressly charged by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Commanders, that the Magistrates should take care, that the Burghers . . . be Aug.
Aug. 8-18 sworn forth; likewise that the Mace, Gowns and City Seal of the late Mayor Jan Lawrence be brought in together with the Constables' staves and the colours and headed over" to the commanders. Lawrence was sent for and informed of the order, with which he agreed to comply. The commanders, moreover, empowered the three burgomasters to become the new captains in the three burgher companies of the city and authorized them, with the schepens, to elect their lieutenants and ensigns. A beginning was made "to swear in the Burghers and inhabitants." Lawrence reappeared in court and delivered up "his gowns and cloak with the City Seal and Mace and the remainder of the gowns and Constables' staves" were "in like manner brought and fetched into the fort by the express order of the Commanders, except the two burgher flags," which were allowed, with the consent of the commanders, to remain at the house of Burgomaster Van Brugh.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 399.
- " It is resolved by the city court "to cause the collection of the great and small excise and to change the fines to double the amount," the fine to go one-third to the informer, one-third to the schout, and one-third to the city; also, that nobody shall "presume to tap without license under a penalty of 25 guilders," exemption being granted only to "the crews of the national vessels, the supreme and subaltern government and hospitals." Small beer is to be taxed at half the excise rate.
- " Balthazar Bayard was offered the collectorship of the tapsters' and burghers' excise, which he accepted on the 28th, to continue until May 1, 1674. His perquisites were five per cent. of the collections, and in addition "the proceeds of the permits." The court promulgated ordinances in regard to the excise fees to be operative within the jurisdiction of "the City of New Orange," which extended "unto the Sawkill" (Sawmill Creek entered East River at 74th St.). The tapsters were required to secure their licenses from Bayard. Those who kept boarders were to pay "half tapster excise." Regulations against smuggling, etc., were included, and the rating of the burghers' excise was laid down with precision. The office hours of the collector were fixed upon for both summer and winter seasons.
- " On Sept. 5, the court made additional provisions, that tapsters outside of the city proper could "lay in a barrel of strong beer at Burgher excise at harvest or the Merry Making and at burials both within and without this City;" that "all officers belonging to Fort Willem Hendrick must pay the full excise as well as the tapsters themselves," if they laid in and consumed wines or beer in the tapsters' houses; and that the payment of the excise should be made forthwith, if possible, or at least within 14 days.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 401-2, 403-4, 409.
- " Cornelis Barentsen, who has been measurer of grain and salt in the city "for about fifteen years," requests the new city court to continue him in office. The request is granted.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 399-400.
- 10-20 " Nicolas Bayard is commissioned by the Dutch council of war "as Secretary and Register of the Province of New Netherland."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 612-14.
- 12-22 " An order is issued by the burgomasters and schepens to the inhabitants of New Harlem to assemble on the morrow to nominate eight magistrates, all to be of the Reformed Christian religion. From this number the court will choose four (see Aug. 23).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), III: 92-93, in N. Y. Pub. Library. In Rec. N. Am., VI: 400, the 21st is given as the date of this order. This may be explained as the date when the magistrates instructed Secretary Bayard to issue the order.
- 13-23 " The inhabitants of the village of New Harlem having presented a double set of nominations for magistrates (see Aug. 12/22), the city court from these nominees chooses the following as schepens of the village, viz: Resolved Waldron, David de Marest, Joost Oblinus, and Arendt Harmesen. Hendrick Jansen van Vin is chosen as village secretary. Waldron is also selected by the city's schout to be under schout at New Harlem.—Harlem Recs., op. cit., III: 93; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 337; Rec. N. Am., VI: 400. In the Rec. N. Am., last cited, the clerk of New Orange appears to have erroneously included this and other items immediately following (in all about two printed pages) under Aug. 18. See, further, Aug. 15/25.
- " The inhabitants dwelling on Manhattan Island, between the city and the village of New Harlem, having nominated magistrates, the city bench elects from their number Jan Laegestraet as under schout; Dirck Jansen, Jacob Leenderesen, and Jan Pietersen, schepens; and Johannes van Couvenhoven, secretary. These take the oath and are required to take a census of the residents in their district and tender to each the oath of allegiance.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 400-1. Date not in original, but confirmed by Harlem Recs.
- " Hendrick Obe is chosen by the city court "as City-drummer for fl. 400 zewani," for which he is to "serve three Burgher Companies according to his ability."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 402.
- " The city court "resolved to order at public sale the produce of the Weigh Scales according to previous conditions."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 401. See Aug. 20/30.
- 14-24 " A letter from the "Commanders & Council of Warr" at New Orange is sent to Hartford, in reply to the one of Aug. 7/17 (q. v.), in which the commanders say: "We . . . are sent forth . . . to do all manner of damage unto the enemies of the said high and mighty lords, both by water and by land; from which cause we beings come here into Hudson's River have brought the land and forts within the same vnder obedience; and in regard the villages lying to the eastward of Oyster Bay did belong to this Governm<sup>t</sup> so it is to prevent all inconveniences we have cited the same to give the oath of fidelity; in which if they remain defective, we are resolved to force them with the armes likewise; alsoe we shall not be afraid to goe against those that shall seek to maintaine the said villages in their unjusts. Concerning the vessel that is taken by vs close to yo<sup>r</sup> havens, their is noe other consideration but that it was taken from yo<sup>r</sup> enemies, wherefore it appears very strange before vs that we should bee objected against concerning it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 585-86. See also Oct. 12, and Nov. 21, 1672.
- 15-25 " The new magistrates at New Harlem (see Aug. 13/23) summon the other inhabitants of the village and administer to 32 of them the oath of allegiance. In the classification given, three only are listed as Englishmen, eight are called "Yongmans" (i. e., unmarried), and 57 Rikers, op. cit., 337-38.
- 18-28 " The Dutch naval commanders and the council of war recommend to the city fathers "that the fortification of this City should be proceeded with, according as the engineer should order and stake it out, so that no broken works should be erected." The city court appoints Capt. Marten Cregier as superintendent, in association with the engineer of the work.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 406-7.
- " A committee from the court of burgomasters and schepens, after a conference with the naval commanders of the Dutch fleet and the council of war, reports as follows: "That the old stones of the Quay, wall, house and cellar and appurtenances thereof, belonging to an Englishman in other countries and now confiscated," shall "be again given to the City works in compensation for the stone heretofore taken, by the English government from the City's works."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 406.
- " The city court finds that the existing Sunday ordinances have been flagrantly violated by "many of the inhabitants," who also make "a custom" of frequenting "the taverns more" on Sundays "than on other days," and take "their delight in illegal exercises." The court now renews the former ordinances and, "from sunrise to sundown on Sundays," interdicts "all sorts of handicraft, trade and traffick, gaming, boat-racing, or running with carts or wagons, fishing, fowling, rouning and picking outis, strawberries, etc., all riotous racing, calling and shouting of children in the streets, together with all unlawful exercises and games, drunkenness, frequenting taverns or taphouses, dancing, cardplaying, ballplaying, rolling nine pins or bowls, etc.," which are "more in vogue on this than any other day." Heavy fines are prescribed for violations. If officers of the law catch children in disobedience of the law, they may "take their hat or upper garment," which is "not to be restored to the parents" until they have "paid a fine of two guilders." The intention of the law is not to prevent "a stranger or citizen" from buying "a drink of wine or beer" for quenching his thirst, "but only to prevent the sitting of clubs on the Sabbath," which has hindered many from "resorting to Divine Worship."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 405.
- " The city of New Orange was now being strengthened in its defences, "in this conjuncture of war," with earth and sod. Rooting hogs roamed in "great quantities" about the roads and streets to the damage of the city's works. The city court, therefore, requires all the owners of hogs within the city, and as far as the Fresh Water, to confine them within two days from date and no longer suffer them to roam about, under a penalty of confiscation.—Rec.

1673 N. Am., VI: 406. The penalty was increased by a later ordinance Aug. (see ibid., VII: 36).

18-28 The city bench orders that all fit persons who are "not yet on the watch" shall "be divided among the companies." Former labourers and porters at the weigh-house are continued in their places.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 402.

20-30 The city court unanimously agrees to let out the farming of the weigh-house (see Aug. 13/23), and fixes upon 3,000 fl. as the lowest figure.—(Rec. N. Am., VI: 407. On the next day, the court asked Balthazar Bayard if he would "also collect the Weigh-Money;" but he replied he could not as he had "already enough to do with collecting the tapsters and Burgher excise." Jonas Bartelsen was then sent for and asked if he would either "rent it or collect the money." He offered to serve, at a salary of 600 fl., until May 1, 1674; but he absolutely refused to take it on a percentage basis. The court could not come to an agreement with him and, on Sept. 4, after some deliberation and debate, the city authorities appointed Timotheus Gabry as "Collector of the Weighhouse" of the city, until May 1, 1674, at an honorarium of eight per cent. of the collections, the profits from receipts to accrue to the city.—Ibid., 408-9.

 St. 2. "Houwel Thompson," late servant of Mr. Lovelace, is ordered to "quit the government."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 597.

27-Sept. 6 The city court, in a petition to Commanders Evertsen and Benckes and the council of war, estimates the Dutch inhabitants of the province of New Netherland, including women and children, "to amount to six thousand souls." They have heard that the Dutch ships are all to depart and fear for their safety and that of the province in general, since they are surrounded by French and English, with whom the Dutch are technically at war. They say: "These enemies, albeit they now keep themselves somewhat quiet, will doubtless endeavor, by all possible means, to reduce this place under England so soon as they hear that we are again left to ourselves; our weakness and condition being as well known to them as to ourselves since they have had now 9 years' command over us." The city fathers plead with the commanders "to take to heart the welfare of so many innocent souls . . . and not leave them a prey to be destroyed or to be sold as slaves to the English plantations;" and ask them "to allow under the command and prudent conduct of at least one of the superior officers, two ships of war to winter here." The commanders give good heed, and agree, beside the garrison in the fort, to leave under Capt. Anthony Colve's command "one of our ships of War carrying forty guns, and a small frigate named the Zeehont," until other succor is sent from Fatheland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 598-600; see also 612, where the ship of war is mentioned as the "Serenam."

 Sept. 8 The schout, burgomasters, and schepens of New Orange (formerly New Amsterdam and New York), in a letter to the states-general, write: "It hath pleased the All-governing God so to bless your High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness' Arms under the command of Commanders Jacob Benckes and Cornelis Evertse, Junr, that this entire Province of New Netherland, consisting of three cities and thirty villages, was, to the great joy of its good inhabitants, on the 9th August last, reduced again under the obedience of your High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness, their lawful and native Sovereigns, from whose protection they were cut off about nine years ago in time of peace." The rest of the letter relates to the profitability of the province to the Fatheland and invokes the aid of the states-general in preserving it. It says: "the good Dutch inhabitants . . . with women and children" are "estimated to amount here to about six to seven thousand souls," but scattered, "in consequence of the vastness of the country."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 526-27; cf. also 538-39.

 Sept. 9 The ferry people at Harlem and Spuyten Duyvel are forbidden "to pass across any strangers from this Island, unless they first exhibit a put to that effect."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 603.

Sept. 9
 1-11 Gov. Leverett of Massachusetts writes to Sec. Arlington regarding the capture of New York, and adds: "I have certain intelligence that Albany is surrendered upon the same terms with New York." Gov. Lovelace has been arrested for debts and it is said the Dutch intend him for Holland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 205. See Aug. 23/Sept. 2.

" Former Gov. Lovelace is granted permission by the Dutch council of war to sail in Commander Benckes's ship to Holland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 603.

" The Dutch commanders issue a proclamation in which they order "all strangers" in the city of New Orange who have "not taken the oath of allegiance" or "obtained a license" from them to depart within one day after publication of the proclamation, or be "considered enemies of our State," and be "treated as spies and disturbers of its public peace." The inhabitants are forbidden to "lodge or give beds to any strangers or outside people of what Nation soever . . . before furnishing the names" and "places of their abode, to the Schout . . . before the going down of the sun." Violation subjects the guilty to a fine of 600 guilders, in beaver, for each person so harboured unlawfully. The names are to be delivered "every evening before drum-beat" to the "Officer in the Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 603-4. The oath of allegiance to the Dutch authority, as taken by the inhabitants of the city, and also as specifically subscribed by the English residents, is recorded in the minutes of the city court. The English residents who subscribed to the oath are not obliged to take up arms against the British crown in the war now in action between the states-general of The Netherlands and Great Britain.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 2. See Aug. 15/25 for oath of allegiance in New Harlem.

"The Sachems and Chiefs of the Hacksnagh Indians, accompanied by about 20 of their people," request an audience with the Dutch commanders and council of war in Fort Willem Hendrick. They are admitted, and say they are sent "by the rest of their Indians, to request" a continued state of peace with the Dutch. They bring "about 20 deer skins, 2 @ 3 laps of Beaver, and 1 string of Wampum." Their presents and proposals are accepted, and "in confirmation" they are presented with checkered linen, woolen hose, and some cartridges of powder.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 606.

Some sachems and chiefs from the Mohawks having come down "to see the naval force of the Commanders and to make a report thereon," are received at Fort Willem Hendrick by Benckes and Evertsen and presented with cloth, woolen hose, "3 cartridges of powder, and 3 muskets."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 608.

The houses, lands, goods, and effects belonging to the Duke of York, and to Gov. Lovelace and other late English officials in New York, are confiscated by order of the Dutch council of war.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 611-12. See also Chronology, Aug. 8/18, 1673. Cf. Winthrop Papers, XV: 124; in Mass. Hist. Soc., where the date is given as Sept. 14.

Nicolas Bayard is commissioned by the Dutch council of war as "Book-keeper and Receiver-General of the Public Revenue and payments of this newly conquered Province of New Netherland." His duties are "to collect and receive all public revenue and income, to give acquaintances for its receipt if needs be, also to keep account ad entry in form with all officers and servants, colonists and merchants, whenever demanded, of all public payments."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 613-14.

An order is issued to the major of the garrison in Fort Willem Hendrick. It contains the following regulations:

1. A corporal's guard from each company shall be put on duty each day, "when the arms shall be inspected by the sergeants and corporals of the guard."
2. The guard shall be relieved "at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and at 12 o'clock on Sunday," and the officer in command "during the watch shall wear his sash and be continually in the Fort, in order thus to be able to give an account of the watch, and in the morning to . . . report . . . what has occurred."
3. The reveille shall be beaten at daybreak, the gate opened as soon as it is light and shut before dark. When the drum beats the tattoo at nine, "all soldiers and matrosses shall quietly repair to their quarters without making the least noise."
4. "The corporals shall take good care . . . that not more than three or four [of their men] at the same time have leave to go and eat, pay particular attention that no strong drink be brought, much less drunk, in the guard-house; constantly teach the men the use of arms and punctually observe all orders . . . and, above all things, pay attention that no Dutchman nor Englishman (the city Magistrates excepted) come here into the Fort without permission."
5. "The Grand Rounds shall go before midnight and receive the word," but both before and after this, a cadet "shall continually go the rounds as well also on Sunday during Divine service."
6. The soldiers shall "weekly clean out their barracks and quarters." The corporals shall take care "that the arms of the guard be loaded with a loose ball, and whenever it is necessary to discharge the muskets, in order to clean them, that shall be done on the Battery after drawing the ball; and . . . each corporal on his watch shall

- 21= Provisional instructions are enacted at Fort William Henry Oct. regarding the duties of the scout and magistrates of New Harlem.
1 Among the provisions are the following: Care is to be taken to maintain the Reformed Christian religion; the scout is to preside over the court unless he be a party to a suit; cases not exceeding 60 guilders are to be tried by the magistrates, and a majority vote is to be decisive; a magistrate who is a party to a suit may not preside; criminal cases may be referred to the governor and council;
the scout and schepens may make orders regarding highways, land, the Sabbath, public buildings, fighting, and minor offences, but such orders must be submitted to the "High Magistracy" for approval before they are promulgated; the magistrates shall enforce placards, ordinances, etc. of the "High Magistracy;" they shall acknowledge and support the "Lord's States General of the United Netherlands and His Serene Highness the High Prince of Orange;" they may choose minor officers; the scout is to enforce the sentences of the schepens and to maintain public order; his fees are regulated and he is enjoined to accept of no bribes; the old magistrates are to nominate a double number of candidates from which the governor may select their successors.—Harlem Recs.
(MS. translation), I: 193-96.
- 23= Teunis Cray is allowed by the court of New Orange to be Oct. 3 measurer of apples, onions, and turnips in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 7. A similar office and the same incumbent are noted ten years earlier in New Amsterdam (see Sept. 14, 1663), and again under the English régime (see July 30, 1667).
- 24= As "great disorders" have arisen and are "growing more numer-Oct. 4 ous every day" among the garrison in Fort Willem Hendrick, it is considered expedient "to commit to paper some necessary orders extracted from the Articles of War." These regulations are to be read by the corporals to their men. They make the following provisions:
"1. Whosoever blasphemeth . . . shall be for the first offense fined and committed three days to prison on bread and water; and for the second offence shall have his tongue bored with a red hot iron, and . . . be banished out of this government and the United Provinces as a villain.
"2. Whosoever shall have uttered any words tending to sedition, mutiny or disobedience . . . shall suffer death.
"3. Whosoever shall go further than cannon range from the garrison, without his officer's consent, shall undergo corporal punishment.
"4. Whosoever neglects his guards . . . shall suffer death and whosoever neglects his parade . . . shall be seated three hours on the wooden horse . . .
"5. Any soldier found asleep on his post or whilst standing sentry shall be flogged without mercy . . .
"6. Whosoever shall absent himself from his guard-house, without his corporal's permission, shall suffer corporal punishment.
"7. Whosoever smites another . . . and blood flows, shall suffer loss of hand.
"8. Whosoever in a quarrel or fight shall call his comrade to help him, shall be hanged and strangled.
"9. Whosoever shall be found at night out of the Fort without his Captain's permission, shall suffer corporal punishment.
"10. Whoso challenges to fight shall be subject to corporal punishment . . .
"11. Whoso enters or leaves the Fort by any other way than through the ordinary gate, shall be hanged and strangled.
"12. The soldier who shall refuse to obey the orders of his officer
. . . shall suffer corporal punishment; in like manner shall be punished whoso disobeys any order communicated by beat of drum.
"13. Whosoever shall be found drunk on guard shall be broken and expelled the company . . .
"14. The soldier who resists his officer or commander shall suffer death.
"15. If the Provost or his men take one or more prisoners, no one . . . shall oppose it, nor rescue nor endeavor to rescue them; all on pain of corporal punishment." The next regulations are the same as the last three contained in the order of Sept. 21/Oct. 1 (q.v.). The concluding item states: "All other offences and crimes not specified in this ordinance shall be punished according to the placard, laws and customs of war."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 623-25.
- 28= The burgoasters of the city of New Orange having called at Oct. 8 Fort Willem Hendrick, Gov. Colve presents to them "the necessity of demolishing or removing some houses, gardens and orchards situate under the walls of this fortress Willem Hendrick, and the newly begun fortification of New Orange," and tells them to take the matter up with the owners of the said property.—N. Y. Col.

Docs., II: 629. See Sept. 6/16, 29/Oct. 9.

The burgoasters having reported in writing to Gov. Colve and Councillor Steenwyck the answer of the property owners (see Oct.
8), it is now resolved in council to "summon said owners to-morrow in the presence of the Burgoasters, and explain to them the necessity of the removal and promise to indemnify them for the loss of their ground and the removal of their houses on the valuation of arbitrators," and "an extraordinary duty" is established on exported beavers and other peltries, imported blankets and duffels, and imported wines, brandies, distilled liquors, rum, powder, lead, and guns, to raise the funds necessary to carry out this matter.—N. Y.
Col. Docs., II: 630. See Sept. 30/Oct. 10.

The summoned householders (vide supra) meet Gov. Colve, Councillor Steenwyck, and the three burgoasters at the city hall.
While some are satisfied with the plan for indemnification on award of arbitrators, others say they are not able to move. On the 11th, Councillor Steenwyck and the three burgoasters were authorized to act as appraisers, "with power to adjoin to themselves" one or two others, and then "report their proceedings to the Governor as soon as possible."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 630-31. Two carpenters were added to the board of arbitration.—Ibid., II: 635. See Oct. 7/17.

Thomas Williams and Thomas Delavall are partners in a vessel being built at Harlem, as shown by a contract exhibited in the city court, with Samuel Pell, ship carpenter. Elias Puddington is also mentioned as "one of the ship carpenters."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 25-26.

Cornelis van Borsum receives a patent (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., XXIII: 20-433, Albany) for a piece of land bounded approximately by the present Broadway, Centre St., Chambers and Duane Sts., and through which Reade St. now passes. A large part of the land became later the negroes' burying-ground. See April 10, 1696; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927, subject "Pottersfield"; Pl. 174, Vol. III; also Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 567-68.

The governor and council draw up the following order:
"Whereas Fort Willem Hendrick and the city of New Orange situate on Manhattans Island is seriously encumbered and weakened by the houses, gardens and orchards, which lie so close under its walls and bulwarks that it is impossible to defend it properly when occasion requires against its enemies . . . It is therefore considered necessary by the Governor-General, by and with the advice of his Council, to demolish pull down and remove the undernamed houses gardens and orchards, and the owners thereof are hereby most strictly ordered and commanded instantly to commence demolishing and pulling down their houses, gardens and orchards." The owners are to remove their condemned houses, gardens, etc. to certain lots which, by the governor's order, have been set aside in other parts of the city for that purpose. All those who are found to be "contumacious or negligent" in executing the removal will not only lose the indemnity below mentioned, but also, "on the first arrival of any ships," will have their houses "demolished or burned." The ordinance applies to the houses, gardens, and orchards of Peter de Riemer, Lodewyck Post, George Cabbet, Jan Dirksen Meyer, Jacobus van de Water, Symon Blanck, Andries Meyer, Gerrit Hendrick, and Peter Jansen Slott, all of which are "Situate under the walls and bulwarks of Fort Willem Hendrick," to the houses, gardens, and orchards of Gerrit Jansen Roos, Peter Stoutenburg, Henry Taylor, The Lutheran Congregation, Willem
van Vredenburg, Peter Jansen Mesier, Martin Meyer Smith, Augustine Hermanus, Lysbet Tyssen, and Peter Harmssen, all of which are "Situate under the fortification and bulwarks of the city of New Orange;" and the gardens and orchards of Johann van Brugh and Sara van Borsum. The expense incurred by the removal of the houses, as well as the value of the lots, is to be estimated "by impartial persons" and other lots of like value are to be given to each owner in lieu of the lots surrendered to the government, on which to replace their houses. Payment of indemnities for all losses sustained is to be made "from the extra duty" which is hereafter to be collected upon certain exports and imports, according to percentages set forth in the order.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 633-35.
The ordinance was published on Oct. 7/17.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 12.

1673 A second guard-house is noted in a court case of this date, in Oct. which recovery of payment is sought on a mortgage to Arent Jansen Moesman from Martin Hoffman, who had sold the property to Capt. Manning. This property is described as situated in Broadway next the guard-house.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 131-32. See also Ibid., VI: 190; VII: 18. For earlier owners of this property, see Castello Plan, II: 229, which locates it at Broadway and the present Wall St. This guard-house, then, was near the land gate. The earlier one was near the water gate.—See June 22, 1653; Castello Plan, II: 326.

7-17 The order of Gov. Colve and his council, for demolishing and removing certain houses "lying right under the fortifications" (evidently the wall, not the fort) of the city (see Oct. 6/16), includes that of "The Lutheran Congregation."—See Sept. 6/16. Reference thereto came up when the Lutherans asked Gov. Dongan for a certification of their property in 1684 (q. v.).—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 245.

" The appraisers appointed Sept. 30/Oct. 10 (q. v.) decided that the Lutheran congregation should receive the "lot in Company's garden No. 5" (see May 16/26, 1674), valued at 435 fl., and a balance of 415 fl., making a total of 850 fl. to cover the assessed value of the Lutherans' lot, together with the cost of removing the house.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 635-36.

" Abell Hardenbroeck is charged by Schout De Milt before the city court with delinquency and abusiveness; further, "being in the evening a prisoner at the City hall in the chamber of Pieter Schaeffbank" (the jailor), he "carried on and made a racket like a man possessed and mad, notwithstanding the efforts of Burgomaster Van Brugh, running up to the Court-room, and going away next morning, as if he had not been imprisoned." He was fined, recommitted to prison, obliged to apologize to the court, and condemned in the costs incurred.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 9-10.

" Allard Anthooy asks the city court to exempt him from the excise, because he takes boarders who are "officers of the fort and therefore exempt from excise." The court consents.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 11-12.

14-24 The Amsterdam board of admiralty informs the states-general concerning the expedition of Benckes and Evertsen, thus: "One Andries Michielse . . . presented himself to-day before our Board, and verbally reported that, after the abovementioned Captain Binckes, reinforced by Captain Cornelis Evertsen's squadron, had, together, burnt in the River of Virginia five English ships laden with tobacco, and captured six others, without having been able to effect anything further there, they had sailed for New Netherland, and became masters of the principal fortress situate on the Island Manhates, on the 9th of August ultimo; that also, before his departure on the nineteenth ditto, when he was dispatched with letters hither, he had heard that they had reduced another fort, situate some thirty leagues inland."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 527; cf. also 528-30.

15-25 The amounts received and expended on the fortifications of New Orange, with list of persons whose assessments remain unpaid, are recorded on a balance sheet of this date written in Dutch.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 27.

See A. 21-31 Gov. Colve issues an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to soldiers or sailors garrisoned at Fort Willem Hendrick.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 650. This ordinance was renewed on Jan. 14/24, 1674.—Ibid., 682.

" In a case against Thomas Lovelace, the governour's brother, the defendant is ordered to render an account within two weeks time "of the administration of the monies, contributed to the fortification" (see July 3, 1672); and it is decided that Lovelace's "private estate" is "not responsible therefore, unless it be found indebted thereunto."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 15-16. See Jan. 7/17, 1674.

23- Nov. 2 The late governour, Francis Lovelace, when he departed the province, had "many outstanding debts and liabilities;" wherefore Gov. Colve now appoints commissioners "to regulate the estate of said Mr. Lovelace and the government." Isaac Bedloo, who has been Lovelace's "Factor and Commissary," is now deceased; so Colve orders his widow to hand over to the newly appointed commissioners, "under proper inventory, all the books, accounts and papers in a way concerning the aforesaid government or fathership." Jacobus vande Water was added to the commission later, because he was able to "explain many doubtful items."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 651, 667.

27- Nov. 6 At a meeting in London of the council for trade and plantations, a committee report is offered concerning "y<sup>e</sup> reducing of New York," to the effect that "they have not yet had time fully to acquaint themselves in the State of that Affayres But having dis- coursed with y<sup>e</sup> Lord Baltimore on Saturday morning last concerning it, It is their opinion that notwithstanding ships cannot be conveniently sent thither, till after Christmas Since they conceive the Ships from hence should set Saile, so as to arrive there about the beginning of March, the entrance to New York being usually frozen up till about Equinox [see Nov. 3/13] yet it is necessary that it should be here presently taken into consideration & a project of y<sup>e</sup> whole design made, that so Advice may be Sent to Virginia by y<sup>e</sup> Ships now going thither, that the forces to be raised there & in Maryland, for this Occation, may be in readiness to be Shipped against y<sup>e</sup> coming of His Ma<sup>ty</sup>'s fleet thither." The council acts favourably upon the report.—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations, 1670-86 (MS.), in Cong. Library, I: 50-52. See Nov. 3/13.

Arent Evertsen Ketelars is appointed by the city court as corn measurer of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 19. So the grain measurer of New Amsterdam (see Jan. 22, 1657) and of New York (see Jan. 25, 1670) remains as a necessary official in New Orange.

The British council for trade and plantations at London considers various communications relating to the proposed recapture of New York, among them being the following: "Mr. Dyer a man who had been much conversant in New England informed y<sup>e</sup> Council That Road Island hath a safe Navigation to it for great Ships & is at no time of y<sup>e</sup> year Shutt off [vide supra], with Ice, And was therefore if y<sup>e</sup> King sends any Ships, for reducing New Yorke the fittest place for Rendezvous, from whence great Ships might Sayle to New Yorke on the outside of Long Island, & lesser vessels wth provisions & other necessaries might Sayle between Long Island & the maine Land, & attend y<sup>e</sup> Motions of y<sup>e</sup> New England forces w<sup>ch</sup> should march by Land.

"Both hee & M<sup>r</sup> Harwood agreed that New England would rayse men for this service if His Ma<sup>ty</sup> will please to commaund them. And both M<sup>r</sup> Carteret & M<sup>r</sup> Dyer agreed that New Yorke was never so frozen y<sup>e</sup> as to hinder ships from coming in y<sup>e</sup> Towne (see Oct. 17/27).

The city court gives instructions to the under schout and schepens of the suburbs lying between the Fresh Water and New Harlem, consisting of fourteen articles. They provide for the conduct of a subaltern court in civil cases not exceeding 100 fl., seawant, and also "minor criminal cases such as fighting, striking, scolding and such like," in the same sum. Appeal lies to the city bench, which is to have the ordinaances of the city court executed properly within its jurisdiction; to conduct the payment of awards for wolves shot on the island within its district, and to levy a tax on the inhabitants for the payment thereof; to properly maintaine the pound for stray animals; to see that the roads are kept passable from fallen trees; to provide for the choice of its successors in office; and to rely upon the city court for further instructions.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 23-25.

The under schout and schepens whose jurisdiction lies between the Fresh Water and New Harlem have, "according to their instruction, caused a suitable pound to be erected." Anybody who finds stray animals "in his tillage or pasture" may "immediately drive them to the pound and deliver them to the Pound Keeper to lock them up," whence they are not to be released except upon payment of prescribed fines and for the damage they have caused. Interference with the arrest of animals is punishable by fines. If an animal is left longer than three days in the pound, the cost of fodder rests upon the owner or lessee, and if not "claimed within three months," the animal is to "be sold to the highest bidder for payment of damages and fine" and "the surplus" is to "be applied according to law." Animals that are "wont to leap over proper fences" must "be tied up, or removed elsewhere" when the under schout and schepens give notice.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 22-23.

Instructions for the overseers of fences and highways between New Harlem and the Fresh Water having been drawn up are now confirmed by the city court. They are required "on the first opportunity in a body" to "inspect all fences ad roads between the Fresh Water and N. Haerlem," and to direct the owners to repair such as need it. Neglect by owners of the demands of the 1673 overseers, leads to fines of 25 fl. for the first, 50 fl. for the second, and Nov. 100 fl. for the third dereliction, "together with all damage done to 4=14 the grain or crops." The overseers can summon persons to appear personally or by a proper substitute at any particular place "to aid in repairing a highway or to make a new road," and those who fail therein are subject to a fine of six guilders for every day's remissness. If one neighbour maintains that another neighbour's fences are not "good or sufficient," and dreads "damage thereby," he is "first [to] request his neighbour in love and friendship to repair his fence," and, failing to move him, to make his complaint to the overseers, who then are obligated to make inspection as soon as possible. If the overseers find the complaint to be just, "the person complained of" is to pay them ten guilders "for the journey and inspection," and to make the repairs on their order; but if the complaint is unwarranted, the complainant is to pay the ten guilders to the overseers for their trouble. As "divers lands" lie "within one fence," the overseers are required to mark out each party's share, to be kept in order. No one is to "pasture cattle on the lands and valleys lying in common except by common consent, when all the crops shall have been removed;" if anyone wishes to use a part for pasture, he can fence in so much land at his own expense. Provisions are made for collecting fines, for notifying interested parties about the rules, and for regulating the office and duties of the overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 20-22.

8=18 The Earl of Arlington informs the council for trade and plantations that he has received "Intelligence out of Holla<sup>d</sup> . . .
that they were sending Six men of War, to reinforce Everson but hee could not Lay any great Streets upon this information." The council orders that the secretary draw up an address containing suggestions for the campaign against New York to present to the king.—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations (MS.), op. cit., I: 54-55. For details of this plan, see Nov. 15/25.

15=25 In compliance with the order of the council for trade and plantations issued on Nov. 8/18 (q. v.), the secretary presents to the Earl of Arlington a communication for the king, in which is emphasized the need of retaking New York, and in which is contained a detailed plan for such accomplishment. The danger arising to the colonies adjoining New York, New England on the one side and Maryland and Virginia on the other, from the occupancy of New York by a hostile nation is pointed out. This is the only fortified harbour along the coast, and offers a retreat for ships from which they may do incalculable damage to the Virginia trade, resulting in loss of custom duties alone of from £120,000 to £140,000, while the plantations, by loss of export and import facilities, may well be ruined.
Trade with, indeed the existence of, the Caribbean Islands is also threatened.

New England is more populous and better able to defend itself against the enemy, but the danger there lies in the fact that "Since ye<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of New England, being more intent, upon ye<sup>e</sup> advancem<sup>t</sup> of their owne private trade, then ye<sup>e</sup> publique Interest of ye<sup>e</sup> Maties Crowne and Governm<sup>t</sup>, may if ye<sup>e</sup> Dutch continue a quiett possession there, enter into comerce wth them, whereby it is to be feared, they will at present divert a great part of ye<sup>e</sup> Trade of England into those Countries," and lay a prejudicial foundation for a union between them and Holland.

It is probable that the English inhabitants of the eastern part of Long Island have not surrendered to the Dutch. The English have a superiority of numbers over the Dutch inhabitants, and if a force be sent from England speedily they will be in a good position to aid in retaking New York. The council therefore offers the following suggestions:

1. "One 3<sup>d</sup> rate, One 4th rate, two 5th rates, wth 3 hired Merchant ships each whereof should carry upwards of 40 Guns, 3 fireships, & 600 Foote Souldiers are absolutely necessary." The three hired merchant-ships should have their "complement made up in good part of Landmen, that so as few Seamen as possible may be taken from ye<sup>e</sup> Maties service in other places."

2. The "600 foote should be distributed into six Merchant Ships as are going to Virginia, to some of w<sup>ch</sup> it may be convenient that ye<sup>e</sup> Maties should lend some great Guns."

3. An embargo should be laid "upon all ships preparing for Virginia, Mary Land, & ye<sup>e</sup> rest of ye<sup>e</sup> Northern Plantations, That none be suffered to goe before this convoy, and none then but strong and serviceable vessels, & that all such Merchant ships as go wth this convoy be obliged to follow your Maties ships & to receive orders from them." Passengers and servants going to Virginia on the merchant ships are to be trained by the officers of the expedition. Nov. 15=25

4. Enough powder and other ammunition are to be carried to supply New York and Albany, when taken, for their defence.

5. All possible secrecy must be observed, only as many men-of-war going out of the Thames with the merchantmen as may serve as a convoy, the others and the 600 foot soldiers joining them at Plymouth or some other convenient port. At that time the commander-in-chief is to open his commission and instructions, and not before.

6. Preparations should be made with all haste for the voyage to New York and, when within convenient distance from the coast, one small ship shall be dispatched to Rhode Island and one to the eastern end of Long Island with orders to raise forces in New England and Long Island to aid in this design.

7. If the expedition prove successful, the Dutch which remain in the colony should be "removed farther up into ye<sup>e</sup> Country from ye<sup>e</sup> Sea side, at least as far as Albany, their inhabiting ye<sup>e</sup> towne of New-Yorke being a great cause of ye<sup>e</sup> loss of both Towne & Castle now."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 211-13. New York was, however, returned to England by treaty (see Feb. 9/19, 1674).

The city court publishes the proclamation of Gov. Colve for a day of general fasting, thanksgiving, and prayer, to be observed in the city and province "on the first Wednesday of each month."
The next day, the court sent a copy of this proclamation to the district beyond the Fresh Water.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 30. 18=28

The carters of the city are assembled in the city court and asked if they will consent to a deduction from their wages for their share in paying for the work on the fortifications of the city. They agree to leave the matter to the discretion of the court, which decrees
"that seven guilders per day . . . be deducted from each carter's a/c on the City book, for horse and cart, and that each of them shall "henceforth work in company like the other Burghers."— Rec. N. Am., VII: 30-31. 19=29

Capt. Everteest, commander of the ship "Surinam," having sailed away from the city, the city court sends the three burgomasters to Gov. Colve "to ascertain the reason," since it was "contrary to the tenour of the apostille granted" in response "to their petition presented to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Commanders and the Council of War," Sept. 6, preceding. Colve informs them he cannot and will not "explain to any person his resolution and intention," but assures "the whole Burghery in their name that with or without that ship" he will not "undertake nor execute any thing except what" he shall "consider serviceable and expedient for the fort, the City and the Burghery."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 31. 22=

Francis Beado, a native of London, is sentenced by the Dutch provincial council at Fort Willem Hendrick for having come to New Netherland "without consent" in order "to disturb the good people thereof." Beado has claimed to have a "commission" empowering him "by fire and sword to attack, rob, burn and destroy" the inhabitants, "which he also threatened to put in execution in the village of Fordham and would have doubtless carried out had he not been prevented by arrest." He is sentenced "to be brought to the place where justice is usually executed and there placed at the stake to be firmly bound and to be branded on the back with a red hot iron," and then banished. This sentence was executed on the 20th of the month.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 665-66. Dec. 8

Gov. Colve has found that, contrary to orders and proclamations hitherto issued, "many strangers, yea enemies of this state," have attempted to come to New Netherland without a passport, and some "even presumed to show themselves within this city N.
Orange." The inhabitants, too, "forgetting their oath of allegiance," have kept up a daily correspondence "with the neighboring Colonies of New England and other enemies of this state." Former edicts are now renewed, and all persons who have not yet bound themselves by an oath of allegiance to the Dutch sovereignty are given 24 hours' time to leave New Netherland. Strangers without passport are to be treated as spies and punished as such. The inhabitants are not to lodge strangers over night, or to hold any intercourse with New England, or "afford them supplies of any description." All persons are "expressly forbidden to take charge of, much less deliver, any letters coming from the enemy's places or going thither." Mail must be delivered at the secretary's office to be examined.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 666-67. See also Dec. 12/22, 1673. Dec. 2=12

By a secret resolution of the states-general, relating to the government of New Netherland, Joris Andringa, who was secretary See A. 3=13 5=15

1673 of De Ruyster's fleet, is "appointed and commissioned" goverour Dec. of New Netherland as successor to Anthony Colve, to "be Chief 5-15 and Supreme Ruler, both in civil and military affairs," subject to orders from the board of admiralty of Amsterdam.—*N. Y. Col.
Docs.*, II: 530-31, 537.

" Capt. Willem Kniff, commanding a company of Dutch infantry in Fort Willem Hendrick, is commissioned by Gov. Colve as provincial " Fiscal and Public Prosecutor of the Province of New Netherland." His duties are to promote its increase, population, peace, and quiet, and to take care that the sovereign jurisdiction and domain are "maintained without suffering anything to be directly or indirectly attempted to the prejudice or injury thereof;
also to apprehend and prosecute all malefactors, whether criminal, political, or military," in provincial matters, and to "pay particular attention that all scandals, irregularities and ungodliness be driven from this Province;" also "to execute all placards and ordinances" as well as "all sentences and judgements of the supreme magistracy."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 668-69.

9-19 Gov. Colve issues an order as follows: "Whereas, divers outside people have requested, for the better security of their families and goods against any attack of the enemy, that they may be permitted to remove them hither within this city, and that some houses may be appropriated for that purpose; also, that for the present some orders may be issued respecting the Long Island Ferry, to the end that their property to be sent across, may be conveyed over with all possible expedition." [etc]. To carry out this purpose he commissions Councillor Steenwyck, Cornelis van Ruyven, and Burgomaster Van Brugh "to inspect all houses and dwellings within this city, to ascertain what rooms therein can be hereafter conveniently vacated, and to billet therein such outside people as apply to them; likewise, to issue such orders respecting the Ferry as they shall deem necessary for the better accommodation of housekeepers."
—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 669-70.

11-21 Allard Anthony is "admitted a public notary and attorney in private suits pending before the superior and inferior courts" of New Netherland. He was sworn in on January 1/11, 1674.—*N. Y.
Col. Docs.*, II: 671, 677.

" On or about this date, the militia officers are summoned by Gov.
Colve to the fort and thanked "for the great zeal they exhibited in fortifying" the city. He urges them "to persevere therein until the work be completed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 670.

12-22 Cornelis Steenwyck, formerly captain of horse, is commissioned captain of a new company of militia of the city.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 671.

13-23 Gov. Colve and council prohibit "the exportation from this city from this day forth of all provisions and other articles except so much as each of the inhabitants of this Province residing on the flat land, shall have need of for their families and no more."
The inhabitants of the city are also commanded "to begin to lay in a supply of necessary provisions for six or eight consecutive months commencing next April."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 671. This order was issued by the mayor's court Dec. 17/27.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35.

See A. Gov. Colve, in view of the expected arrival of an English fleet, 16-26 orders the militia companies of the Dutch towns on Long Island to appear "fully armed . . . the 29th instant, in the forenoon, in the city of New Orange, in front of Fort Willem Hendrick." One-third of each company shall then be furloughed for the present, to remain in their respective towns until relieved by another corporal's guard. The officers and magistrates may give such orders respecting "threshing and foddering the cattle" as best suits their districts. Both a day and night guard must be kept, so that they may not be "surprised by the enemy or cut off from us."—*N. Y.
Col. Docs.*, II: 13.

17-27 Gov. Colve, realizing the need of vigilance, recommends to the schout, magistrates, and inhabitants of New Harlem and Fordham, that they "keep a wakeful eye on all designs which may be concocted against this Province or yourselves in particular, and always . . . be ready to transport your families and movables hither on certain information of the [English] enemy's approach, or on special command from me." For this purpose he names Resolved Waldron as "chief officer of the militia of the towons of Haerlem and Fordham," and each town is "required to choose a Sergeant."—*N. Y.
Col. Docs.*, II: 673-74.

" The fortifications of the city being now "mostly completed," Gov. Colve issues orders "for the preservation of the same and better security of this City," as follows: That henceforth "the Burgher watch" of the city shall "be set and commence at drumbeat about half an hour before sun down, when the train bands" of the city

"then on guard" shall "parade before the City Hall;" that "the City gate" shall "be closed at sun down by the Mayor of this City and his attendant trainbands and in like manner opened at sun rise;" that nobody, save "the watch alone," shall "attempt coming from sunset to sunrise on the bulwarks, bastions or batteries" of the city "on pain of bodily correction;" that anybody, without exception, who presumes "to land within" the city, "or quit the same in any other manner, way or means then through the ordinary City gate," shall be subject to the death penalty; and that hogs in the city be kept off "the bulwarks, bastions, gardens or batteries," subject to confiscation and fine upon the owners.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35-36; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 674.

The colony of Manhattan is "bless'd with the richest soil in all New-England, I have heard it reported from men of Judgement and Integrity, that one Bushel of European-Wheat hath yielded a hundred in one year. Their other Commodities are Furs, and the like. New-York is situated at the mouth of the great River Mohegan, and is built with Dutch Brick alla-moderna, the meanest house therein being valued at One hundred pounds, to the Landward it is compassed with a Wall of good thickness; at the entrance of the River is an Island well fortified, and hath command of any Ship that shall attempt to pass without their leave."—Josselyn, An Account of Two Voyages to New-England (1674), 153-54. The writer narrates the capture of New York by the English in 1664.

A court case in Harlem, April 5, 1677, brought out testimony that "they of the French congregation, in the time of Gov. Francis Lovelace, having received a preacher, the aforesaid governeur had said that 'the French of the Town of New Harlem should be free as to contributing to the Dutch voorleser.'"—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 375-76.

"Rev. Pierre Daillé is said to have been the first 'pastor' of the French Church in New York. But according to the reference in the text, a 'preacher' had preceded him by ten years or more, whose name, however, is unknown to us. The statement is of interest as showing that the refugees at N. Y. and H. joined to introduce and sustain the French service as early as 1674."—Ibid., footnote.

In this year, Samuel Sewall, of Boston, began his interesting diary, which he continued until 1729.—Winsor, op. cit., V: 167.
Jacobus vande Water is commissioned as town major and "auditor of the court martial" (see Oct. 15/25) of the city of New Orange.

The Dutch magistrates of New Orange decide that it is necessary to retain the former custom of having fire-wardens. Four men are appointed, two of whom have been fire-wardens under the English régime (see Oct. 8, 1672). They are "requested and authorized to execute and fill the aforesaid office . . . in such manner as the same has been heretofore executed and filled."—*Rec. N.
Am.*, VII: 35. See Jan. 20/30.

Gov. Colve presents in the city court "a provisional instruction for the Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens," consisting of fifteen articles. Among the directions are these:—"to take care that the Reformed Christian Religion, conformable to the Synod of Dordrecht," is "maintained, without suffering any other sects attempting any thing contrary therunto;" that the schout shall "be present at all meetings and preside over them unless" Gov. Colve
"or some person appointed by him" be present, who shall then preside, and the schout shall "take rank" on such occasions "below the youngest acting Burgomaster;" that the schout is "not to sit on the bench when acting as prosecutor before the court; that "all matters appertaining to the police, security and peace of the inhabitants," as well as "justice between man and man," in cases not exceeding 50 beavers, shall be finally determined by them, and, in all cases in excess, an appeal may be made to the supreme bench of governeur-general and council; that "all criminal offences" in the city's jurisdiction are to "be amenable to the judicature" of the city court, which shall "have power to judge and sentence the same even unto Death," yet "that no sentence of corporal punishment" shall "be executed unless the approval of the Governour" has been "first sought and obtained;" that the presiding burgomaster shall convoke the court and, on "the night before, make the same known to Capt. Willem Kniff" (the provincial fiscal), who is to "preside over the Court in the name and on the behalf of the Governo<sup>r</sup>;" that the presiding burgo-master shall put all motions and the governo<sup>r</sup>'s representative to vote first, followed by "the remaining Magistrates, each according to his rank," and in case of a tie to be decided by the president, whilst the record of the vote, entered upon the minutes, is to be withheld from publicity; that the burgo-masters shall "change rank every half year," succeeding one another in the presidency according to seniority, except during the current year, when the change shall occur every four months, because there are three burgo-masters on the bench; that court days shall be established; that the court shall "have power to enact, and with the approbation of the Governo<sup>r</sup> publish and affix statutes, Ordinances and Placards for the peace, quiet and advantage" of the city and its people, yet not conflicting with the laws of the mother country, and to enforce obedience to the edicts of the supreme authority and execute the orders of the governour-general, acknowledge the authority of the states-general and the Prince of Orange "as their sovereign rulers," and "maintain their high jurisdiction, right and domain in this country." With the exception of the secretary of the city, they are to elect and confirm "all inferior Officers and servants in the employ" of the city, and the schout, as peace officer and prosecutor, is to execute all the judgments of the bench and cleanse the jurisdiction of vagabonds and vice, receiving therefor "all fines imposed during his time," if not annually in excess of 1,200 guilders, seawant. The members of the court are to provide for their successors, by convening an assembly on Aug. 14, "being eight days before the election of new Magistrates, and in [the] presence of the Commissioners to be qualified for that purpose by the Hon: Governo<sup>r</sup> General nominate a double number of the best qualified honorable and most wealthy persons and such only as" are "of the Reformed Christian Religion, or at least well affected towards it, as Schout, Burgo-masters and Schepens," handing the nominations, "folded and sealed, on the same day," to the governour-general, from which he shall make election of the new bench on August 17.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 36-39; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 678-81. The burgo-masters and schepens, having heard the instructions read, resolve "to adjourn the meeting until the next morning, to revise and consider the instructions granted." This fact is communicated by the presiding burgo-master, Johannes de Peyster, to Capt. Knyff, who immediately quits the meeting and separates from them.

The three burgo-masters were then sent to see Gov. Colve at the fort. He asked them why they had adjourned so abruptly and "refused to allow Capt. Knyff to preside." They answered "that not the smallest disrespect was committed, but that they had adjourned the meeting to examine the newly granted instruction and that when Capt. Knyff was informed thereof he had left the meeting." After the case had been argued, pro and con, Colve ordered them to "forthwith repair back to the City Hall, to give without delay conjointly a categorical answer, as to whether they would allow Knyff "to preside at their Court," and, if they refused, he would "immediately dismiss and discharge" the whole bench and appoint others in their places. Moreover, Colve despatched Cornelis Steenwyck, of his council, and Nicolas Bayard, the provincial secretary, to the city court to receive their answer and exhibit their written discharge, in case of their refusal to allow Knyff to preside. The city bench, having "considered and weighed" the situation, voted unanimously to reply that they appreciated the presence of the governour in their court as "a great condescension" on his part; that if he had "any doubt or misgiving" of their "judicial proceedings or behaviour," he should "inspect and examine the Minutes," which would show clearly what they had done; that they thought it proper to say, briefly, that what he desired conflicted "with the laws, statutes, and Ordinances" of the mother country, which their "commission and oath" bound them "to observe and obey;" that it was "manifestly prejudicial to the privileges of this Bench and Burgbery," a depreciation of their character, and contrary to the practice of the cities of the Fatherland; furthermore, it could not be otherwise "than prejudicial to the public peace of this Burgbery," as already shown by the unjust accusation by Capt. Knyff; that they were "grieved" to find that all their "solicitude, trouble, care, and labour expended to this time for the good" of the city and its people "should be requited by a dismissal for bad and illegal conduct," and "beseeching" Colve "to arrange the matter in a more gentle manner" and not misinterpret their zeal for the welfare of the city. Their answer was present to Colve by the three burgo-masters and Schepen Willem Beekman; but Colve persisted and sent back his agents, Steenwyck and Bayard, to demand the compliance of the bench, which again despatched its committee to the governour, with the following answer: that they persisted in their judgment as previously sent; yet, not wishing "to directly contravene" the governour's "command and injunction," they concluded, whilst still insisting on the right and privileges of their bench, and "in order to prevent future mischiefs and difficulties," to grant the governour's wish "provisionally for this time," and permit Capt. Knyff to preside over their bench.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 40-43. On the following day (Jan. 17), the minutes of the city court show "Capt. Willem Knyff on behalf of the Governo<sup>r</sup> presiding," with Anthony de Milt in attendance as schout. Knyff continued at the head of the court in his capacity as fiscal during the term, and, when in August a new bench was elected, Knyff continued as the president in the capacity of schout.—Ibid., VII: 43, 113.

The city court having found itself embarrassed by "the expences successively incurred in fortifying this City of N. Orange" and troubled by the demands made upon the city "by its creditors for payment and earned wages" (whereas, "little or nothing" has been received from "the outside people"), the court, acting in unison, appeals to Gov. Colve for relief. He merely answers that he will "take their proposition into consideration," and appoint some persons to consult with them on ways and means, but prefers that the bench should find a way of furnishing the funds.

The court again sent its committee to remind the governour of "the verbal promise" he and the Dutch naval commanders had made, that "if necessity required it," the city would be granted "the proceeds of the tapsters and weighhouse excise" for as long a time as required. As this excise did not promise an immediate way out, the court recommended to Colve the authorization of a loan for the city from "amongst some of the most wealthy inhabitants."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 39-40. See Jan. 27/Feb. 6.

At the request of one Jan Cooly (John Cooley), the city court appoints Jacob Leisler and Dirck van Clyff "to examine the books and papers of the fortification of the Fort, lately called James, which now remain in the hands of Steur francoys Rombouts and to render a report of their award at the next Court day."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 46. See Jan. 20/30.

The ordinance prohibiting sale, barter, or gifts of intoxicants to soldiers of the garrison of the city or to sailors in the public service is renewed, because it has been daily violated by some inhabitants.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 682. See also Oct. 21/31, 1673.

The fire-wardens (see Dec. 26/Jan. 5) report in writing on "the number of fire buckets and other fire implements," and ask the city court to give an order for "such fire hooks and ladders" as are necessary.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 49.

Jacob Leisler and Dirck van Clyff (see Jan. 7/17) deliver to the city court "their report and award . . . from which they cannot see that Thomas Lovelace owes any thing etc." The court then orders, "that John Cooly shall render further proof, that Thomas Lovelace has received any effects."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 49. Cooley, at the next session of the court, sought a "delay," and eventually failed to show proof.—Ibid., VII: 51, 94.

The city fathers, in a petition, having informed Gov. Colve that the city is heavily in debt on account "of the excessive expences incurred . . . in the fortification" thereof, and the creditors daily demanding payment, the burgo-masters and schepens request "that some expedient be found and invented for the payment and discharge of those expences already incurred, and yet to be incurred, for completing said fortifications." Gov. Colve thinks this a reasonable demand and concludes that the most equitable solution lies in "a tax on the wealthiest and most affluent inhabitants." He orders "that an assessed tax be levied on the estate and means, without any exception, of all the inhabitants of this city of New Orange, those alone being exempted whose capital" is not above 1,000 guilders in wampum value; and, in order that the execution of the order may "be effected in the tenderest and fairest manner," Colve resolves that the assessment is to be levied "by six indifferent persons." This tax commission consists of Cornelis Steenwyck and Nicolas Bayard, representing the provincial government, Cornelis van Ruysen and Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, representing the Commonalty, and two deputies of the city bench. "A like commission" is also given to Burgo-masters Van Brugh and Luyck, Schepen Kip, and the merchants, Capt. Martin

Jan. Because of the opposition on the part of the city bench to Gov. Colve's representative, Capt. Kniff, as presiding officer (see Jan. 6/16), especial interest is attached to a court case of this date in which the regular members oppose as a body the judgment of Kniff.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 50.

"Complaints having been lodged against the city carters, charging some of them with unwillingness "to ride timber, stone and other materials for the City and public service," the city court decrees, that upon "their first refusal or exhibition of unwillingness, their horses" shall "be immediately untacked, and they be deprived of their places of carters."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 51.

"Pursuant to order and apostille," issued by Colve on Feb. 1, "on a Petition presented by this W. Court Jan'y. 16th" (q. v.), the city bench "commissioned and qualified from their Court . . . the president Burgomaster Johannis de Peyster and Schepen Wm Beeckman to help make out with the Commissioners on the part of the Supreme Government and Commonalty, a general assessment enacted by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Govern<sup>r</sup> and put the same into execution according to his Hon<sup>or</sup>'s order." On the 10th, the city court, "being assembled Collegialiter," addressed a letter to the villages of Midwout, Breuckelen, and Amesford, in which they said they had "waited until now before calling" on them "to fulfill" their "engagement and promise to furnish and collect" for the city "some monies," and requested them "particularly to assist" and "send the monies demanded by the earliest opportunity."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 51-52. See Feb. 14/24.

11-10 Feb. "The Hon. Lord Governor General and rigorous Council of War of N. Netherland dispensing justice in the name and by authority of their High Mightinesses . . . have condemned and sentenced . . . Aml Cesar . . . that with the upper part of the body naked he shall run through the garrison of this fortress and be beaten with Switches for as long as the Council of War shall deem well; and thereupon, with the ensign above the head, shall again be admitted among the company, in order to perform his duty as before." At the same time Jacob Farnout is sentenced to run the gauntlet in a similar manner, "his sword to be broken before [his] feet by the executioner," and he to be banished from the island for four years. Jacob Frick must "ride the wooden horse with 24 lb. weight on each leg, during the time that Jacob Farnout shall run the gauntlet."—Translated from the Dutch in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 305-6.

Feb. On this date, Colve finds that "the respective Commissioners appointed at two different times to value the property of the Burghers" had "made a written report of their assessment," varying very much "in divers items," so he ordered that each set of commissioners should name three, "each in its Board," who were to meet at the city hall on the following Monday morning (19th) to consider anew and "revise the valuation" which had been made, doing so by plurality vote, and then report the result in writing.—Ibid., II: 688. See Feb. 9/19.

9-19 On this date, pursuant to a second order of the governour-general (Colve), the valuation is obtained, "in the city Hall of this City, by the Commissioners, from the second compiled valuation of the best and most affluent inhabitants of this city." The list of 62 names is recorded, with a total valuation of 520,900 fl. in Holland currency on 62 estates. Frederick Felipeus was the highest assessed, with 80,000 fl.; Cornelis Steaweyck and Nicolaes de Meyer followed with 50,000 fl. each; Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, with 45,000 fl.; Jeronimus Ebbingh, 30,000 fl.; Cornelis van Ruyven, 18,000 fl.; and Johannes de Peyster and Jacob Leisler, 15,000 fl. each.—Ibid., II: 699-700; Ecles. Rec., I: 641-43. For a later order, see March 7/17. Valentine, in Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 805-9, gives in three separate columns the first valuation, the second valuation, and the "extracted valuation."

Another interesting list of the inhabitants and their property at this time was compiled by Valentine, who explains that his estimate of the wealth of the several inhabitants is not based upon any one document, but is compiled from several sources and is designed to be only an approximate valuation. The inhabitants are grouped by streets. He describes the compilation as a "List of the Owners Of houses and lots in the city, about the year 1674, at the final cession to the English; the property being classified according to its relative value, as first, second, third and fourth; with the national descent of the persons named—given to illustrate the condition of the population at that era—and their estimated wealth."—Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y., 319 and footnote.

The Treaty of Westminster is signed by Arlington and four other commissioners on the part of Great Britain, and by Fresno on the part of the United Netherlands. Its provisions are, in part, as follows:

1. The honour of the flag is yielded to England. In a letter from Gov. Leverett of Massachusetts to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, Leverett somewhat elaborated this article: "The states General to give due acknowledgement of the flag whether single or in fleets . . . to any ship or vessel, belong to his majesty of Great Brittain whether single or greater Number if they carry his majesties flag or Jacke."—Winthrop Papers, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 3d ser., X: 104.
2. The Treaty of Breda is revived.
3. The rights of neutrals are guaranteed.
4. The commercial principles of the Triple Alliance are renewed.

By the sixth article, it is covenanted that "all lands, islands, cities, havens, castles and fortresses" taken by one party from the other before the time limited for the duration of hostilities shall be restored to the former owner. This article restored New Netherland to Great Britain (see Oct. 31/Nov. 10). The Treaty of Breda had ceded it to the king on the principle of "uti possidetis"; the Treaty of Westminster gave it back to him on the principle of "reciprocal restitution."—Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 251, and authorities there cited. The Leverett letter, op. cit., mentions a provision requiring the states-general of The Netherlands to pay "800,000 palacons one fourth on the Ratification of the Treaty the rest in three ensuing years by equal portions."

News of the signing of the treaty, and the consequent cessation of hostilities, did not reach New York until July 1/11 (q. v.).

The first printed reference to the final cession of New York to England is contained (on p. 7) in *His Majesties Gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, January 24, 1673-4. XXI (on "How the Dutch Came and Went").

The use of any other measures or weights than "the real Amsterdam measure and weight" is prohibited by a provincial edict. All merchants, shopkeepers, or others using measures or weights are ordered to have them stamped within two weeks "by the sworn Sealer."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 688.

Isaack Kip is granted the office of official stamper and brander by the city court; he was sworn on the 27th.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 58, 65. See Feb. 24/Mar. 6.

The city bench resolves "to give notice of the contracting next Thursday [22d] for some hundred palisades for the fortification" of the city, and chooses the schout and schepens Jacob Kip and Gelya Verplanck to close a contract for the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 59.

Complaints being made daily "to the Burgomasters and Burgher Chief Officers" against "many of the inhabitants" of the city who, contrary to orders, fail to "appear at the appointed time in their respective companies to aid in advancing the public necessary work of fortifying" the city, the city court renews its order "that each and every one" shall "repair to his company and corporal's squad at the appointed day and place of work and there advance the public necessary work," on pain of a fine of six fl. per day, or three fl. per half-day, etc., for lost time, the fines to "be collected and gathered precisely every week by the Provost and the respective Corporals," who are "charged to Keep a correct Account and list of the absent persons."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 60-61.

Cornelis Steaweyck and Cornelis van Ruyven have come into the city court and declared they were commissioned by Gov. Colve to make a statement in regard to the court's petition about "furnishing of some monies for the fortifying" of the city, and that Colve, "having seen and considered the assessment made," thought "the required monies should be borrowed in the form of loans from the richest and wealthiest inhabitants" (see Jan. 6/16) of the city, "and that each of the taxed should advance the hundredth penny thereto [see June 2/12] which loaned monies should be re-paid from certain extraordinary imports enacted" by the governour "to be paid for

- 1674 this purpose on all imported and exported Indian goods and merchandise;” also that the governor thought some persons, such as the least wealthy or widows, should be excluded from the obligation; and that he “judged it most proper to make use of the said monies as well to strengthen the Fort and City and for this purpose to appoint two Commissioners to dispose of the receipt and disbursement, in consideration whereof the contributions to be collected for this purpose from Willemstadt and other places should be again used both for the fortification of the City and fort.” The city bench approves the governor’s proposal.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 65.
- 16-26 Arien Cornelissen, being asked by the city court “for payment of some wines and beer found at his house on the first gauging,” replies “that he gave in the wine at thrashing time and drank the beer himself.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 62-63. See Aug. 22, 1665. Cornelissen lived “a little out of town, beyond the Fresh Water.”—See Danckwerts’s Journal, 1679.
- 17-27 The fire-wards (see Dec. 26/Jan. 5) present to the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens a detailed report of their findings. They say that, on Jan. 5, they visited “the houses of all the inhabitants” of the city “and found divers fire places very much exposed to cause a conflagration,” for which reason they “warned and notified” such persons “to remedy and improve the same, thus to prevent mischief.” They also caused the City Crier to make known, that if any one of the inhabitants “had possession of “any City fire buckets,” he was “to deliver them up without delay at the City Hall” or hand them to the fire-wards; but they were not able to collect more than 57 fire-buckets, three of which were being repaired by Abel Hardenbroeck. Moreover, they “also found two old fire hooks with one old fire ladder at the City Hall,” which were “unsift for use in case of fire or other misfortune.” They now, therefore, request the city court to provide them with as “many fire ladders and fire hooks” as the court thinks necessary. The court authorizes the fire-wards “to have made such supply of ladders, hooks and such like materials at the expence of the City” as they themselves consider to be necessary.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 66-67.
- 24- Mar. 8 “The Stamp master” (see Feb. 10/20) asks the city court whether he is “also to stamp the milk measures, as several persons” have been to him about it. The court decrees “that the milk measurers shall also be stamped, and that the stamper shall receive 3 stv. a piece for stamping.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 68-69.
- “ The city court resolves to send a petition to Gov. Colve, requesting “that no vessels nor persons” shall leave the city, as it is “now open water.” On account of the shortness of the time, they send the three burgomasters instead, “to confer with the Governour” in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 69. See Feb. 26/March 8.
- 26- Mar. 8 The following order is issued by the governor’s council:—“Whereas divers Skippers and Sloop captains have requested leave to take to Esopus and Willemstadt with their vessels, whereby this city would be almost wholly stripped of craft, and the citizens greatly weakened,” the court of the city is ordered to summon the shipmasters and instruct them that, for the better security of this city, “no more than two sloops” shall “go at once to Willemstadt and Esopus and one to the South River, and that alternately,” as shall “be determined by lot;” also, that the skippers shall “not convey any passengers hence without passport.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 695. The city court met the shipmasters March 10, and informed them of the order. After hearing it a majority of the skippers asked that the earnings be “put in a common fund” from which each of them should “then draw his share out according to the size of his sloop.” The city court presented this conclusion of the skippers to Colve, who, on the 15th, ordered “that said skippers and barcuers” should, “according to the majority of their opinions, sail in a common stock,” etc., in line with their conclusion.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 70-71. See April 8/18.
- 27- Mar. 9 King Charles II issues a proclamation from “Our Court at Whitehall,” for publishing the peace of Westminster (see Feb. 9/19) between England and The Netherlands.—From the original preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.
- Mar. 3-13 Gov. Colve, by proclamation to the five Dutch towns on Long Island, and the towns of Harlem, Fordham, and Bergen, orders them “on the first notice” of the approach of the enemy to come to the defence of the city of New Orange, “provided with proper hand and side arms.” Those who fail to comply are to “be declared traitors and perjurers, and consequently be proceeded against as enemies, or be punished with death and confiscation of all their goods, as an example to others.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 696, 701.
- “ From the nomination made by the Under-Schout and Schepens beyond the Fresh Water,” the city court elects and swears in Arien Cornelissen as commissary, “in place of Dirck Janzen Kuyper, who is now gone away from thence.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 72.
- 6-16 Fear of the approach of an English expedition decides Colve to order that “all and every of the Burghers, Freeman (Poorters) and inhabitants” of New Orange, “women and young children only excepted,” shall not go from the city “to any other place, or to pass the night” “out of the city without leave,” “nor directly or indirectly to correspond with the enemy on pain of death and confiscation of all their goods.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 696-97.
- “ Matthias Nicolls, writing from Stratford to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, says: “Wee have here our share of the various Rumors & Reports as well from Boston & these Pts Eastward, as Virginia & Maryland westward, both which seeme to agree, in that some Ships are designated by his Ma<sup>ty</sup> for the Reduction of New York [see Oct. 31/Nov. 10] the certainty whereof a little time will discover.”—Winthrop Papers, XV: 145; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 23.
- 7-17 Gov. Colve in council issues another order with respect to the assessment levied to meet the expenses of the fortifications (see Jan. 22/Feb. 1). Whereas “the fortifications already erected and still require to be constructed on this Island Manhattans, . . . should now be brought in a short time to a wished-for end, which it is not possible to effect in a proper manner unless some means to that end be devised and furnished, from which the expenses . . . may be defrayed and paid,” the council orders that the levy is now to be made “as a loan” by those whose capital on valuation by the commissioners is in excess of 4,000 guilders in wampum value. The loan demanded is “the hundredth penny of the capital” assessed. This loan is to be repaid “from the extraordinary duty imposed the 16th October of last year on exported beavers and peltries,” and from certain imports. The duties are to remain in force until the loan for fortifications are all repaid.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 697. See March 14/24.
- 14-24 The governor appoints Jacobus vande Water, the town major of New Orange, “Book-keeper and Receiver of the moneys which will be furnished and advanced pursuant to the Proclamation dated 17th instant [q. v.], for completing the fortifications of this city.” He is to pay out the money only on order of the governor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 701. Such orders for large amounts were issued by Colve on April 25 and May 18.—Ibid., II: 707, 711. As some persons were derelict in the payment of their proportions, Colve ordered the city court, on June 12, to begin “immediate execution” against them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 719. See also May 2/12.
- See A. 16-26 So that the inhabitants of the suburbs may come to the aid of the city in case any enemies arrive, Gov. Colve commissions Cornelis Steenwyck and Cornelis van Ruyven to provide “suitable vessels,” and orders “the skippers and boatmen” of the city “promptly to obey whatever orders” are given to them in the premises.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 702.
- 17-27 Gov. Colve issues the following order: “Whereas the vessels lying in the harbor near the public Weigh-house of this city are considered to be seriously in the way should the enemy arrive, and it is therefore necessary that they be brought thence in season, inside the float (in t’wat), therefore all skippers, barge and boat-men of this city, are hereby ordered and instructed to bring their vessels from the said harbor inside the float, and to anchor before this city, and on the arrival of more than one ship at a time, to haul them behind the ship Surinam near the circular battery (rondeel) in front of the widow Lookermans, on pain of having all vessels without discrimination burnt, which will then be found lying in the way.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 702. The fortification here referred to, as in front of the house of the late Gov. Lookermans, can be located as about in front or slightly eastward of the present No. 117 Pearl St., and is shown on Pl. 17, Vol. I.
- See A. 31- Apr. 10 By the sixth article of the Treaty of Westminster (see Feb. 9/19), Charles II now addresses the states-general, thus: “We desire that you would order the dispatch as early as possible of the necessary instructions to your Governour or Commandant of the place called New-Yoek in the West Indies, to surrender it to Sieur Edmond Andros, or to such other person as we shall depute thither, with all its dependencies, arms, artillery, ammunition and material of war, of what sort soever they may be, and in the same state as they were

1674 at the time of the publication of the peace; Which orders you will Mar. please give to Chevalier Sylvius to be sent hither, as we have 31= ordered said Andros to proceed to the said place of New-York Apr. with all diligence, and to take possession of it, for us and in our 10 name.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 544. For the action of the states-general thereon, see April 6/16.

Apr. The states-general, having considered the letter of Charles II 6=16 of Mar. 31/Apr. 10 (q. v.), resolves that the board of admiralty of the states of Zealand and also that at Amsterdam shall be advised to "give such orders, and make provision that . . . New Netherland, . . . be vacated and restored" to the king of Great Britain. "And that to such end the officers and military, &c., who have reduced said place and still keep possession of it, be withdrawn with all their property, artillery, gunpowder, implements of war and everything they have had, taken and conquered there . . . leaving the aforesaid place, also the cannon, gunpowder and all implements of war appertaining thereunto, in such a state as they were at the time New Netherland was mastered." Orders shall also be given to the governor or commander there to "give up New Netherland . . . to Edmund Andros, or to such other person as his Majesty shall depute."

In a letter of the same date to King Charles, the states-general expresses the hope that the king will leave the inhabitants of New Netherland in "full and entire possession of the lands, property and rights they possess in those parts.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 545-46.

" Because "great damage" has been "done to the fortifications" of the city "by cattle, and particularly hogs," which have been "kept in herds along the public streets," and also have been the cause of "great stench and filth," by which the city became "infected," so that "serious sickness" has resulted, Gov. Colve now forbids "the running of hogs, be they big or little, within this city along the public streets," and requires that they be "confined in inclosed and fenced places." So, likewise, horses and cows are for-bidden to roam within the city's walls "or to go along the public streets without a person to drive them to and from pasture.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 704-5.

8=18 On complaint of the magistrates of New Harlem, Gov. Colve interdicts all persons from "going to shoot or catch hogs in the public woods" on Manhattan Island without an official permit, and orders "written notices" to be posted informing the inhabitants that cattle or hogs are not "to run and graze in the public woods" without official consent.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 706.

" Fourteen "barqueiers" subscribe their names to a petition to the city court. They state in this that they have entered into a "lottery" to navigate "by turns to Fort Nassau and the Village of Swarnenburgh," the earnings to go into a "common fund" (see Feb. 26/Mar. 8). They ask the court to be allowed to choose persons "to receive the earned freight money" and keep an account thereof,
 "until each sloop shall have made one trip," after which each skipper shall receive his share of the common fund, "according to the size of his sloop." Some skippers have not been favourable to the plan and therefore this appeal is made to the court for an enabling order, and this is granted.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 77-78.
 Two of the skippers still remaining obdurate, the court, on the 24th, ordered the sloop to inform them that they must obey the order.—
Ibid., VII: 79; cf. also 83. See May 25/June 4.

9=19 Samuel Forman of Oyster Bay is sentenced by Gov. Colve "to be severely whipped with rods" and then banished from the province, because he came to the city of New Orange without permission, making there a "great noise and uproar along the public streets," and even going "into the church" and presuming there,
 "in full meeting, during divine service," to make a "great outcry, abusing with great levity, the Word of God, and blaspheming His Holy Name.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 705.

14=24 The porters of the weigh-house ask the city bench to give them also the office of grain carriers in the city. They are referred to Gov.
 Colve in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 80.

17=27 An order is enacted at Fort William Henry requiring the community of New Harlem on the second day of Whitesutide next "to collect and drive into their village all the horses of the late Governor Lovelace Captain Levall or belonging to any of the officers of the English government as are now running in the woods upon Manhattan Island or so many of them as they shall come to get."— Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), I: 198.

21= For baptizing a child of Reformed Church parents, on April 18, My 1 "when the father was from home," Jannettie de Kleuse is brought before the city court by Schout De Milt and, although she pleads Apr. ignorance and asks forgiveness "if she did wrong," she is con-21= demned to "be imprisoned and remain there until further order" May because of "her profanation and disrespect of the Holy Sacrament of 1 Baptism."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 82.

The governor and council of war have found that it is impossible to repay the principal property owners of the city who May have been assessed to loan money for fortifying the town (see Jan.
 21= 22/Feb. 1). Moreover, an additional sum is now needed, "for the fur-2=12 ther support" of the garrison at Fort Willem Hendrick and for "other public expenses." To raise this money, they now decide,
 "in default of other ready effects" or equity, to hypothecate certain "pieces of metal cannon" in the fort which may be sent to Holland if necessary to be sold there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 710-11.

12=22 Peter Stoutenbergh receives a patent for a certain lot at No. 65 Broadway, now covered by the building of the American Express Co.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 29; also Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and its description, II: 363.

Gerrit Janse Ross receives a patent for a certain lot, now No. 63 Broadway.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II:
 363; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 29.

William van Vredenberg receives a patent for a certain lot, now No. 61 Broadway.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 29; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 363.

George Cobbet receives a patent for a lot on the west side of Broadway, south of Rector St., now partly covered by the Empire building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 363; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 29; Land Papers, I: 161 (Albany).

" The Mohawks submit several proposals to Gov. Colve together with gifts of wampum. They renew pledges of friendship and loyalty, saying that if the French should come against the Dutch they will "march out with the Dutch and live and die with them."
 They express pleasure at the strength of the fort and hope that an other nation will become master of it. As they are going further to renew their covenants they desire permission to pass through New Netherland on their return, and as they "are old men" they request to be taken up the river "in a yacht." The governor answers in courteous terms, thanking them for their offers of help, and promising to protect them against invasion by their enemies. He hopes to provide transportation for them. On June 5, they returned and wanted to be taken home, but requested that some trade regulations might be made so that they might once again buy a duffel coat for one beaver and other goods in proportion. The governor explained that the high prices were due to the long European wars, but when peace came, he would sell to them as cheap as possible. Three of the prized duffel coats were given them, together with gunpowder, lead, socks, and a hat, and they were promised passage on the first yacht that went up the river.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 479-80; ibid., II: 712-13, 716-17.

" Schout De Milt repeats a charge he once made (Rec. N. Am., VII: 82) against Antony Jansen, an old resident of Manhattan, who had come from Salee in Morocco. The charge is "that in the night between the 28th and 29th of April" Jansen "suffered an Englishman, named Edward Bambr [a Quaker], dwelling at Martenaar's Neck, to sleep" (at his house), which was "directly contrary to the Placard of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Governor General enacted on that subject." De Milt asks that Jansen be fined, as required by law, 600 fl., with costs. Jansen's wife testifies "that the Quaker was brought at Nine o'Clock in the evening to her house by Margriet Philips' daughter who told her at the same time, that the Schout was already notified of said Quaker" being in town. Margriet Philips and her daughter deny their complicity and the court adjourns the case until the next court day. It then condemned Jansen "for reasons" in a fine of only one beaver and costs.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 82, 84-85, 90. On June 19, the schout was empowered to levy by execution on Jansen for the amount of the fine.—Ibid., VII: 100.

" A patent or ground-lease is given by Gov. Colve to the Lutheran congregation for lot No. 5, "between the lot of George Cobbet and the Cingel or City wall, in the garden formerly belonging to the West India Co." (see May 16/26), at the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector St., on the present city plan.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 363. See also Oct.
 7/17, 1673; and cf. Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 29, and N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 636. Graebner, in his history of the Lutherans, says the original of this grant is still preserved in the archives of the 1674 first Lutheran Church. He gives a translation in his work on p. 66.

 May By order of the governor's council, Jacques Cortelyou, the 16-26 surveyor, is directed "to sett off," among others, the lot "for the Lutheran Congregation, 1 lot, No. 5," in the Company's garden (see May 12/22), and the burghmasters are "required to deputize some of themselves to point out said lots [meaning all of those listed], and assist in the survey."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 716.

20-30 Matthias Nicolls, writing from Stratford to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, expresses the belief that the consciences of many of the Dutch "are accusing them not to have dealt our Countreymen with equal Civility as they rec<sup>d</sup> from vs during the English Government." He hopes "some more politick provision will be made hereafter to invite & encourage more English Inhabit<sup>s</sup> there [New York], whose fidelity to their Prince & Country will prove a strooger Bulwarke of Defence then other Fortificacons garrison'd by Mercenaries hath done."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 147.

22= Matthias Nicolls, writing again from Stratford to Winthrop, June 1 says of Colve's régime: "His violent Government did not portend 1 its Long Dura<sup>o</sup>n, & t'is thought the Period thereof . . . will not be lamented by friend or foe."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 147.

25= The burghmasters tell the skippers that Gov. Colve has by order June 4 released the ships (see Feb. 26/Mar. 8), "so that each of them" can now "depart" from the city at discretion; and asks them, since
 "the turn of all the yachts" has "not gone round," whether they prefer that the common fund, as now constituted, shall "be divided in common" at once, or whether those who have already sailed shall "lie by so long, until the others also" have "made a trip and then to divide all that" has "been earned." After hearing "the opinions of the majority of the skippers," the court concludes to speak to Colve before making "any further dispositio<sup>n</sup>" therein.—
Rec. N. Am., VII: 91.

June Gov. Colve issues an order, in which he says that complaints 2-12 have been made against some persons who neglected and refused "to pay the Book Keeper Jacobus vae de Waeter the hundredth penny, which pursuant to the assessment [see Feb. 14/24] . . . was ordered to be raised by form of loan for the payment of the incurred and still to be incurred expenses in the reparation of the fortifications on the Island Manhattans." Colve directs the city court "to proceed by immediate execution, without distinction of persons against the negligent or contumacious."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 97.
 On the 23d, the city bench voted to publish an order on the following day, from the city hall, that all persons in arrears must pay within three days' time or suffer levy by execution.—Ibid., VII:
 101. See Aug. 11/21.

14-21 Maghtelt Stentgens, widow of Johannes Megapolensis, sells to Balthazar Bayard her house and lot which have "to the West the Marketfield or great Broadway."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1913), 32.

16-26 Ten years have now gone by since the surrender to the English in 1664, under the terms of which, provision was made for the liquidation of the debts of the Dutch West India Company in New Netherland by a lien on its property in this province. For various reasons this property has decreased in value. The debts of the company have been assigned to the company's creditors. Colve now orders that all tangible property of the company in New Netherland shall, "with the approbation of the Lord Majores," in Holland, continue to "be and remain unalienably pledged" to the creditors until they are paid in full. Cornelis van Ruyven, as receiver of the West India Company, has the accounts. He is now required "to hand over the account books and journals, and other proofs thereto belonging," to Councillor Steewoyck, Secretary Bayard, and Jacobus vande Water, who are to keep them safely until commissioners are chosen by the creditors for the settlement of the debts.

17-27 Matthias Nicolls, writing from Stratford to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, says: "The Intelligence of the severall Confirmations of Peace, & of ships bound from our native Countrey to this New World, (which may quickly be expected) is very welcome:
 I suppose the Dutch at length will give Credit to it, though contrary to their desires or Expectacons, (I mean that New Yorke is enclosed in the Articles) since the arrivall of a great Ketch, which came there on Saturday last, from out of England, wth letter & assurances both Dutch & English) may have put them out of Doubt." It is rumored, he says, that Andrew Newport (see July 22/Aug. 1) is to come as English governor.—Winthrop Papers, XV: 148.

The following proclamation of peace of this date is preserved in the Harlem Records: "Our Respectable, beloved and Loyal Subjects since it hath pleased the only good and Merciful God again to bless the State of our Fatherland in general and this province in particular with the tidings of peace and of the renewal of our Union and Alliance with the Crown of England, Therefore have his Excellency the Governor and Councillors of New Netherland deemed it necessary to issue our proclamation for the general observance everywhere in this province of [a] day of Thanksgiving on the forenoon of the second wednesday of the next ensuing month [July] being the 11th day of the same month, . . . And that all may be done decently and according to order on the said day of Thanksgiving, during Divine service are interdicted and forbidden by these presents all trades and traffics together with all exercises and practises of sports, and such like and all tavern hunting, and keeping tavern are forbidden under the penalty according to the statute already provided."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 207-4; cf. N. Y.
Hist. Soc. Collections (1913), 83-84. The ordinary fastday was postponed for eight days and changed "into a day of Thanksgiving for the peace."—Ibid., I: 203. See July 1/11. See also broadside dated at Whitehall, Feb. 27, 1674, in possession of N. Y. Hist. Soc.

The consistory and church-wardens of the Dutch Church of New Orange by petition to Gov. Colve request the "confirmation to them of the Church standing in Fort Willem Hendrick." It is ordered in council that "a deed in form" be granted to the petitioners.—N. Y.
Col. Docs., II: 730. See July 23/Aug. 2.

The states-general having resolved on April 16 to send orders to Gov. Colve to evacuate the forts and restore the province of New Netherland "to the order of the King of Great Britain," these orders are now renewed, as Capt. Hendrick van Tholl is ready to sail for New Netherland. He is instructed to carry over the papers to Colve. At the same time the states-general inform their ambassadors at London of the resolution, and learn that Andros is about to leave for America and is authorized to take over the province.—

A new patent is given by the king to James, Duke of York, granting anew the same territory as that described in the patent of March 12, 1664. This second patent was deemed necessary because of the intervening possession of New York by the Dutch, which was regarded as extinguishing the former grant.—Brodhead, Hist.
State of N. Y., II: 260-61. The text of the grant appears in the Third
Ann. Rep. of the State Historian of the State of N. Y. (1897), 193-99. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 230, 235, 238.

By order of the governor, "the Treaty of Peace concluded on the 19/29 February last [error for Feb. 9/19, q.v.] between his Majesty of Great Britain and their High Mightinesses the Lords States General of the United Netherlands" is published from the city hall.—
Rec. N. Am., VII: 106-7. For the text of the proclamation, see June 20/30.

In his commission to Andros, the Duke of York designates the territories granted the duke by the king as 1. All "that part of y<sup>e</sup> Maine Land of New England beginning at a certain place called or knowne by y<sup>e</sup> name of S<sup>t</sup> Croix next adjoyning to New Scotland in America and from thence extending along y<sup>e</sup> sea Coast unto a certain place called Pemaquin or Pemaquid and soe up the River thereof to y<sup>e</sup> furthest head of the same, as it extendeth Northwards and extending from thence to the River Kinebequi and soe upwards by y<sup>e</sup> shortest course to y<sup>e</sup> River Canada northwards;" 2. Long Island; 3. The "said river called Hudsons River and all y<sup>e</sup> land from y<sup>e</sup> West side of Connecticut river to y<sup>e</sup> East side of Delaware Bay;" 4. "Martine Vynyards and Nantukes."

The commission names Maj. Edmund Andros, a man of "integrity prudence ability and fitnessse," as governor.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., III: 215. See also Bowen, Boundary Disputes of Conn., 70-71.

Instructions are issued from Windsor to Maj. Andros by the Duke of York, directing him as to the manner in which he shall take possession of New York and establish the government. He is ordered to use "all possible meanes" to satisfy the inhabitants that he does not intend to disturb them in their possessions, but rather to protect them and to encourage planting and commerce. The instructions contain directions for establishing the customs at New York. Other payments of a public nature, such as excise, benefits from a public weigh-house, etc. are to be continued as under Nicolls and Lovelace. Religious liberty is ordered given to all alike. Andros is also directed to choose for himself a council of not more than ten men, holding office during the duke's pleasure. He is

- 1674 commissioned to be captain of a company of foot soldiers, consisting of 100 men besides officers, who are to be transported to New York.
- July The Duke of York commissions "Wth Dyre Gentleman" to be collector of customs at New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 221-22.

- 22- Matthias Nicolls, writing from "Mashpeth Killys near New Towne upon Long Island" to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, says that the rumour about Andrew Newport (see June 17/27) "is quite smother'd," and that "The Governo<sup>s</sup> name now allowed of, is one Mayo<sup>r</sup> or Coll<sup>d</sup> Edmond Andrewes [see Aug. 3/13], as by directions of Letters to him from the Barbados, & divers other Circumstances doth appear." He tells further of the misfortune that has come to ex-Gov. Lovelace, while travelling in the Mediterranean region, of being captured by Turks and taken to Algiers. "Here all his Jewells (to the value of severall hundreds of pounds) & last Reserves of Treasure went most unfortunately all to Wreck." His ransom is expected, English merchants having offered 500 crowns. "Hee is a Patterne," he continues, "of a great alteration of Fortune, from a Governo<sup>r</sup> amongst Christians in America, in so short a time to be hurried away to so great distance to be a slave to the Turkes, but what is not our humane Nature subject to!"—Winthrop Papers, XV: 148.
- Aug. The time for nominating a new city bench having arrived, the court assembles at the city hall for that purpose. From the nominees, Gov. Colve appoints, on the 13th, his fiscal, Capt. Willem Kniff, to be city schout, displacing Anthony de Milt; Johannes van Brugh and Willem Beckeman, as burgomasters; and Jacob Kip, Gelym Verplanck, François Rombouts, Christopher Hoogland, and Stephanus van Cortlandt, as schepens.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 110-14.
- 3-13 Matthias Nicolls, writing from Flushing to Maj. John Winthrop, says of Andros (see July 22/Aug. 1): "Hee was in his youth a Page to the Queene of Bohemia & hath married a Neice of my Lord Cravens who hee brings over with him, Hee was to come out of Eng<sup>l</sup>d about the beginning of June." He says further that he has had a letter from Col. Manning (see Jan. 15, 1675) to the effect that he has "had the good luck to bee acquitted by the King & Council about his surrender of the Fort," and that he expects to come over "to these parts againe, but without Employ." He reports "no Newes in Eng<sup>l</sup>d of Coll<sup>d</sup> Lovelace."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 148.
- 4-14 The gravestone of Thomas Willett, the first mayor of New York (see June 12, 1665), records this date as the day of his death. He was buried at Swanzy (later named Barrington), Rhode Island, six miles south of Providence, on Narraganset Bay.—Holmes, Annals (1829), I: 368. On Oct. 18, 1913, the City Club of New York unveiled a monument to his memory at that place (now called Riverside); and on Nov. 17, 1913, a tablet to his honour was placed in the New York City Hall.—N. Y. Times, Oct. 19 and Nov. 17, 1913. For account of his life, see Adam and Anne Matt, etc., by Cornell (1890), Chap. 17; in which work the place of Willett's burial is called "Rehoboth or Swansea (now in the town of Seconck), Massachusetts." See also Man. Com. Con. (1853), 379; ibid. (1864), 622; and Mag. Am. Hist. (1887), XVII: 239-41.
- 6-16 Andros is required by the Duke of York to put into execution, in the territories under his government, the laws granted to the duke by the king's "Letters Patent" (see March 1, 1665). These laws, "digested into one volume," are annexed to the duke's order to Andros. The order also directs Andros, with the advice and help of his council, "carefully to peruse and consider y<sup>e</sup> same, and if you finde it necessary for y<sup>e</sup> ease and benefit of y<sup>e</sup> people and y<sup>e</sup> good of my service to make any alteracōns, addicōns or amendm<sup>ts</sup> in y<sup>e</sup> said laws, to y<sup>e</sup> end you may receive from me such ord<sup>rs</sup> and directōns as shalbe necessary for authorizing you to put y<sup>e</sup> same in execution."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 226-27.
- " The Duke of York issues a warrant to Gov. Andros, authorizing him to seize the estate of Francis Lovelace, late governor, to satisfy a debt of about £7,000.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 226. See Oct. 27/Nov. 6. On Nov. 3/13, the court of mayor and aldermen issued a warrant to the sheriff to attach the lands, houses, and estate of the late governor. The sheriff's return, dated the following day, reported the seizure of "ye great house near the Stadt house y<sup>t</sup> Mr Van Clyffe lives in and the garden house in the broadway," and "two parcels of land . . . from Coll Francis Lovelace which formerly belonged to Capt Willet and the Domine which lays betwixt Derick Sickars & Mr Adrian Tony." Appraisers were appointed, and on March 27, 1675, made an inventory of houses and lands to the amount of £821:13:04. This is entered in detail in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 14, 72, and is printed in the Third Annual Report of the State Historian (1897), 226-27, 281-83. In this way the land, which the heirs and widow of Domine Bogardus had conveyed to Lovelace in 1671, became a part of "the Duke's farm." It later became the property of Trinity Church.—Brodehead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 274.
- In the city court, Martin Hardewyn brings action against Frederik Philipsea and Thomas Lewis. He says they "bired him for a year as miller at their mill" (in Yonkers), and that they discharged him. He wishes "to know the reason." They reply that he "represented himself as a capable miller and that he nevertheless knew little or nothing of it."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 115. On Sept. 4, the court gave the matter over to arbitrators for a hearing, to reconcile the litigants or report an award.—Ibid., VII: 119.
- On Oct. 2, Hardewyn told the court that Philipsea had "engaged him as miller for his water mill for one year for the sum of fl. 800. And after he . . . had been some days at the mill, he was discharged therefrom" by Philipsea "without any cause." He proved "by divers witnesses" that he had "manufactured good flour thereon," and demanded fl. 800 "for damage suffered, for loss of time," and "the affront inflicted on him" by the defendant, with costs of the suit. The court condemned Philipsea to pay to Hardewyn 200 fl., because "he was discharged . . . without any legitimate cause from his engagement, and for the affront, loss of time, etc. cause to the plif." Philipsea was charged also with the costs for "the appearance of the Secretary and Messengers," while the remaining costs were put upon Hardewyn.—Ibid., VII: 124-25. Cf. Hall, Philipse Manor Hall, 62, et seq.
- The city's creditors, among them "the labouring people and contractors," daily importune the burgomasters for payment. This leads the burgomasters to present to Gov. Colve an account of the expenses incurred by the city for fortifications and other purposes since the time of the recapture by the Dutch (which shows a debt in this regard of fl. 6110:18, seawant), and to appeal to the governor for some media for securing the funds necessary for liquidating these obligations (see Feb. 14/24). On Sept. 7, Colve granted them "the receipt of the product of the Scales [public weigh-house receipts] and Tapsters excise" of the city, from the preceding May 1 until the revenues reached the amount of arrears.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 116-17.
- The public carters of the city have complained in a petition to the city court "that there were some who intruded in that employment (see Nov. 29, 1670), and have, moreover, on their departure, sold their carts, horses and places with privilege to cart; also, that there were certain boys, who in like manner rode in the cart above the number fixed," from which they demand redress. The court decrees that the boys shall "not ride cart any more," and shall also "leave off driving cart" within the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 122.
- The city court "reciprocally" enacts the ordinance (see Aug. 22, 1665) relative to punctuality and attendance of its members at sessions.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 122-23.
- Ephraim Herrman, clerk of the city court, exhibits to that body "an apostille granted him" by Gov. Colve "on his petition," giving him "the office of Secretary" of the city, in place of Nicolas Bayard, who resigned it a year ago to become the provincial secretary. Herrman requests "a fair allowance for his last year's service as Secretary." On Oct. 5/15 (q. v.), he was granted 350 fl.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 122, 128.
- The last magistracy for New Harlem under a Dutch régime is appointed. Resolved Waldron is continued as schout; the old schepens are David de Marest, Joost van Olinius, and Arent Herdmassen; the new schepens, appointed by the governor from the usual double set, are Adolph Meyer and John Dyckman.—Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), IV: 19, in N. Y. Pub. Library. See Nov. 19.
- The term of two church-wardens of the Dutch Church having expired, the city court presents double nominations to Gov. Colve, who, on the next day, appoints Nicolas de Meyer and Frederik Philipsea, to serve for one year with the remaining warden, Adolff Pietersen.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 126-27, 132.

- 1674 The people dwelling "beyond the Fresh Water" having made Sept. nominations for a new magistracy, the city court, with Gov. Colve's approval, chooses the following persons for one year, viz: Jan Pietersen Haaring and Adriaen Cornelissen, old schepeens, and Jacob Oct. 2 Pietersen de Groot and Wolphert Webber, as new schepeens, "to govern the Outside People in their district according to the instruction granted them."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 127-32.
- 28- Former ordinances, enacted "against breaking and spoiling Oct. 8 fences and gardens," have not been observed; on the contrary, many persons have been in the habit of "climbing over, breaking and tramping them under foot" while "hunting and shooting partridges and other birds." The city court, with Gov. Colve's approval, retracts the ordinances on this subject, and forbids "all persons, of what rank soever . . . to climb, break and spoil any fences of gardens, orchards or enclosed places," or to shoot "partridges or other birds" in the city "or in the public streets," on forfeiture of the firearms and payment of a fine. This law was "published from the City Hall" on the 9th.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 127-28.
- Oct. The burgomasters and schepeens meet at the city hall on the 5-15 summons of Gov. Colve, who comes into court and informs the city fathers that he has "now received by the National Ship the Muyll Tromp letters and absolute orders" from The Netherlands "for the restitution of this Province of N: Netherland to his Majesty of Great Britain, pursuant to the Treaty of Peace," (see Feb. 9/19) and is required to "return home with the garrison as soon as possible."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 128; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 45. Israel Chauncy, writing to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut (by letter dated "Stratford, 19. (8) 74."), tells of "the arrival of two Dutch ships at N-Yorke upon the last sabbath was a fortnight, who have brought orders from the States for the surrendering of that place to the English, upon which we hear that Mousier Colve would have delivered the place into the Hands of the Burgers, but they refused to accept any such change; The same ships doe bring Intelligence of the english Gov<sup>r</sup> coming out quickly after them: . . . Mr Abraham Pierson Jun<sup>r</sup> is at Millford, and hath bin in these parts near a fortnight; he is a great adorer of Mr Calfe [Colve] at Yorke, and speaks much for his Justification in his former and more late proceedings; and when I spoke with him was in great hopes that the Dutch would still hold the rule there; but I doe not wonder at it, for I conceive that he and others of them have bin whipt to this persuasion."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 133, in Mass. Hist. Soc. See Oct. 31/Nov. 10.
- " Ephraim Herrnan (see Sept. 8/18) is allowed 250 fl. for his services as clerk of the city court last year.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 128.
- 15-25 At a joint meeting of the city court and the burgher court martial (see March 22, 1655, Addenda), Gov. Colve states that "his departure" is "very near," and that he will "probably not be able to wait the arrival [see Oct. 22/Nov. 1] of the expected Governor from England," as the winter is approaching. He deems it "proper to acquaint the Meeting thereof and at the same time to order, that the Burgomasters and Schepeens together with the Burgher Court Martial" "nominate a double number of ten persons," from whom he will elect five men, who, "after his departure," are to "possess and exercise the executive authority until the arrival of the expected ships and the Governof of his Majesty of England," and who are "also authorized to surrender the country" to whomsoever exhibits "his Majesty's commission." This joint body takes an adjournment until the next afternoon. They then nominated ten men, eight of whom were from their own number.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 132-34.
- 17-27 The city bench resolves to ask Gov. Colve, among other things, in regard to "the extraordinary tax imposed for the payment of the monies loaned for the repairs of the fort's and City's fortifications," and recommends that those persons who were subjected to a loss of lots and removal of their houses "be paid out of the above-mentioned tax already collected, according to the placard of the 17th March last and the orders to Book Keeper Jacobus van de Water, which so express and promise;" also, that those persons who would have to "accept any houses and lots" within the city, in lieu "of their lost houses and lots on the assessment made," may "be freed from" those persons who came later "to claim the same houses and lots."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 134-35.
- " The city still owes about 1,500 guilders, besides a year's salary due the city's secretary, while the city treasurer has "scarcely any provision of money therefor." The city court now asks Gov. Colve

- to give them an order for the payment of the secretary's salary, meaning, evidently, with assistance from the provincial exchequer. Oct. 17-27
—Rec. N. Am., VII: 135.
- " "many of the inhabitants" are "greatly interested in the confiscated estate of the late Governor Lovelace [see Aug. 6/16] and several others" in the city. Gov. Colve had appointed commissioners to settle the same. The city court now asks him so to dispose of the matter, that each person interested "may receive his right therefrom, as far as said estate may extend."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 135.
- 19-29 A commission, in Dutch, empowering Capt. Philip Carteret and Mathias Nicolls to receive from Gov. Colve such stores as are to be delivered pursuant to the articles of peace, bears this date. A letter to Colve informs him thereof.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 422.
- 22- The new governor, Sir Edmund Andros, arrives unexpectedly. He brings, as first councillor, Anthony Brockholls, who has been appointed to succeed him in case he becomes incapacitated; William Dyre, collector of customs; a chaplain; and 100 soldiers, all in the pay of the Duke of York. The governor is authorized to form a council of not more than ten men.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 220-21; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 170-71.
- " Andros, from his ship, "The Diamond," which is at anchor near Staten Island, dispatches a letter to "the Honble The Governor Commander in Chief of The New Netherlands" (Colve), requesting that a time be appointed soon for him to take over the government in behalf of "His Majesty of Great Britaguy Pursuant to the Late Articles of Peace," etc.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 413 (Albany); Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 45. For a narrative of events from this time to the surrender by Colve on Oct. 31/Nov. 10 (q. v.), see Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 270-71.
- 23- Andros, still on shipboard, having been asked "Last Night" by Colve to "com in a private capacity," writes in reply that he is surprised that no time has been set for him to take over the government, and that he has "no Orders to Land vpon a private accomt." The ships that are with him, he states, are "at very great Expense," and are intended for service elsewhere as soon as he is "posseed of this Place."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 46.
- " Gov. Colve is present at the city hall, at a joint assembly of the burgomasters and schepeens with the burgher council of war, to recommend "most particularly" to them "to take good care for the prevention of all mischiefs by night or by day" likely to "be occasioned by the malice of any persons and the insolence" of the regular "soldiery;" and "further enjoining on them that if any soldiers" are "found in the streets exhibiting insolence" they shall be secured and brought to him to be punished as they deserve. The joint assembly proceeds to draw up an order for regulating the city watch by the four train-bands or militia. The provost and sergeants of these bands have complained that the men do not "keep parade and watch as they ought," and are absent from duty "very frequently," so that they are "unable to place sentinels on their posts through want of men or to prevent menacing dangers." This condition has arisen only "because the incured fines" are "not collected and paid nor satisfaction made to the Corporals." The joint meeting therefore orders that the provost, together with the sergeants and the watch, shall henceforth collect the fines the next morning "on the breaking up of the watch," and, in cases of refusal of payment, shall proceed at once against all such persons without distinction, and "take as much goods out of their houses" as cover the amount of the fines.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 137.
- 24- Andros, being informed by Colve that the latter will be ready Nov. "within the space of eight days" to surrender the fort and government, writes again to him from "The Diamond," asking that a certain time be fixed, sooner than the time mentioned, when he can take possession.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 46-47.
- " The burgomasters and schepeens, with the council of war, assemble at the city hall, and, with Gov. Colve's approval, choose Cornelis Steenwyck, Johannes van Brugh, and Willem Beckman "to repair on board his Majesty's frigate now anchored under Staten Island and there to welcome the Governor Maj<sup>r</sup> Andrews [Andros] and at the same time to request some privileges for the advantage of the Commonalty." This delegation carries out its mission and returns on the same day to report that Andros has told them to "assure the inhabitants of the Dutch nation" that they shall "participate in the same privileges with those of the English nation," and that he will "promote their interest as much as possible." He refers further "to the instructions given him by his Royal Majesty and Highness of York."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 138.

1674 Proposals are sent by Colve to Andros. These relate specifically Oct. to the settlement of the debts of the province; permitting all judg-27- ments to stand good; permitting the owners of real and personal Nov. property to remain in possession; permitting "the Inhabitants of 6 the Dutch Nation . . . to retain their customary Church privileges in Divine Service and Church discipline besides their Fathers' laws & customs in the division of their Inheritances;" excusing them "from Impressment;" permitting "each Congregation whether Lutherans or others" to "support their own Poor;" permitting all public houses to continue "according to the Customs now existing;" paying the creditors of the West India Company, etc. Andros replied on Nov. 12, acquiescing in general terms to these proposals with one or two minor exceptions.—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
(4to ed.), III: 49-50.

284 Andros writes Colve again, assuring him that he is "not only Nov. Commanded punctually to observe the Articles of Peace," but that 7 he has "also his Majesty's and Royall Highnesses particular Orders to do it in the best and most friendly manner with kindeesse to such Dutch" as he "shall finde upon the place."—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
(4to ed.), III: 47-48.

302 The last meeting of the Dutch burgoasters and schepens is Nov. convened by special order of Gov. Colve. Assembled with them is 9 the "Burgber Council of War." The governour informs the meeting that on the next day he proposes, in pursuance of "the orders from his superiors, to deliver over . . . the Fort and this Province of N: Netherlaed according to the Articles of Peace," to Major Andros "in behalf of his Majesty of Great Britain." He thanks the court "for their past services," and absolves them "from their oath of allegiance to their High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness;" and orders "that the five flags of the Outside People [beyond the Fresh Water] with the cushions and table cloth now in the City Hall" shall be taken in charge by Burgomaster Johannes van Brugh, until they shall "be demanded and taken away by order of the supreme authority."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 138; Doc. Hist. N. Y.
(4to ed.), III: 51.

An inventory of the Dutch law books, ordinances, etc. in the city hall is made by order of the city court. This earliest known library of the corporation of the city, comprising only nine volumes, is given over to the care of the presiding burgoaster, Johannes van Brugh.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 139. See Addenda.

From this time on, Old Style dating is followed in the Chronology until the year 1752, when the English adopted the New Style for their calendar. If data are introduced from sources using the New Style, the double date is given. See also Addenda, 158a.

Nov. Gov. Andros returns to Colve the proposals made by the latter 2 before the surrender, to nearly all of which he agrees. He expresses appreciation for the "Generosity in all yo<sup>r</sup> proceedings since my arrivall to these parts," and adds "acknowledgements and thanks for yo<sup>r</sup> present of the three horses & Coach." He also sends his best wishes for Colve's voyage, and expresses a desire to serve him in any possible way during the interim.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 48. Brodhead says: "Andros appears to have been the first English governor who used a coach and horses in New York, and they were a present from Colve."—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 273, footnote. See Addenda.

3 Gov. Andros, in a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, dated "Att New Yorke the 3d of Nover 1674," says: "I cannot delay giving you this Early Acampt [sic] of my having in the Behalf of his Ma<sup>ty</sup> Received Saturday Last [Oct. 31/Nov. 10], this Place and dependences, from the Dutch, to Continue as formerly, under the Command of his Royall Highness—no doubting of yo<sup>r</sup> Satisfaction in the Neues—and shalbe glad of all opportunities, to Continue, and improve your Former good Neighborhood."—Winthrop Papers, X: 67.

7 Andros writes to Colve that he has received the orders sent him for the surrender of the respective places "pursuant to the Articles of Peace, And now have onely to add my acknowledgement<sup>s</sup> and thanks for yo<sup>r</sup> further kind Expressions to mee in yo<sup>r</sup> letter."

He further adds: "I have sent you such demands as haue been given mee in writings, for damages sustained from those under yo<sup>r</sup> Comand, since the time limited for Peace in these Parts."—Doc.

Gov. Andros issues a "proclamacon" confirming "all former 9 grants privileges or concessions heretofore granted and all estates legally possessed by any under his Royall Highness before the late Dutch government, As also all legall, judiciall proceedings during that government." He also confirms the "known book of Laws formerly establish and in force under his royall highness government . . . the which are to be observed and practised together with the manner and time of holding Courts therein menconed as heretofore." All magistrates and civil officers "belonging there unto" are to be choiced and established accordingly.—Doc. Hist.

rectly cited "1675"). For an account of the judiciary of the Dutch period, up to 1674, see an article by Chief Justice Daly, in Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix VII; and an article by Jameson in ment of the judicial system during the English and American period,

The last two mayors under the former English régime, Matthias 10 Nicolls and John Lawrence, are now appointed by Andros as mayor and deputy mayor, respectively. William Dervall, Frederick Philippe, Gabriel Menvielle, and John Winder are named as aldermen, and Thomas Gibbs, sheriff.—M. C. C., VIII: 145; Brodhead, op. cit., II: 273-74, and documents therein cited. These names (except John Winder) appear on the first page of Vol. II of the M. C. M.
(MS.), under date of Nov. 13 (q. v.).

The sheriff of New York is ordered to seize public property in the 11 possession of private persons. The return of the sheriff on this order reported the finding of sundry pickaxes, spades, and carbines.—
N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 12, 13 (Albany).

The first meeting of the newly appointed court of mayor and 13 aldermen (see Nov. 10, supra) occurs. The first page of the record, beautifully penned (see reproduction in Peterson & Edward, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, insert between pp. 20 & 21), reveals the appointment of John Sharpe as "Towne Clarke," and Thomas Moore, "City Cryer;" the names of ten "Wice and Corne Porters" and of 12 "Carmen" appear also.—M. C. M. (MS.), II: 1.

Property rights were duly respected when New Orange (Dutch) 14 became New York (English). The first case recorded as coming before the newly constituted court of mayor and aldermen was that of William Darvall vs. Peter Aldrix. Darvall happened to be in Boston when the change in government took place. On his return he found Aldrix in possession of his sloop. Despite the fact that the latter "produced a bill of sale under the hand of Governo<sup>r</sup> Colve, for his said Boate, and a Copy of the Instrument of Confiscation," the jury, composed largely of Englishmen, "brought in their Verdict, That they found for yo<sup>r</sup> Pl<sup>t</sup>, the Restoration of the Boate in Controversye, with her appurtenances and Costs of Court."—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674.

In another suit, Capt. Matthias Nicolls vs. Greetye Provost, of the same date, the plaintiff, who had exiled himself during the months of Dutch rule, found on his return that certain buildings he had erected at an expense of a thousand guilders on land rented from defendant had been removed by the latter. The court ordered "that the def<sup>t</sup> forthwith deliver and make good the same within 14 dayes, and the pl<sup>t</sup> to pay yo<sup>r</sup> Def<sup>t</sup>'s rent."—Ibid.

The mayor and aldermen meet with the governour in the fort, 16 and it is decided that flour and meats shall be examined and marked with the town brand before being shipped (see Nov. 30). Orders are promulgated concerning weights and measures, baker's bread, fortifications, and the gate at Smith's Valley.—Cal. Coun. Min., 20.
The last two orders are expanded thus in Ex. Coun. Min., MS., III: (part 2), 4: "An Order to restraine yo<sup>r</sup> cutting up & destroying yo<sup>r</sup> Fortifications . . . About a Gate to yo<sup>r</sup> smiths Valley, As follows That a little Gate be made for a foot path."

The court of mayor and aldermen, "finding great inconven-17 iencies attending them by the bringing in writings ad papers written in the Duch Language, doe therefore order that for the future, noe papers shall be brought to this Court in Duch, on the penalty of hauling them throwne out, Excepting poore people who are not able to pay for translating."—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674.

John Lawrence declares that Capt. John Manning has "greatly "

1674 defamed and aspersed him" by spreading abroad the statement that he "might have Sued the Mace & Gownes if hee would, but hee deliuered them to y<sup>e</sup> Dutch without order." Lawrence proves that "hee was forced therunto, and produced the Duch Governo<sup>r</sup>s Order, for his deliuering the Same." The court judges that the reports of Manning are untrue and undeserving.—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674. See Dec. 1.

26 John Sharpe writes from New York to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, as follows: "Honno<sup>d</sup> Sr. Having had an Acco<sup>t</sup> of yo<sup>r</sup> sympathetical trouble, at y<sup>e</sup> Dutch Governo<sup>r</sup>s ill, unkinde, inhumane, barbarous and Tyrannical usage of mee, I cannot but make it my businesse to pay my humble and respective thanks to you, for that undeserved favour, and begin where I left in my last yo<sup>r</sup> Hoooor, from Shelter Island, vizt; Having rec<sup>d</sup> a Lre by Capt Nicolls's advice of the English Governo<sup>r</sup>s arrivall, to advance westwards, in order to bee ready & neare, for making demand of yon Colve for satisfaction for my unparalel'd wrongs, both in Prison and Estate, I did accordingly. And arriving within 7 Miles of N. Yorke, where I hyred a Canoe to bring mee by water on board our English Governo<sup>r</sup>, but ere we could reach to said friggott, unfortunately Tyde was spent, and a powerfull wind against us, in so much that attaining to the happynesse of seeing his Mathes's flagg so neare new Yorke, I thought the Belgick Power eclips'd, and adventur'd to my House, where I continued not  $\frac{1}{2}$  of an hour, but came Capt Knief, the Major, and 18 more of their Dutch Rusticks, into my House; Violently laid hands on mee, and againe carried mee to my old, dark, dismall Chamber, and in 4 houres after, threw in 12 more of their own Nation, next to mee, only a Deal-board Petticoe between us, in whose place there were 300 Granadoes Shells fill'd, and they so cruelly drunk, that they were bereav'd of Senses; Swearing, Cursing, drinking and smoking amongst said Shells, that every Minute I expected to dye no other death, then by 10000 Thunder Bolts; for had one Cole, or Spark of Tobacco fire fell there on (being covered over wth Pich and Tow) that had set all the rest on fire; and then (Libera nos Domine.) But by Gods great mercy, I was preserv'd from that Master piece of dangers. Amongst 16 Sea fights I have been in, and 5 Land Battles, I never encountered with such dangers and hardships. There I was continued 8 dayes & Nights, prohibiting mee from sight or Speech of my poor Children in so much, that in that whole time, I could not receive one word or Line, whither I must live or dye; at length he departed like a Pannick Slave, fearing every Soul that look'd on him, would have reveoged his barbarous cruelty, & ordered the Jaylor to carry away the Key of the Dungeon with him on board their Ship; so that after our English Governo<sup>r</sup> was Two Hours Posses of the fort, hee could not get mee out, until a Smith was sent for, and broke the Lock off the Doore. Four or five nights before the Surrender, divers Soldiours, Smiths and Carpenters Employed themselves in ripping off Locks, Latches, Hinges, Bolts and Glasse Windows, &c, destroying and Stealing whatsoever they were capable of carrying out of the fort, that was worth<sup>d</sup>, aiming at nothing but destruction and confusion to his Royall Highnesse Garrison; The very Soldiours Bedsteads in the Guard, escaped not their fury, but plucked downe and burnt. And notwithstanding this Dutch Governo<sup>r</sup> (by the great Noise in the Night) was sensible thereof, oot one word of reproof or reprim<sup>t</sup> for their so doing; The unhappy stay of the Cattle friggott behinde, infus'd more patience to our Governo<sup>r</sup>s breast, then ordinary, otherwise hee would never have put up such rude enormities. In fine, for my particular, I must bid farewell to all expectacons of satisfaction, for my Estate and bodily sufferings; having neither Money nor friends to implead him before the States of Holland or Zeland. Deare Sr; I must also acquaint yo<sup>r</sup> hono<sup>r</sup>, we are very happy in our New Governo<sup>r</sup>, who is excellently accomplish'd with Martiall, as well as civill experience: And notwithstanding Colve promised divers of the Dutch Inhabitants, to hoys up the princes flagg in 2 years, by the industry, care and vigilancy of this our worthy Governo<sup>r</sup>, hee will break his promise, as he hath always done; Their Tyranny having been so great, that severall hundred of us, his Royall Highnesse's Subjects on such an occasion, will get a flagg wth this Motto, No quarter within, nor without, rather then once more come under their Belgick Tyranny."

"The Proclamation prohibiting the Exportation of Wheate" is "published, at y<sup>e</sup> Townhall."—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 30, 1674. See Feb. 19, 1675.

Capt. John Manning appears "before Court Satt," and acknowledges "what hee had reported relating to M<sup>r</sup> John Lawrences his Losing the Mace and Gownes [see Nov. 17], it was by misinformation and is very sorry for it." The court orders that Capt. Manning's acknowledgment shall be recorded "to y<sup>e</sup> end the Callumnie Cast on the said M<sup>r</sup> John Lawrence, by the said Asperion, may be taken off."—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 1, 1674.

The mayor's court forbids under penalty "the Carmen to ryde wood and other things on y<sup>e</sup> Saboth day . . . as also digging Sand in unlawfull places, to y<sup>e</sup> Great detriment of many."—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 1, 1674.

The mayor's court orders that "the Brewers that have the wyne porters to carry out their Beere as formerly was accustomed, and the Bakers are not to hyer or permit any corne to be Carried up or brought downe in their houses or Garretts, by any other persons, then their owne Servants, or the Corne Porters." The porters had petitioned for this order because the brewers, bakers, and others had been "setting day Laborers, on worke to carry up their corne and other things, which of right apperteynes to them."—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 1, 1674.

By order of the mayor's court, new officers are named for Harlem from a double set of nominees. A constable takes the place of the schout, and David de Marest is appointed to that office. Instead of the Dutch board of five scepens, four "magistrates" are named, Coraelius Jansen, Joost van Olinhis, Adolph Meyer, and John Dyckman. The last three were on the Dutch board (see Sept. 22/Oct. 2).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), IV: 26.

The "regulation" of the estate of the former governour, Francis Lovelace (see Oct. 23/Nov. 2, 1673), is responsible for two court cases, of this date: the sheriff against Dirck van Clyff, who has rented a house next the city hall which has been attached by the sheriff on order of the governour "for account of Lovelace;" and the sheriff against Pardon, who is in a house on Broadway which has been similarly attached. It is decided that neither tenant shall pay any rent until so ordered by the governour.—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 22, 1674.

1675

To illustrate the domestic style of life among the principal English merchants who established themselves in this city immediately after the change of government to English domination, Valentine has printed a description of the house and furnishings of John Winder, who kept a general store similar to those of country merchants of to-day. "His house was a double one-story building, his dwelling being in the same tenement with his store-house, divided therefrom by a wide hall, which was the common living-room of the family. In this hall were four Spanish tables, twelve old Turkey chairs, an old leather chair, a 'Kioig's arms, two crumb cloths or carpets of Turkey-work, two leather Bristol carpets or rugs, two small looking-glasses, a screen, andirons, tongs and shovel, and an hour-glass, besides the pewter and table-ware of the family. The family chamber adjoined this hall, in which were the bed and its furniture; five pieces of tapestry adorned the walls. . . . The room back of this was the spare bed-room . . . One other room, occupied by the servants, constituted the extent of his establishment." The silver-plate of Mr. Winder was 447 ounces in weight.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 511-12; Abstracts of Wills in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892), 43.

The business of Cornelis Steenwyck, one of the old Dutch merchants, was also carried on in the same building in which he resided. "This was a double stone house, on the present south-east corner of Whitehall and Bridge streets, with a kitchen extension in the rear, fronting the latter. Its value was about two thousand dollars, and it was, at that period, one of the best houses in the town. The part of the building on the corner was occupied as the store. The hall ran through the centre, on the east side of which was the dwelling part of the house. The front room was the parlor. It contained a marble table, a wooden table, eleven pictures, seven Russia leather

- Jan. 8 Gov. Andros and his council decide that a market shall be held "in this City of New Yorke on Friday y<sup>e</sup> fifth day" of February next and on every succeeding Friday; also that "a convenient shed or Markett House" shall be erected.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 685.

Any person within the government subscribing 15 beavers, or their value (£10), may be a member and have a vote in the company.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 685. The text of the articles of association is given in ibid., XIV: 711. The Duke of York was pleased to hear of this project, for he looked upon the fishery as the most likely thing to produce wealth and power at sea for the plantation.—Ibid., III: 234.
- 15 Capt. Manning is to be tried for surrendering Fort James to the Dutch. Preparations for the trial were in progress on Jan. 22, and it commenced on Jan. 29, when he was committed to the sheriff. On Feb. 5, he was sentenced to be dismissed from the service.—Cal. Coun. Min., 21. See Jan. 21, 1675, and Addenda.
- Israel Chauncy, writing to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut (letter is dated "Stratford febr. 16 74/75"), said "Capt: Manning hath bin tried for his life for his so basely surrendering the fort to the Dutch: his sentence was that he should be carryed from the Bar to the place of execution (all expecting he would have bin put to death) when he was brought thither he was stript aked down to his wast his hands fastened with Irons, Ten Musketeers, with their Loaden muskets standing round him waiting for the word of command when they should discharge at him; the first word of command was to breake his sword into three pieces over his head w<sup>ch</sup> done the Musketeers were commanded to face about, he [was] set at liberty with a charge upon pain of death never to wear sword more in that government: This we are informed concerning him by many."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 135, in Mass. - " John Burroughs, town clerk of Newtown, L. I., having spoken too plainly of the grievances his fellow-townsmen suffered under Lovelace, and having reflected on the authority of the court of assizes, is brought before the council at New York, and sentenced to stand an hour at the whipping-post before the city hall, with a paper on his breast setting forth that he has signed seditious letters against the government.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 685-86.
- 19 A constable and four overseers for Harlem are sworn by the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (MS.), Jan. 19, 1675. Under Dutch rule, on Aug. 16, 1666, Stuyvesant had appointed an inferior court of justice of three men for Harlem (usually called New Harlem), to which court a limited degree of legislative power was granted. On June 17, 1665, this court was abolished by the English government, who appointed a constable for the village. This officer was authorized "to select three or four persons, who shall have to decide any differences or dispute to the extent of five pounds sterling."—Rec. N. Am., V: 254. See June 15, infra. Under the New Orange magistrates an under-schout and schepens took the place of the constable and his assistants and were sworn on Aug. 21, 1673.—Ibid., VI, 400. See Aug. 12/23, 1673. With English reoccupation came the change to constable and overseers alluded to above.
- Gov. Andros in council orders that a report be made of the vacant places in the city fit for building; and that if the proprietors themselves do oot forthwith build thereon, then any other person who shall desire it may have leave so to do; "Paying the value at which the said Land shall be apprizd."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 34. The report on this subject was made March 25 (q. v.).

- The earliest mention is made in the records of the province of "the new Burial place, without the Towoe" (Doc. Hist. N. Y., 8vo. ed., III: 85), in examinations regarding the surrender of the fort to the Dutch in July, 1673. It would seem that this plot was a burial-place as early as the latter date. The oorth half of Trinity Church-yard now covers the site. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927; and Pl. 174, Vol. III. See, further, Feb. 28, 1677; Feb. 15, 1703.

- " Otto Gerritsoo is fined by the court of mayor and aldermen for "tapping without a Lyeence."—M. C. M. (MS.), Feb. 9, 1675. Gerritsoo had been presented to the court on this charge Dec. 22, 1674, and as a defence had offered to prove "against the next Court Day." He failed to show proof.
- 19 "Arian Cornelisen dose above [avow] and affirms that one Peter the Scott did say unto Joames Cowenhoven that the Dutch enemy were seene to clyme upp to the fort walls and that y<sup>e</sup> said Scott was then a Centioell and see the Kings flagg struck and y<sup>e</sup> Princes flagg hoysted upp and that the English soldiers cryed for Quarter with much more such Like reports." Cornelisen is ordered to appear in Court whenever the government requires it to testify against Scott.—M. C. M. (MS.). Cornelisen became a tapster in 1680, and in 1690 had a tavern on the Bowery road, at the two mile stooe.—See Apr. 23, 1680; March 26, 1690.
- " The order prohibiting the exportation of corn (see Nov. 30, 1674) is continued by the governour's council.—Cal. Coun. Min., 21. However, after "an Extraordinary meeting" of the mayor's court this same day, at which Gov. Andros was present, and to which bakers were summoned, four "Eminent Bakers" agreed to supply an outgoing frigate with 15,000 lbs. of "Bisquet" at 15 shillings per hundred weight.—M. C. M. (MS.), Feb. 19, 1675.
- " Peter Jansen Meade is required to restore to its place in the fort an iron stove he had "taken into his house," to pay a fine of 40 guilders, and to petition "the honoured Governor for Excuse and pardon."—M. C. M. (MS.), Feb. 19, 1675. This is an interesting incident connected with the change from Dutch to English government. The sheriff declared the accused had taken "Other movables" as well as the stove. The prisoner endeavoured to free himself by showing a certificate from two Dutch officers that they gave or sold the things to him.
- Mar. 6 Christopher Hogland, as "Surveyor & Brander of Bread and flower," and Richard Elliott, as "Surveyor and Packer of Beefe and Porke," are sworn "publicly at y<sup>e</sup> Towne Hall" by the court of mayor and aldermen.—*M. - 13 The court of mayor and aldermen publishes an order of the governour, forbidding "all foreiners and Strangers or Others" to do any trading in the province unless they shall have first made proper and legal entry at the port.—M. C. M. (MS.), March 13, 1675. Judgment was granted, Nov. 9, 1680, against ao alio, Joho van Twist, for trading "here in his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Plattacon Contrary to Act of Parliament."—Ibid., Nov. 9, 1680.
- " Gov. Andros issues a proclamation that, at such times and places as the magistrates of the towns shall appoint, the oath of allegiance and fidelity is to be administered "to all Such Persons as Intend to Live under his Ma<sup>ties</sup> obedience within his Royall Highnesses Government." The common council of New York appointed March 15 as the time.—M. C. C., I: 5. On March 16, Cornelis Steenwyck, N. Bayard, Egidius Luyck, Johannes de

- 1675 Peyster, and others petitioned the mayor and aldermen to intercede with the governour to relieve them of the obligation of taking the oath of allegiance and bearing arms against the Dutch.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 35. In October, judgment was entered against Cornelis Steenwyck, Nicholas Bayard, Johannes van Brugh, Egidius Luyck, William Beekman, Jacob Kipp, and Antonio de Mill, for refusing and opposing the taking of the oath. Their goods were forfeited to the king, and an order was issued for the imprisonment of Bayard in the fort.—Ibid., 40. A peremptory order was issued on Oct. 30 requiring all who had not taken the oath to do so by Nov. 24.—M. C. C., I: 5. On Nov. 1, Nicholas Bayard, "a prisoner in the Hole," was "released for the night on giving security for good behavior;" and on Nov. 3, Kip, Steenwyck, Van Brugh, Beekman, and Luyck submitted to the court and petitioned to be allowed to take the oath.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 41.
- 15 A number of Dutch inhabitants appear before the court of mayor and aldermen and request a continuance of "their former privileges granted to them by Governour Nicolls": 1. "To have the Liberty of the Church." 2. "That their people shall not be Prest." 3. "That y<sup>e</sup> Articles of inheritance be confirmed." 4. "That they shall not be obliged to take up Arms against their owne Nation." The court communicated to them the governour's reply that they must take the oath "without Condition, Articles, or Provisoes."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 15, 1675. Forty-four took the required oath on March 17, although the petitioners of two days before desired the court to intercede with the governour. The minutes further show that 193 were sworn on March 18 and 19.
- 19 A proclamation of the governour is published by the court of mayor and aldermen to the effect that "true subjects" must inform the governour of "Mutinous words or Actions they shall See or heare done or Spoken."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 19, 1675.
- 20 John Smedes conveys to Conraet Ten Eyck, Caarsen Leersen, Jacob Abrams, and Joho Harberding (Liber Deeds, I: 126, Albany), most of the land subsequently called "The Shoemakers Land," the grantees being all tanners and shoemakers. The land was "to be equally divided into four proportions or shares amongst them." Cornelius Clopper, another shoemaker, threw his parcel, which adjoined, into the common field and, in 1696, these proprietors, "finding the said land to be rentable for building of houses for an enlargement of the city, projected and laid out said lands into 164 lots."—Liber Deeds, VI: 135 (Albany). For the location and subsequent history of the Shoemakers' Land, see description of Pl. 24-a, I: 236-39; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947.
- 23 Katherine Harrison, the "Wethersfield Witch," is declared innocent of the charge brought against her by Alice Manning in the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (MS.), March 23, 1675. The first entry in this case is in ibid., Dec. 22, 1674; subsequent ones in ibid., Jan. 19, 1675, Feb. 9, 1675, and March 8, 1675. A decision against the "Witch" on the last named date was reversed after a doctor's report on the case had been received.
- " Evert Duyking and Henry Williamson are appointed by the mayor's court "brand Masters to Looke after fowle Chimneys, and fyers," also "Lathers hookes & fyver Bucketts."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 23, 1675. Herein the English magistracy was following the practice of the Dutch court in appointing fire-wardens; Duyking had been a Dutch appointee to the same office.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35. See Jan. 8, 1678; Dec. 23, 1678.
- 24 "This day was Proclaymed the edict prohibiting hoggs going about the streets of the City longer than 8 days after the Publication, on the penalty of £20 for the first offence, £30 for the second, and forfeiture of the hoggs found in the street & Seized for the third offence."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 24, 1675. This was the English order that suspended the New Orange order of August 28, 1673; it was considerably milder in tone. The Dutch order prohibited stray pigs in the whole area south of the Collect, not merely in the city streets; forfeiture of the hogs went with the first offence instead of the third.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 406. Restraint of hogs was a subject for discussion in the common council meetings for a century or more after this; as late as July, 1788, a new effort to keep the creatures from the streets was defeated, although it was more successful four months later.—M. C. C. (1784-1831), I: 385, 417; Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 91-98.

- The following year, Feb. 3, 1676, appraisers were appointed by the mayor and aldermen to survey and value the vacant land and "ruinated or decayed houses within this City, convenient or fit to build," whose proprietors were either absent or unwilling to improve the property, so that they might be handed on to those who were willing to make repairs or build houses.—M. C. C., I: 14-15. On May 26, 1676, the governour in council ordered the mayor and aldermen of the city of New York to publish an ordinance providing that all "Vacant Land withoute fence not Improved" be appraised and disposed of to those willing to build "Sufficient dwelling houses" within a year upon the payment of "the Purchase to the right Owners according to the apprizement."—Ibid., I: 19; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 46.

1675 The appraisers appointed to value the estate of Gov. Lovelace Mc-27 make their report.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 35.

Apr. 6 The Duke of York, writing from St. James's Palace, London, to Governor Andros, in answer to the latter's letters of Nov. 20, and Dec. 4 and 7, 1674, says: "I approve of yo<sup>r</sup> having bespoken a Seal and Mace for yo<sup>r</sup> City of New Yorke, yo<sup>r</sup> charge whereof wilbe allowed you upon Acc<sup>t</sup> and it is well that you have yo<sup>r</sup> other Seal for yo<sup>r</sup> Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 230; Sainsbury's Cal. of State Papers, Am. and West Indies, 1675-6 (London, 1893), 202, item No. 513. See Oct. 5, 1669. For a reproduction of the seal, see Frontispiece, Vol. V.

The Duke of York also remarks that the latter has done well to discourage any suggestion "touching General Assemblies wch yo<sup>e</sup> people there seeme desirous of in imitacion of their neighbour Colonies." He believes an assembly not "consistent with yo<sup>e</sup> forme of governm<sup>t</sup> already established, nor necessary for yo<sup>e</sup> ease or redresse of any grievance yo<sup>e</sup> may happen, since yo<sup>e</sup> may be as easily obtained, by any petition or other address to you at their General Assizes (wch is once a yeare) where the same persons (as Justices) are usually present, who in all probability would be their Representatives if another constitucon were allowed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 230. See also O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to the Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), I: xvi. For the first provincial assembly in New York, see Oct. 17, 1683.

26 All the vacant land and "old decayed houses" (see March 25) are viewed by the mayor and aldermen to "finde a Proper place for a Church [Dutch or English—?] and Shoомakers Tan Pitts." They kept a record of what they saw "in a Paper tyttled the Surveigh of yo<sup>e</sup> City."—M. C. M. (MS.), April 26, 1675.

June 5 By order of the court of mayor and aldermen, strangers are required to pay eightpence per ton, and freemen sixpence, for goods "brought into this Government, and Landed on the Bridge;" goods brought from New Jersey, and salt, were the only things excepted. Revenue from this source was needed to repair the "bridges" or landing-places of the city which had been reported "much out of repayre and decayed." "All Barkes Ketches Sloopes or other vessels with decks" occupying the "Camber" or dock more than 24 hours were required to pay two shillings per day. Smaller vessels and "open boates without Decks," one shilling.—M. C. M. (MS.), June 5, 1675.

16 The inhabitants of New Haerlem delegate Captain Carteret and others to present a petition to Andros for confirmation of their patent, granted by Nicolls Oct. 11, 1667, and confirmed by Lovelace June 22, 1670.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 362; Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 236 (in N. Y. Pub. Library).

23 King Philip's War begins, at Swanzy, in the Plymouth colony, caused by Indian jealousy of the growth of English settlements, and the almost complete alienation of hunting-grounds by treaties. It raged in New England until April 12, 1678 (q.v.).—Lincoln, Nar. of the Indian Wars, 1-167.

Aug. 9 On account of the Indians, the several towns (evidently both on Maabattan and Long Islands) are directed to maintain strict watch. (See Dec. 6.) A message from the mayor is published in the village of Harlem, on Aug. 9, requiring the inhabitants "not to beat the drum nor to hold any meetings, neither to ferry any stranger across the river, without the knowledge and sanction of the constable." This had reference to the practice, long in vogue in the town before they had a bell, of beating the drum to call the people together.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 365; Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 246.

Sept. 21 By order of the court of mayor and aldermen, all writs of the courts must be executed by the sheriff "before the sitting of the next Court."—M. C. M. (MS.), Sept. 21, 1675. This order followed "sundry Complaints" to the court that executions were delayed.

Oct. 6 Among the orders, made between Oct. 6 and 13 at the general court of assizes, are the following:

1. To prevent troubles arising from the sale of liquors to Indians at their plantations, where small relief can be expected if troubles arise, trading with them there is prohibited. The law is re-established which prohibited selling liquors to them "in New Yorke Schire upon Long Island and dependences;" and providing that "Constables of the Several Townes take care no powder or Lead be sold to the Indians but by them as directed or by their contents." The Indians at Mr. Pell's or "Anne Hooks Neck" are ordered "to remove within a fortnight to their usuall winter quarters within Hell-Gate upon this Island."

2. English weights and measures shall be used in New York

City three months after the publication of the law providing for the same. The proclamations prohibiting the exportation of corn and flour shall continue in force six months longer.—M. C. C., I: 2-4. In April, Gov. Andros continued this prohibition until the next general court of assizes should be held.—Ibid., I: 16.

3. An annual fair or market shall be held at Brooklyn near the ferry for all grain, cattle, or other produce of the country, on the first Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of November, and in the city of New York on the Thursday, Friday, and Saturday following.—Ibid., I: 4. There were probably no permanent buildings erected in connection with this annual fair in New York, which must not be confused with the weekly market, which, doubtless, still was held on the smaller plain east of the fort; but see Jan. 29, 1677. See also Castello Plan, II: 344.

4. Magistrates throughout "the whole Government" are required in all cases "to doe Justice to the Indyans, as well as Christians."—Ibid., I: 4.

5. By reason of Staten Island's insular position, it is given "Jurisdiction of it Selle; and to have no further dependance on the Courts of Long Island nor on their Militia."—Ibid., I: 4.

Gov. Andros appoints William Dervall to be mayor; Gabriel Minvielle, Nicholas de Meyer, Thomas Gibbs, Thomas Lewis, and Stephen van Cortlandt to be aldermen, and John Sharpe to be sheriff of the city of New York, to hold office until Oct. 13, 1676. The mayor and aldermen are given "full power and Authority to keep Courts, Administer Justice as a Court of Sessions; And Rule and Govern" all the inhabitants of the city.—M. C. C., I: 1-2. For brief sketch of Dervall's life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 384; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 51.

On this date the "town clerke" begins to keep the "Common Council" minutes in a record-book separate from the minutes of the "Court of Mayor and Aldermen."—M. C. C., I: 1. Beginning in 1657, "according to the custom of our Fatherland," the burgo-masters of New Amsterdam began to meet apart from the "Court of Burgomasters and Schepens," Thursday mornings at 9 o'clock, "to consult then together about all that may concern the City and to dispose thereof as shall be found proper." Their records were kept separate from the court records and are found translated up to Jan. 28, 1661, in Vol. VII of The Records of New Amsterdam, and from Feb. 11, 1661, to May 20, 1664, in Minutes of the Orphan-masters (p. 1907). From Nov. 13, 1674, until Oct. 17, 1675, the English court of mayor and aldermen transacted administrative and judicial business at the same sitting, or at least the clerk recorded such business in the same book; a separate book, however, contains administrative business after Oct. 17. This probably means that at this date the court sessions and legislative sessions were separate, marked by the ringing of a bell.—M. C. C., I: 250. Until Feb. 14, 1684, the same magistrates, mayor and aldermen comprised the judicial body and the administrative body, and the same clerk recorded the actions of both bodies. Whether by misplacement on the part of the latter, or by the willingness or consent of the magistrates to consider an administrative matter when sitting as a court, the minutes of the mayor's court contain much that one would expect to find in the minutes of the common council. This continued to be true even after 1684, when, through the addition of "Common councilmen" or assistant aldermen, there came to be a so-called "Common Council."—Ibid., I: 104, 297. For reproduction of the first page of the Minutes of the Common Council, see Pl. 16, Vol. IV. Also see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 9-12.

Gov. Andros, having appointed Samuel Leete to be clerk of the court of assizes, administers the oath of office.—M. C. C., I: 4-5.

"Upon yo<sup>r</sup> Proposal of building a [Church] [for] the Towne [see Jan. 16, 1671; Oct. 6/16, 1673; May 12/22, 1674] Ordered, That M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Lewis doe call [to] his Assistance, M<sup>r</sup> Adolph Pieters & Abraham Jansen, who are desired to make a Calculation of yo<sup>e</sup> Charge of building a wooden [Church] of sixty two English foot in length, and fifty in breadth, both to be measured on the inside, The height of yo<sup>e</sup> wall to be twenty [feet] & to have a Convenience to hang a bell in."—MS. Executive Council Minutes (N. Y. State Library), Vol. III, part 2, p. 68. This was the new Lutheran Church, at the south-west corner of the present Broadway and Rector St.—See June 29, 1671; Oct. 7, 17, 1673; May 12/22, 16/26, 1674; Mar. 25, 1675; 1676; and Pl. 8-b, I: 153. The church was built between this date and 1684 (q.v.), probably in 1676 (q.v.), or shortly thereafter. "Town rates" are paid with fat cattle.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 42.

1675 The magistrates of the town of Harlem appoint two fire-wardens Nov. 22 to inspect houses and chimneys.—Harlem Recs., op. cit. I: 254.

24 At a special court of sessions, it is ordered that former regulations to prevent the straying of horses, cows, and other animals in the streets of New York be enforced; also that former orders for the cleaning of the streets be carried out. The inhabitants are required, each Saturday or oftener, to sweep the dirt before their doors into heaps; and the carmen are required to cart it to some convenient place by the waterside.—M. C. C., I: 7-8, 13.

" With this date begins the record of the admission of freemen of the city. The list is published in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1885), 39-443; extending the record through the year 1866; the original records are in the city clerk's office. For the beginning of the burgherright in New Amsterdam, see Sept. 18, 1648.

25 Conditions are decided upon and recorded whereby the weigh-house is "to be let to farm." The contract is undertaken by John Sharpe. Orders are issued regarding payments at the weigh-house, including the tariff of duties.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 43. The following year (Dec. 2), a similar record was kept, with the list of bidders and the amount of their bids.—Ibid., 52. See Nov. 29, 1679.

30 Public notice is given (signed by Samuel Leete, clerk of the mayor's court) that, on Dec. 4, at the house of Peter Denice, the privilege of selling wines, etc., is to be let to the highest bidder.
 This privilege is referred to as "The Great Pack or Excise and the Small Pack or Excise of all Manner of Wines etc., as hath been heretofore used and accustomed." It is to "bee Lett or Sett for one year from Sun Such time or times as the old Farmer termes Shall bee expired."—M. C. C., I: 7. Regarding the "Conditions on which the Great Pack<sup>r</sup> or Tapper's excise is to be let to farm," on Dec. 4, with the names of the bidders and the amount of their bids, see Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 43.

In January, 1676, the mayor and aldermen discontoured the "Small Pack or Burgers Excise, for any Strong Liquors, wines, beere Syder etc.," it having been found "a great Burthen and Imposition" on the inhabitants. They presented the following proposals to the governour:

"1. That there bee 8 houses appointed to Sell all Sorts of wines and Brandy & Rume etc and Lodging. 2. That there bee 8 houses appointed to Sell beere Syder, Mell Brandy Rum Strong waters & Strangers as the Law directs, to Sell Brandy Rum Strong waters & Tobacco. 3. That 2 of the wine houses be Ordinaries and 4 of the Beere houses." (An "ordinary" was a set meal, similar to the French table d'hôte of to-day.—See "Famous Taverns of Old New York," by John Austin Stevens, in N. Y. Herald, Dec. 17, 1895.) The prices of wines and other liquors as they were to be sold by the tappers were scheduled in detail, including the price of "The ordinary at y<sup>e</sup> Wine house p<sup>r</sup> meale," and the same "Att the Beere house." This price-list included also the terms for "Lodging at y<sup>e</sup> wine house" and "Att the Beere house."—M. C. C., I: 10-11.

Another arrangement went into effect on Jan. 29, 1676, which was that "the great Pack or Excise, as alsoe the Little Pack Burgers or Towne Excise is wholly taken off, remitted, and no more to be paid, by any private or publick persons or houses of entertainment; but all at Liberty to buy and Sell freely at due times, when they please." It was nevertheless ordered, "to prevent the irregularity or confusion that mayt happen by to many disorderly Retailers or houses of Entertainment," that no one should "Sell or Retayle at home nor out of doores, Less then one Gallon exceed Licenced houses." All persons desiring to sell drinks at retail or keep a house of entertainment were required to apply to John West, deputy clerk of the mayor's court, before Feb. 5, where they might see the regulations regarding taverns and other houses of entertainment where liquors might be sold. Persons who were approved were to "have out their Licence." This regulation was to remain in force for a year.— Ibid., I: 13-14, 16-17. See also Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 66, regarding the conditions on which licenses were "to be let to farm" in 1678, with the names of bidders; and ibid., 77, for a notice to retailers to take out licenses in 1679. See also the order of Aug. 16, 1681.

Dec. 6 In obedience to an ordinance of the governour and council, a night watch (see Aug. 9), divided into four corporalships of seven persons each, is established in the town of Harlem.—Harlem Recs.
 (MS. translation), I: 255; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 367.

18 A license is granted by the governour and council to Thomas Smith, fencing master, to open a school to teach the "use and exercise of arms" in the city of New York.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 44.

Members of the provincial council and the justices of the north and west ridings of "Yorkshire" (see June 22, 1665) meet in a conference at New York with respect to the harbour and harbour defences of this city.—Cal. Coun. Min., 24. See, further, Jan. 10 and 20, and April 15, 1676.

Many "ill Conveniaents" having happened in the past "by Severall young people firing off of Pistells and other Gunns upon the new years day, being the first day of January;" the deputy mayor and aldermen forbid the practice.—M. C. C., I: 7. This is a revival of an old ordinance of New Amsterdam, which dates back twenty years.—See Rec. N. Am., I: 18, 420; II: 254; III: 431.

Several orders have been issued (see Nov. 24) "that noe person or persons whatsoever Should Sett any Waygon or Cart; or Lay any Wood, Timbers, Dirt, Mucke, or Stones, or any other Rumblish in the Streetes or high ways." The deputy mayor and aldermen now order "that all Persons take notice that they Cleanse the Streetes; Every Person cleansie before his or her doores." Proceedings will be taken against those who fail to clean the street within one week, or those who "sett any Wagons, Carts, or Sleade in the Streetes."—M. C. C., I: 7-8.

This order was reiterated in various forms in later years, always regarding (1) the cleaning of the streets, (2) the prohibition against obstructions, and (3) against throwing garbage, rubbish, ashes, and filth into the streets. The instructions to carmen were in keeping with these orders. Regarding the first, see ibid. I: 136, 137, 224, 247; II: 74-75, 95, 195-96, 246; IV: 101-4; VIII: 49. Regarding the second, see ibid., I: 224; IV: 101-4; V: 476-77. Regarding the third, see ibid., I: 137, 224, 247; II: 103, 196; IV: 101-4.

1676

Some time after Nov. 8, 1675 (q. v.), probably during the year 1676 or shortly thereafter, and certainly before 1684 (q. v.), the Lutherans erected their first church building at what is now the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector St., on the plot granted them by Gov. Colv. on May 12/22, 1674 (q. v.).—See Land Papers, I: 161 (Albany). It should be noted that the Cal. Land Papers (1864), 19 (under date of Dec. 11, 1679, citing the original record in Albany), is in error in giving the location as "Broad street" instead of Broadway. See also March 25 and Nov. 8, 1675.

This structure was demolished, and a new edifice erected in its place, which was begun May 22, 1727 (q. v.), and opened in 1729.— Lutheran Minutes. The second church was partially destroyed by fire in 1776.—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 30, 1776. This church was not rebuilt, but the building was rented for some years thereafter as a store-house; and the land was sold to Trinity Church in 1805.

 23-a, 26, 27, 27-b, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 40, 41, 42, 44 and 68-b, Vol.

At a meeting of the mayor and aldermen, with some of the council present, to whom the governour has referred consideration of the question as to what may be done by the city toward building a new dock (see Dec. 30, 1675), it is thought that 18,000 cart-loads of stooce will be sufficient, "if three foote high." The cost of this is figured at two shillings a load. The record shows the following estimator: "Eighteen Loade of Stone will make butt: 1 foote: att: 3 foote: high and: 24 foote Over the Length of the worke: Computed att: betweene 900 & 1000: besides: the Closing the Ends if Occation." The carrying capacity of a sloop and a scow is considered, with canoes to help load. The work is to be done by the inhabitants, divided into companies. Carpenters are to have a time proposed for them to undertake the work, at an agreed rate
 "by the foote or Rod."—M. C. C., I: 17. On Jan. 15, it was ordered by the mayor and aldermen that a tax be levied for building this new dock or wharf.—Ibid., I: 10, 18. See further developments on April 15, July 26, Oct. 3, and Nov. 10, 1676.

The deputy mayor and aldermen order that the watch be set every night by eight "of the Clock" immediately after the ringing of the bell; that the city gates be locked by the constable or deputy before nine "of the Clock," and opened in the morning "presently after day Light" at the dismissing of the watch; that frequent rounds be made about the city, especially toward the bridge, at least three times every night; and that the serjeant belonging to every watch come with his halberd, and see that everyone of the watch brings his arms,—that is, his sword and half-pike. It is also ordered that all citizens have in readiness in their houses "for every head" one good musket or firelock with powder and ball, and that all citizen

1676 soldiers appear with good arms before their captains at the first Jan. 11 beating of the drums. Penalties are fixed for failure to comply with these regulations.—M. C. C., I: 8-9. Undoubtedly the Indian war of this period made these regulations desirable. See 1682.

20 The mayor and aldermen order that no person shall retail "Goods, wares, and Merchandizes," unless he be a freeman of the city or a settled housekeeper for one year, or has given security, except by special license from the mayor and aldermen with the approbation of the governor. A freeman loses his privileges by absence from the city for six months, if during that time he does not "keep fire and Candle Light and pay Scot and Lott" (i.e., his share of the taxes). A merchant may be made a freeman on payment of six beavers; and all "Handcraft trades and others," on payment of two beavers.—M. C. C., I: 10, 18, 19. See also March 15, 1684. Regarding the burgherright in New Amsterdam, see Jan.
 22, 1657.

" It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that all masters of vessels, as soon as they "come on Shoare," shall "give an account to the Mayor or Deputy Mayor of all and every Passenger" landed here. A "Merchable Bever" is the fine to be exacted for every passenger not so reported.—M. C. C., I: 10. For a similar ordinance later, see April 22, 1691. It was in this way the magistrates hoped to minimize pauperism in the city. The local communities in New England were also "exceedingly jealous of the intrusion of strangers," says G. E. Howard in his Local Constitutional Hist. of the U. S., 87.

Feb. 3 The mayor and aldermen appoint appraisers to survey and value vacant land and "ruined houses" whose owners are unwilling to improve the property so that such may be handed over to those who will build.—M. C. C., I: 11, 14-15. See also Jan. 22 and March 25, 1675.

26 The "Wickerscreek" (Wickquaskeck) Indians are allowed by the council to settle near "Spitting Devil" on Manhattan Island.— Cal. Coun. Min., 25. The date of the order is Feb. 6, as given by Riker in Revised Hist. of Harlem, 329. During the previous autumn when New England was in the throes of King Philip's War this tribe had been ordered in the interest of peace "to remove within a fortnight to their usual winter quarters within Hell gate upon this island."—Ibid., 326-27. So it was nothing new to have a tribe of Indians for neighbours on the island, although their presence was the occasion regularly for an increase in the number of the watch.

Mar. 1 Common fences enclosed the cultivated lands on Jochem Pieters' Flat and Van Keulen's Hook at Harlem. The location was on the Harlem River, opposite Randall's Island and Morrisania.
 See "Map of Harlem: Showing the Lands as in the Original Lots and Farms," in Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), opp. p. 620. No partition fences had yet been set up, the lots being merely staked off. When new fence-masters were appointed, April 24, 1675, it was resolved that each inhabitant should repair his part of the common fencing; that by the spring of 1676 these fences should be generally renewed and made at least 5½ ft. high; and that if any one failed, it should be done by the town at his expense.—Ibid., 370-71.

19 Gabriell Curtesee receives a patent (Liber Patents, IV: 121, Albany) for a lot of land which, as bounded generally by streets and avenues on the modern map, lay between a line running slightly east of Third Ave.; a line running from the north side of 52d St. near Third Ave. to the south side of 51st St. at the East River; the East River on the east; and, on the south, a line running from the river at 47th St. to a point half way between Second and Third Aves. in the middle of the block between 48th and 49th Sts. The northern part of this land became subsequently known as the James Beekman tract; the southern part fell into the Turtle Bay farm of Francis B. Winthrop.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 287-33, 119-39.

Apr. 8 On account of the Indian troubles, the council orders that all boats and vessels desiring to pass through Hell Gate shall first obtain a permit from the custom-house. This permit, except for merchandise, shall be given "gratis and with all dispatch."—Cal.
Coun. Min., 25; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 370.

" Gov. Andros continues the order of October, 1675, prohibiting the exportation of wheat and corn from New York, until the next meeting of the general court of assizes.—M. C. C., I: 16; Cal. Coun.
Min., 25.

15 An ordinance, passed by the mayor and aldermen on Jan. 15, is now allowed by the governor and ordered to be put into execution, requiring "that all Merchants and other that Shall at any time come and trade at this place before the new Docke or Wharfe (intended to be built) Shall be finished and paid for, Shall pay proportionable for his and their Estates, as hee or they shall bring here, as the Inhabitants and other Traders doe towards the buildinge of the Said Docke and defrayinge the Charges thereof."—

M. C. C., I: 9-10, 25-26, 29-38.

" The carpenters report to the provincial council concerning the frame of timber, or mole, necessary to be erected in the harbour.— Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 45. The original of this report, entered as a rough draft in the N. Y. Col. MSS., XXV: 98 (Albany), states in part:

"Adolph, the carpenter, and a great many of them being present, . . . do unanimously agree and give their opinion that the groundfills beneath and plates above will be most-proper.

"That at each end of a groundstill one beam to go athwart; that for every ten feet a stud and a beam will be necessary, the beams to be laid at ordinary highwater mark and every other beam to be under-braced.

" . . . To be filled with wood and stone, the wood all under-most and the stone uppermost."

20 An agreement is made between Elizabeth Bedlow and Capt.
 James Carteret for the purchase of Love Island.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 45. Elizabeth Bedlow was the widow and administratrix of Isaac Bedlow, an English merchant residing in New Amsterdam as early as 1664, who became factor for Gov. Lovelace after the English gained possession of the town, and who died in 1672.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 249, 651, 690; ibid., III: 74; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 38. Brodhead, in his Hist. State of N. Y., II: 168, refers to the transaction of April 20, 1676, as a sale of the island by Mrs. Bedlow to Capt. Carteret; but this appears questionable, because, on July 1, 1679, Mrs. Bedlow joined in an agreement with Capt. Carteret to relinquish the island.—Cal. Land Papers, 19.

Brodhead explains further that, on Dec. 23, 1667, Gov. Nicolls granted the island to Capt. Needham, who in turn sold it to Isaac Bedlow. On Aug. 19, 1670, he says (error for Aug. 10), Gov.
 Lovelace directed that "Love Island," then owned by Bedlow (whom Brodhead describes as "alderman, counselor and comptroller of the revenue"), should be a "Privileged place," where persons should be free from warrant of arrest. No map, apparently, records the name "Love Island." Lovelace gave the island this name on Aug. 10, 1670 (q. v.), at the same time that he made it a "Privileged place."
 The earliest record found showing the use of the name Bedloe's Island is Ryder's Map (1670); see, further, Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 492. The map of the harbour, published by Bradford in 1735 (Pl.
 29, Vol. I), shows this name.

Bedlow's Island was offered for sale, in August, 1735, by Adolph Philipse and Henry Lane.—N. Y. Gaz., Aug. 4-11, 1735. It afterwards came into the possession of Capt. Archibald Kennedy, who occupied it as a summer residence.—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 498.
 In 1738, a quarantine was established there by order of the governor's council.—M. C. C., IV: 429. Kennedy sold the island to the city in 1758 (ibid., VI: 131-32), and a pest-house was built there (ibid., VI: 162, 205), which was placed in the care of various tenants until 1773 (ibid., VI: 211, 369-70; VII: 179, 368, 429, 441 -42). Barracks also were erected there some time immediately prior to 1767.—Ibid., VII: 53, 75. The island is shown on the Meentresor Map of 1765-6 as "Kennedys or Corporation L." (Pl. 40, Vol. I), and on the Ratzler Map of 1776 as "Bedloes or Kennedys Island" (Pl. 41, Vol. I). It subsequently became the property of the state. By act of the legislature, on Feb. 15, 1800 (q. v.), it was ceded to the United States government, together with Ellis or Oyster Island, and Governor's Island, at which time the state reserved the right to execute on these islands any process of the New York civil or criminal courts. The peculiar exemption, above mentioned, which Bedloes Island had enjoyed since 1670, was thereby abrogated. Thereafter, for over 50 years, the island was occupied as a military station, fortifications being erected there from time to time on the side facing the channel.—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 498. See Addenda.

" The mayor and aldermen order that persons living "within the Streete called Heregrat" (Broad Street) shall "fill up the grift Ditch or Comond Shoare" (sewer), and make the same level with the street, and then pave and "pitch" it before their doors with stones
 "Soe far as Every Inhabitants house Shall be fronting towards the S<sup>d</sup> graft Or Ditch."—M. C. C., I: 19. The "pitch" was the incline of the street toward the centre, where the channel or gutter was

- usually built to carry off the water.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 533.
- May 9 The "Pavements" on "Both sides of the Broad Street" were taken up, and the street newly levelled and paved in 1763.—M. C. C., VI: 330, 347, 356, 364.
- 26 The governor in council orders the mayor and aldermen to publish an ordinance providing for the disposal of unimproved property to those willing to build.—M. C. C., I: 19; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 46.
- June 5 The court of mayor and aldermen appoints Peter Stoutenburgh "Receiver and Treasurer of the City's Revenues." He is to have 5% commission; and is to give a bond, as well as to render an account, to the court, and to continue in office "all the Election of the next Mayor or further Order."—M. C. C., I: 19. The office of treasurer had been abolished June 17, 1665 (q.v.). Mr. Stoutenburgh continued in office until Feb. 24, 1680 (q.v.). For alteration in the amount of the treasurer's commission, see Oct. 19, 1685.
- 7 The mayor and aldermen order that after Nov. 1, 1676, there shall be no slaughter-houses within the city, "nor any Oxen Cows Hogs Sheepe or Lambs killed w<sup>thin</sup> ye same."—M. C. C., I: 20. See also Feb. 16, 1677; Jan. 8, 1678; Oct. 15, 1691; May 11, 1696; Nov. 9, 1698; Oct. 11, 1720.
- " It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that tanners and shoemakers who have tan-pits within the city shall give them up Nov. 1, 1676, and shall not erect others within the limits of the city.—M. C. C., I: 21. For later location, see May 3, 1744.
- July 1 By a "quintipartite deed," New Jersey is divided into East and West Jersey. The former is granted to George Cartaret; the latter to the Quaker assignees of Byllinge.—N. J. Archives, 1st ser., I: 205-19; Seller-Fisher Map, Pl. 11-b, Vol. I. In 1687, an attempt was made to run the boundary line between the two provinces, but the result was unsatisfactory to West Jersey.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 445.
- 24 The mayor and aldermen, for the first time, appoint building inspectors and require permits for building within the city of paving before houses, that the same may be placed on record.—M.C.C., I: 21.
- 26 Regulations are issued by the council concerning butchers, shoemakers, and tanners, and the distilling and selling of liquor to the Indians.—Cal. Coun. Min., 26. See Aug. 25.
- " A memorandum of orders directs that persons be appointed to supervise the making of the mole of the new dock for the harbour.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 48. See also Dec. 30, 1675; April 15, 1676; and the "New (Great) Dock," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 990.
- " The governor and council order that the magistrates of New York appoint a town treasurer. A committee is appointed to confer with the magistrates on the subject.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 48. On Nov. 14, 1676, Peter Stoutenburgh was serivog as "Treasurer of ye City."—M. C. C., I: 38.
- Aug. 12 King Philip's War practically ends with the death of Philip, although continued by tribes in Maine and New Hampshire until April 12, 1678 (q.v.).—Lincoln, Nar. of the Indian Wars, 104-5.
- 25 Matthew Hilliard is reappointed at a meeting of the deputy mayor and aldermen to maintain in the city "a Schooll for ye Educating & instructing of Youth Either in Readinge Writinge Arithmetick Latin or Greeke." He had already served about two years and had received from the city a small salary, but there had been some dissatisfaction, and another applicant, Ebenezer Kirtland, now appears. Hilliard is continued in the position, "hee behaving himselfe for ye future better than ye time Past." The city will now provide him with a school-room but no salary.—M. C. C., I: 22-24.
- " John Harbendinge and Jacob Abrahamson are appointed the tanners for the city, and given the sole right to exercise this trade. Peter Paangborne is appointed sole currier. A butcher is not permitted to be a currier, tanner, or shoemaker, and a tanner is not permitted to be a currier, shoemaker, or butcher.—M. C. C., I: 24.
- " A pure food regulation is made by the mayor and aldermen. Grain which is not fit to grind or bolt shall not be distilled. Two inspectors are appointed.—M. C. C., I: 25. This ordinance is doubtless intended also to keep up the high standard of New York's commercial products.
- " A public house is self-convicted if an intoxicated Indian is seen coming from it. If he is seen drunk on the streets, and the house where he was made drunk is not known, the whole street is "finable."—M. C. C., I: 25. For another instance of community responsibility, half a century later, see July 24, 1715.
- 31 James Duke of York, through his secretary, gives these instructions to Gov. Andros: "It is his Royal Highness intentions to have all persons whatsoever treated with all humanity and gentleness that can consist with the honour and safety of your government to the end, that where the laws doe inflict a punishment, it may seeme rather for example to deter others from the like crimes, than to afflict the party punished, except where his malice appears plainly to aggravate his offence."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 237.
- " A list of names is prepared (probably for the governor and council) of persons who are to have lands within the bounds of Harlem.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 48.
- 12 Gov. Andros is personally occupied with supervising the work on the great dock. On Sept. 12, Matthias Nicolls writes from New York to Maj. John Winthrop, governor of Connecticut:—"The Govern<sup>r</sup> [Andros] . . . had still some thoughts of visiting yo<sup>r</sup> this fall, but having undertaken a great worke of making [a] new wharfe before the Towne for preservacion of sloopes & small vessels in the winter & our Co<sup>t</sup> of Assizes approaching, (being to begin tomorrow three weekes) hee hath alter'd his designe of going, but sends his Sloop for Boston this weeke." Nicolls wrote to Winthrop, on Sept. 23, regarding Andros, whose time is "taken up for the pres<sup>t</sup> with his daily Labour of supervizing workemen upon several publick occasions, but in short time that will be over.—" Extracts from letters in the Winthrop Papers, in the archives of the Mass. Hist. Soc. XV: 155-56.
- 15 Charges having been made by Jacob Leisler and Jacob Milborne against Dominic Van Rensselaer of Albany "for words spoken by him in a Sermon," an appeal is taken to Gov. Andros and his council at New York. On Sept. 18, Leisler was "committed into the Custody of the Sheriff" for failing to furnish security of £5,000. The trial of the case occurred in New York on Sept. 23, the governor, council, mayor, aldermen, and ministers of the city being present. Settlement was reached Oct. 23, the costs being chargeable to the plaintiffs.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 526-30. The incident brought Leisler and Milborne forward as leaders of the dissenting party in the province.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 300; Man. Com. Coun. (1869), 738. The mainpring of the attack upon Dominic Van Rensselaer was "in the fact that Englishmen now bore control over the Reformed communion in the old Dutch province." The interest which Milborne, an Englishman, had in the prosecution of this case was based upon the apprehension that danger to the ecclesiastical rights of the Protestant inhabitants meant danger to all their other rights and privileges.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 183-84. About 13 years later, these two dissenters, so intensely Protestant, became leaders of the popular faction in a rebellion, which had "No Popery" for its watchword, which led to their own tragic end, and which was followed by many years of factional disturbance.—See May 16 and 31, 1680, id. seq., where is presented a detailed resumé of Leisler's early activities in this province. Mrs. Van Rensselaer gave a sketch of Milborne's career, beginning: "Jacob Milborne, according to the testimony of the many enemies he made in after years, had as a boy been convicted in England of coin-clipping, sent to Barbadoes, and then sold as a bond-servant to a resident of Hartford. Stubborn and disobedient, he had been transferred from master to master until his term expired in 1668 when, at twenty years of age, he came to New York. Here he was employed until 1672 by Thomas Delavall as bookkeeper and business agent, his honesty seeming not to have been called in question. He had a brother who was a conspicuous Anabaptist preacher in Boston, and he himself was a radical in politics if not in religion."—Ibid., II: 185.
- " The first watch of which we have any account in this province was that belonging to the learned Domioe Van Rensselaer. It was of brass."—See "Hist. of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants of N. Y.," in Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 502. Van Rensselaer owned a library of about 200 volumes, in various languages.—Ibid., 503.
- 19 Jamestown is burnt by its own citizens, under the leadership of Nathaniel Bacon, as an act of patriotism, rather than have it the capital of a tyrant (Gov. Berkeley).—Andrews, Nar. of the Insurrections, 135-36. Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S., I: 455-67.
- Oct. The house of Vander Vin, the town clerk at Harlem, had become unfit to live in. "At his request it was resolved at a meeting in October to remove him for the winter into the school-house (or church), after it should be repaired and adapted to the purposes of a dwelling by putting in a bedroom (bedstede), chimney, and mantel, and making the door and windows tight. It was further decided to repair (vermaecken) the old house the following spring."—Riker, Revised Hist. of Harlem, 333.

1676 The governor and council order the members of the night or Oct. 3 corporal's guard of Harlem to furnish stockades for the harbour at 3 New York.—Riker, Revised Hist. of Harlem, 333. See also Dec. 30, 1675; Jan. 10, April 15, and July 26, 1676. The dock was completed about Nov. 10 (q. v.).

14 The mayor and aldermen of New York present two sets of candidates to the governor from which he may select their successors for the ensuing year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 51. Regarding this custom of making nominations, note the Dutch practice (Jan.
 18, 1656; Jan. 29, 1657), and its revival under Gov. Lovelace (Oct.
 9, 1669). Nicholas de Meyer was chosen mayor; Thomas Gibbs, deputy mayor; Stephen van Cortlandt, Johannes de Peyster, Francis Rombout, Thomas Snavwell, and Thomas Lewis, aldermen.

—M. C. C., I: 25, 38, 42. For brief sketch of De Meyer's life, see Men. Com. Coun. (1853), 385; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 51.

Nov. 10 "A new docke or warfe" is completed or nearing completion.—
M. C. C., I: 9, 17, 18, 25, 29. Vide supra, Jan. 10. This dock, spoken of commonly as "The Great Dock," supplemented a smaller one which was constructed by the corporation of New Amsterdam in 1659 (see April 18, 1659), and enlarged in 1660-1 (see Nov. 3, 1660). There was evidently some thought given to permanency, as "Eighteen thousand Carte Loade" of stone (see Jan. 10) were estimated to be necessary. An assessment of "One Penny halfe Penny per Pounce" is levied on this day on 301 persons, yielding £597:8:8½, a portion of which is to be used for "ye defrayinge of the Charges of the New docke."—Ibid., I: 29-38. The statement in Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., I: 377, that this dock was completed before the close of 1675, seems untenable. For its location, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 990. For a description of the successive changes in its development in later years, illustrated by an outline drawing, see 1700 and Addenda.

It is significant that the Great Dock, repaired frequently and enlarged from time to time, served as the only place of dockage until 1750, when the common council decided to run out a pier on the west side of Coenties Slip, and appointed a committee to have charge of its construction. Later this received the name of "The Albany Pier."—M. C. C., V: 293-94; VII: 77; see also Pl. 34, Vol. I. One additional dock was constructed by the municipality prior to the Revolution, the "Corporation Dock," the first dock or pier on the Hudson River shore of Manhattan Island; it was built in 1771-5.—Ibid., VII: 328, 352; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 989.

13 The mayor and aldermen pass an ordinance for the observance of Sunday, as follows: "Ordered that no Inhabitant Merchant or Trades Man or other Person or Persons whatsoever which is or shall be In the said City Precincts or Liberties Thereof Shall at any Time hereafter willfully or obstinately prophane the Sabbath daye By Buying or Sellinge of any wares of Merchandizes of his or their Trade or Mystery Or by Unlawfull Playenge at Cards Dice Tables or any other Unlawfull Games whatsoever Either In Sermon Time or without . . . As also the disorderly Assemblies of Children In y<sup>e</sup> Streets and other Places To the disturbance of Others with Noyse Upon the Sabbath day which is to be Understood from Sun Risinge Till Sun Settinge." Restrictions were placed upon selling or drinking wines and liquors, and fines of from 10 to 100 guilders were fixed for disregarding these regulations.—
M. C. C., I: 27.

16 The mayor and aldermen appoint "Jacob the Baker" to be "head Viewor or Cure Master of the flower of this City and the Liberties thereof," and define his duties and those of his two deputies.—M. C. C., I: 38-39.

20 Robert Ryder (or Rider), surveyor, prepares a description of a survey of 30 acres of land on Manhattan Island, on the East River, which he has laid out for Gabriell Curtese.—Cal. Land Papers, 14.
 Ryder's name as a surveyor first appeared on a M.S. map of Long Island (including Manhattan Island), of 1670 (q. v.), which is prepared by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It measures from 50½ to 51½ in.
 in height, and from 4 ft. 3 in. to 4 ft. 3½ in. in width; and is reproduced from the original in Ex. Coun. Min., I, opp. p. 237. Again, his name is of record on Oct. 20, 1675.—Cal. Land Papers, 7.

 where, followed.—Ibid., 14 et seq.

— The people of Harlem, wishing to secure the two extremities of their patent from further encroachment, engage Robert Ryder, the government surveyor, to lay out five lots at Spuyten Duyvil, "upon the old Matthys Jansen patent 'beginning by Johaenes Verveelen,' who as ferryman occupied the upper end of that patent; and ranging down the Harlem River to 'the hills and the meadows,' or the northern line of the Jansen and Aertsen patent, which touched the river at what is now 214th Street . . . Scarcely was the survey at Spuyten Duyvel made, when Dyckman and Nagel bought out Vermele and Bock, and thereby became the owners of the whole five lots, containing 74 acres of upland; the beginning of the fine estates subsequently held there by the Nagel and Dyckman families.

 With no intention of yet quitting their old homes in the village, they agreed with Michiel Bastiaensoo and his son-in-law, Kiersen, to take these lands upon lease for a term of twelve years." The contract, written in Dutch, "relates to the first successful effort to make improvements in that section of Manhattan Island, on which as yet there was not another white man's hearthstone oorth of Harlem village."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 383, 386; Harlem Rec.
 (M.S. translation), I: 304-9; 322.

Cornelis Matysen received a patent (Land Papers, I: 144, Albany) for 60 acres of land to the northward of Turtle Bay, being bounded on the south-west by the land of Jacobus Fabricius and to the south-east by the East River; on the north-east by the land of John Bassett; and on the north-west by the Commons. The modern boundaries of this farm are, generally speaking, as follows: Beginning at a point on the south line of 70th St., a little east of Second Ave., the line runs thence eastwardly to the East River, a little south of the south line of 69th St.; thence southwardly to a point a little south of the south line of 64th St.; thence westwardly to a point a little west of Second Ave. and south of 65th St.; thence northwardly to the point of beginning. This farm became subsequently subdivided into the Peter Sawyer lot; the Widow Hardenbrook tract; and the southern part of the Louvre farm.—Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 249-390.

In this year, Hubbard's map of New England was published, in his Narrative of the Troubles with the Indians in New England.— Church Catalogue, No. 650; Winsor, op. cit., III: 384.

The court of assizes establishes the cord measure as the legal standard for the sale of firewood, and orders that corders be appointed.—M. C. C., I: 41. At the same time an order is issued relative to the cording of firewood exposed for sale in New York, and renewing former orders for forbidding felled timber to be left on the ground.—Cal. Hist., MSS., Eng. 53.

Gov. Andros orders ("by advice of my Counsell & Co't of Mayor and Aldermen" that a weekly market be held every Saturday, beginning March 24, in the "house beinge now built by the Water Side oear the Bridge and weighhouse."—M. C. C., I: 40.
 On the present plan of the city, this was on Pearl St. at Moore St.— See description of the redraft of the Castello Plan (frontispiece), II: 346. For further information regarding the early markets, see ibid., II: 344 et seq. This market probably replaced the market for general country produce (the "Market-Place at the Strand") established in 1656 (q. v.). When built, De Voce explains, the business of the old market-place at the Strand was probably moved into
 it. "It appeared to accommodate the country people and Indians, who came by water with poultry, fish, butter, cheese, &c.; while those who brought 'flesh meat' went up the canal to Broad Street, to the Marketfield Street, and so across into the 'Broadway Shambles.'" The question may be fairly raised, however, in view of Gov. Doogan's order of April 28, 1684 (q. v.), whether there was, prior to that date, any meat-market on Broadway. De Voce calls the new market-house the "Custom-House Bridge Market."—Market Book, 70-71.

This same order of Andros, of Jan. 29, 1677, proclaimed Feb.
 3, also calls for the observance of an order of the court of assizes for "a flyare" to be held "att Breucklin" for cattle, grain, and country produce on the first Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in November, and "in the City att the market house & Plaine afore the Forte" on the Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, following.— M. C. C., I: 41. This regulation followed that of Oct. 6-13, 1675 (q. v.). A curious provision of the ordinance is that persons coming to or returning from "the said Market or flyare" are to be free from arrest for debt "in their Persons or Goods." The order is to remain in force for three years from March 24.—Ibid., I: 41.

At the end of that period the court of mayor and aldermen ordered that the Saturday market should continue, and that another market should be held every Wednesday. "At y<sup>e</sup> usual markett place neere y<sup>e</sup> Bridge and Weigh House."—Ibid., I: 76.
 The market-house is represented in the Danckaerts and Sluyter

- 1677 View, Pl. 17, Vol. I. On May 24, 1684, Gov. Dongan asked that the market be removed "to the Vacant ground before the Fort," Feb. 28
 Jan. 29 and the common council ordered it done.—M. C. C., I: 151.
 Feb. 16 The city's debts amount to 24,505 fl., 3½ st. In the common council minutes are listed the names of over a hundred individuals to whom the city owes money, and against each name is the amount due; to Gov. Andros the largest amount is due, "6280-10." The treasurer is ordered to "pay or discount with" each of them.—M. C. C., I: 43-46.
- 28 The common council orders "that for the Necessary and Publique Use a Generall or Publique slaughter house shall be Built for the Use of the Cytie over the Water without the Gate at the Smiths fly Near the half Moone."—M. C. C., I: 46. See Jan. 8, 1678. See also Pl. 17, Vol. I.
- " The mayor and aldermen order that six wells, "for the publike good of the Cytie," be made in certain specified streets by the inhabitants thereof. One is to be "in the broad way against Mr. Vandickes" (Hendrick van Dyck's house—i. e., in Broadway, just south of the present Exchange Alley), and another "in the yard or backside of the Cytie hall."—M. C. C., I: 46-47. The records show the establishing of two public wells prior to this date.—See Feb. 14, 1667; June 19, 1671. The Van Dyck well is shown on Pl. 23-9, Vol. I. After the six established this year, four more were dug before 1700, making ten new ones. "Of these wells, seven are known by name, and the sites of the other three have been established beyond [reasonable] doubt. They were located thus:—De Riemer's Well, in Whitehall Street, near Bridge; Well of William Cors, near the Stadt Huys, at the head of Coenties Slip; Ten Eyck and Vincent's Well, in Broad Street, between Stoop and South Williams; Tunis De Kay's Well, in Broad Street, a little above Beavers; Frederick Wessel's Well, in Wall Street, west of William; Mr. Rombout's Well, in Broadway, near Exchange Place; and the Well of Suert Olpkerts, in the same neighbourhood. Of the three which are not known by name, two were in Broad Street, near Exchange Place, and the third was in Wall Street, between Broad and New Streets. The water from these wells was brackish and the supply was not plentiful; but they were regarded as an important addition to the resources of the fire department, and valued for this, if for nothing more."—From "Old Wells and Water-Courses of the Island of Manhattan," by Geo. Everett Hill and Geo. E. Waring, Jr., in Historic New York (1897), 200. See also Sept. 10, 1686.
- " The mayor and aldermen order that persons having houses with "noe Chimnyes or not fit to keepe fire in" repair the defects within three months or remove therefrom.—M. C. C., I: 42.
- " It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that "the old Church yard or Late burying place in the broad way be Laid out in fower Lotts Conteyning Twenty five foote Each Lott in the fronte (English measure) And the same to be sold at a Vandewer or Out Cry." The order also requires that the ground be laid out and surveyed by Adolph Peterson; he is to make a return to the clerk of the court, who is made "Vandewer Master for the [said] of the said Lotts att such Convenient time or times as hee shall thinke fit."—M. C. C., I: 47. Goodrich states, in The Picture of New-York (1828), 27, that "it here is the first mention of an auctioneer in our city annals;" but this is a mistake.—See Rev. N. Am., I: 76. It is interesting to note this, and even earlier examples of the 25 foot lot, which later became so common.—Cf. Pl. 24, Vol. I.
- " The location and history of the "Old Church-Yard on the Heere Straet" are summarized in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927. See ibid. for the distinction between this burial-place and the "New Burial Place without the Gate of the City;" see also Hoffman, Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation (1862), I: 119, and Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 622. Valentine stated in 1856 that, "Some years ago," a great many skulls, etc. were thrown up by the spades of workmen on the site of this burial-place, a few doors above Morris St. He also gave brief biographical mentions of prominent citizens of New Amsterdam who died while the graveyard was being used for interments.—Ibid. (1856), 445-47.
- " A law is reenacted (apparently one of April 18, 1671) regarding the keeping of horses on the Commons, and the keeping of records of branding both horses and cattle. It requires, first, that "two horses be continually kept in the Commons." (According to Valentine, in Man. Com. Coun., 1856, p. 533, these were stud-horses, which were to be let loose for the increase of the animals.) The law requires that an exact account shall be kept of all the horses and cattle branded, their colours and markings, and the names of their owners. Two days in the year are to be appointed for branding, notice of which is to be given to the inhabitants "by fixing vpp of Bills for that purpose." The branders of Harlem are to account to the recorder every quarter, and those of the city every month, for all horses and cattle branded by them. The branders' fees are prescribed, and these are to be paid, through the medium of the recorder, every half year, a certain portion being left "to the disposal of the Mayors Courte."—M. C. C., I: 47-48.
- " In a "History of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants," Valentine thus describes the system of horse-branding: "The horses of those days were of a very poor class, all having been bred wild in the natural woods and pastures which covered the upper part of the island. Many thousands of animals were thus running at large, the only trouble taken by their owners being at a certain season of the year to engage in a common driving expedition, by means of which the animals were collected in a large pound, where the young of the season were branded with their owner's mark, and the whole were then turned loose until the winter snows rendered their protection necessary. Those which were turned out again in the spring were all of the female gender, except the bulls and stallions, which were public property, and were devoted to the common use. So great an increase was occasioned by this system, that it is said the island was overrun by animals almost as wild and dangerous as the wild horse and buffalo of our prairies at the present day . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 504-5.
- " Jacobus Fabricius is granted a patent for land on Manhattan, "being in breadth by the River side 80 rods and in length 120 rods, containing 60 acres; bounded to the Northeast by the load of Cornelius Mattysen, to the southwest by the lott number four and to the northwest by the Commons, as by the return of the survey . . . may appear."—Liber Patents, IV: 116 (Albany). The survey referred to is dated Jan. 27, 1677, and filed in Land Papers, I: 101 (Albany), and is by Robert Ryder, surveyor. See also Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 189-98; 227-47.
- " Christians are prohibited, by proclamation of Gov. Andros, from trading with Indians at the towans and plantations of the latter. The regulation was renewed by proclamation on Jan. 28, 1682.—M. C. C., I: 89-90.
- " John Davidson receives a patent (Liber Patents, IV: 120, Albany), according to a survey by "Ro: Ryder" (Land Papers, I: 103, Albany), for 30 acres of land lying to the north-east of Turtle Bay, having the East River on the east; land of Jacobus Fabricius on the north; the Commons on the north-west; and land of David Defore on the south-west. On modern maps, this patent was bounded, generally, westerly by a line running from a point on the north line of 57th St., midway between Second and Third Aves., to a point in the middle of the block between 59th and 60th Sts., Second and Third Aves.; on the north, by a line running thence easterly to the river at a point midway between 58th and 59th Sts., 208 feet east of Avenue A; on the east, by the East River; on the south, by a line running from a point in the centre of 56th St. at the river, back to the place of beginning. The land later became the property of Thomas C. Pearsall, and was known as the Pearsall Tract.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 179-88.
- " Dirck Seckers (or Siecken—see Feb. 25, 1672) receives from Gov. Andros and council a lease for 30 years (not recorded) of the Duke's Bowery or Farm (later known as the Trinity Church Farm).—See recitals in Bogardus vs. Trinity, 4 Sandford's Chancery Rep., 689-90; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 56.
- " Jacob Young receives a patent according to a survey by "Ro: Ryder," dated April 25, 1677. It is described as follows: "Being in breadth by the River side, 43 rods; being bounded to the north-east by the Commons or a certain run of water ranging beyond, northwest, into the woods, 120 rods; and being bounded to the southwest by the land of George Elphinstone." It contains in all 32½ acres.—Land Papers, I: 110; Liber Patents, IV: 124.
- " An order of council of this date "concerning lawyers" (Cal. Coun. Min., 29) is to the effect that "pleading attorneys" shall no longer be allowed to practise their profession in this province, "but for the defending causes."—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 274.
- " Rob. Ryder returns a survey for Hendrick Hendricksen Bosch "upon this Island Manhattans lying to the south-west of Murdianes (Moertje David's) fly . . . in breadth on Hudson's River 40 rods . . . southeast and by east . . . to the north-northeast by the Commons of Harlem and to the south-southwest and south-1677 east by east by the Commons," containing 30 acres. The document is endorsed: "N Yorke y<sup>e</sup> 11th July 177 allowed making press improvements upon . . . he shall have a confirmation by patent. E. Andros."—Land Papers, I: 119 (Albany). (The omissions represent mutilations in the original.) This farm was later that of Jacob de Key; then De Peyster; on it was built the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane (the site of Columbia University).

20 A survey is made by Robert Ryder for David Devour (Duffore, Du Four, etc.), by description as follows: "A certain piece of land upon this Island Manhattans lying by the Coale Kill for David Deffore, being in breadth by the water side 80 rods, being bounded to the northeast by the land of John Danielson; ranging north-west into the woods 120 rods, being bounded to the northwest by the Commons and to the southwest by the land of Gabrill Curtesee, qt. in all sixty (60) acres."—Land Papers, I: 120 (Albany).

24 "Markett Feild" (Marketfield) St. is for the first time mentioned in the city records.—M. C. C., I: 61. See July 6, 1658; 1695; 1730; 1830; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005.

Aug. 2 A fine of 20 shillings is imposed upon Thomas Taylor by the court of mayor and aldermen "for his Contempt y<sup>e</sup> Authority of this City." Taylor had failed to "doe his duty upon y<sup>e</sup> watch as others did." When summoned he claimed at first that it was not his watch night; then he declared he was not well. It could not be discovered that he "ayed anything," and the mayor commanded the constable to "fetch him." He "denyed to Come," however, until he was ordered "in y<sup>e</sup> Kings name." Even then his stay was brief; he "went away in a very short time after hee Came unknowne."—M. C. M. (MS.), Aug. 2, 1677.

16 Two negro slaves belonging to Capt. William Palmer are brought before the mayor's court. One ran away "from his Master's Service by y<sup>e</sup> Space of eight Dayes," and the second assisted him by "giving him Lodging and Victuals." The runaway was ordered to "have fifty Lashes on Saterdag next," while his abettor had to stand "at y<sup>e</sup> whipping post naked to y<sup>e</sup> wast with Rodds under his Armes."—M. C. M. (MS.), Aug. 16, 1677.

Sept. 19 "The Shipp Elizabeth & Cargoe belonging to Dutch Owners & Manned with Dutchemn" is declared forfeited by the court of mayor and aldermen because it came "directly from Amsterdam into his Maj<sup>ties</sup> Plantacons" contrary to the act of trade and navigation.—M. C. M. (MS.), Sept. 19, 1677. The act of parliament referred to was passed in 1660, and required ships of other countries to stop at an English port before proceeding to any English colony. This was aimed particularly at the extensive carrying trade of the Dutch, and aroused such bitter feeling that war broke out between the two nations in 1664. One of the first events of that war was the surrender of New Amsterdam to an attacking English force. See Aug. 29/Sept. 8, 1664.

29 John Benew receives a patent for a piece of land, according to a survey by Robert Ryder, surveyor, dated July 20, 1677, is described as follows: "Being in breadth by the Water Side, 40 rods, being bounded to the southwest by the land of Jacob Younge, Ranging in length northwest into the woods one hundred and twenty rods, being bounded to the northwest and northeast by the Commons" and containing 30 acres. This survey is endorsed: "N. York, y<sup>e</sup> 23d of July. Allowed to be confirmed by patent when he began to be employed. E. Andros." The patent followed on the above-given date.—Land Papers, I: 121; Liber Patents, IV: 126.

" Capt. Nicholas de Meyer obtains a patent for a piece of land "by the edge of the Hill near the Fresh Water, ranging southeast by the edge of the hill," 8 rods square, "to set a wind-mill on."—Liber Patents, IV: 126 (Albany). This lot, lying north of the present Park Row, on the north-west corner of Duane St., was surveyed, on Oct. 16, by Robert Ryder.—Land Papers, I: 131 (Albany). The heirs of Captain De Meyer, in 1691, partitioned the land, including the wind-mill, the cottage and ground belonging thereto, "the Jews burying ground & the De Meyer family vault excepted."—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 134, 137, 165 (N. Y.). William Merritt, mayor of New York, had acquired the mill plot before 1698, when he conveyed the premises to William Janeway (ibid., IX: 462, Albany), who in turn mortgaged the property, first on Dec. 5, 1699, for £500 to Teunis and Jacobus de Key, bolters, and John Corbett, mayor (—Liber Deeds, XXIII: 113); and again, in London, on March 14-15, 1700, for £340, without disclosing the first mortgage, to Roy Willey, "Apothecary, of the Parish of St. Michael's Crooked Lane, London."—Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 555; Daily Settlement of the Jews in N. Am., 39; also Aug. 23, 1728; Dec. 17, 1729. By English law (Act of Wm. & Mary), the last mortgage could become possessed of the property in fee by paying off the first mortgage, the mortgagor forfeiting his right of redemption by not disclosing the first mortgage. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962; and cf. Mott's "The Windmills of Manhattan," in Americana (mag.), IX: 561-64.

This wind-mill was demolished some time before Nov. 7, 1741, when the post-road (Park Row) was defined by law to include the straight line "through the Hill by the House of Captain Brown where the Wind Mill formerly Stood."—Col. Laws N. Y., III: 162-66. This mill is shown on Pls. 17, 19, 26, 27, and 30, Vol. I. It is not shown on Pl. 32, Vol. I (1742).

Woolfert Webber, Hendrick Cornelis, and Bastian Ellsen receive a patent for a parcel of land described as "at y<sup>e</sup> sand hills which by virtue of my [Gov. Andros's] warrant hath been laid out" for the above persons, "being in length by y<sup>e</sup> Highway 72 Rods to y<sup>e</sup> land of Egbert Wouters, Ranging thence near west by y<sup>e</sup> land of said Egbert 60 Rods in length by y<sup>e</sup> land of Mannuell Peters and old Francisco, 88 Rods and by y<sup>e</sup> Negroes lad to the Highway, 80 Rods, containing 35 acres as by survey." The quit-rent is half a bushel of good winter wheat.—Liber Patents, IV: 127 (Albany).

" Abraham Shotwell receives a patent according to a survey by "Ro: Ryder," dated April 25, 1677.—Land Papers, I: 110 (Albany). It is described as follows: "Certain piece of land for George Elphinstone [sic] being 51 rods in breadth by the River side upon the Island Manhattan, being bounded to the northeast by the land of Jacob Younge and ranging northwest into the Wood 120 rods, being bounden beyond by the Commons and to the southwest by the land of John Bassett," and being in extent 38½ acres.—Liber Patents, (Albany). Before his patent, "Elphinstone had erected a leather mill and other buildings upon his tract, with the assistance of a copartner, Abraham Shotwell, late of New Jersey, to whom (probably in view of what followed) the patent was made out. On Oct. 30th Elphinstone sold all his interest in the farm, houses and mill to Shotwell."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 383. The patent was actually given to Shotwell, on a grant made to Elphinstone, as Riker states. "It included within its limits the Saw Kill."—Ibid., 382.

John Bassett receives a patent (Land Papers, I: 122; Liber Patents, IV: 128, Albany) for 60 acres of land whose location, according to modern streets and avenues, was as follows: Bounded on the north by a line beginning at a point on the south line of 75th St., somewhat east of Second Ave.; running east to the East River, a little south of 74th St.; south along the river to a point a little south of 69th St.; west to a point in the south line of 70th St., just east of Second Ave.; and thence to the point of beginning. This tract later became the northern portion of the Louvre farm.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 287-390.

David Duffore receives a patent (Liber Patents, IV: 127, Albany) for a certain piece of ground "by the water side" (East River), bounded north-east by land of John Danielson, ranging north-east into the Commons, and to the south-west by land of Gabriell Curtesee, containing in all 60 acres. On modern maps this tract was bounded as follows, generally speaking: On the north by a line running from a point on the north side of 57th St., midway between Second and Third Aves., to the East River; east by the river; south by a line running from the river to a point on the north side of 52d St. just east of Third Ave.; and west by a line running from the latter point to the place of beginning. It afterwards became the property of four large estates: Brevoort and Odell, Catherine Livingston, George Youle, and Thomas Buchanan.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 141-78.

Matthias Nicolls writes to John Winthrop of Connecticut that Andros "is bound within fiftene dayes for Eng<sup>d</sup>."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 156. See Nov. 9.

Gov. Andros appoints the following to hold office in New York for the year, from Oct. 14, 1677, to Oct. 14, 1678:—Stephanus van Cortlandt, mayor; John de Peyster, deputy mayor; John Inians, Francis Rombout, Thomas Snaresell, Peter Jacobs Marius, and Guillaume Verplanck, aldermen; and Thomas Ashton, sheriff.—*M. Ryder returns a survey of 35 acres of land lying upon the Island Maahattan at the Sand Hills near the Bowery, laid out by Wolphert Webber, Hendricke Cornelius, and Bastien Elson, as follows: "I have made a survey (8c.) for a piece of land at the sand hills near the Bowry for Wolpert Webber, Hendrick Cornelius and Bastian Elson, being in length by the Highway 72 rods to the lead of Egbert Wolters ranging near west by the land of the said Egbert 60 rods, being in length by land of Manuell Peters and old Franciscus 88 rods and in length by the Negroes Land to the Highway 80 rods . . . in all thirty and five Acres."—Land Papers, I: 137 (Albany); granted, see Liber Patents IV: 127 (Albany).

The dwelling is described as "that Stone or Brick house . . . and appurtenances."—See also Feb. 14, 1658; March 11, 1686; April 22, 1697; Key to Castello Plan, II: 277-78; C. - While he was in England, articles of complaint were "exhibited" against Sir Edmuod Andros, governour of New York, by Thos. Griffith, Henry Griffith, Thos. Harwood, and others, on behalf of themselves and several other merchants "trading to those territories." One of these complaints was as follows: "10 That a Whipping post is erected in New York after y<sup>e</sup> Belgick fashion, far different from y<sup>e</sup> English manner, by w<sup>ch</sup> y<sup>e</sup> execution is much more disgracefull to y<sup>e</sup> offenders w<sup>ch</sup> (if English) are reendered thereby more ridiculous to y<sup>e</sup> netherlanders, & had in great derision by them."—From piece 9 (an early transcript) in vol. of MSS. in Mass. Hist. Soc., lettered, among other titles: "Sir E. Andros."
- In this year, Richard Blome related in London a work based upon papers received from friends relating to territories in America in which the English were interested. In this he described New York City as follows: "Here is one very considerable Town, first built by the Dutch, and called New-Amsterdam, which name is oow changed to New York: It is well seated both for Trade, Security, and Pleasure, in a small Isle called Mahatana, regarding the Sea, made so by Hudson River, which severeth it from Long-Island, which said River is very commodious for Shipping, and is about two Leagues broad. The Town is large, containing about five hundred well-built Houses; and for Civil Government, it hath a Mayor, Alderman, a Sheriff, and Justices of the Peace for their Magistrats. For the further security of this Town, here is raised a Fort called James-Fort, which is very strong, and well Defended and Maintained with Men, and Ammunition. The Town is Inhabited by the English and Dutch, and hath a considerable Trade with the Indians, for the Skins of Elks, Deer, Bears, &c. Also for those of Bever, Otter, and other Furrs; and doth likewise enjoy a good Trade with the English."—Blome, Description of the Island of Jamaica, etc., 76-77.
- There are 343 houses in New York. There are only three ships, seven boats, and eight sloops belonging to the port. Not over 400 beeves are killed in the year.—From M. C. C., II: 58, where increases are shown even to the years 1696-8.
- While Gov. Andros is in England, Capt. Brockholls is obliged to plank the platforms and put new stockades around the fort. This was done at the country's charge.—N. Y. Col. Doct., III: 307. The towms "by the waterside," including Brooklyn, Harlem, Staten Island, and others, were ordered on March 18, 1678, to cut "three thousand stockades for the use of the Fort, to be in length eighteen feet by seven inches through."—Ibid., XIV: 734.
- Jan. Ashur (Asser) Levy asks permission of the court of mayor, 8 deputy mayor, and aldermen to build the slaughter-house mentioned in the order of Feb. 16, 1677 (q. v.), and to take Gerrit Janson Rose (Gerrit Jansen Roos) to be his partner therein, and that all persons shall "haue Liberty to kill & haug their Meat there, paying for the same as formerly in other places." This is granted.—M. C. C., I: 67. Levy reported to the court Oct. 8 that he had built the slaughter-house, and it was confirmed to him and his partner.—Ibid., I: 68. This slaughter-house is well shown on the Labadist View of 1679, Pl. 17, Vol. I. This slaughter-house was made a store-house for powder on April 6, 1684, q. v., and again on March 12, 1696 (q. v.). It was removed when Kelly's three slaughter-houses were erected in 1721.—Liber Patents, V: 34, 36 (Albany); cf. M. C. C., III: 241, 249-51; Liber City Grants, B: 76 (comptroller's office). - 12 Answers to questions about New York are received by the board of trade in London from Gov. Andros. These give an account of the governour's council, the courts, laws, militia, fortresses, neighbouring provinces, geographical boundaries, principal places of trade, towns, villages, rivers and harbours, produce, inhabitants, etc. Some of the items are as follows: ". . . May 20 The Duke of York authorizes Gov. Andros to appoint a judge, register, and marshal of a court of admiralty to have jurisdiction within the government of New York and its dependencies.—N. Y. Col. Doct., III: 268. These officers were appointed Oct. 5, 1678 (q. v.).

June 7 Matthias Nicolls, in a letter to John Winthrop of Connecticut, speaks of "Our Governo<sup>r</sup> [Andros] being of so stirring & active a Temper, that if hee finds it not, hee endeavors to cutt out worke enough for himselfe & his Officer<sup>s</sup>, among whom I have not the least share."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 157.

Gov. Andros returns to New York after an absence in England (see Nov. 7, 1677).—N. Y. Col. Doct., III: 271.

He is accompanied by several merchants and factors, including William Pinborne, James Graham, John White, John West, and others, and also by the Rev. Charles Wolley, A.M., recently appointed by the duke as chaplain, the first clergyman of the Church of England to "hold a charge" in this province. The latter remained here until July 17, 1680; on his return to England, he wrote, and published in London in 1701, an account of his experiences, entitled A Two Years Journal in New York. The extracts here given are from the first ed. (see also that of 1902, Cleveland).
Wolley states, in discussing a large variety of subjects:—

"The Fort and Garrison of this place lieth in the degree of 40th and 20 minutes of northern Latitude, as was observ'd and taken by Mr. Andrew Norwood, son of the Famous Mathematician of that name, and by Mr. Philip Wells, and Van Cortland Junior, Robert Rider and Jacobus Stephens, the seventh of July, 1679, with whom I was well acquainted, and at that time present with them."— (pp. 3-4). The temperature and climate at New York are described and explained.

"The Skins of all their [the Indians'] Beasts, as Bears, Bevers, Rackoons, Foxes, Otters; Musquashes, Skunks, Deer and Wolves, they bring upon their backs to New-York, and other places of Trade, which they barter and exchange for Duffles or Guns, but too often for Rum, Brandy and other strong Liquors, of which they are so intemperate lovers, that after they have once tasted, they will never forbear, till they are inflamed and enraged, even to that degree, that I have seen Men and their Wives Billingsgate it, through the Streets of New York, as if they were metamorphosed into the nature of those beasts whose Skins they bartered."

Wampum, made of cockle shells which are found at Oyster Bay, is described; the prices of skins, rum, sugar, wheat, pork, beef, tobacco, and other commodities are given; Indian customs, particularly their food supply, hunting and fishing, are described.— (pp. 27-48).

". . . I was one with others that have had very good diversion and sport with them [bears], in an Orchard of Mr. John Robinson's of New-York; where we followed a Bear from Tree to Tree, upon which he would swarm like a Cat; and when he was got to his resting place, perch'd upon a high branch, we dispatc'd a youth after him with a Club to an opposite bough, who knocking his Paws, he comes grumbling down backwards with a thump upon the ground, so we after him again: His descending backwards is a thing particularly remarkable: Of which I never read any account."

—(p. 49).

". . . When they [the Indians] travel by water, they have small Boats, which they call Canoes, made of the barks of Trees,
. . . In which they bring Oysters and other fish for the Market:
they are so light and portable that a Man and his Squaw will take them upon their Sholders and carry them by Land from one River to another, with a wonderful expedition; they will venture with them in a dangerous Current, even through Hell-gate it self, which lies in an arm of the Sea, about ten Miles from New-York Eastward to New-England, as dangerous and as unaccountable as the Norway Whirlpool or Maestrom: in this Hell-gate which is a narrow passage, runneth a rapid violent Stream both upon Flood and Ebb; and in the middle lieth some Islands of Rocks, upon which the Current sets so violently, that it threatens present Shipwrack; and upon the Flood is a large whirlpool, which sends forth a continual heidius roaring; it is a place of great defence against an Enemy coming that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, by forcing them to come in at the west-end of Long-Island by Sandy-Hook, where Nuten-Island [Governor's Island] would force them within the command of the Fort of New-York, which is one of the strongest and best situated Garrisons in the North parts of America, and was never taken but once through the default of one Captain Manning, who in absence of the Governour suffer'd the Dutch to take it; for which he was condemned an Exile to a small Island from his name, call'd Manning's Island [Blackwell's Island], where I have been several times with the said Captain, whose entertainment was commonly a Bowl of Rum-Punch."—(pp. 61-65).
He next refers to Indian snow-shoes, etc.

". . . Now I am speaking of the Indian Shoes . . . I seldom or never observ'd the Dutch Women wear anything but Slippers at home and abroad . . . They feast freely and merrily at the Funeral of any Friend, to which I have been often invited and sometimes a Guest."—(pp. 64-66). "The Dutch eat and drink very plentifully at these Feasts; but I do not remember any Musick or Minstrels . . . In all their Feasts I observ'd they sit Men and Women intermixt, and not as our English do Women and Men by themselves apart."—(p. 67). He next describes Indian marriages, burial, and other customs.

". . . I observed them [the Indians] very civil and respectful both in their behaviour and entertainment; I cannot say that even I met any company of them, which I frequently did in my walks out of Town, but they would bow both Head and Knee, saying here comes the Sacho-makers Kakin-dou-uet, i. e., the Governours Minister, whom I always saluted again with all due ceremony."—(pp. 76-77).

Wolley describes New York as "a place of as sweet and agreeable air as ever I breathed in, and the Inhabitants, both English and Dutch very civil and courteous . . . I cannot say I observ'd any swearing or quarrelling, but what was easily reconciled and recanted by a mild rebuke, except once betwixt two Dutch Boors (whose usual oath is Sacrament) which abating the abusive language, was no unpleasant Scene. As soon as they met (which was after they had alarm'd the neighbourhood) they seized each other's hair with their forefeet, and down they went to the Sod, their Vrows and Families crying out because they could not part them, which fray happening against my Chamber window, I called upon one of my acquaintance, and ordered him to fetch a kit full of water and discharge it at them, which immediately cool'd their courage, and loosed their grapples; so we used to part our Mastiffs in England."
—(pp. 80-82).

"In the same City of New-York where I was Minister to the English, there were two other Ministers or Domines as they were called there, the one a Lutheran a German or High-Dutch, the other a Calvinist an Hollander or Low-Dutchman, who behav'd themselves one towards another so shily and uncharitably as if Luther and Calvin had bequeathed and entail'd their virulent and bigotted Spirits upon them and their heirs forever. They had not visited or spoken to each other with any respect for six years together before my being there." He describes how he brought them together by inviting them and their wives to supper, unknown to each other, and on pledge not to speak in Dutch. Latin being the 1678 common tongue, he found they out-did him in fluency. "The name

Aug. of the Calvinist was Newenhouse, of the Lutheran Bernhardus 7 Frazius, who was of a Gentle Personage, and a very agreeable behaviour in conversation. I seldom knew any Law-suits, for indeed Attorneys were denied the liberty of pleading. The English observed one anniversary custom, and that without superstition, I mean the strenuam commercium, as Suetonius calls them a neighbourly commerce of presents every New-Years day."
—(pp. 82-85).

"Some would send me a Sugar-loaf, some a pair of Gloves, some a Bottle or two of Wine."—(p. 86).

Here he gives an account of the patrimony of a younger son in New York, and recommends that both elder and younger brothers come here. ". . . if they are inclined to settle a Plantation, they may purchase a tract of ground at a very small rate, in my time at two-pence or three-pence the Acre, for which they have a good Patent or Deed from the Governor."—(pp. 86-89). He continues with an explanation of the expense of useful commodities.

"The City of New-York in my time was as large as some Market Towns with us, all built the London way; the Garrison side of a high situation and a pleasant Prospect, the Island it stands on all a level and Champain; the diversion especially in the Winter season used by the Dutch is aurigation, i.e., riding about in Waggon which is allowed by Physicians to be a very healthful exercise by Land. And upon the Ice its admirable to see Men and Women as it were flying upon their Skates from place to place, with Markets upon their Heads and Backs. In a word, it's a place so every way inviting that our English Gentlemen, Merchants and Clergy (especially such as have the natural Stamina of a consumptive propagation in them; or an Hypochondriacal Consumption) would flock thither for self preservation."—(pp. 92-93).

In Wolley's opinion, the great objection to going to New York is the tedious voyage, but he does not consider this insurmountable.
—(pp. 93-96).

17 Jacob Leisler, with several other residents of New York, having sailed for Europe in his "Pincke" (vessel), and been captured by the Turks, a "bribe" is at once granted by Andros permitting the church officers to collect money to ransom them. Leisler paid 2,000
"pieces of eight" (Spanish money) for his own ransom.—Cal. Hist.

were redeemed, the surplus of the fund collected was given by Andros toward building a new Dutch church in New York, but it was not so applied by the church-warden.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III:

of New York, to be judge of the court of admiralty within New York City and the adjacent seas, rivers, and territories. John Inians, Francis Rombout, Peter Jacob Marius, and Gulian Verplanck are made aldermen; Samuel Leete, register, and Thomas Ashton, marshal.—M. C. C., I: 68. On Oct. 14 (p. v.), Andros appointed other new city officials.

This building is distinctly shown on the Danckaerts and Sluyter View, Pl. 17, Vol. I.

14 Gov. Andros appoints Capt. Thomas Delavall to be mayor during the following year. John Innyans (Inians) is continued as deputy mayor; Francis Rombouts, Peter Jacobs Marius, and Guyllaine ver Planck are reappointed aldermen to serve with William Beeckmao and Christopher Hooghlaadt, who are newly appointed. Thomas Ashton is continued as sheriff.—M. C. C., I: 69.

The new mayor and aldermen are authorized to act as a court of admiralty.—Ibid., I: 69-70. Judge Hough, of the present (1918) U. S. superior court, has in his keeping the early New York admiralty records.—See Bibliography.

Dec. 23 Mayor Delavall authorizes John Cooley and John Derricksen Meere to perform the duties of overseers of chimneys, fires, and dry fodder. The original document was owned by the late John D.
Crimmins.—Bulletin, N. Y. Pub. Library (1901), V: 92. See Jan.
8, 1678; also March 23, 1675.

Some time prior to 1679, a half-moon fortification, mounting three guns, was constructed on the westerly side of Burger's Path (present location, Pearl St., a little west of Old Slip, as shown on the Labadist View of 1679, Pl. 17, Vol. I). This battery was later replaced by a similar work on the east.—See June 19, 1696. See A.
See A. also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Commissioners are appointed to have a survey made of the land in New York City lying between the gates and the Fresh Water. It is ordered that the lower part of Pearl St. be fenced and that a gate be set up there.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 77. The gates were in Wall St., at Broadway and Pearl St.; and the Fresh Water or Collect Pond lay at about the location of the present (1918) criminal court building.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945 (the land gate), 946 (the water gate).

The court of mayor and aldermen imposes a fine of £100 on Richard Pattishall, master of the sloop "Edmond and Martha," for landing passengers "without giving a due notice to ye Mayor or Deputy Mayor as the Law Directs."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 11, 1679.

In this month, the "Griffin," the first vessel to sail the Great Lakes, was launched on Lake Erie.—Winsor, op. cit., IV: 182-83, 223.

The governor and council issue orders for "staking out a new street in New York from the Bevergrat to the fortifications northward."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 78. The report of John Lawrence and Johannes van Brue, dated May 14, shows that, in obedience to the order of "the Governor and Magistrates of this city," dated May 5, for "staking out the new highway," they have staked it out, and have appraised the land contained in it at "twenty guilders per rood, Dutch measure, according to each owner's land brief, excepting that part fronting to the street of Roulafie the Butchers, formerly belonging to the widow of Urin Planke, which 28 roods or thereabouts sold unto the Carpen, Hogenar, and now taken up in the highway for eight hundred guilders, which we judge ought to be allowed to the said widow."—Ibid., and Hoffman, Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation of the City of N. Y. (1862), II: 248, citing a document in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

the road to Harlem, as Hoffman erroneously supposed. See also John Tuder is accused by the sheriff, John Archer, of "keeping unlawful gaming in his house, or yard, from September 1, 1679, as a common Bowling and place for reel playing, for his own pro-gait." Tuder is also accused of keeping a public-house without license, and is put under bonds for selling strong drink.—From complaints entered in the "Court of Mayor and Aldermen," in latter part of Lib. B, cited in Abstract of Wills, II: 434-35.

Jasper Danckaerts and Peter Sluyter, two Labadist envoys, having left their home in Wieuwerd, Friesland, on June 8, and sailed from Amsterdam, arrive at New York. Their purpose is to find in America a suitable place to establish a community of their sect. See Bibliography regarding the Journal of their observations and experiences. For reproduction of a page of the original MS., see Pl. 17, Vol. IV. The following extracts are taken from the edition translated and issued by James and Jameson (N. Y., 1913), entitled Journal of Jasper Danckaerts. The narrative is the best account we have of a voyage across the Atlantic in the seventeenth century. The more important references to New York and vicinity follow:—

"The anchor was therefore raised [on Sept. 23, 1679] and we sailed on for the purpose of passing between Staten Island and Long Island, where there are two high points of land for that reason called the Hoofden [Headlands, at the Narrows] . . . Coming to the Hoofden, and between them . . . As soon as you begin to approach the land, you see not only woods, hills, dales, green fields and plantations, but also the houses and dwellings of the inhabitants, which afford a cheerful and sweet prospect after having been so long at sea. . . . As soon as you are through the Hoofden, you begin to see the city, which presents a pretty sight. The foot, which lies upon the point between two rivers, is somewhat higher;
as soon as they see a ship coming up, they raise a flag on a high flag-staff, according to the colors of the sovereign to whom they are subject, as accordingly they now flew the flag of the King of Eng-

1679 land. We came up to the city about three o'clock, where our ship Sept. 23 was quickly over-run with people who came from the shore in all 23 sorts of craft, each one inquiring and searching after his own, and his own profit. No custom-house officers came on board as in England, and the ship was all the time free of such persons.—(pp. 35-36).
This happy privilege was, however, only postponed. See below.

Leaving the ship, the two travelers went into the town. "As we walked along we saw in different gardens trees full of apples of various kinds, and so laden with peaches and other fruit that one might doubt whether there were more leaves or fruit on them. I have never seen in Europe in the best seasons, such an overflowing abundance."—(p. 44).

The next day, "As it was Sunday, in order to avoid scandal and for other reasons, we did not wish to absent ourselves from church. We therefore went, and found there truly a wild worldly world. I say wild, not only because the people are wild, as they call it in Europe, but because almost all the people go there to live, or who are born there, partake somewhat of the nature of the country, that is, peculiar to the land where they live. . . . The church being in the fort, we had an opportunity to look through the latter, as we had come too early for preaching. It is not large; it has four points or batteries; it has no moat outside, but is enclosed with a double row of palisades. It is built from the foundation with quarry stone. The parapet is of earth. It is well provided with cannon for the most part of iron, though there were some small brass pieces, all bearing the mark or arms of the Netherlands. The garrison is small. There is a well of fine water dug in the fort by the English, [see Feb. 14, 1677], contrary to . . . the Dutch, who supposed the fort was built upon rock, and had therefore never attempted any such thing. There is, indeed, some indication of stone there, for along the edge of the water below the fort there is a very large rock extending apparently under the fort, which is built upon the point formed by the two rivers . . . In front of the fort, on the Long Island side, there is a small island called Noten Island [Nut, now Governor's Island], around the point of which vessels must go in sailing out or in, whereby they are compelled to pass close by the point of the fort, where they can be flanked by several of the batteries. It has only one gate, and that is on the land side, opening upon a broad plain or street, called the Broadway or Beaver way.
Over this gate are the arms of the Duke of York. During the time of the Dutch there were two gates, namely, another on the water side; but the English have closed it, and made a battery there, with a false gate. In front of the church is inscribed the name of Governor Kyt, who caused the same to be built in the year 1642.
It has a shingled roof, and upon the gable towards the water there is a small wooden tower, with a bell in it, but no clock. There is a sun-dial on three sides. The front of the fort stretches east and west, and consequently the sides run north and south."—(pp.44-46).

Danckaerts describes a visit on this Sunday evening to a tavern, which was also a brewery, kept in another part of town by the daughter of his landlady. "On account of its being to some extent a pleasant spot, it was resorted to on Sundays by all sorts of revellers, and was a low pot-house." They preferred to walk in the garden, and later retraced their steps in the dark, "exploring a way over which we had gone only once in our life, through a salt meadow and over water, upon the trunk of a tree."

The tavern is again referred to on April 23, 1680, as "a tavern, or drinking house," kept by one Arie and Rebecca, his wife, "having a situation therefor, . . . upon a delightful spot at the Vers Water [Fresh Water], a little out of town."—(p. 190).

On Moody morning (Sept. 25) they went on board the ship to obtain their "travelling bag and clothes for the purpose of having them washed." Their goods "were taken ashore and carried to the public storehouse, where they had to be examined; but some time elapsed before it was done in consequence of the examiners being elsewhere. At length, however, one Abraham Lennoy, a good fellow apparently, befriended us. He examined our chest only, without touching our bedding, or anything else. I showed him a list of the tin which we had in the upper part of our chest, and he examined it and also the tin, and turned up a little more what was in the chest, and with that left off, without looking at it closely.
He demanded four English shillings for the tin, remarking at the same time, that he had observed some other small articles, but would not examine them closely! . . . This being finished we sent our goods in a cart to our lodging, paying for the two heavy chests and straw beds, and the other goods from the public storehouse, to the Smit's Valey . . ."—(pp. 48-49). See reproduction of original text, Pl. 17, Vol. IV.

Describing the East River, he writes: "There is a ferry for the purpose of crossing over it, which is farmed out by the year, and yields a good income, as it is a considerable thoroughfare, this island [Long Island] being one of the most populous places in this vicinity
. . . . The fare over the ferry is three stuivers in zeeaan for each persoon" (less than half a cent).—(pp. 51-52).

A few days later, the two Labadists explored Manhattan Island.
"This island is about seven hours' distance in length, but it is not a full hour broad. The sides are indented with bays, coves and creeks. It is almost entirely taken up, that is, the land is held by private owners, but not half of it is cultivated. Much of it is good wood land. The west end on which the city lies, is entirely cleared for more than an hour's distance, though that is the poorest ground; the best being on the east and north side. There are many brooks of fresh water running through it, pleasant and proper for man and beast to drink, as well as agreeable to behold, affording cool and pleasant resting places, but especially suitable places for the construction of mills, for although there is no overflow of water, yet it can be shut off and so used."—(p. 64).

"We went from the city, following the Broadway, over the valley, or fresh water. Upon both sides of this way were many habitations of negroes, mulattoes and whites. . . . We left the village, called the Bowery, lying on the right hand, and went through the woods to New Harlem, a tolerably large village situated on the south [east] side of the island, directly opposite the place where the northeast creek [Harlem River] and the East River come together, situated about three hours' journey from New Amsterdam, as old Harlem, in Europe, is situated about three hours' distance from old Amsterdam."—(p. 65). The next day, Oct. 7, they walked from Harlem to the North River which they followed to Sappokanikke (Greenwich) and thence along the shore to the city.—(p. 68).

On Oct. 15, Danckaerts writes: "We went at noon to-day to hear the English minister, whose services took place after the Dutch church was out. There were not above twenty-five or thirty people in the church. The first thing that occurred was the reading of all their prayers and ceremonies out of the prayer book, as is done in all Episcopal churches. A young man then went into the pulpit and commenced preaching, who thought he was performing wonders; but he had a little book in his hand out of which he read his sermon which was about a quarter of an hour or half an hour long. With this the services were concluded, at which we could not be sufficiently astonished."—(pp. 75-76). The minister was Rev.
Charles Wolley, the only English minister then in the province.—
See Aug. 7, 1678.

On Oct. 27, "we made the acquaintance of a person from Zeeland, or who had lived there a long time, for he himself was a Hollander. He had been an apprentice to Jaques Fierens, printer, at the Globe in the Gi street [at Middleburg, Zealand, in Holy Ghost St.] . . . He sometimes binds old books, and was the only bookbinder in the country."—(pp. 81-82). From Nov. 14 to Jan. 2, the Labadists journeyed to Maryland and Virginia.

Danckaerts recorded on Jan. 13, 1680, that on Jan. 5 "the ships left the harbor in front of the city . . . for Deutel Bay, a cove of Long Island in the East River, about three miles east of the city, opposite Hellgate, where they lie during the winter, to be out of the way of the floating ice, which is sometimes very great."—(p.
166). ("Deutel Bay was a small bight in the East River, about at the foot of Forty-seventh Street. The name was later corrupted into Turtle Bay. It was not a cove of Long Island.")—Ibid., footnote by James; see also Bridges Map, Pl. 80, Vol. III; and

In conversation with an Indian named Hans, on March 4, "he told us certain things which we had never heard any Indian or European mention, the opinion of the Indians in relation to the Godhead, the creation and the preservation and government of all things." He is quoted as saying: "we did not have so much sickness and death before the Christians came into the country, who have taught the people debauchery and excess; they are therefore much more miserable than they were before. The devil, who is wicked, instigates and urges them on to all kinds of evil, drunkenness and excess, to fighting and war, and to strife and violence amongst themselves, by which many men are wounded and killed."
—(p. 174). "I asked Hans, our Indian, what Christians they, the Indians, had first seen in these parts. He answered the first were 1679 Spaniards or Portuguese [perhaps referring to Verrazano or Gomez], from whom they obtained the maize or Spanish or Turkish wheat, but they did not remain here long. Afterwards the Dutch came into the South River and here, on Noten Island [Governor's Island], a small island lying directly opposite the fort at New York, and to Fort Orange or Albany, and after them the English."—(p. 179). Cf. Heckewelder, 1609.

Under May 8, the author describes the North River.—(pp. 224-28); and, under June 23, the East River.—(pp. 256-57).

On May 30, M. De la Grange, whom they had met in New York a few days after their arrival in September, asked them to go with him to "Wale Bocht" (Wallabout), opposite "Correlars Hoecq." It was De La Grange who had taken them during the winter to the "South River" (Delaware River), where later the Labadist settlement was established.—(pp. 49-50). They accordingly set off in the boat, and landed first "on the Mahatans, a little north of the Burnt Mill, on a beautiful farm, having two fine ponds of water before the door, where a mill was standing." Arriving at the "Wale Bocht," they found a ship aground, which had struck on the reef of rocks which juts out from Corlaer's Hook towards this bay, and had floated over here and sunk. She was a French privateer, which had taken some rich Dutch prizes in the bay of Campeachy and was going through here to New England, in order to dispose of the goods which would not bring money enough in New York. There were many goods still in the sunken ship.—(p. 235). (Valentine, without citing authorities, locates Burnt Mill Point at what is now Dry Dock St., between 10th and 12th Sts., and states that a wind-mill was erected here upon Gov. Stuyvesant's property at an early date; that it had been destroyed by fire and the ruins allowed to stand for many years, so that the locality became known as Burnt Mill Point.—Man. Com. Coun., 1856, p. 474.)

Danckaerts gives an almost contemporaneous account (see April 30, 1680) of the troubles between Andros and Carteret.—(pp. 239-44, and footnote by Jameson). The city's trade and shipping interests at this time, the manufacture of flour, and the large commercial interests, especially that of "Frederick Flipsen," in which the governor was supposed to have a share, are all described (pp. 244-47), as are also Andros's high-handed methods and ill treatment of various persons at New York (pp. 248-49). Certain pages, now missing, probably contained a detailed description of the town. On June 19, 1680, the travelers left New York for Boston, and returned home to Friesland. On June 23, Danckaerts records that "Noten island" was "the first place the Hollanders ever occupied in this bay . . ." (p. 256). See April 22, 1625.

Three views of New York, drawn in these years by Jasper Danckaerts, as illustrations to his Journal, showing the East River front and the city from the north, are reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pls. 17, 18, and 19.

Oct. 8 After a joint meeting of the mayor and aldermen and the governor's council, it is proclaimed that fires for the boiling of pitch for the use of vessels shall be built only "against the stone Wall of the half Moon neere the Cytie Wall," which fires are to be extinguished every night. No fires for any purpose are to be made on vessels lying within the harbour, "Unless in Extremity of Winter." The fires where the pitch is boiled is to serve all purposes.—M. C. C., I: 73. The "half Moon" was mentioned on Feb. 16, 1677 (q. v.) in connection with the location of the public slaughterhouse. See Danckaerts and Sluyter View, Pl. 17, Vol. I.

Nov. 21 Gov. Andros appoints the following officers for New York, to serve until Oct. 14, 1680:—Francis Rombout, mayor; William Beekman, Johannes van Brugh, Thomas Lewis, Peter Jacobs Marius, Guline Verplanck, and Samuel Wilson, aldermen; and John Archer, sheriff.—M. C. C., I: 74. Beekman acted as deputy mayor.—Ibid., 87. For brief account of the personal history of Francis Rombout (a Frenchman), and the inventory of his household furniture, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 386; ibid. (1858), 512-13. His residence was built on the site of that occupied by the Dutch burgmaster Vandiegrist (or Van der Grift), the estate having a large garden and orchard extending to the river. It lay north of the old cemetery on Broadway (see Feb. 28, 1677).—See, Castello Plan, II: 222-23; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 511-12.

29 A record is made of the amounts realized from "farming" or leasing the weigh-house from 1675 to 1679, with the names of the lessees.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 81; See ibid., 66, regarding its regulations. See also Nov. 25, 1675; April 22, 1691.

Dec. 2 Abraham Corbett is appointed city clerk by Gov. Andros, and sworn in.—M. C. C., I: 75. He succeeds the late Samuel Leete, whose last official act of record was on Dec. 13, 1678.—Ibid., I: 72. For an inventory of Leete's effects, which included "Thirty-eight books great and small," valued at £5:16 (a considerable private collection at that period here), see Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 543.

The council forbids the killing of horses for trespassing. Orders are also issued regarding the killing of wolves. Wood is to be sold by the cord. (See also Jan. 12, 1677.) The use of the steyldary is abolished. It is resolved that all Indians are free and not slaves, and cannot be forced to be servants, except those brought from foreign lands; such, brought from abroad within six months, are to be disposed of "out of yo<sup>e</sup> Government," and all brought to New York after that are to be free.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 81, 82, 86.

Robert Ryder makes a survey for Peter Jacobsen "neare the Fresh Kill, Manhattans, Beginning at a certain stake in the rear of Garrat Ramassons land ranging by land of Casper Casten, south 56° 65 rods Ranging . . . southwest 34° 75 rods to the land of Yealous Jonson; ranging northwest 56° by the said Yealous land to the stake in the rear of Garrat Ramason, 65 rods; qt. in all 30 Acres one quarter and 35 rods."—Land Papers, I: 160 (Albany).

The same surveyor makes a survey for Yealous Johnson of land which is described as follows: "Beginning at a certain mark by the land of Peter Jacobsen, ranging thence southwesterly 56° by the said Jacobson's land 60 rods; ranging thence southwestwardly 34° 80 rods; ranging thence northwestwardly 56° 60 rods to the land of Jacob Peterson the Great; qt. in all 30 acres."—Land Papers, I: 160. ("qt." means quantity or contents.)

Robert Ryder makes a survey of a piece of land for Casper Caster (sic), the description being as follows: "At Fresh Kill, beginning at a certain stake sett in the rear of the land of Garrat Ramason upon the Island Manhattans; ranging thence southeasterly 56° by the land of Johannis Covenhoven 65 rods; Ranging thence southwesterly 34° 75 rods to the land of Peter Jacobson. Ranging thence northwesterly 56° 65 rods to the rear of the land of Garrat Ramason. Qt in all 30 acres ¼ acre and 35 rods."—Land Papers, I: 160 (Albany).

Robert Ryder also makes a survey of a piece of land for Solomon Peterson, described as follows: "Lying at the rear of the lots at the Great Kill beginning at the rear of the lot of Johannis Covenhoven, by the Swampe, ranging into the woods southeasterly 56° 60 rods; ranging thence southwesterly 34° 80 rods; ranging thence northwesterly 56° 60 rods and thence extending northeasterly 34° by the Swampe 80 rods to the first station; qt in all 30 acres of upland."—Land Papers, I: 160 (Albany).

whenever Spain was at war with any other European power, adventurers of any country found no difficulty in procuring commissions, as privateers, to war against the Spaniards, with which commission, and carrying aloft the flag of the nation hostile to Spain, they assumed that they were lawful enemies, and they were allowed in the ports of neutral nations, which benefited by being made the mart of the buccaneers' prize-goods; and the buccaneers thought themselves well recompensed in having a ready market and the security of the port.

"It was under the privileges thus afforded, that the 'South Sea Men' organized their several expeditions destined to operate on the west coast of America. In 1680 a fleet of seven vessels, manned by about three hundred and fifty men, mostly of the English nation, and several of them hailing from New York, departed for the South Pacific." The operations of the buccaneers, notably of Morgan, the plunderer of Panama, who became Sir Henry Morgan, a favourite of King Charles II, form an interesting chapter of English-American history.—See "The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 455-79. New York's connection with this unlawful traffic became marked in King William's reign (see under April 27, 1689); although instructions to Dongan, dated May 29, 1686, stated: "And whereas we are informed of great Disorders & Depredations daily committed by Pyrates & others to the prejudice of Our allies contrary to the Treaties between us & the good correspondence we ought to be maintained between Christian Princes & States; you are to take care that such a law, a copy whereof is herewith sent unto you are passd within Our province of New York, . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 374. Such a law does not appear of record, however, until Sept. 10, 1692 (q. v.), in Gov. Fletcher's time.

1680 About 1680, earthenware household utensils came into partial — up, but pewter still maintained its popularity for ordinary occasions up to the period of the Revolution.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 503.
 See A. In this year the settlement of Charleston, S. C., was removed to Oyster Point, the present Charleston.—Winsor, op. cit., V: 309.

 — In this year, Hennepin, a French priest, with La Salle, explored the Mississippi River, and discovered the Falls of St. Anthony.—

 Jan. The council orders that "Spiting Devil" be viewed for the 7 erection of a bridge.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 82; and Aug. 17, 1691.
 The council orders that no store-house, bolting mill, etc., be kept at the ferry.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 82-83. The ferry to Brooklyn was not at this time a municipal institution, but, being deemed part of the land system, was controlled by the province.
 " The governor and council order that in future no flour shall be bolted or packed for exportation in the province except at New York City. Regular inspection of bolting mills, and of the cleaning and packing of corn, was provided. This regulation was made before trade suffered on account of the poor quality of the flour exported.—M. C. C., I: 80; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 84. It was confirmed by Dongan on May 31, 1684 (M. C. C., I: 152-53); see, however, March 24, 1694.
 In the time of Andros there was no assembly, but all legislation was executed by the "Governor in Council." To improve the trade of New York City, he issued two orders. One was to encourage the bolting trade by prohibiting the exportation of wheat flour in which corn was mixed. The other was to lay a duty of ten per cent. on all European commodities imported into the province from any part of the world, except from England direct. This was the first encou-8 ragement given "to build shipping."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 57-58.
 Articles of agreement having been entered into by 21 coopers of this city to raise the price of casks (see text of the agreement in Man. Com. Coun. 1850, p. 425), they are summoned by the council, tried on Jan. 8, found guilty, and fined £2:10 each, those in the public employ being dismissed. It is ordered that coopers, carpenters, smiths, etc. serve five years before being allowed to set up business. The record gives the names of those in the combination and those fined.—Ibid., 426; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 82, 83. This is perhaps the first reference to a "trust" in American history.
 13 The wife of John Henries is fined ten pounds by the court of mayor and aldermen for reselling stolen goods. A warning was added that she would be "whipped out of the towne" if ever again "found in the like Error."—M. C. M. (MS.), Jan. 13, 1680. The mayor's court seldom prescribed the lash or whipping-post, less frequently still the pillory, stocks, or ducking-stool.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 194-99.
 14 There appears under this date in the Court Minutes the first inventory of city records. These are said to be only a part of the "Records of the Cytie delivered to Mr John Sharpe by ord<sup>r</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> (see Nov. 8), Andros commissioned John West to be "Clerke of the City." For a later inventory of records, see Nov. 21, 1739.

 " John Vincent and Andrew Breasted are appointed by the mayor and aldermen as "viewers and Packers of Caske."—M. C. C., I: 75.
 Their duties were further defined by Mayor Rombout on Feb. 18.
 They were to see that casks were made of dry and well-seasoned timber, and that "there be a burnt marke sett upon" every one;
 also that the "Porke and Beeffe you shall hereafter pack shall be good Sweete and howsome."—Ibid., I: 78-79. See Feb. 8, 1693;

 Feb. Treasurer Stoutenburgh (see June 5, 1676) presents to the 24 court of mayor and aldermen his account, "for the tyme of his Office" and "Doth Engage himselfe to make good y<sup>e</sup> accompt to "fully freely and Absolutely Release and Discharge him," provided he performs "y<sup>e</sup> beforemencioned Engagement." William Bogardus is appointed treasurer in his place.—M. C. C., I: 75-76.

 See Oct. 19, 1685.
 It is ordered by the council of mayor and aldermen that the Saturday market (see Jan. 29, 1677) be continued, and that an additional market be held every Wednesday, at "y<sup>e</sup> vsuall markett

 In view of the "ill Consequence of any Indyans to be Slaues sidered free and not slaves, and not be forced to be servants.—

 Seven persons are "Lycenced to sell wine & other Liqueo<sup>r</sup>s." 21 Seventeen additional licenses were granted between this date and Oct. 1 next.—M. C. C., I: 80-81. See also March 5, 1672. Gov.
 Dongan, in 1683, proclaimed that none could receive licenses without first obtaining a certificate that they were "of good life & Conversation and fitt to keep such a house."—Ibid., I: 100-1.
 A license is granted to Abraham Corbett to sell wine and other liquors.—M. C. C., I: 80. Corbett's tavern was at the sign of the Royal Oak on Broadway, on part of the present site of the Standard Oil Company's building at No. 26 Broadway. He continued to and the Sand Hill Road (Astor Pl. and Fourth Ave.). Adriaen Cornelissen (van Schaick) had married Rebecca, daughter of Teunis Ides; after his death, she continued to keep the tavern on the Bowery Road, and the place became very well known as "Rebecca's House."—Title Guarantee & Trust Co. records. John Clapp kept a tavern here in 1697 (q.v.). See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III:

 Andros sends soldiers to Elizabethtown, who break open Gov.
 30 Carteret's house at night and bring him a prisoner to New York.
 Here Carteret is "committed to the custody of Sheriff Collyer, on a charge of unlawfully assuming jurisdiction over the king's subjects." A special court of assizes is ordered to try him, "on an indictment for riotously presuming to exercise jurisdiction and government over his Majesty's subjects within the bounds of his Majesty's letters patents granted to His Royal Highness." Andros presided at the trial. "Carteret protested against the jurisdiction of the New York court. Being overruled, he averred his conduct as governor of New Jersey 'to be legal, and by virtue of power derived from the King.'" He was acquitted on May 28, but had to "give security that, if he went to New Jersey, he would not 'assume any authority or jurisdiction there, civil or military.'" Thereafter the authority of New York was not disputed.—Brodhead, Hist.
State of N. Y., II: 333-34 (and authorities there cited). See also the graphic account of this occurrence in the Journal of Jasper Danck- aerts (1913 ed.), 239-44, with footnote by Jameson.
 The magistrates of Harlem authorize the constable (Johannes 6 Vermelje) and Daniel Tourneur to employ a carpenter to build a "towne house" 22 ft. long by 20 ft. wide. Adolph Pietersen de Groot, carpenter at New York, undertook the work for 250 guilders. The inhabitants agreed to work on the building a certain number of days gratis.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), II: 420; Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 410. Daniel Tourneur, Jan Delamater, Jan Hendricks Brevoort, Arent Hensens, Jan Nagel, Adolph Meyer, Jan Dyckman, and Laurens Jansen all took part in "riding" the shingles and clapboards. It took 400 clapboards and 1,800 shingles to inclose the house. There were obtained from Gabriel Legget of Westchester, "woodsawyer," 430 ft. of sawed planks for flooring the loft. Henricus de Forest, of New York, did the glazing of the windows. The inhabitants had credit for whatever articles they furnished, or extra time they spent; the allowance for a day's labour being five guilders, or two dollars.—Ibid., 415. The house was finished in 1682. A search in the Harlem Recs. (in N. Y. Pub.
 Library), Riker's Hist. of Harlem, and other authorities has failed to discover the site of the Harlem town house.
 The Duke of York commissions John Lewin to be his special 24 agent in New York, Albany, and his other American territories, for the purpose of investigating the "estate, rents, revenues, profits,"

- 1680 etc. of the province, of inquiring into the condition of trade, and of giving full and just information of the expense necessary for the maintenance of the government there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 279-82. See Oct. 16, 1680; Dec. 31, 1681. Andros is ordered (see Oct. 29) to turn his government over to Lieut. Brockholls, and to return to England by the first ship (see Jan. 7, 1681). This change was made because discrepancies appeared in provincial accounts and because the administration of Andros had been criticised by various men whom the governour had displeas.—Ibid., III: 283-84; and see 1678.
- June Officers of the Dutch Church and of the city meet at the house of Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt to consider ways of raising money to build a new church. They decide on a free-will offering instead of a public tax. Notice is to be given to the inhabitants of the several streets to give in their subscriptions at stated times at the city hall. The country people at the Bowery, Harlem, and on the Island, are to be spoken to also. It is proposed that the new church be somewhat larger than the church in the fort, which was "54 foot wood measure without—about 50 within—in breadth."—Doc. Hist., N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 244 (where "June 31" is given).
- July Andros gives Rev. Charles Wolley a passport to return to England.—Eccles. Rec., I: 744. See Aug. 7, 1678.
- Oct. 6 John West is appointed by Gov. Andros to be secretary to the province, clerk to the court of assizes, and clerk to the city of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 657; see also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 335-36, and authorities there cited. He was sworn in as clerk of the city on Nov. 8 (q. v.).
- 15 Philip Welles receives a patent (Liber Patents, V: 8, Albany) for part of the ground of the five houses of the West India Company (see 1678), now belonging to the Duke of York. This property was on the site of the present No. 2 Stone St. See Castello Plan, II: 259-60; C. Pls. 82, 82c, 87, Vol. II. See also Oct. 16.
- 16 John Lewin, who was commissioned by the Duke of York on May 24, 1680 (q. v.), to inquire into the state of the government and trade in New York, Albany, etc., arrives in New York. Gov. Andros orders that "the Custome House bookes, Papers, & Accot<sup>s</sup> &c<sup>s</sup>" be delivered to him, but Lewin has difficulty in obtaining them all from Capt. Dyre, the collector, and from Gov. Andros. He is put to the trouble of searching for them; also of getting an order of council to examine "the Patent bookes for Land." In his report (not dated, but probably made in 1681), Lewin stated:
- "Most of the patents granted in former Governo<sup>s</sup> time make no mencō of any Quantity of Acres especially in Long Island, where most is granted in Towne shippes without Quitt Rent or any other rent, but services have been demanded from them in Coll. Lovelace's time for repairing fort James. . . . The patents in most places are so imperfect by being so often changed from one person to another, taken from some & granted to others, That I could not take any acc<sup>t</sup> of them as Instructed. . . . The houses are taxed in New Yorke and Albany, but at uncertaine rates, some more, some less as they judge requisite. . . . But those at New Yorke say they have never had any per<sup>t</sup> acc<sup>t</sup> either of the Tax of houses w<sup>ch</sup> amounts to 17<sup>0</sup> 1/2 p ann nor of the dockage, wharfage or Anchorage w<sup>ch</sup> is conceived amounts to a great sum<sup>e</sup> annually, and should be accounted for to the City for repairing the bridge and the wharfe running to decaye, they likewise say a considerable sum<sup>e</sup> of money was raised upon their stocks both Inhabitants and Merchant Strangers for making the Docks at first, but never any acc<sup>t</sup> made to them of it. . . . There is no weigh house in all the Govern<sup>t</sup> butt at New Yorke.
- "finding the Records of New Yorke in the Custody of M<sup>r</sup> West Towne Clarke I demanded them in order to give an Acco<sup>t</sup> of those several fines & Amercem<sup>t</sup>s imposed upon severall Merch<sup>t</sup>s. . . . but hee told me hee . . . could not deliver them without the Mayo<sup>r</sup>'s order."
- Lewin explains further how his inquiry is hampered; also the details of Dyre's method of collecting and retaining part of the customs revenue. Referring to the custom-house, he states: "The hindmost part of it being a pretty house and 2 chambers, over the fore part all in the Gov<sup>t</sup>'s use," etc. His report charges Dyre as responsible for all the frauds in the customs.
- He further finds sums charged as expenses against Fort James, which are unaccountably large, unless it be "by pulling down and building up again the kitchen & a sheed which hath been repeated severall times, and by taking the Dutch tyles from off the great house and covering it with shingles altering the staires and such other practices, by w<sup>ch</sup> Sould<sup>r</sup>s, his owne Serv<sup>t</sup>s and Negroes are employed," etc.
- "The Old Hospital mencōned in the Gov<sup>t</sup>'s last acc<sup>t</sup> to be sold for 200<sup>l</sup> might have been sold as it stood for 300<sup>l</sup> to Coll. Mauritius, but was pull<sup>d</sup> downe the materials removed to rebuild an Apartm<sup>t</sup> taken downe in the fort w<sup>ch</sup> hath considerably enlarged the said Acco<sup>t</sup> but noe mencōn of the street there sold for 75<sup>l</sup> more then is accounted for, nor of the Dutch tyles of the Old Hospital sold to Capt. Brockholes." Cf. July 5, 1669; and see Dec. 2, infra.
- Lewin closes his report by mentioning the "Connivance practiced to some few Dutch Merchants viz<sup>t</sup> fredrick Philipps & Stephanus van Cortlandt the Gov<sup>r</sup>'s Trustee," etc., which has caused obstruction to trade. The governour and persons employed by him have permitted goods to be brought in contrary to the "Act of Navigation & Trade." The English inhabitants have been afraid to prosecute; traders from the Barbadoes and elsewhere have refrained from coming to New York to trade or to settle with their families. Such conditions, Lewin adds, "may be prevented for the future by placing such discreet & honest Officer<sup>s</sup> that Justice may be equally distributed to all men, & yo<sup>r</sup> Roy<sup>l</sup> High<sup>s</sup> not deceived & abused."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 302-8. See Dec. 31, 1681.
- Gov. Andros is recalled.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 94, citing the Council Minutes. See May 24.
- Andros commissions Capt. William Dyre (or Dyre) to be mayor; William Bekman (or Beakeman), Johannes van Brugh, Thomas Lewis, Peter Jacobs, Samuel Wilson, and James Graham, aldermen; and Capt. John Collier (or Colier), sheriff.—M. C. C., VIII: 146. Capt. Dyre was reappointed mayor by Brockholls on Oct. 14, 1681, and Oct. 14, 1682.—Ibid., VIII: 147, 147-48. For a brief sketch of the life of William Dyre, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 387; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 52.
- Andros's commission to John West to be "Clerke of the City" bears this date, and he is sworn in. He is given authority "to take into his Custody & Keeping all Records, Bookes & papers of Publique Concerne belonging thereto. And to act in Sd Employ as a Clerke may and ought to Doe according to Law & Practice."—M. C. C., VIII: 146-47. For a later commission, see Nov. 24, 1683. See also Jan. 14, 1680, and April 23, 1691. Beginning at this time, the city archives contain original papers in considerable quantity. Prior to 1680 there are very few in the files.
- Consternation is caused in New York, and elsewhere throughout the world, by the appearance of an enormous comet, one of the most magnificent on record.—See Fiske, Dutch and Quaker Colonies in Am., II: 59 (where, also, in succeeding pages, is presented an excellent account of the topographical appearance of the city at this time). The superstition of the time was reflected in a poem, written by Rev. Lchaod Wiswall, of Duxbury, Massachusetts, and published in London in 1683, entitled: A Judicious Observation of That Dreadfull Comet, which Appeared on November 18, 1680, and continued until the 10th of February following, Wherein is shewed the manifold Judgments that are like to attend upon most parts of the World. This work has been reviewed by Alfred B. Page in "An Early American Poem," in the Colonial Soc. of Mass., "Publications," Dec., 1907. For a fuller appreciation of the "cometary superstition" of the period, see The Great Comet of 1680: A Study in the Hist. of Rationalism (Columbia Univ. thesis), by Jas. H. Robinson (Northfield, Minnesota, 1916). Cf. Sept. 7, 1668.
- A piece of ground lying on the south side of Stoney St., known as the ground of the five houses, is surveyed and laid out into four lots:—No. 1, for Capt. Brockholls; No. 2, for John Darvall; No. 3, for Stephen van Cortlandt; and No. 4, for Philip Welles, the surveyor.—Cal. Land Papers, 21. The five houses or old hospital, which had formerly stood in this plot of ground, had originally belonged to the Dutch West India Company. During the English occupation, it was used to lodge officers for want of room in the fort. Gov. Andros took the building down and used the material to erect lodgings for the officers and secretary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 307, 312. See Oct. 15, 166, Dec. 6, 15, 1680; and cf. Dec. 31, 1681.
- Capt. Anthony Brockholes receives a patent (Liber Patents, V: 5, Albany) for part of the ground of "the Five Houses" of the West India Company (see 1678), now belonging to the Duke of York. This property was on the site of the present No. 4 Stone St.—See The Castello Plan, II: 259-60; C. Pls. 82, 82c, 87, Vol. II.
- A negro couple, Swan and wife, are fined 25 shillings by the court of mayor and aldermen "for keeping a Disorderly house,

A proclamation is issued by the mayor and aldermen forbidding the inhabitants or others within the city "to Harbour Intertaine or Countenance any Indian or Neger Slave What soever in their Houses or Otherwise or to sell or Deliver to them any Wine Rumm or other strong Liquor, or receive or take from Such Indian or Neger slaves any mney or other Goods on any account Whatsoever."—M. C. C., I: 86. See also Dec. 7, 1680.

Brockholls, now in charge of the government, writes to Sir John Werden, the duke's secretary: "I have one thing of great moment to acquaint you with, which is the Lose or at least w<sup>e</sup> a p<sup>re</sup>sent cessation from payment of his Royall Highnesse Customs Established here, the time to w<sup>ch</sup> they were limited to be Received being expired in Novemb<sup>r</sup> last, it being mencoed in the Regulacón of the Customs that it is to hold good for three yeares from November 1677, which being publicly knowne to the merchants they all refuse to pay any Customes or Dutyes and Capt. Dyre, the Collector, being now very ill, a Pinke [vessel] from London hath Unloaded her Goods and carryed them to their warehouses without taking any notice of the Custome house or officers, absolutely Refusing to pay any Customs." A general confusion in the government followed. "The Council met and advised thereupon but find no power or authority to continue the same longer, without orders from Home."—O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), viii.

Capt. William Dyre, one of the council, collector of the duke's revenue, and mayor of New York, is accused of high treason in the mayor's court. By warrant from the commander and council, the general court of assizes met on June 29 (q. v.) to try him.—N. Y. Col. Docs. IV: 287-88.

Rev. Casper van Zureen writes to the classis of Amsterdam that at present, on account of vacancies at New York and Esopus, 25 "there are only three preachers in this whole province of New York or New Netherland." These are at Schenectady, New Castle, and the section of the province between these points. He states further: "Even the Capital, New York, has no English minister or chaplain."—Eccles. Rec., II: 777-79.

William Dyre, collector of the port (see May 31), is tried before a special session of the court of assizes, held in New York, on the charge of high treason, on the ground that he has imposed unlawful customs duties on goods passing through the port. He questions the authority of the court, and consequently is sent to England so that the king may proceed against him as he deems best.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 287-89. This difficulty arose from the fact that the customs duties, which, by reason of a three year's limitation, were about to end, had been arbitrarily ordered continued by the Duke of York. At the same time, Gov. Andros was ordered to increase the duty on imported rum.—Ibid., III: 268; Chalmers, Political Annals, I: 582. However, just at this time, Gov. Andros was recalled to England, and in the hurry of his departure neglected to renew the order for the collection of customs duties. Consequently, the merchants of New York refused to pay the sums demanded, and when cargoes were seized, one of them brought suit against Dyre, as has been stated. Dyre was sent to England for prosecution at his request, and there his prosecutor did not appear against him, and his case was dismissed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 321. But "the end of the prosecution was answered. This spirited measure [on the part of the merchants] . . . had the greatest effect in laying in ruins that system of despotism which had so long afflicted the people." The governor's council, the court of assizes, and the corporation of New York united in asking the duke to permit the people to take part in the legislative power. This request was granted in the administration of Dongan.—Political Annals (op. cit.), I: 583; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 351-53, and appendix, note D. It was the resistance offered thus early by the merchants of New York to taxation without representation which eventually led to the representative form of government in the province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 289, footnote. See Dec. 31.

The text of the petition to the duke just referred to reveals the intensity of desire at this early day for freedom from oppression. It calls attention to "the great pressure and lamentable condition of his majesty's subjects." They plead for an assembly "of the people" as the only remedy possible for existing conditions,—an assembly established "by a free choice of the freeholders and inhabitants." They express their satisfaction in the appointment by 1681 the duke of the agent, John Lewin, and concur in his "grand in-June quest." They explain that for many years they "have groined 29 under inexpressible burdens by having an arbitrary and absolute power used and exercised" over them, by which a yearly revenue has been exacted against their wills; "and trade grievously burdened with undue and unusual customs imposed on the merchandize" without their consent—"our liberty and freedom intruded, and the inhabitants wholly shut out and deprived of any share, vote, or interest, in the government, to their great discouragement, and contrary to the laws, rights, liberties, and privileges, of the subject; so that we are esteemed as nothing, and have become a reproach to the neighbours in other his majesty's colonies, who flourish under the fruition and protection of his majesty's unparalleled form and method of government in his realm of England, the undoubted birthright of all his subjects." They supplicate that the colony may be ruled in future "by a governor, council, and assembly: which assembly to be duly elected and chosen by the freeholders of this your royal highness' colony, as is usual and practicable with the realm of England, and other his majesty's plantations."—Brothhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 658, citing Wood's Long Island, 178-79. See also O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to the Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), viii-ix.

Aug. The "Great Packt or Excise For Selling wine and all other 16 Strong Liquors by Retail within this City" (see Nov. 30, 1675) appears to have been revived since its revocation in 1676 (see M. C. C., I: 13-14), for on this day an order is issued by "The Comand<sup>r</sup> in Chiefe," signed "A.B." (A. Brockholls), that no one was to sell liquors at retail except those who would "agree with the Farmers or pay Excise as Formerly." The permit for selling wines and liquors (referred to in the order as "the Great Packt or Excise") is "to farm" on this day for the ensuing year to five persons named in the order, and any one desiring to sell at retail is required to agree with them upon the terms of the excise.—Ibid., I: 87.

Sept. Domine Henricus Selyns is called from Hollaad to the vacat 1 Dutch church at New York, to succeed the late Domine William Nieuwenhuysen, at "a yearly salary of one thousand Carolus guilders" (about $400).—Eccles. Rec., II: 785. He entered into contract in Amsterdam with the commissioners of the Dutch Church of New York on Dec. 10.—Ibid., II: 797-800. He arrived in New York on Aug. 6, 1682.—Ibid., II: 836. See Oct. 28 and Nov. 15, 1682; Sept. 30, 1696.

15 The deputy mayor (William Beekman) and aldermen, influenced by Frederick Phillips, one of the governor's council, draw up a declaration protesting against Lewin's taking depositions privately and administering oaths for that purpose. Such proceedings are deemed expressly contrary to an order in council of April 9, 1679, which required that no one but the mayor, deputy mayor, or eldest alderman, shall grant any warrants, admit any private hearings, or take oaths, and that no oaths shall be taken except in courts, unless in case of necessity and when the parties are present.
 Lewin has allowed the parties concerned no opportunity to vindicate themselves or to make answer. He has not made application to the city's authorities for assistance; or made known any of the depositions obtained. Since his arrival great disorder and confusion have occurred in the government, due to such irregularities.—M. C. C., I: 87-89. See also July 25, 1685. The original declaration or remonstrance is filed in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room.

Oct. The first mention of a settled meeting of the Society of Friends 12 occurs. It is agreed "that the First-day meeting shall remain at Robert Story's, and the Fifth-day meeting at Lewis Morris', until a public meeting house shall be provided; and that William Richardson and William Frampton hire a convenient house, taking the advice of Lewis Morris, Robert Story and George Masters."— Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 101-2. See 1672.

14 An order is issued by the commander-in-chief (Brockholls) and council continuing the present magistrates of the city in office for a year or until further order. This is done both in accordance with regular practice to name new magistrates at this time, and also because of "the present State and Condition of the Government in General."—M. C. C., VIII: 147.

Brockholls, the commander-in-chief, is serving in the absence of Andros, who is in England (see Jan. 7). Brothhead observes that "Andros seems to have determined not to return to New York, for his wife now sailed in the ship Beaver to join him in England."
Hist. State of N. Y., II: 355, note.

Dec. 31 The report of John Lewin, the duke's special agent to audit accounts at New York (see Oct. 16, 1680), having been delivered to Dec.

 Andros, who is now in England (after leaving New York in January, 1681), 31 Andros makes answer to Lewin's charges. Among other things he states:

"Noe Patents have been altered or changed in my time but att the Request of the owner, or by verdict & Judgment or according to Lawe, . . . The Revenues of New York of Houses, Wharfage, Dockage &c hath been ordered & managed by the Magistrates & officers of y<sup>e</sup> sd City (as their owne) and Employed to the great benefit & Improuem<sup>t</sup> thereof, particularly in making the Harbo<sup>r</sup> or Mold, . . .

"The roome over the Pasturie house was ever used by all my Predecessors as a Granary or store roome and soe continued since the sale of his Roy<sup>l</sup> High<sup>n</sup> Cargo, and the Cellar left to the Collector<sup>s</sup> as formerly for his Roy<sup>l</sup> High<sup>n</sup> service . . .

"The Dutch having built and fitted an Armory over the kitchen as the most proper room in the fort, it proved extraordinary leaky and too rotten to be repaired as was found by survey, whereupon I was forced to remove the armes to the garrett over the sold<sup>r</sup> Quarters, and to avoid charge pulled down both armory and kitchen, making up a shedd to serve for kitchen & Hall. But afterwards finding the Armes could not be well kept in the Garrett by reason of smoake from the soldiers roomes and moysture from the Tyles both being uncelled, I did resolve upon rebuilding the Armory, Of which the walls of the Church, of the great house, of stair case and of the fort made the greatest part of the stone work, w<sup>ch</sup> hath brought the kitchen againe to what it was, And the Armory (being the only [one] that is in those parts) is a worke absolutely necessary in the fort, where I left above six hundred good armes fixt and in good order, and place for more.

"The taking the Tyles off the great house and shingling it, was in imitation of what was done to the Church by the Inhabitants in my Predecessors time to prevent Leakage by reason the Tyles were usually broken when the Gunns were fired; The Tyles paying for the shingling.

"The house was soe leaky tho' lately built and never finished by Gov<sup>r</sup> Lovelace that the staires and some roomes were quite rotten, and soe of necessity to be repaired.

"Some of the platfformes being in decay were new made during my former voyage to England, but were ordered and part of the materials for the same, and for some new Carriages for the gunns were brought upon the place before my coming away. But Lieut.
 Brockholes in my absence not observing my direcons left wth him making shipp instead of Land Carriages for the gunns, & buying stockadoes to set round the fort, w<sup>ch</sup> other Expences contrary and without order as afores<sup>d</sup> occasioned an extraordinary charge, w<sup>ch</sup> ought to be laid att his dore and not at mine.

"The five houses (see note below) or Old hospital in the towne, in w<sup>ch</sup> officers also used to be lodged for want room in the fort being yearly chargeable & of little use, and upon a Survey found too old & rotten to be repaired I caused it and the ground to be appraised & then pulled downe, and brought the materials into the fort for the rebuilding of a like old house designed to be built by all my predecessor<sup>s</sup> w<sup>ch</sup> is rebuilt accordingly and therein made very convenient Lodgings for the Officers & Secretary &c which was before very much wanted.

"The ground of the hospitall and a little part of the streete by consent of the Towne was appraised at 200<sup>l</sup> & sold in 4 lots. As to what is objected concerning Coll Morris having offered 300<sup>l</sup> I remember nothing of it but acted herein for his Roy<sup>l</sup> High<sup>n</sup> best advan-age."

Andros refers to the improvements in trade, population, and the condition of the province since his first coming to New York.
 Of Frederick Phillips and Stephanus van Cortlandt he says that neither they nor anyone "was ever particularly countenanced more then they justly deserved," etc., everyone receiving equal justice
 "without respect of persons, nation, or quality."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 308-13. A footnote states that the quarter "knowne by the name of the ground of the five houses" was situated between "Stoey" St. and Bridge St. It was surveyed into four lots (two on Stone and two on Bridge St.) on Dec. 2, 1680 (q. v.), for Capt. Brockholls, John Darvall, Stephen Courtlandt, and Philip Wells. The description of the survey, with draft of the several lots, is in the secretary's office.—Ibid., 312, citing Land Papers, I: 179. Cf. Dec. 2.

Andros and Capt. Dyer were both vindicated on the inquiry of commissioners into the charges made by Lewin against them.—

1681 N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 314. Dyer appealed to the king and privy council for reparation. The privy council ordered that the petition be referred to the lords of the committee for trade and plantations. This committee (known as the lords of trade) reported on July 21, 1682, advising that an advertisement he put in the Gazette and be published in the Royal Exchange, and notice be sent to the mayor of Southampton, where Dyer's accuser, Winder, was last known to be, summoning Winder to appear and prosecute; and they advised that on Winder's default Dyer's bond be cancelled, so that he "may take his remedy at Law against the said Winder in New York." On Oct. 26, 1682, Dyer was discharged from the accusation against him.—Ibid., III: 318-21. See also June 29, 1681.

The "Old Church" on Pearl St., between Broad and Whitehall Sts. (the earliest church on Manhattan Island), is sold for 10,200 guilders seawant, or about $1,000. This was the sale to De Sille.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 934-35; Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 545.

The Jews acquire land for a cemetery, which still exists near Chatham Square, as the oldest burying-ground on Manhattan Island.—See Feb. 22, 1686; and Dec. 17, 1729.

A committee of the Society of Friends is appointed "to endeavor to purchase a plot of ground for a meeting house and burying ground, and prepare timber to build a house twenty feet square." However, it was not until 1696 (q. v.) that land was purchased, on Green St.—Ouderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. See 1684.

Brookholls issued orders (presumably at this time) to be observed by the military watch appointed for this city. Each company of militia was to keep watch by turn, in three divisions, with a commissioned officer in charge of each. The watch or guard was to be set every night by the captain or other commissioned officer at eight o'clock, "Immediately After the Bell Ringing." The city gates were to be locked before nine o'clock, by the captain or other commissioned officer, and opened in the morning just after daylight. A fine was imposed for neglect of duty. By nine o'clock there was roll-call. Absentees were fined. Whoever "shall Come Over Charged with Drinke" was to be fined two shillings sixpence; but, "if Quite Drunke Quarrelsome or Abusive," five shillings. Regulations of a similar character were added about making the rounds, keeping order in public-houses, and against profanity and gaming while on watch. Each person appointed to be on watch "shall bring his Armes that is to say his Sword and Gunn Well fitted and Provided with Six Charges of Powder and as many of Ball Att Least." Each one was to serve in person "or send three Men in his Stead."—M. C. C., I: 90-92. See Jan. 11, 1676; June 1, 1688.

Later in the year (date not given), orders were issued to be observed by the constables' watch. They were practically the same as those for the military watch. The principal variations were the following: "That whosoever Shall Presume to make any Quarrell upon the Watch upon the Account of being of Different Nations or any Other Pretence whatsoever" shall be fined. Frequent rounds were to be made, "and especially towards the Bridge." Instead of the sword and gun required of the military watch, "The Constable or Deputy Shall have with them the Staffes of their office And Every one of the watch Shall have only A Halbert halfe pike or Good Quarter staffe." There was a fine for neglect. The orders stated in closing "That in Going the Rounds the watch be Still and quiett And not Suffer any Laughing or Loud talking in the Streets or notice to be made by any of them."—Ibid., I: 93-94. This last mentioned particular differs from the order issued for the city's bellmen or night watchmen of Oct. 17, 1698 (q. v.).

The report by J. Churchill to the commissioners of the duke's revenue, regarding the management of affairs at New York, shows, among other things, "That Sr Edm: Andross did of his own authority tax y<sup>e</sup> Inhabit<sup>ts</sup> of New York to the building of the Mold, & the Inhabit<sup>ts</sup> of Long Island to find Stockadoes." From the testimony it appears that this was a good and necessary work. It also shows that several fines which should have gone to the king "were directed to be employed towards buildiug of a Church." The report closes with the statement that there is no proof that Andross "hath misbehaued himself or broken y<sup>e</sup> trust reposed in him."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 314-15.

The proclamation of March 14, 1677, prohibiting Christians from trading with Indians in the towns and plantations of the latter, is renewed.—M. C. C., I: 89-90.

The town house in Harlem (exact location not known; see May 6, 1660) has been finished, and must be paid for. To provide for this and other claims against the town, a meeting is held. "On a careful audit of the accounts, the public debts were found to amount to 1190 fl., and the sums due the town from sundry persons to 406 fl. 12 st. To meet the deficiency of 783 fl. 8 st. a tax of 800 fl. upon the lands and erven was voted."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 417.

The Duke of York writes to Brookholls that he intends to establish such a form of government at New York as shall give all the advantages and privileges to the inhabitants and traders there that the king's other plantations in America enjoy, particularly the choosing of an assembly, and other things agreeable to the laws of England. But he expects the colonists to support the government, and clear off the arrears which have accumulated since the obstruction of the collection of duties began.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 317-18. See also O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" in Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), ix.

The elders and deacons of the Dutch Church agree to rent a house for the new minister. The deacons are to complete the kitchen, cellar, and "bleaching ground."—Eccles. Rec., II: 804-5. See also Sept. 1, 1681; and Nov. 15, 1682.

William Penn signs the "Frame of Government" for his colony.—Macdonald, Select Charters Illustrative of Am. Hist., 1606-1775, 192-99; Church Catalogue, No. 676. See Oct. 27.

Jasper Nessepot and Peter Jaosen Mesier petition for a spot "upon the plain" for a government mill. The petition is not granted.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXX: 96 (Albany), quoted by O'Callaghan in Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961; and Addenda.

Alderman James Graham is dangerously wounded by Capt. July Jarvis Baxter, who stabs him with his sword at the tavern of Dirck van Cliff, "in the Orchard." Baxter is ordered to be in readiness to "abide his tryall if he said Graham shall dye of his wounds." Graham recovered and no action was taken.—From complaints entered in the "Court of Mayor and Aldermen," and included in latter part of Liber 19 B, cited in Abstract of Wills, II: 434-35.

The city of Philadelphia is laid out, Penn's charter for "Pennsylvania" having been signed March 4, 1681.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 477, 481, 491; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 286. In 1683, there was published in London A Letter from William Penn Proprietary and Governour of Pennsylvania In America, to the Committee of the Free Society of Traders of that Province, residing in London Containing A General Description of the said Province. . . . As Also an Account of the City of Philadelphia Newly laid out . . . with a Portraiture or Plat-form thereof . . . (drawn by Thomas Holme, surveyor-general, who came to America to lay out the plot). The plan of Philadelphia shows numbered lots, and spaces left for public buildings, and was intended to interest investors. The letter states (p. 8) that, at the time of writing (Aug. 16, 1683), the town "is advaoiced within less than a Year to about four Score Houses and Cottages, such as they are, where Merchants and Handicrafts are following their Vocations as fast as they can, while the Country-men are close at their Farms . . ."

The payments made from this date until Aug. 21, 1683, for repairs on city works (the particulars of which are not specified), and the amounts of dock money received for expenses, are recorded in documents now preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., in folder lettered "N. Y. City 1680-1700 Miscellaneous." Box 1. N. Y. MSS.

The Duke of York signs a commission at St. James's for Col. Thomas Doogan to be governour of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 328-29. Sir John Verden, the duke's secretary (p. 317), wrote on Jan. 4, 1683, to Lieut. Brookholls, commander-in-chief at New York, that the duke had appointed Doogan, who would "be long" be in that city.—Ibid., III: 330. Doogan's instructions from the duke were dated Jan. 27, 1683 (q. v.).

An order is issued against negroes congregating together and engaging in sports, etc. without a license or ticket.—MS. Records of Court of Assizes, 35-36, in N. Y. Hist. Soc., and M. C. C., I: 92-93.

William Penn, with a number of immigrants, arrives opposite New Castle. The next day, he took formal possession of the town and surrounding country.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 482-83.

Dominie Selyns writes to the classis of Amsterdam: "As the number of inhabitants here, together with the people comiog in from the vicinity, is too great for the size of our church building, they are contemplating the building of a new church, or else of increasing the accommodations in this one by a large gallery. . . ."

- 1682 "The English residents here worship in our church building, enter-Oct. ing and occupying it immediately after our morning service. . . .
28 They have no minister, but only a 'reader' who also marries people and baptises in private houses, but does not publicly preach. . . .
There is here also a Lutheran church with a minister. . . . Besides, we have Quakers, Jews and Labadists, all of whom hold their own separate meetings. The Quakers are the most numerous, the Jews come next, and the Labadists are the fewest. . . . As to Papists, there are none; or if there are any, they attend our services or that of the Lutherans."—Eccles. Rec., II: 828-30, 852. But see 1683.
- Nov. The elders and deacons of the Reformed Dutch Church resolve 15 to build a dwelling for their minister.—Eccles. Rec., II: 841-42.
See also Sept. 1, 1681; March 29, 1682. Selyns wrote to the classis of Amsterdam on Oct. 21-31, 1683: "My congregation is now engaged in building me a large house, wholly of stone and three stories high."—Ibid., II: 866. Selyns's parsonage and the deacons' chamber were on the site of the present 21-23 Beaver St.—See house.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 92.

- This date is found upon a "Map of the Raritan River," the first map or plan, indeed the first engraving printed from a copper plate (of which we have any record), made in America. It was engraved by R. Simson (very possibly in New York City) from a drawing by John Reid. But two copies of the map are known, one in the Map Division of the Library of Congress, the other in the Collection of the New Jersey Historical Society. For further information regarding this map, see description of Pl. 27, I: 254, footnote; and Addenda.

running the New York-East New Jersey line in 1686.—Ibid., 49

Harrison, another priest of that society, was here in 1685, and returned to Ireland in 1690. Father Charles Gage was employed here in 1686-7.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 73. These were English

- 27 Instructions are issued at St. James's Palace by the Duke of York to Col. Thomas Dongan for his guidance as governor of New York. These state that, with the instructions, Dongan will receive his commission. He is to "repair thither to New York" with all convenient speed. He is to "call together Fredericke Philipps, Stephen Courtland and so many more of the most eminent inhabitants of New York, not exceeding tenn," to be members of the duke's council. He is to publish his commission; administer to the members of the council oaths of allegiance to the king and fealty to the duke "as Lord and Proprietor of the place;" and inform the council what transactions require their consent and approval. He is to issue writs or summons to the sheriffs and other public officers throughout the province that there is to be a general assembly of representatives of all the freeholders, who are to consult with the governour and council regarding the enactment of laws. All parts of the province are to send not more than 18 representatives, to meet in New York, on receiving 30 days notice to elect their delegates.
All laws passed by the assembly shall be presented to the governour for his assent or veto. Laws which the governour assents to he is to transmit to the duke, signed by the governour and council and under the seal of the colony (which is also to be used "in passing of grants"), that the duke may ratify and confirm them or reject
- them. Money is to be raised by passage of laws, for the maintenance of the government, both civil and military, and to pay arrears due to officers, soldiers, etc. Public moneys are not to be disposed of except by the governour's warrant. He is not to impair or remit the duke's revenue, without the duke's command; nor displace high public officers without good cause, nor execute the duties of any such officers, nor suffer anyone to execute more than one office by a deputy.

punish drunkenness, swearing, etc.; establish courts of justice, taking care that they shall be "as near subject to y<sup>e</sup> laws and Courts of Justice in England as may be," subject to the duke's review. He shall grant estates under the seal of the duke's government, at yearly rent or service reserved to the duke and his heirs.
He is authorized to pardon and remit any fines imposed by the courts, and also pardon crimes before or after conviction, excepting high treason and willful murder; and even in the latter cases, if he finds the criminal deserving of mercy, he may relieve the execution.
With the advice of the council, he is "to erect and appoint commissioner houses and other necessaryes, for Custome-houses and menters relating therunto," where he may judge convenient.
He is authorized, with the advice of the council, "to settle and establish a Militia of the inhabitants, to be mustered and discipled" by officers of the governour's appointment, and "to erect such forts & castles . . . as shall be necessary for defence."
He is to endeavour to ascertain and agree upon the boundaries of the duke's "territories towards Connecticut" with the governours and inhabitants of that province, and is to send to the duke
"true and exact Mapps" of all of the duke's territories.
If he dies in office, the deputy governour or the chief officer under him at the time shall succeed him, until the duke appoints another person to be governour.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 331-34.

 duke's instructions to Dongan, to be held in New York on Oct. 17, 1683. Writs are issued to the sheriffs of the various settlements, directing the inhabitants to choose representatives to meet in the male children above 16 years of age.—M. C. C., I: 98.

Oct. After adjournment of the court of assizes, over which Dongan 9 presided, the sheriffs draw up an address to the Duke of York, thanking him for sending over Dongan as governor, and for granting the general assembly which is to be held on Oct. 17, 1683.—

13 Luke Sancton is appointed by the deputy mayor and aldermen the collector of "Dock money" payable to the city by vessels trading at this port. On Nov. 1, a proclamation was issued by the governor and council directing masters of vessels to make payments to the collector, as required by the act of assembly, at the custom-house near the bridge.—M. C. C., I: 99, 100. Cf. March 8, 1684.

17 "The inhabitants of New York now first participated in the legislative power. The Council, the Court of Assizes, and the Corporation of New York having concurred in soliciting the Duke of York to permit the people to have a share in the government, the Duke had informed the Deputy Governor of the Province that he intended to establish the same form of government as the other plantations enjoyed [see April 6, 1675], particularly in the choosing of an assembly" . . . —Holmes, Am. Annals, I: 409, citing N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, III: 347-52. See Jour. Leg. Coun.,

The representatives chosen by the inhabitants of the province, under the order issued by the governor and council on Sept. 13, now meet in general assembly at Fort James in the city of New York.—Col. Laws N. Y. (1894), "Historical Note," I: xvi.
 Most of the members were of Dutch descent.—Brodhead, Hist.
State of N. Y., II: 382. The assembly remained in session until Nov. 3, or about three weeks. The journal of its deliberations has been lost, but the 15 acts which it passed have been preserved, and constitute the beginning of the statute law of New York Province and State.—Osgood, The Am. Colonies (1904), II: 166-68. Transcripts of the laws passed at this session, and at the second session, were, in 1851, in the office of the secretary of state, in a book entitled The Duke of York's Charter of Liberties and Privileges to the Inhabitants of New York, Anno, 1683. With Acts of the Assembly of that Year, and the Year 1684.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 355, footnote. When The Colonial Laws of N. Y. were published, in 1894, this book was in the state library.—See Vol. I of that work,
 p. 111.

30 "The Charter of Liberties and privileges granted by his Royal Highness to the Inhabitants of New York and its Dependencies" is passed by the colonial legislature. It was the first statute law of the province of New York, enacted by a legislature composed of the governour, council, and representatives elected by the people. It provides, among other matters, that the supreme legislative authority shall ever be in this assembly, under the Duke of York, and that meetings shall be held at least every three years. Freeholders and freemen are allowed to vote; and in every election the majority of voices is to decide. There is also given freedom of religion and liberty of conscience. The whole scheme of government in the province is outlined, and several provisions enacted affecting private as well as public interests. The full text of the act is printed in Col. Laws N. Y. (1894), I: 111-16, from the manuscript compilation of the "Dongan Laws," formerly in the office of the secretary of state, and later in the state library. On Oct. 31, this charter and the act for defraying [the requisite charges of the government were proclaimed at the city hall.—M. C. C., I: 99. The Dongan Laws survived the Capitol fire of March, 1911.

The charter, "not yet perfected," was received by the board of trade on Feb. 17, 1685.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 354, citing Board of Trade Journals, V: 90. It was vetoed March 3, 1685 (q. v.) by James (who became king on Feb. 6, q. v.), as too democratic.—Ibid., III: 359.

There is also passed on this day "A Continued Bill for defraying the Requisite Charges of the Government." The bill was passed in consideration of the duke's restoring to the inhabitants and their posterity "the Rights privileges Liberties and Immunities before recited." By it, the duke and his heirs are given "the duties and Customs hereafter Specified." For example, a duty of fourpence is imposed on every gallon of spirituous liquors imported, and other charges for various wines and other articles of merchandise. The duke is also to have an excise tax on all liquors (except beer and cider) which are retailed in the city and county of New York, or carried up the Hudson for consumption, or retailed throughout the province, a different scale of duties being provided for beer and cider. A duty is charged on various skins exported; and traders who traffic in skins with the Indians are to pay a tax of £10 on every £800 paid by them as first cost.

The master, mate, or purser of every incoming vessel is to declare by a sworn invoice a true account of all goods and merchandise on board and their prime cost. He is not to "break bulke" before making his report. The act is a detailed and extended law for the regulation of the custom-house (here designated as "such place or places as shall be appointed by the Governor").—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 116-21. The original of this act is in the office of the secretary of state, as well as in the manuscript compilation of the "Dongan Laws," formerly in that office and later in the state library. On Oct. 29, 1684, another act was passed explaining this one.—Ibid., I: 170-71.

The colonial legislature passes "An Act to divide this province & dependencies into shires and Counties." This is "for the better governing and settling Courts in the same." Twelve counties are formed. The first named is "The City & County of New York, to containe all the Island commonly called Manhatans Island, Mannings Island, and the two Barne Islands, the City to be called as it is, New York, and the Islands above specified the County thereof." The other counties are Westchester, Ulster, Albany, Dutchess, Orange, Richmond, Kings, Queens, Suffolk, Dukes, and Corwall.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 122.

The legislature passes "An Act for naturalizing all those of foreigne Nations at present inhabiting within this province and professing Christianity, and for Encouragement of others to come and Settle within the Same."

There is also passed "An Act to settle Courts of Justice."
 Every town is to have one court every month to determine small causes, three persons to be commissioned for the purpose without jury. Every county is to have a court of sessions and a court of oyer and terminer to meet yearly, at different times, to hear, try, and determine both civil and criminal cases, the time and place for holding it in each county being stated, and each of the courts being with a jury of 12 men. A court of chancery is established for the province "to heare and determine all matters of Equity and shall be Esteemed and accounted the Supreme Court of this province." This is to consist of the governor and council, the governor being given power to appoint a chancellor in his stead. Appeals are allowed from the court of chancery or the court of oyer and terminer to the king, after payment of the costs of the decree or judgment from which the appeal arose. By an act of Oct. 21, 1684, several clauses in the foregoing act were explained. The court of chancery was abolished in 1847 as provided by the Constitution of N. Y. State, Oct. 9, 1846. See July, 1847 (first Monday).

Another Act passed at this session was one "to prevent wilful Perjury;" and also one "for the Defraying of the publique & necessary Charge of each respective City, towne and County throughout this Province & for maintaining the poore, & preventing vagabonds." The latter law provided for the annual election of assessors and a treasurer in each city, towne, and county, to make assessments and receive moneys to pay the public charges.

Another law permitted the killing of swine "found at liberty, in the streets and meadows, or upon any other mans fenced or Inclosed lands."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 123-34. The last named law was found in practice to be so strict and damaging that, on Nov. 19, 1685, it was repealed, and another passed giving justices of the peace the power to regulate the nuisance according to local ordinance.—Ibid., I: 177.

The legislature passes "A Bill for a free and Voluntary P'sent To The Govern'r." This is a gift to Doongan, raised by a tax of one penny per freeholder on the value of all the real and personal property of every freeholder and inhabitant in the province. Commissioners are appointed in each county to collect the tax.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 137-41. The city ordered, on Aug. 15, 1684, an assessment of £200 on the estates of the inhabitants to meet this demand of the government.—M. C. C., I: 154. On Oct. 27, 1684, the time was extended within which payments were to be made as the law required, and it was ordered that those in arrears after April 21, 1685, were to be fined £10 damage on every £100 due. This supplementary act was entitled "A Bill for the More speedy and better Collecting the Governour freee and Voluntary present."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 165.

On account of the increase "in publicke Drinking houses Tap-houses & ordinaryes," and because persons sell there "all sorts of liquors by Retail without y<sup>e</sup> Lycence knowledge or approbation of any in authority," a proclamation is issued by the governour and council prohibiting persons from keeping such houses, unless "a Certificate" is first obtained from the mayor or deputy mayor that they are fit persons to have a license from the governour, and that they all exise and duties required by law, uoder penalties for failure to comply.—M. C. C., I: 100-1.

The legislature passes "An Act to prevent frauds in conveyancing of lands." This law establishes a system of registering and recording conveyances of lands. No grants, deeds, mortgages, or other conveyances of lands or tenements within the province are to be valid in law unless entered and recorded in the register of the county in which the lands are situated. Before recording, these conveyances are to be properly acknowledged before a justice of the peace by the persons who sealed and delivered them, or they are to be proved by sufficient witnesses before a justice.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 141-42.

The various enumerated legislative acts passed since Oct. 30 are "openly read & published before y<sup>e</sup> City hall in y<sup>e</sup> presence of y<sup>e</sup> deputy Mayor & aldermen."—M. C. C., I: 102.

The mayor, aldermen, and commonalty petition Gov. Dongan for a new charter. The "seuerall ancient Customes priuiledges & Immunities w<sup>ch</sup> were confirmed & granted to them by Coll Rich<sup>d</sup> Nicholls," in 1665, and since enjoyed, are recounted in 12 items. These are, briefly, as follows: 1.—All the inhabitants of Manhattan Island are under the government of the city of New York. 2.—The city, formerly governed by burgomasters and schepens, is now ruled by one mayor, six aldermen, and one sheriff. 3.—The magistrats have power to appoint all interior officers (as constables, overseers, under-sheriffs, criers, and marshals) throughout the whole island; they make laws and ordinances; they hold one in 14 days or oftener a court of judicature at the city hall, to hear and determine all cases, with jury, or, in equity cases, the mayor or chief magistrate has power to determine without appeal all matters that come before him involving less than 40 shillings. 4.—The sheriff executes all writs, summonses, and attachments on Manhattan Island, and serves as water-bailiff. 5.—The magistrats have their own clerk and keep their own records. 6.—The city is "y<sup>e</sup> staple port of y<sup>e</sup> Whole province" where "all Merchandize" is "shipped and unloaded." 7.—No one is deemed a freeman who has not been so admitted by the magistrats; and no one, before such admission, may sell at retail, or exercise any handicraft, trade, or occupation; and every merchant or shop keeper has to pay "for y<sup>e</sup> publick vse of y<sup>e</sup> City" (into the city treasury) £3;12, and every craftsman £14, on "being made free." 8.—No freemao may be arrested, or have his goods attached, unless it appears that he is deporting or conveying away his estate to defraud creditors. 9.—No one is permitted "to trade vp hudsons Riuer," unless he is a freemao and has been an actual inhabitant of the city for three years; and a freemao loses his freedom if he is absent from the city for one year, and does not "keep fire and Candle & pay scott & lott." 10.—All inhabitants "up hudsons Riuer" are forbidden to trade overseas. 11.—No flour may be bolted or packed, or biscuit made, for exportation but in the city of New York, "being flor y<sup>e</sup> Incouragement of trade & keeping vp y<sup>e</sup> Reputation of New Yorke flower w<sup>ch</sup> is in great request in y<sup>e</sup> West India[s] and y<sup>e</sup> only support and maintenance of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of this City and if not confirmed to them will ruine & depopulate y<sup>e</sup> same." 12.—The city has a common seal. An impression of the seal here referred to is found attached to a deed of 1692 from the Corporation to Anna Maria van Horne, now in the possession of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co. There is another in the Paulding collection (No. 5), in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and reproduced on Pls. XXVI and XXIX in Wilde's Civic Ancestry of N. Y., 44, 63, 72.

All these ancient privileges the mayor and aldermen (in behalf of the citizens) submit to Dongan, and ask that they be confirmed by charter "from his Royal Highness;" and they seek the following additional new ones: 1.—That the city may be divided into six wards. 2.—That the freemen of each ward may annually elect their own aldermen, common councilmen, constable, overseers of the poor, scavengers, questmen, or other necessary officers. 3.—That there may be a mayor and a recorder, who, with the six aldermen and six common councilmen, shall represent "y<sup>e</sup> Whole body of y<sup>e</sup> sd City & corporation," and who shall have power to make "peculiar Laws" and give orders for the good government and support of the government. 4.—That, every year, one of the aldermen be appointed mayor by the governour and council. 5.—That all magistrats, so chosen, shall not be admitted to the execution of their offices until sworn before the governour and council. 6.—That the recorder, appointed by the governour and council, "shall be Judge of y<sup>e</sup> City & Corporation & be ayding & assisting to y<sup>e</sup> mayo<sup>r</sup> Aldermen & common Council in matters y<sup>t</sup> relate to y<sup>e</sup> well being thereof." 7.—That the sheriff be annually appointed by the governour and council. 8.—That the coroner and town clerk be appointed by them. 9.—And that a treasurer be appointed by the mayor, aldermen, and common council, for collecting public revenues and paying public debts. These privileges, and any others that Dongan or the duke thinks necessary for the welfare of the city, the petitioners ask to have "confirmed to them in as full & ample manor & forme as his mat<sup>ies</sup> hath been graciously pleased to grant to other Corporations within his Realme of England."—M. C. C., I: 102-5; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 337-39.

On Nov. 10, the governour and council offered certain objections, asked explanation of some particulars, and made suggestions for changes.—M. C. C., I: 105. This led to the asked-for explanations by the city.—Ibid., I: 106. On Nov. 27, after the appointment of a new mayor and aldermen, the petition was resubmitted to Gov. Dongan, with modifications, asking that "y<sup>e</sup> forme and method therio prescribed may be put in practice until such time as his Royall highness pleasure shall be further knowne therein & y<sup>e</sup> yo<sup>r</sup> hono<sup>r</sup> will be further pleased to Confirm to this City all y<sup>e</sup> Vacant Lands within this Island to Low water marke y<sup>e</sup> benefit of Granting Lycences to all y<sup>t</sup> keep publicke houses y<sup>e</sup> benefit of y<sup>e</sup> docks Wharfe & bridge market & Markett house w<sup>ch</sup> y<sup>e</sup> ferry now between y<sup>e</sup> sd City & Loop Island or y<sup>t</sup> hereafter shall be appointed between y<sup>e</sup> sd City and Corporation or any other place w<sup>ch</sup> may helpe To Enable them to defray their publick Charge & expence and maintain their publicke works."—Ibid., I: 110. The original petition is now in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. For Dongan's answer, see Dec. 6.

A proclamation directs masters of vessels to the collector of the port of New York, for the interpretation of the act of the legislature regarding the times and places for loading and unloading goods.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 153. The act referred to is the Customs Act of Oct. 30.

Cornelis Steewyck is appointed mayor.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 153. He was installed in office the next day, with the new aldermen and sheriff, to serve until the usual time of new elections, on Oct. 14.—M. C. C., I: 106-7. 26 A proclamation is issued prohibiting all persons from trading with the Indians without a license from the secretary's office.—M. C. C., I: 108; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 107, 153. The order was renewed on April 15, 1686.—Ibid., 143.

Dec. 4 James Graham's nomination to be recorder of the city bears this date.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 154. The office of recorder was one of long standing in English towns, but was introduced into New York now for the first time, under a provision of the Dongan Charter. He served "during pleasure" as "Assistant to the Mayor and Aldermen in y<sup>e</sup> Rule of Governm<sup>t</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> City and administration of Justice in their Court of Record."—M. C. C., 117-18. As legal adviser to both common council and mayor's court, James Graham may be called the first corporation counsel of the city of New York. For Graham's career in other capacities, see Dec. 10, 1685; and for his restoration to the office of recorder, see Sept. 1, 1692.

6 Replying to the city's petition of Nov. 27 (see Nov. 10), Gov. Dongan, in granting it, states that vacant lands to low-water mark are already disposed of, but "The whole Island is ordered to be surveyed & when y<sup>t</sup> is done some land in y<sup>e</sup> woods not yett disposed off shall be appointed for y<sup>e</sup> use of y<sup>e</sup> City." The ferry is granted on condition "that two boats for passengers be kept on each side of y<sup>e</sup> River and one boate for Cattle on each side of y<sup>e</sup> River also." He also prescribes that no other ferry shall be allowed besides the one already established. "The Dock and Wharfe is allowed to y<sup>e</sup> City provided it be well kept and Cleared." No duty is to be paid "upon y<sup>e</sup> Bridge." The granting of licenses is not allowed, as these "always belong to y<sup>e</sup> Governm<sup>t</sup>." He grants "the benefit of y<sup>e</sup> Market and Market houses," provided "there be nothing sold, but upon Wednesday & Saturday beginning betwixt Nine & Ten of y<sup>e</sup> Clock in y<sup>e</sup> forenoone [cf. Dongan Charter, April 27, 1686], And all brought into y<sup>e</sup> Market place, Nothing being allowed to be sold in any vessell boate or Canoe w<sup>o</sup>soever." Only butcher's meat is to be sold every day in the week, Sunday excepted. The government will appoint a clerk of the market, and will "see after y<sup>e</sup> Weights & Measures, & due Regulation of y<sup>e</sup> Market." There shall be only 20 carmen, as well as a certain number of sworn porters, whose wages shall be regulated; and there are regulations relating to assize of bread, etc.—Ibid., I: 111-12. On Dec. 10, he ordered that the "forme and Method" prescribed in the petition of Nov. 9, "For y<sup>e</sup> Weal & Governm<sup>t</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> City," be put into operation "until such time as his Royall highness pleasure shall be further knowne therein."—Ibid., I: 113. The charter did not receive the official seal of the province until April 27, 1686 (q. v.)—Ibid., I: 305. See also Dec. 10, 1683.

8 The common council agrees upon the division of the city into six wards. For detailed description of the boundaries of the wards, see M. C. C., I: 112-13. The "Watter Side," mentioned as one of the boundaries of the South Ward, was the present north side of Pearl Street between Whitehall and Broad Sts.; the "heere Graff" was the present Broad St., and the "Beauer graff" was Beaver Street between Broadway and Broad St. The "Smith flooye," in the description of the East Ward, was part of the present William Street. The street called "prince Streete" in the description of the North Ward was Beaver Street between Broad and William Sts. The "house of Thomas Coker," one of the landmarks in the boundaries of the West Ward, stood (on the moderna map) in Battery Park, immediately south of Battery Pl. "New streete" bears this name to-day. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 992 et seq.

10 Although the Dongan Charter was not signed until April 27, 1686 (q. v.), its provisions are virtually in effect at this earlier date. By the governor's order, "y<sup>e</sup> forme and Method" were to be "put in practice until such time as his Royall highness pleasure shall be further knowne."—M. C. C., I: 113. See also Dec. 6.

" For the first time, orders are given by the mayor and aldermen for holding elections in the newly created wards.—M. C. C., I: 114-15. The twelve assessors elected were listed in the Minutes of Dec. 17 (ibid., 115); the names of the constables, as well as those of the commissioners of the Out Ward, were entered in the record of the next meeting (ibid., 116); the new common councilmen were not presented and sworn until Feb. 14, 1684 (ibid., 120). For the first election of aldermen by popular vote, see Oct. 13, 1684.

In this year, Fraquelin's Great MS. Map, entitled Carte de la Louisiane, ou des voyages du Sieur de la Salle et des pays qu'il a decouverts depuis la Nouvelle-France jusqu'au Golfe de Mexique, les années 1679-80-81 et 82, par Jean-Baptiste Louis Fraquelin, l'an 1683, Paris, was completed.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 227-28, where a manuscript copy in the Harvard Library is reproduced. There is, in the L. of C., a splendid MS. copy in colours of the more important map of 1688.

Some time this year, deacons of the Lutheran Church petitioned for a patent of confirmation of title to their church lot, on which their new church stood (see May 16/26, 1674).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 107. This petition, addressed to Dongan, recites that the petitioners had the privilege of erecting a church "on Ground without y<sup>e</sup> Gate of this City and in ord<sup>r</sup> thereunto Did erect and build thereon;" and afterwards, when Governor Colve came, they were forced "to Remove and Breake Down w<sup>tt</sup> was erected and built on s<sup>d</sup> Ground, and in Lew thereof, y<sup>o</sup>r peticion<sup>ers</sup> was allotted and Allowed y<sup>e</sup> Peice of Ground within y<sup>e</sup> Gate where y<sup>e</sup> Erected Church now Stands and house adjacent and had a Patent thereon, but it happens to be mislayed." They ask for a confirmation of their patent for this ground.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 245, and footnote by O'Callaghan, who points out the error of Greenleaf's statement (Hist. of the Churches, 53) that this church withiu the gates was erected in 1702. Its location was at the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector St., where later Grace Church was built. For Colve's patent to the ground, see May 12/22, 1674. The original petition, formerly kept in the state library, was destroyed in the Capitol fire of March, 1911. Its full text is therefore no longer of record in the original form. As described by O'Callaghan, as well as in the Calendar, it is undated, and the year 1684, assigned to it, is taken from the congregation's petition to Dongan, and his order of Sept. 6, 1684 (q. v.), exempting the church property from taxes.

It was agreed by the Friends "that the meeting (begun in Hempstead) continue at Patience Story's" (in New York).—Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. See 1682.

The first session of the court of general sessions of the peace for the city and county of New York is held. This court was established by the legislature Nov. 1, 1683 (q. v.), and a series of vellum and old leather-bound volumes in the criminal courts building contains its records. See Pl. 19 for reproduction of first page. The law prescribed that the judges should be the justices of the peace of the city—"three of them at the least"—and the first session was held before Coraelis Steenwyck, mayor, James Graham, recorder, and aldermen Nicholas Bayard, John Iniaus, William Pinhorne, John Robinson, and William Cox. The first case before the court has an amusing aspect. A Long Island planter, Henry Thomassen, indicted by the grand jury "for that he nott having the fear of God before his eyes but being led by the instigation of y<sup>e</sup> devil . . . did by force add armes enter the cellar belonging to and being part of the dwelling house of William Cox, merchant . . . and did there feloniously and burglarly breake into the same with the intention to steale and spoll the chattels of the said William Cox contrary to the Peace of our sovereign Lord & King, his crown and dignity." The court adjourned until 4 p. m. in order to afford the jury an opportunity to discuss the case in all its bearings; when the session resumed, "the sheriff appeared, sore in mind, and returned that he [Thomassen] has broak prison & he, the sheriff aforesaid, desired time till next session to pursue y<sup>e</sup> fleeing Thomassen." The runaway was captured soon, and in the meantime his wife was convicted of being implicated with him in the burglary. "Therefore it is considered by the Court that Henry Thomassen is guilty of burgulary felony and that he be branded on the forehead with the letter B and be whipped on the bare back 11 stripes on the 14 day of November instant in y<sup>e</sup> morning by 11 of the clock before the City Hall, and pay the costs of prosecution." His wife was condemned to be branded on the "fatt of the thumb" for her part in the crime.—MS. volume General Sessions of the Peace held for the City and County of New York, 1684-6, opening pages. This court, created by provincial law, yielded place to a similar court established for the municipality by the Dongan Charter in 1686. Court sessions were held four times a year, in February, May, August, and November; hence the term "Quarter Sessions" was often used.—Daly, Hist. Sketch of Judicial Tribunals of N. Y. 33-34. 1684 The constable and commissioners of Harlem, with Dyckman Feb. as president, hold their first court. The old officers are also 8 present. "It was resolved to take up and examine the town accounts, both debits and credits, and to transfer them to a new book, as the old book C is written full." Adolph Meyer and Resolved Waldron were chosen inspectors of chimneys and fire-wards; and Baroot Waldron and Isaac Delamater, surveyors of the common fences. These fences were ordered to be repaired and made of four split rails, good and suitable.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 437.

14 The first common council in New York City is sworn into office.—M. C. C., I: 120. This name was at first applied to the six assistant aldermen provided for in the Dongan Charter (see April 27, 1686). "At a Meeting of May<sup>r</sup> Aldermen and Common Council" was the laogage employed to describe their meeting with the other aldermen in the following week (Feb. 28, q. v.).—Ibid., I: 121. Very soon, however, the whole body came to be called "A Common Council."—Ibid., I: 131. See also Oct. 17, 1675.

They made an itemized report on Feb. 23 (q. v.), showing the estimate to be £150 for repairs to the "City Hall and Yarde," to "The Wharfe," and to "The Market House."—Ibid., I: 125-26.

20 William Bogardus, the city treasurer, prepares an account of the city's revenues running from July 23, 1681. It shows an aggregate income of £124:14:3, as attested by him on Feb. 20, 1684.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 594. Cf. M. C. C., I: 122.

23 A committee of the common council is appointed to examine the orders and regulations relating to the ferry to Long Island, and to draw up a suitable order for its future management, and the "Rates and Prizes;" also to let it for a term of years, by the advice and consent of the mayor, at an annual rental to be paid quarterly.—M. C. C., I: 123. On March 1, they reported that no former regulations for the ferry could be found.—Ibid., I: 127.

"A committee report is recorded showing an estimate of expense for needed repairs to public works. The "City Hall and Yarde" requires an outlay of £2:10 for "One New-Gutter, 50 good Pine Boards for Doores And Windows;" £6 for "Glazing the Windows & Masons worke;" 18 shillings for "15 Posts 11 foot Long Each;" 9 shillings for "36 Rayles 10 foot Long Each;" and 18 shillings for "300 Payles 6 1/2 foot Long Each." Mar. A committee of the common council appointed to make a list of all the Barks, Sloopes, Brigantines And Open Boates belonging to this Porte," makes a report showing the names of the owners of these vessels. There are three "Barques," three "Brigantines," 27 "Sloopes," and 45 "Open Boats."—M. C. C., I: 127-29. The original list is with "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," in city clerk's record-room.

8 Revenue from "Bridgemoney" (i. e., customs duties on certain articles) is transferred from province to city. The commodities mentioned are beef, pork, flour, bread, oil, horses, cotton, cider, molasses, and peas. The rates are to be submitted to the governor and council for approval, as is also the list of goods proposed to be passed without duty.—M. C. C., I: 132. At the next meeting, an order regarding "the Dock, Mold and Bridge" was read and a committee appointed "to Draw up the Regulations for Bridgemoney."—Ibid., I: 133. On March 22, these regulations were reported in detail. Certain specified goods and merchandise, when imported into New York "frō beyond the Seas, That is to Say from any place beyond the East End of Long Island and to the Southward of Sandy Poynt," are to pay "Bridgemoney" at the rate of 12d. per ton, and the same when exported.—See March 22. On May 19, certain articles not from Europe were ordered admitted free.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 128. Cf. Oct. 13, 1683.

15 Among the laws and orders enacted on this day by the common council is an ordinance regarding "Carmen." There are to be 20 appointed (and no more) by "the May<sup>r</sup> And Court of Aldermen." Their duties shall be to "fill up Amend And Repair the Breaches in the Streets, And Highways in And About this City when Required by the May<sup>r</sup>, Gratis;" and, every week on Saturday afternoon, they are required to "Carry And Cart the dirte out of all the Streets And Lanes, within this City And Convey the Same, to Some Convenient place where the Same, Shall be Apoynted." The dirt is to be "Swept together or Loaden Or Putt into their Carts by the Owners or Tenants of the house before w<sup>ch</sup> the Same Lyeth." The ordinance also provides a system of charges for carting various goods, such as lime, bricks, "great Cables," and cordwood.—M. C. C., I: 135-36. On April 18, 1691 (q. v.), an increase in the number of carmen to 24 is noted.

"Another ordinance requires that the constable of each ward shall make inquiry from time to time as to all strangers "that Shall Come Reside or Iohabit" within his ward, and give their names to the mayor, or in his absence to the eldest alderman. If this is not done, "And Any Charge Doe fall on this City thereby," the constable shall pay a fine of 20 shillings for his neglect.—Ibid., I: 135. On Aug. 15, 1684, it was ordered "that all Strangers that Reside within this City for the Space of One Month Shall pay all Taxes Assesms and doe all Other Such things As the Inhabitants from tyme to tyme Shall be Obligated to Pay and Performe."—Ibid., I: 154. On April 22, 1691 (q. v.), the period was reduced to seven days, after which the mayor was to be informed of their presence; and the masters of vessels bringing them to the city were required to give notice within 24 hours after their arrival.—Ibid., I: 220.

"A further ordinance "For the Due Observance of the Lords Day" is an elaboration of the order passed Nov. 13, 1676 (q. v.), and, according to Hinman (see The Blue Laws, 239), may be classed among the strictest codes of law intended to preserve order and morality in the English colonies. It is as follows:

"Ordered That noe manner of Seruic worke be done On the Lords Day (workes of Piety Charity or Necessity Excepted) nor Any goods Bought or Sold On that day within this City or Liberties thereof Under the Penalty of Tenn Shilling for the first Offence. And for Euery Offence After double that Summe.

And Presentm<sup>t</sup> thereof, that the Penalties, may be Inflicted Accordingly."—Ibid., I: 133-34. In the reenactment or continuation of this law, in 1731 (Nov. 18), the penalty was to be paid by the parent or master of a guilty person who is under age; and, in default of such payment, the "Child, Children, servants or Apprentices to be sent to the House of Correction or to the Cage."—Ibid., IV: 78-80.

Another ordinance is passed to prevent fires. Inspectors are to 1684 be appointed to examine chimneys and hearths; the inhabitants Mar. are not to keep combustible matter in or near their homes; and 15 books, ladders, and buckets are to be kept at convenient places within the city.—Ibid., I: 139. See also ibid., I: 187, 211, 255, 372,

"Fire" and "Fire Protection" in Peterson & Edwards, N. Y., as an 18th Cent. Municipality.

" Another ordinance states "That, until a Particular Place Shall

Weigh-house, And the Corner of James Matthews: And the Places Apoynted for fire wood to be Brought to And Coarded."— M. C. C., I: 138.

" It is further ordered "That there be Sworne Surveyes Apoynted for this City by whose Advice And Directions, the ground within this City Shall be Built And that nooe doe Build Before the front of their ground be Reed & Layd out by them, And as they Shall Direct That A Regular Order, and Uniformity may be kept and Observed in the Streetes And Buildings And y<sup>e</sup> oone Paue before their houses, but in Such manner, As Apoynted by the Sayd Survey-eyes, And that for Laying out Each house Lott, And giuing Certificate thereof the Sayd Surveyors Shall haue and Recieue from the Owner thereof the Summe of Six Shilling."—Ibid., I: 137.
The regulation is repeated by ordinance of May 4, 1691 (ibid., I: 226), and again, with a revision, on Nov. 18, 1731.—Ibid., IV: 81-82.

" The former regulations in regard to the admission of freemen (see Jan. 20, 1676) are revised. English money is substituted for beavers in payment. Thus, no one is allowed (under penalty of £5 for each offence) to "keep Shop And Sell Any Goodes or wares, By Retail or Exercise Any handicraft Trade Or Occupation," unless a freeman or admitted as such for the time being by the mayor or "Court of Aldermen." Hereafter, merchant, trader, or shopkeeper, who is "made fire," shall pay £3.12, and a handicrafts-man, £1.4. (See Jan. 20, 1676.) A freeman absent from the city for a year, who does not "keep fire and Candle, And Pay Scott And Lott," shall lose his freedom.—Ibid., I: 137.

" Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday are appointed market days
"for the Exposing to Sale at the Market house all Butchers meat, and flesh whatsoever." Before and after the ringing of the bell, with which the markets shall be opened and closed, "noe butchers meate, or victuals is to be Exposed to Sale in the Sayd Markett, under the Penalty of forfeiture . . . Fish Butter Cheese Eggs Poultry fruite Rootes, and herbs, may be Sold Every Day in the weeke at Any time in th[is] or other Convenient places.
See A. . . Noe Person Shall Forestall Any Provisions or Victuals within the Market, as to buy in Any Private or Other Place than the Markett under Pain of forfeiture of the Same, whether it be found in the hands of the buyer or of the Seller," etc.—Ibid., I: 139-40. The Dongan Charter (April 27, 1686) provided that the mayor, etc. "Shall And May for ever hereafter hold and Keepe within said City in every weeke of y<sup>e</sup> year three Markett Days the one upon Tuesday the Other upon Thursday And y<sup>e</sup> Other upon Saturday weekly for Ever."—Ibid., I: 303. But, on Nov. 18, 1731, every day in the week, except Sunday, was made a market day.—
Ibid., IV: 108-9.

" By another order, bakers and others who sell flour shall pack it in casks having the maker's brand upon them; also the former order against bringing flour into the city from any other place shall be enforced.—Ibid., I: 134-35.

17 An "Address and Petition" is drawn up by the mayor and aldermen, to be presented to Gov. Dongan, "Praying Confirmation of the former Orders, Prohibiting Boulting Mills, or flower or Bread to be made in any Other Parts of the Province or Importing into this City." The following facts are presented:

"That for many yeares Past, Even from the first Settlement, of the Governm<sup>t</sup> Noe flower or Biskett was, Boulted made or Packed for Sale or Transportatioo, but in this City untill About the [years] 1679 & 1680." The causes of complaint at that time, and the prohibitions then enacted, are recited, and request is made that this governour renew the orders of his predecessors.—M. C. C., I: 141-42. On March 18, Dongan asked for "Reasons at Large why there Should be Any Prohibition for bolting" outside the city.
—Ibid., I: 142-43. These reasons were drawn up by a committee appointed on April 6, and are, in part, as follows: "This City being the Matropoly<sup>s</sup> of the Province hath from, tyme to tyme, been the Mayne Supporte thereof the flourishing or Decay of w<sup>ch</sup> Doth Inffluence all its Parts, and by its Industry in trade and Traffique maintayned by its Number of Inhabitants hath gained Credit and Reputation Abroad by whose means alone all Foreign's Commerce and shipping, Is Drawed hether. That the Manufacture of flower and Bread . . . bath been and is the Chief Supporte of the trade, and Traffique to and fro this City and Maintainance of its Inhab[ita]nts of all Degrees, and if used and Practiced in Other Parts of the Province must of necessity Lessen Our Trade and Consequently the numb<sup>r</sup> of the Inhabit<sup>ts</sup> Employed therein. All Other Parts of the Province have Some Particular Advantage and way of Lיעing As Long Island by Husbandry and Whaleiog Esopos being the fatt of the Land by Tillage Albaoy by Indian Trade and husbandry this City noe Other Advantage Or Way of Lיעing but by Traffique and Dependance are on Another Chiefly upheld by the Manufacture of flower and Bread," etc.—Ibid., I: 148-50; and see II: 43-48. On May 22, the governour signed a proclamation, which was published on May 31, reaffirming to New York the sole bolting privilege "until the Will and Pleasure of his Royall Highness James Duke of York And Albany Lord Propriet<sup>r</sup> of this Province be Knowne."—Ibid., II: 152-53. See, also, Cal. Hist.

MSS., Eng., 109, 110; and Jan. 7, 1680.

" Gabriel Thompson, keeper of the White Lion tavern, at the north-west corner of William and Wall Sts. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981), petitions against a seizure of flour on March 17.—From the original petition, kept with papers filed in the comptroller's office; M. C. C., I: 141.

22 It appears by a petition of this date to Dongan that the inhabitants of New York have complained of daily abuses in the sale of firewood, on account of the sticks being of different lengths and size. Moreover, "Often tymes Seuerall nocbes put On a Stick whereby they are Defrauded of their due (itt being Only at the Pleasure of the boatm<sup>n</sup> or Carmen. wt they will Call an Hundred Sticks)." They ask that it be sold by the cord, which shall be 8 ft. in length, 4 ft. wide, and 4 ft. high.—M. C. C., I: 145-46.
The same difficulty appeared at an earlier date, 1677 (ibid., I: 41), when an order was issued to sell by the cord. So, now, a proclamation is issued that "no firewood Shall be exposed for Sale in the city of New York but such as shall be cut after the manner of cordwood, and sold by the cord."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 109. On Oct. 6, the common council ordered "that the Execution of the Ord<sup>s</sup> about fire wood, be suspended untill Provision be made by Act of Assembly."—M. C. C., I: 156. See Oct. 27.

" The common council approves of the first set of orders for regulating the affairs of the great dock (here defined as "the Porte Mould [mole] Dock and Bridge of the City"), and requires that they be submitted to the governour for his approval. They are:

Vessels ot belonging to the port shall pay certain prescribed tonnage rates for anchorage, when anchoring "in the Road."

Vessels belonging to the port shall pay yearly, according to tonnage, "for Lיעing within the Dock or Mould;" but vessels not belonging to the port, which come within the dock, shall pay "for Every Voyage," and may not lie there longer than one month.

No vessel shall lie "in the mouth of the dock, within the mould, or near the bridge in Inconvenient places," or longer than a convenient time for loading and unloading, except in winter or under stress of weather; and if by accident any vessel run aground in the mouth of the dock, it is to remove as soon as aloft.

Vessels within the mole or dock may make or keep fire on board only from daybreak to "the Ringing of the City Bell at night."

No vessel may cast "Any Anchor, Grappall or Kelleck" within or near the mole or dock, where it may endanger other vessels. None may cast dirt, etc. "to fill up or Annoy the mould or Dock or the neighbourhoode."

A vessel may not lie at the outside of the dock or mole except in fair weather, and then not longer than one tide, except by leave of the haven-master.

"Timber, Pipe Staves [staves], wood or Other Lumber" may not be landed upon the mole or wharf, and carts are not permitted "to Ryde there."

The "hauen Master" shall direct the shipmasters to have fit and convenient berths, where they may lie or fasten.

Various fines are imposed for violation of these orders. It is the haven-master's duty to see that the orders are obeyed. He shall pay half the fines collected to the treasurer, and keep the other half.

The fees to be collected by the haven-master may be grouped

- 1684 under three heads, anchorage, dockage, and bridgemony. The last is a tariff of twelvence per ton on such exports as well as imports as are not liable to custom duties. Several articles are specified, including sugar, molasses, and tobacco, and on the other hand lumber, staves, heading, and ballast are excepted. Imported merchandise from Long Island is not taxable, it being definitely stated that "fro beyond the Seas" means "from any place beyond the East End of Long Island and to the Southward of Sandy Point."
- For the purpose of dockage the ordinance makes a distinction between vessels "belonging to this Port" and those which do not. For the former there is an annual fee varying according to tonnage from 6d. to 2s. 10d. For the latter there is a fee each time the vessel docks from 6d. to 1s. 10d. For all vessels a proportionate increase of fees is payable, if they "Lye Above one Month," a liberal privilege that was subsequently changed, Sept. 6, 1699 (M. C. C., II: 84), to a penalty of six shillings for every tide beyond a "Convenient time" for loading and unloading. Fees for anchorage appear to have been fixed at an earlier period and are renewed at this time, namely, one shilling for a vessel of ten ton, or less, and an additional shilling "for every Tenn Tunns more." Vessels "not belonging to this Port" are the only ones mentioned in this category, probably because it was expected that some vessels would always take advantage of the liberal rates of dockage.—M. C. C., I: 143-45. See June 5, 1675; March 8, 1684; Aug. 28, 1694.
- When the city's system of docks and wharves had developed, in later years, these regulations were modified accordingly.—See Sept. 28, 1694; Nov. 18, 1731; March 26, 1759. - 19 Fifteen cartmen "strike," refusing to "Obey Observe and follow y<sup>e</sup> Lawes and Ord<sup>s</sup> of this City, by them Apoynted to be Observed and Kept." They are "Discharged being Any Loog<sup>r</sup> Cartmen" by the common council, which body also issued a proclamation giving "free Liberty and Lychence" to all except the strikers and slaves to become cartmen.—*M. - 28 "Some complaints having been made of the abuses in bread, & that Cornel is put into it" the executive council orders "that the bread be inspected, & that the beer be looked after, & the Market place removed into the Broadway & bad meat is not to be brought into the Markett." The secretary shall inform Deputy Mayor N. Bayard.—Ex. Coun. Min. (MS.), Av. 18 (Albany). See May 24.
- 30 Cornelis Jansen engages Adrians Westerhout to build a house for him on his land on Montague's Flat, for which he agrees to pay "800 guilders in fat cattle, wheat and rye." In this house, standing near the present junction of 109th St. and Harlem Lane, Jansen established a tavern, later famous as the "Half Way House," which, after his death in 1689, was kept by his wife.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 438-39. See Oct. 13, 1694.
- May 24 The governor desires (see April 28) "that the Markett may be Removed fro the Place where it is now kept" (that is, near the bridge and weigh-house,—see March 9, 1680) "to the Vacant ground before the Fort," and the common council so orders. That is, it is ordered "that from hence forward, the Markett for Butchers meat be held in the Same Place Accordingly;" the butchers bearing the expense of "Erecting their nales [stalls] in the original and Other Conveniencies."—M. C. C., I: 151. This market became known as the "Broadway Shambles or Meat Market."—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958. See also April 1, 1691. The old building continued in use, however, principally as a store-house (ibid., I: 179), until 1720 (ibid., I: 202, 203; De Voe, Market Book, 70-77). See also Jan. 29, 1677.
- " The common council orders "that the New-Streete beginning from Edward Taylors Cornour house to the Cornour of Demini Selynes Lott ad fro thence to the Warehouse of the Widow Verplanks, be Paved on Both Sides by the Persons Owning the Lotts therio Each before his Owne Lott before the 25 July next.

C. C.*, I: 151. The "New-Streete" here mentioned is the present New St.—See May 5, 1679; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 336. The tax list of 1677 shows the names of owners of lots on "The Smiths Street" (the present William St.).—M. C. C., I: 57. The "Beuer gracht" is Beaver St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 993.
- The common council resolves that "in Some Convenient Place On the Common A Powder house be Built of Stone."—M. C. C., I: 152. This was not acted upon at this time.—Ibid., I: 400.
- Anthony Brookhous, Lucas Santen, and others are appointed (probably by the governor and council, since the record does not appear in the Minutes of the Common Council) to examine the fortifications of the city, and report what repairs are immediately necessary.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 129. See ibid. for their report.
- 16 Rev. John Gordoou, who served in 1683 as British chaplain at New York, is succeeded by Rev. Josias Clarke, commissioned by the Duke of York, June 16, 1684 (Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., III: 245). He served two years, as appears by the certificate in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXXIII, dated Oct. 7, 1686. He was succeeded by Rev. Alexander Innes, whose commission bears date of April 20, 1686.—Book of Deeds, VIII: 13, 31, 39; Eccles. Rec., II: 877, citing N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 415.
- A paid night watch is established, the military officers and troopers being excused therefrom. The common council orders that the constables in the five wards on the south side of the "Fresh Water" watch by turns, one each night, and hire eight assistants who shall each be paid 12d. per night out of the city treasury.—M. C. C., I: 153.
- Peter Stoutenburgh is appointed overseer of the work to be done on wharf and warehouse. The work was evidently a large one, as each house was to provide a man to help unload and secure the timber and stockades. On failure to do so, a fine was to be levied.—M. C. C., I: 153.

- The Duke of York's secretary (Werden) writes from England to Dongan: "As for setting up Post Houses along the coast from Carolina to Nova Scotia, it seems a very reasonable thing, and you may offer the privilege thereof to any undertakers for y<sup>e</sup> space of 3 or 5 years by way of farme." The duke is to have not less than one-tenth of the profits of all post-offices in his dominions.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 349-50. Dongan answered Werden on Feb. 18, 1685 (q. v.). See, further, Dec. 9.
- The duke's secretary also informs Dongan, by his letter of this date: "The house and garden w<sup>ch</sup> you desire to have, y<sup>e</sup> Duke designs for y<sup>e</sup> use of the Gov<sup>t</sup> for the time being, soe as you make use of y<sup>m</sup> during the time of y<sup>o</sup> government there."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 350. Dongan replied on Feb. 18, 1685 (q. v.).
- On a petition of the Lutherans to have their church and parsonage exempted from taxes, Dongan and the council give their opinion that the exemption should be granted, as it was to "the Dutch and firench Ministers;" referred to the mayor and aldermen.—*Doc. - The "green before the fort" is designated in an order as the place of parade for the several foot companies in New York, at seven o'clock in the morning on Sept. 20.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 131. This is the "usual place of rendezvous" for the companies to assemble for exercise.—Ibid., 136. In 1730, this open space was designated "The Parade."—See Pls. 26, 27, 27-A, Vol. I. There is therefore little probability, and no record, that the "green before the fort" was a bowling green prior to 1733, when leased for that purpose.—See "Bowling Green," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 968, where a few important features connected with its subsequent history are indicated. The earliest use of this ground

1684 was as part of the common highway, which had various successive Sept. Dutch designations, and was finally anglicised as Broadway about 8 1668.—See ibid., III: 994. It was in 1684 (see May 24) that there were erected here the shambles of a meat market.—Ibid., III: 953.
 Oct. Surveyors report on the New York-Conn. boundary.—See 10 Addenda.
 13 For the first time, the aldermen, councilmen, assessors, and constables are elected by the freemen of the several wards. A "Return of the Suerall Persons Chosen" appears in the Minutes.
 The common council establishes the following fines in case the person chosen to serve in an official capacity refuses to serve:
 A constable, £5; an assessor, £3; a "Common Council Man," £7 10; an alderman, £10; the mayor, £20.—M. C. C., I: 156-57.
 Such action breathes of the time when there was no compensation to attract, and when in a large measure "the office sought the man." 14 Gabriel Minvielle is appointed mayor.—M. C. C., I: 159. This appointment was made by the governor from a list of seven names presented by the mayor and aldermen.—Ibid., I: 158. In the petition for a charter, Nov. 9, 1683 (q. v.), one request called for the governor to make his choice of a mayor from the aldermen elect.
 Curiously enough, only two of the seven nominees referred to above were aldermen elect. Minvielle himself was an assistant from the West Ward.—Ibid., I: 159. This plan of presenting nominees was a survival of the Dutch practice of choosing magistrates (see Oct. 9, 1669); it was destined to continue only one year longer, the charter placing no such limit on the governor's choice.—
Ibid., I: 298. For a brief sketch of the life of Gabriel Minvielle, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 388; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 52.
 22 The second provincial legislature passes the following acts:
 "A Bill to Regulate Proceedings in Law."
 "A Bill Declaring of whatt age Lands may be passed away and Guardians Chosen."
 "A Bill Concerning Chirurgions and Midwives."
 "A Bill Concerning the Choice of Constables."
 "A Bill against Fugitive Servants and The Entayners of Them."
 —Col. Laws N. Y., I: 144-48. Regarding use of the word "legislature," see Oct. 19, 1736. For acts of the first provincial legislature, see Oct. 17, 1683.
 23 The legislature passes the following acts:
 "A Bill against Common Battyry, Champerty and Maintenance."
 "A Bill to prevent deceit & Forgerys."
 "A Bill Concerning Purchasing of Lands from the Indians."
 "A Bill Concerning Marriages."
 "A Bill Concerning Cattle Corne Fields and Fences."
 "A Bill Concerning Burialls."
 "A Bill Concerning Assignments of Specialties."
 "A Bill Concerning Brewers."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 145-54.
 24 The legislature passes the following acts:
 "A Bill Concerning Orphans."
 "An Act for Quietting mens estates & the Limitation of Certain actions for Avoiding of suits in Law."
 "A Bill to Prevent the Absence of Justices of the Peace from Their Courts."
 "A Bill Concerning Masters servants Slaves Labourers and Apprentices."
 "A Bill Concerning Arest."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 154-60.
 27 The legislature passes the following acts:
 "A Bill for the Settlement of the Militia." Vide infra.
 "An Act to prevent Arrests of Judgments and Superseding Execucions."
 "A Bill for Executing the Judgm't of the former Courts of Assizes & Sessions."
 "A Bill for Cording of firewood." See March 22.
 "A Bill for the More speedy and better Collecting the Govern-our's free and Voluntary Present" (see Nov. 2, 1683).
 "An Act for the Encourag'm't of Trade and Navigation w'thin this Province." This was by a levy of export and import duties on merchandise, to be paid to the persons appointed by the duke to receive them.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 161-67.
 The first provincial act "for the Settlement of the Militia" is above referred to. It provides for the appointment by the governor of a major "in such County (Capable thereof)" as head of the militia there, and for the appointment and commissioning, also by the governor, of all officers of militia within the province. They are to be "Chosen out of the Freeholders inhabitants within the Respective Townes and Counties where their Companies are." Among the other provisions is one requiring "That one Master of Vessels be exempt from Training but such as are above forty Tunns." All persons, though freed from training by law, are nevertheless "obliged to Keep Convenient armes and ammunition in Their houses as the Law directs To others." All fines collected by the commission officers are to be used "in the buying of Drums and Colours Italberds [sic for halberds] Trumpetts," etc. "Match Locks being not thought necessary in this Country that none be obliged to provide them." These and a few other brief regulatious comprise this leading statute; it being expressly provided that, in other matters relating to military affairs, all persons are "to be regulated as in his Royall Highnesses Laws is Directed."—Col.

Laws N. Y., I: 161. For the Duke's Laws, see ibid., I: 6 et seq.
 The legislature passes the following acts:
 "A Bill to prevent Damages done by Casting Ballast Into Rivers."
 "A Bill For an Annual salary to the Judges of this Province."—
Col. Laws N. Y., I: 167-69.
 Sarah Burgher, in behalf of her daughter, Elizabeth Shackerly, the child of John Shackerly, deceased, states in a petition to Gov.
 Dongan: "That whereas your Honour was pleased to Ord<sup>r</sup> that for the Convenience of the City a certain peice [piece] of Land lying in the Broadway belonging to yo<sup>r</sup> petitioners said Child should be left Vacant and unimproved for a street or highway, And that in Leiw [lieu] thereof the City should give to yo<sup>r</sup> petitioners said Child a peice [piece] of Land Equivalent thereto in such other part of the City as to the Mayor and Aldmen Should seeme most Equall made application recd for Answer that if yo<sup>r</sup> said petitioner's Child had any Right to the aforesaid peice of Land they might improve the same without any Lett or disturbance from the City and wholly refused to give your petitioner any such Land in Leiw thereof or other Satisfaction therefore [therefor]; whereby yo<sup>r</sup> petition<sup>r</sup>s poor Child is left wholly deserted, not only being dispossessed of her Land but in noe way or possibility of deriving satisfaction therefore [therefor] unless relieved by yo<sup>r</sup> Honour." She asks that "either she may have Liberty to Improve the said peice of Land or have another equivalent thereto in Leiw thereof . . ." This petition is referred to the mayor and aldermen "who are desired speedily to doe Justice to the said petitioner . . ."— Land Papers, II: 63 (sec. of state's office, Albany). A similar petition of Sarah Burger was recorded about ten years later (see April 22, 1693), but whether it related to the same land does not appear.

 The legislature passes the following acts:
 "A Bill Concerning former Mortgages." This act was necessary because the customs of the Dutch were different from those of the English. The act made all old mortgages effective under the English rule.
 "An Explanation of the Continued Bill for defraying the Requisite Charge of the Government" (see Oct. 30, 1683).
 "An Act for the confirming all Judgments and proceedings in the former Courts, taking away the General Court of Assizes." Actions pending in this court were to be determined and finished in the high court of chancery.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 169-73.
 The court of mayor and aldermen summons all "Delinquents on payment of publique dues & Taxes" to appear on Monday to explain why they do not pay.—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 1684.
 A warrant is issued to Adolph Pieters, Peter King, and Robert Shaw to lay out and survey for James Burce some vacant land in the Smiths' Fly, convenient for a slaughter-house, and also land for a dwelling, adjoining the cow-pen.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 134.
 The widow of Peter Stuyvesant makes a will bequeathing the bouvery chapel to the Dutch Reformed Church of New York.—

 after her death in 1687; the building fell into decay, and soon nothing was left but the foundations.—Eccles. Rec., I: 489. See also 1637.
 Governor Dongan writes to the Duke of York: "A report preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, in vol. lettered: "New York—MSS. Letters & Documents. 1684-1773." See also Aug. 27, 1684. The governour and his council took action to establish the post-office on March 2, 1685 (q. v.); but further proceedings to effect the desired result had to be again enacted on April 4, 1692 (q. v.).

29 John Sprague is commissioned to be "master of the rolls of the province of New York."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 155. This office is rarely mentioned in colonial annals. In England the master of the rolls is "one of the judges of the chancery division of the High Court of Justice." He is "the keeper of the rolls of all patents and grants that pass the great seal, and of all records of the Court of Chancery.
He ranks next after the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and above the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas."—Century Dict. The office, therefore, appears to be in addition to that of secretary of the province, to which Sprague was appointed by royal commission on Jan. 27, 1683.—Cal. Conn. Min., 61.

1685

— In this year, an order was issued that no wampum, wampum pipes, Indian jewels, or money should be carried out of the government by trade or traffic, etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 139.

— There was complaint at this time by the residents west "of the Broadway to the Southward of the alley now called beaver land," according to a deposition made by Jacobus Colet in New York under date of July 12, 1723. The deponent related that when he was an apprentice, "in the years 1684 and 1685 . . .
to Olphert Sioerts," he heard "the old naybours discourse . . .
about the Sourvaeing and Regulating of that naybourhood, it being Laid out a long the Sd Street or Broadway with a deep Hollow Cove inward, and patents was Granted formerly to the owners and possessers there of in length from the Sd Street westward according to the measures there of." The deponent further said that the condition of the locality was called to the attention of Gov. Andros, who "ordered the naybourhood afors<sup>d</sup> to ad advance so much more Ground in the Street as hee thought fit to make the fruits more even from Balthus Bayars unto the South Corner of Sd Beaver Land being part of the old berrieving place and ordered the naybours to build their houses according, And those that did not build they took that ground in their possession and took in there Clabboard fences before there dore. Where of as

So that old Corner house of Sd Couwenhovens wed afterwards Van

Reason of this addition—this Granted addition is in some patents

An inventory of the wardrobe and other personal effects of Dr.
Jacob de Lange and his wife, reveals the characteristic dress of a gentleman and lady of fashion during this period. His wardrobe included a gros-grained cloak, lined with silk; a black broadcloth suit; a coloured serge suit, with silver buttoos; a coloured cloth waistcoat, with silver buttons, etc.; while his wife's contained numerous "petticoats" variously described, including one "with pointed lace," and one "black pottfoo petticoat, with black silk lining;" also a "black tartaned samare, with a tucker;" "Three flowered calico samare;" "Three black love-hoods," and a white one and a yellow one; "Four Yellow lobe drowlas;" "Two pair sleeves with great lace;" "Four coronet caps, with lace, one without lace;" "One black silk rain cloth;" "One black plush mask;"
"One embroidered purse with a silver buckle and chain to the girdle, a silver hook and eye;" etc. Dr. De Lange's effects included arms, some of which were mounted with silver and with ivory; while his wife possessed, in a "silver thread wrought small trunk," various articles of jewelry, including "One gold bob, whereio [are] thirteen diamonds to one white coral chain" (valued at £16); "One pair gold stucks or pendants, in each ten diamonds" (£25), etc.—*Man.

The common council resolves that Dongan be "Treated wth to Patents to the Inhabitants, The City hall & Land thereto belong<sup>g</sup> Royalties and Priviledges thereunto Belonging." A committee is appointed "to manage the Treaty."—M. C. C., I: 160. The desired privileges were eventually granted in the Dongan Charter, April 27, 1686 (q. v.). See, further, Feb. 28, infra.

"King Charles the 2<sup>d</sup> of Ever blessed Memory departed this life in his Palace at Whitehall After whose decease, at which many of the Lords the Privy Council were present their L<sup>ps</sup> together with the ret of the Privy Council<sup>rs</sup> in town assembled in the Council Chamber in Order to prepare the form of a Proclamation for Proclaiming his Present Ma<sup>ty</sup> K: James the Second." Orders were given to dispatch letters to the governours and proprietors of the several plantations to issue an enclosed proclamation of the accession of James II, and to publish James's proclamation that former officials remain in office until further notice.—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations, 1670-1686 (MS.), III: 25-26. Cf. N. Y. Col. Docs., 406. The reign of King James II ended Dec. 11, 1688 (q. v.).

The Duke of York being the late king's only brother and heir,
"his rights as a subject proprietor were merged in his sovereignty;
and New York, with her dependencies, having devolved to the crown of England, became a royal government, under the supervision of the Plantation Committee. A few days after the accession of James [see Feb. 17], the records belonging to the province were ordered to be sent to the Plaoation Office; and Sir John Warden delivered all that were thought 'material' to Secretary Blathwayt."

For a discussion as to how this affected the legal status of the government of the province of New York, respecting the charter, see March 3 (infra), and Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 423.

John Knight receives a patent from Gov. Dongan (Liber Patents, V: 297, Albany), for a tract of land in the city of New York, which, by modern streets and landmarks, was bounded generally

1685 west by Broadway, north by Beekman St., east by Nassau St., and Feb. south by a line drawn south of Ann St. and running through the site 10 of the St. Paul building. This was later referred to as "The Vine-See A. yard" or the "Governor's Garden." See Oct. 3, 1667; Feb. 18, 14 April 6, and June 10, 1685.

17 The Journal of the committee of trade and plantations of the house of lords contains a memorandum of this date that Sir John Werden, who was secretary to James when Duke of York, delivers to the plantation office the books and papers concerning this province.
 These are "The Charter of Franchises and Privileges to New York, not yet perfected," and 13 acts and bills passed in the "first Session of the First General Assembly of New York" (Oct. 17 to Nov. 3, 1683).—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 354-55.

John Romeyn Brodhead, who, in 1840-5, gathered in London, Paris, and The Hague transcripts of public documents relating to the province of New York (see Feb. 12, 1845), states in his Hist.
State of N. Y. (1871), II: 422, in a footnote: "It is to be regretted that Werden, the Duke of York's secretary, did not transfer all the papers relating to New York during its proprietary period, whether thought 'material' or not, to the Plantation Committee; in the archives of which they would have been carefully preserved. To this omission we probably owe much of the darkness which still obscures that period. Many of the documents relating to the governments of Nicolls, Lovelace, Andros, and Dongan—from 1664 to 1685—are now missing from the Records in the State Paper Office in London. The Duke of York, after he became James the Second, appears to have kept as souvenirs, in his own possession, much of the correspondence which his deputies had addressed to him as Proprietor; and it may be that these letters shared the fate of his other private papers, which were sent to Paris in 1688, and were afterward destroyed in the French Revolution. . . ."

The "Blathwayt Correspondence" is the name applied to a mass of semi-official communications to William Blathwayt, English "Secretary at War," 1683, secretary of state to William III during the campaign in Flanders, commissioner for trade and plantations, and clerk of the privy council. These letters were from governors and other officials in North America and the West Indies on the one hand, and on the other from the accredited agents of the government at the various European courts. On Blathwayt's retirement from active life in 1710, he took the whole correspondence, together with a certain number of letters addressed to his predecessors in office, to his new house at Dyrham, in Gloucestershire.—Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge's sale catalogue of April 25, 1910, p. 21. The larger portion of the North American section was bought at the sale by Mr. Frank Sabio, the London dealer, for $43,250. Another important portion, sold at the same time, containing manuscript and engraved maps of North America, is preserved in the John Carter Brown Library of Providence. Still other portions, including the Journal, are in the Lib. of Congress.

18 Writing to Sir John Werden, the Duke of York's secretary, Gov. Dongan says: "You are pleased to say I may set up a Post-House [see Aug. 27, 1684], but send mee noe power to doe it. I never intended it should be expensive to His Royal Highness it was desired by the Neighboring Colonies and is at present practiced in some places by foot and horse Messengers." About to go to Connecticut, Dongan adds: "I will doe all I can to settle a Post Office there and if other affaires doe not hinder I will goe to Penaquid this spring and endeavour to settle a Post House at Boston."

Referring to "the Garden," he says: "I doe not believe any Gov<sup>t</sup> will make use of it being remote from the fort and of noe use except for Tenements."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 353-54. This refers to the "Vineyard," often called the "Governour's Garden" after its acquisition by Dongan in 1685. It lay between Beekman and Nassau Sts., Park Row, and a line south of Ann St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946. See Aug. 27, 1684; and Feb. 6, supra.

 sent from thence vpon which the Charter of Incorporation had been framed by the Council of His Royal Highness as more fit to bee post be per mile threepence; for every single letter, not above one magistrate that receives the seale from any neighboring Colony, takes that seale & gives another of that Govern<sup>t</sup> in w<sup>ch</sup> he lives."— From Exec. Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 106, in N. Y. State Library.

At a meeting of the committee of trade and plantations in the council chamber at Whitehall, "The Charter of Incorporation of the Province of New York [passed Oct. 30, 1683] is read, and the several powers and privileges therein granted being considered His Majesty doth not think fit to confirm the same."—N. Y. Col.
Docs., III: 357. Brodhead says: "By this action James the Second did not repeal the charter of New York. He merely declined to confirm it, and thus left it in force until his disapproval should be notified to Dongan" (see May 20, 1686).—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 423.

The king directs that the government of the province "be assimilated to the Constitution that shall be agreed on for New England." He orders that letters be prepared directing Dongan
 "to pursue such powers and Instructions as hee shall receive under His Majesties signet and sign manual, or by Order in Council until further Order."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 357. "Observacions upon the Charter" are filed at the same time, the several provisions being separately considered and objected to. Among these is the following statement in the charter: "That the Supream Legislative Authority shall remain in the Governor, Council and the People meet in a Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly." The objection to this is: "The Words The People met in a General Assembly are not used in any other Constitution in America; But only the Words General Assembly."— Ibid., III: 358. Brodhead observes that "The People" has always been a cherished term in New York. Her first state constitution of 1777 declared that the style of all her laws should be—"Be it enacted by the People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly." Under her second constitution, of 1821, she adopted the more direct formula, "The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact," etc. The constitution of 1846 ordained that this form should be observed in the enacting clause of all bills.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 385.

An order in council from the colonial chamber in Whitehall directs Dongan to proclaim James king over the province of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 359-60. King James addresses his command to Dongan, to the same effect, on the same day.—Ibid., III: 360-61. A proclamation printed in London "by the assignes of John Bill, deceased, and by Henry Hiles and Thomas Newcomb, printers to the King's most excellent majesty, 1685," was sent over to be used in the colony for this purpose. A copy of it is listed in the Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 156-37. A record in Blathwayt's Jour., in Lib. of Cong., dated March 10, says: "A Box directed to Coll Dongan at New York is delivered to Capt. Baxter containing a Packet to Coll Dongan with the King's Letter to Coll Dongan of the 5th instact Directing him to pursue all Powers as shall be sent him under His Ma<sup>y</sup>'s Signet or Sign Manual or His order in Council; and further signifying that His Ma<sup>y</sup>'s hath committed to y<sup>e</sup> Council the Care of the Province."

A proclamation is issued against landing dutiable goods at any other place than the city bridge, New York, with the exception of hay, wood, and lime. Another proclamation of this date prohibits peddling goods or merchandise within the province when the duties have not been paid; and it grants "one-third part thereof to anyone who shall seize the same."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 156.

Gov. Dongan issues a proclamation against wearing or carrying

- 25 A caveat is issued by Mary Manningham (Blackwell) that, until the question is decided by the governor, the patent to Manning's Island (and the neck of land belonging to it) may not be granted to John Manning longer than during his life-time.—*Cal.
Hist. MSS., Eng.*, 148. The recorded history of Blackwell's Island (formerly known as Manning's Island) began with its conveyance, together with Great Barr Island, in 1637, from two Indian chiefs to "Mayrechenkioclingh" to Gov. Wouter van Twiller.—*Man.
Com. Coun.* (1847), 347; ibid. (1855), 496. By a decree of Gov.
Nicolls on Oct. 10, 1655, all the property within the territories of the Duke of York belonging to Dutch subjects who had not taken the oath of allegiance to the king was to be confiscated; and "Hog Island in Hellgate," one of these properties, was granted, on Feb. 3, 1668, to Capt. John Manning. From this time it was called Manning's Island, and later Blackwell's Island.—Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 91, 138, 276. For the subsequent history of the island,

Ma<sup>ty</sup>s Estates here that such Independent Governm<sup>ts</sup> be kept up & Maintained without a Nearer and more imediat dependance on his Ma<sup>ty</sup>s." This action was taken after the consideration of a letter, dated May 13, from the "Mayor, Aldermen & Principall Officers of New York . . . setting forth that since his Ma<sup>ty</sup>s hath permitted Delaware & the two Jerseys to be separated from the Governm<sup>t</sup> of New York that City hath extremely suffered by the examined on Aug. 5.—ibid., 44. See also the case of Lewin, July Sept. 15, 1681.

Island to hunt and destroy wolves there on Aug. 6th.—*Cal. Hist.

- Dongan, having caused the general assembly to meet Oct. 17, 1683, and adjourned it from time to time until Sept. 29, 1684, now,
"for Several important Reasons," dissolves it, and gives notice to that effect by proclamation.—M. C. C., I: 166-67.
- "Saul Browne," a merchant from Newport now settled in New York, having complained to Dongan of ordinances of this city which interfered with his trade (see Daly, *The Settlement of the Jews in No.
Am.*, 1893, pp. 24, 27), his petition is referred by Dongan to the common council; and the latter endorses upon it the opinion "that aoc Jew ought to Sell by Retaille within this City But may by whole Sale if the Governor think fit to permitt the same."—M. C. C., I: 168-69.
- "The Jews Petition to the Govern<sup>r</sup> for Liberty to Exercise their Religio<sup>n</sup>" is recommended by him to the mayor and aldermen.
The board expresses the opinion "That noe publique Worship is Toleraed by act of assembly, but to those that professe faith in Christ, and therefore the Jews Worship not to be allowed."—*M. C.
C.*, I: 169. The original rough minutes of this action of the common council (dated Sept. 12) are filed in the city clerk's record-room.
See also Daly, Settlement of the Jews in No. Am. (1893), 25-26.
- Dongan writes to the lord president: "A new seal of this Province is very much wanted, and y<sup>e</sup> people extraordinary desirous to have y<sup>e</sup> King's Seal to their Patents and other papers that concern them." The letter was received in England "22 Dec. 1685."— N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 365. No new provincial seal, however, appears to have been provided until Aug. 14, 1687 (q. v.).
- The Edict of Nantes (April 13, 1598), by which Henry IV of France tolerated to his Protestant subjects, is revoked by Louis XIV. A considerable part of the province of New York, particularly the city of New York, the counties of West Chester and Richmond, and a tract called "the Palts," in Ulster County, was "settled by many of those unhappy People who fled from the Persecution in France upon the Revocation of the Edict."—*Doc.
Hist. N. Y.* (4to ed.), III: 295. See also an account of "The Huguenot Settlers of the York City and Vicinity," by Frank W. Ballard, in Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 743 et seq.
- Col. Nicholas Bayard is appointed mayor.—Cal. Coun. Min., 13 45. The names of the several officers chosen for the ensuing year are found in M. C. C., I: 170, among which that of Nicholas Bayard does not appear. Evidently Dongan did not feel bound to appoint "one of the aldermen."—See Oct. 14, 1684. Bayard was reappointed mayor Sept. 14, 1686.—ibid., I: 182-83. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 388; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 52.
- The alderman of each ward is required by the common council to certify to the mayor what persons in his ward "are poore and Wanting almes for their Susteenance," that care may be taken at public expense for their relief.—M. C. C., I: 172. This action followed the receipt of a letter from the governor "Recommending to the Consideration of the Common Councell the maintenance of the poore." Furthermore, it is the initial step taken by the municipal government in charity. In New Amsterdam it was the church deacons who cared for the poor and looked for voluntary contributions in the "poor-boxes." They were called upon by the court to render an account yearly at a public meeting of how they had disposed of the money they had collected.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 352-53. See also June 3, 1655; Dec. 4, 1691. Cf. "poor farm" mentioned in Selyns' list, 1686.
- The common council appoints Peter Delany treasurer of the city (see Oct. 27), and votes to allow him 12d. in the pound (see June 5, 1676) "for all Receipts and payments of the publique mony."—M. C. C., I: 171. This commission system of compensation to the treasurer or chamberlain was still in vogue in 1774, when a suggestion was offered by Recorder Livingston that it might be "more for the Interest of this Corporation to Allow their chamberlain a Certain Salary than a Commission."—ibid., VIII: 23.

farme to the Highest Bidder on this day Seven night at the Signe of the three Mariners about five in the afternoon.—M. C. C., I: 172. This apparently commonplace resolution has much significance when it is realized that it represents a complete change of policy in the control of the dock. Hitherto a man had been appointed dock-master, or haven-master, or water-bailiff (by which terms the officer was variously known), whose business it was to collect all fees, render an account, and make returns to the city treasurer every three months; he recovered for the same ten per cent. commission.—Ibid., I: 145. Irregularity had caused a special committee of the board, Feb. 16, 1684, to ask Thomas Smith, dock-master, and his six predecessors in that office to produce their accounts.—Ibid., I: 123-24. By the new plan of leasing the dock to the highest bidder, the magistrates doubtless believed their troubles would be lessened. It hardly proved so, however. Almost without exception dock-masters either were behind in their payments or failed to keep the dock clean and in repair, or both. Attempts to remedy these things were made in 1694, by framing elaborate "Conditions and Regulations" for farming the dock; to these were added other conditions in 1700.—Ibid., I: 364; II: 104-5. Three men in partnership were the highest bidders in 1703 (Ibid., II: 250), but these proved no better than one. So, finally, in 1713, the city resorted to a third plan, a salaried dock-master who should "Collect and Receive all the Revenue of the Dock and Slips and Account to this Corporation for the same as often as he shall be thereunto Required."—Ibid., III: 35. This plan proved even less desirable than the others, for the salaried official would collect dockage fees, if convenient, and turn them over to the treasurer, if compelled to do so. As a result the auction plan was reverted to in 1735, and retained for the remainder of the colonial period, although many lessees failed to give satisfaction.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 111-23, 354-57. See Sept. 28, 1694.

To secure liquor licenses on favourable terms, retailers are directed to appear before the governour and council on Oct. 28.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 141. A certificate, bearing date of Dec. 9, 1685, showed who the "farmers" of the "Great Packet or Excise" were, and notice was given that liquors were not to be retailed without licenses from them.—Ibid., 142.

Three of the bakers of the city, approved by the others, are appointed by the common council "to be Supervisors of bread," and they take the oath that they will give their judgment, on examining "any bread to be baked," whether it is "according to the Standard of this City or noe." They are required to "bring in a List of what Bakers are Necessary and fit for that employment within this City."—M. C. C., I: 172. See Jan. 8, 1686, regarding the assize; and Jan. 13, 1686, regarding the appointed bakers.

The common council orders that "William Bogardus [see Feb. 24, 1680] the Late treasurer of this City, do forthwith deliver up all the bookes, papers and accounts belonging to the said City to m<sup>r</sup> Peter De Lanoy, the p<sup>re</sup>sent treasurer thereof."—M. C. C., I: 172. Delanoy was appointed on Oct. 19 (q. v.).

The Paris Docs. contain a memoir of this date concerning measures to be adopted for the security of Canada, which closes: "The surest remedy against the English of New York would be to purchase that place from the King of England who in the present state of his affairs, will, without doubt, require money of the King [of France]. By that means we should be masters of the Iroquois without waging war."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 126.

Among the first acts passed by the third provincial legislature are those relating to public morality. These are laws "against Sabbath breaking," "against swearing and Cursing," and "against Drunkenness."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 173-75.

Another act of first importance, passed by this legislature is one to regulate the proceedings of the monthly courts throughout the province.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 175.

An order is issued forbidding the harbouring or concealing of vagabonds, and all persons who cannot give a fair account of themselves, or who have no certificate or pass from the place whence they came.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 142.

A proclamation is issued appointing Dec. 30 as a day of thanksgiving for the triumph of the king over the rebels, and for the success of the Christian armies against the forces of the Ottoman.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 142.

Each householder at Harlem is ordered to make a ladder to his chimney, within a month, or to be fined six guilders. "Jan Nagel was mulct 25 gl. for putting his compost heap on the public street, contrary to the town regulation. In that era of straw roofs and wooden tenements special precaution against fire was necessary; and several fires had actually happened in the village, causing great harm and heavy losses."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 451.

James Graham is appointed and sworn in as attorney-general of the province.—Cal. Coun. Min., 47. Graham had served for three years (1680-3) as an alderman of the city (M. C. C., VIII: 146, 147, 148), and was commissioned as recorder Dec. 4, 1685 (q. v.). His signature as attorney-general appears at the end of the Dongan Charter, subscribing to the statement that he "hath perused this Patent and finds Nothing contained therein prejudicial to his Majesties Interest."—M. C. C., I: 306. See April 27, 1686.

Capt. John Knight purchases, for Gov. Dongan, a strip of land nearly 1,000 ft. long and 80 ft. wide lying along the north side of the street "Comonly call Wall Street." Six deeds of conveyance were made by the grantors, Abraham van Planke, Peter Stoutenburgh, John Vangee, Lucas Tienhoven, Jacob Kipp, and John Smith, who traced their title back to Jan Jansen Damen, describing in their deeds a confirmation of his title given by Nicolls on Oct. 3, 1667 (q. v.). For the original grant to Damen, see April 15, 1644. These deeds are recorded in Liber Deeds, XIII: 124-54, in the N. Y. register's office, this liber being the only one missing of the first 20 liber of conveyances of real estate located in the city and county of New York.

An example of these deeds is that from "Abraham Van planke" to Knight. Like the others, it is recorded as an "Inheritance of bargain and Sale" for "the Honourable Collonell Thomas Dongan." It recites the description of the large tract of land "given" (or confirmed) by Nicolls to "John Johnson Damen," and describes the land conveyed to Knight as follows: "All That Certaine toft or piece of Land being part or parcel of the before recited p<sup>re</sup>misses Situate lying and being on the North East side of the City of New York on the East side the Town gate joining to the said City fortifications Containing in depth from the ditch Eighty foot and in the front one hundred and five foot one inch and in the Reere one hundred and five foot one inch Bounded to the Westward with the Land in Company betweene John Smith and Lucas Tienhoven To the Northward with the Land of the Said Abraham Van planke To the Eastward with the Land of John Vangee and to the southward with the said street Comonly called the Wall Street."—Liber Deeds, XIII: 124-28. See also Castello Plan, II: 337.

On Feb. 10, 1686, Gov. Dongan confirmed to John Knight this land purchased from the Damen heirs (not the "remainder," as erroneously stated in I: 238).—Liber Patents, V: 297-98 (Albany). On the same day, he granted to Capt. Knight the strip of "vacant and waste land" which had been left between the surveyed north line of Wall St. and the ditch on the south of the Damen land.—Ibid., V: 293-97. Jan Vangee and other heirs of Damen executed a release of this strip to John Knight, March 15, 1686.—Liber Deeds, IX: 64 (Albany).

The day after acquiring title, Dec. 15, Dongan gave a warrant to Leo Beckwith, deputy surveyor, to lay down the line of the north side of Wall Street. Beckwith's report, dated Dec. 16, states:

"Hae laid out y<sup>e</sup> North East side of y<sup>e</sup> Wall Street, beginning at y<sup>e</sup> Westernmost Corner of y<sup>e</sup> Butchers Pen [near what is now the corner of Pearl and Wall Sts.], and then Running by an Angle of 313<sup>o</sup> or North West & by West Nine degrees fiftene Minits Northerly four hundred twenty three foot to y<sup>e</sup> farthest corner of the Smyths Street [now William St.] thenceby an Angle of 323 deg<sup>o</sup> or North West Eight degrees Northerly four hundred thirty one foot to y<sup>e</sup> farthest Cornor of the Graff Street [Broad St.], thence 319 deg<sup>o</sup> or Northwest four degrees northerly one hundred fifty one foot to y<sup>e</sup> farthest Cornor of Stoutenbergs garden, which is right Opposite to the South East Cornor of y<sup>e</sup> New Street, the said Street being laide out thirty six foot in breadth."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 244; see footnote by O'Callaghan who explains that the garden lay between Nassau St. and Broadway, where the Presbyterian Church stood from 1719 to 1844. The survey is recorded in Land Papers, II: 145. See Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 406.

On March 9, 1686, Knight transferred to Dongan the property he had purchased for him.—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 64-71. Dongan sold it on May 25, 1689, to Abraham de Peyster and Nicholas Bayard.—Ibid., XXXI: 25. For further account of this land along the wall, see Pl. 24-b, Vol. I, which describes the "De Peyster Garden" and other landmarks that were developed in this important locality. See also the research on this subject by Dr. Edward Haga-1683 man Hall, in 22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 592-620; and Key to Dutch Grants, II: 407-8 (Block Q, No. 9).

An order is issued to the mayor by the governor and council to appoint four persons to examine the ground adjoining Wall St., and near "the Smith's garden," and report "what inconvenience or convenience the laying out of a street through the same will cause to George Heathcote and Marten Johnson."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 143; Cal. Coun. Min., 47. The adjoining lands of Heathcote and "Johnson" were 100 ft. north of Wall and immediately west of The Strand or Pearl St. The deed to Heathcote, dated Sept. 20, 1676, was recorded Jan. 24, 1677, in Lib. V of Deeds (Albany), 30. The description in this deed shows that Heathcote's land adjoined and partly surrounded that of "Marten Jansen;" although no deed to Marten "Jobson" or "Jansen" appears of record prior to one showing a conveyance of this land from William Teller of Albany to Marten Jansen Meyer, a smith, dated May 30, 1693, and recorded June 29, 1693 in Lib. XVIII of Deeds (N. Y. County), 234. "The Smith's garden" is therefore evidently one belonging to Marten Jansen Meyer. Probably his deed from Teller was one of an earlier one not recorded, for "the smith" had already conveyed the southerly 50 ft. of the property to George Heathcote in 1676 and 1683.—Lib. Deeds, V: 35 (Albany); Lib. Deeds, XVIII: 55 (New York). George Heathcote had acquired land north and west of Meyer's, April 20, 1676, from Augustine Herrman.—Lib. Deeds, V: 30 (Albany).

As a result of the examination made by the mayor's committee, appointed on Dec. 17, the governor and council directed, on April 1, 1686, that a warrant be issued by the mayor for the opening of the new street, and for the payment of damages.—Cal. Coun. Min. 48.

The street laid out in accordance with the order of Dec. 17, 1685, was the present Pine St.; it was called King's St. in 1693 (M. C. C., I: 321), and from that time forward King's or King St., until 1794, when the name was changed to Pine St.—M. C. C. (MS.), XI: 118. King St. was opened to low-water mark in 1692.—M. C. C., I: 274. It was regulated in 1785 (M. C. C., MS., VIII: 321); and was surveyed and regulated in 1790 (ibid., IX: 415-16, 418).

1686

Domine Henricus Selyns prepared this year, in his own handwriting, in a small volume of 170 leaves (or 340 pages), a list of the members of the Dutch congregation. It was not one of the official books of the church, but a private memorandum-book of one of its ministers. It is now (1920) the property of Mr. William L. Brower, of New York, who, in 1914, loaned it to the Holland Society for publication in the society's Year Book for 1916, with explanatory notes, supplied by L. P. de Boor. It was also printed separately. For reproduction of a page of the MS., showing inhabitants (including Stuyvesant's widow) "beyond the Fresh Water," see Pl. 19, Vol. IV. Selyns' list may be divided into four sections, as follows:

1. The list of church members, occupying the first 68 leaves (written on one side only), the first five of which are missing in the original but have been supplied in the printed book from the text by Dr. De Witt (vide infra).

2. Another list, occupying only two leaves (written on one side), which shows the number of minors residing in specified streets. The 100 leaves which follow are written on both sides, excepting blank pages between divisions. Of these, 19 leaves (38 pages) contain historical notes, added in 1791-2 by Garret Abel, a deacon of the North Dutch Church (see July 2, 1767), which are continued in the fourth division.

3. Marriage entries of the Dutch Church from June 14, 1686, to April 23, 1687, written by Selyns, occupying nine pages.

4. Historical notes about the city of New York, from 1609 to 1792, in Abel's handwriting, occupying 72 pages.—See Year Book, op. cit., 7.

The list of church members (supra) shows the names of 566 inhabitants of the city, grouped by streets and other localities where they resided. The list serves practically, to this extent, as a city directory of the period. The streets, etc., referred to are: "Ereede weg" (Broadway); "Beurs Straet" (Exchange Pl., now Whitehall St.); "Paerl Straet" (Pearl St. between State and Whitehall Sts.); "Langs Strant" (along the shore, the water-side, which was the west side of the present Whitehall St., between State and Pearl Sts., the north side of Pearl St., and Hanover Sq. between Whitehall and Wall Sts.); "Langs de Wal" (along the wall, now south side of Wall St.); "Nieuwe Straet" (New St.); "Bever Street" (Beaver St., between Broadway and Broad St.); "Marckvelt Straet" (Marketfield St.); "Brouwers Straet" (now part of Stone St. between Whitehall and Broad Sts.); "Brug Straet" (Bridge St.); "Heeren Gracht, west zyde" (Main Ditch, west side, now west side of Broad St.); "Diaconie Huys" (deacons' house for the poor in Broad St.); "Heerengracht, oost-zyde" (Broad St., east side); "Hoog Straet" (High St., now part of Stone St. between Broad and William Sts.); "Slyck Straet" (Mud St., now So. William St.); "Prinzen Straet" (Prince's St., now Beaver St. between Broad and William Sts.); "Koninck Straet" (King St.); "Smit Straet" (Smith St., now William St. below Wall St.); "Smits Valley" (Smith's Valley, along the East River shore, above Wall St., also Maiden Lane); "Buyten de Landtpoort" (beyond the land gate, on Broadway above Wall St.); "Over 't Versch Water" (beyond the Fresh Water); "Aen de Grote Kil" (by the Great Kill); "Boschwyck" (Bushwick); "Arme Bouwerij" (poor farm, at Steinway, L. I.); and "Nieuw Thuyin" (Newtown).

For an account of previous printed editions of Selyns list of the church members, see the Year Book, op. cit., 8-12. These appearances, in various forms, all more or less modifications of the original, have been: 1, an edition by Rev. Thomas De Witt, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser. (1841), I: 392-99; 2, one by Valentine, in Hist. City of N. Y. (1855), 331-43; 3, one by Wilson, in Mem. Hist. N. Y. (1892), I: 446-52; and 4, one in the Year-Book of the Holland Soc. of N. Y. (1896), 178-89. See also the memoir and poems of Selyns in Murphy's Anthology of New Neth. (1865).

For earlier lists of the inhabitants of New York, see The Nicassius de Sille List of 1660, in II: 349-51; the list of 1665, in Rec. N. Am., V: 221-25; and that of 1677, in M. C. C., I: 50-62. A later list, of the principal male inhabitants of the city, was embodied in a petition to Lieut.-Gov. Colden on May 2, 1774 (q. v.), and published in Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 427 et seq.

About this time Philip Wells, Dongan's surveyor-general, made a general survey of "New Yorke Island." After his death, a claim was entered for this service (which covered seven days), and for the services of two persons employed in the work, besides the "expenses of Mr. Vaughan & Mr. Cortlandt." The original survey has disappeared.—The Hist. Mag. (1st ser., 1865), IX: 285, citing the original claim.

It was probably during the years 1686-9 that Philip Wells made his survey of the upper and lower bays, showing Manhattan and Staten Islands, the principal sand-bars, soundings, etc. This drawing, which bears the inscription "A sand draught of New-York Harbour by (Philip-) Wells," is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 21. Wells made also a survey of Boston harbour, and one of the entire coast of North Am. (British Museum, No. 5414, Roll 19).

Gov. Dongan, to acquire an interest in the fur trade, held correspondence with Frontenac's two successors as governors of Canada, Le Febvre de la Barre and the Marquis de Denonville, regarding the status of the Indians; and he was "in frequent intrigue with the enemies of the French." News reached Denonville that Dongan "contemplated sending, early in the spring of 1687, an armed expedition in the direction of Michilimackinac to forestall the trade there. . . ."—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 340-45.

The common council orders the assize and value of bread to be as follows:

"A white bread Loafe weighing twelue ounces, to be Sold for five Stivers wampum.

"fine Ranged bread, the bran being wholly taken out weighing four pounds three quarters Six pence.

"Wheate bread of meale as it Comes from the Mill weighing Nine pounds Nine pence."—M. C. C., I: 173. See Oct. 23, 1685.

Satisfaction is given to Adrian Westerhous for ground which the city took "to make the New Street."—M. C. C., I: 174. This was the present New Street.—See May 5, 1679.

The common council resolves "that there be Severall Bakers appointed to bake on each day of the Weeke bread for Sale und' the penalty of 5<sup>s</sup> to be paid by each p<sup>son</sup> soe appointed as shall Neglect to doe the same."—M. C. C., I: 173. On Jan. 21, the mayor signed an order, directed to three supervisors of bread who were appointed on Oct. 23, that the persons named in the order shall "bake Each one batch of white and Course bread at Least for Sale of due Assize On the Respective dayes herein Specified." The list shows the names of 24 bakers, some of whom are women. The men are all property holders, and several are aldermen or otherwise prominent 1686 in the city's public affairs. Notable among them are Anthony Jan. Demilt, Jacobus Dekey, Capt. Tenis Dekey, David Provost (see 13 Jan. 25, 1681), Jasper Nesselopt, John Vanderspiegel, and Capt.

 Nicholas de Meyer.—Ibid., I, 176-77. Mayor Bayard's original order is preserved in metal file No. 1 in the city clerk's record-room, and is printed in Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 412-13.

Feb. With the consent of the council, Dongan establishes a "court 19 of Judicature," to be held before the governor and council, on the first Monday of every month, at New York. This court, which corresponded to a court of exchequer, was given power to hear, try, and determine suits between the king and the inhabitants of the province concerning lands, rents, rights, profits, and revenues.—

22 The "patent" (charter) of New York is considered by the governor's council and "referred" (probably to a committee).—

 11 the creditors of William Darvall, convey to Thomas Dongan, governor-general of the province, the "large Messuage," etc.
 which had been Stuyvesant's "Great House." John Delavall had already released his rights as his father's heir.—Liber Deeds, XIII:

29 Measures are taken to build a new church at Harlem. "The old church was no longer adapted to the needs and improved tastes of the community, though still answering the purposes of a schoolhouse. . . . The church was to be built of stone, and upon a new site; an arrangement being made with Laurens Jansen and the Delamater family, who gave up their two north erven for this purpose, and which also afforded ample ground for a new churchyard or cemetery." The community subscribed liberally, and assumed the labour of preparing and bringing the stone, lime, timber, shingles, lathes, etc., all of which was to apply on the subscriptions.

On March 29, the foundation is begun, Resolved Waldron, with due ceremony, placing the first stone, and Johannes Vermelje the second. The following day the contract was made for the carpenter work with William Hellaker of New York. The agreement, which is preserved among the Harlem Records (see Bibliography), reads: "Specification of the Church at Harlem: The size of the church across it either way, is 36 Dutch feet; upon which William Hellaker undertakes to construct the roof, with an arch therein, and a small steeple upon it, and to cover all properly with shingles, and to make a scuttle thereto; upon condition that the people of the town shall be obligated to deliver the timber at the building place. For which the Constable and Magistrates promise to pay the aforesaid William Hellaker, the sum of Seven Hundred and Fifty Guilders, in Wheat, to be paid in the month of January following this year, 1686, the wheat to be delivered at the current price. . . . Done at New Harlem, this 30th of March, 1686." This is signed by William Hellaker, Jan de Lameter (constable), Daniel Tourneur, and Jan Nagel. The witnesses are Johannes Vermelje and Resolved Waldron, before Jan Tibout (clerk).—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 452-53. For earlier charter, see 1665.

The location of this church on the modern map would be between 124th and 125th Sts., west of First Ave., the second site of the Harlem Reformed Dutch Church.—See Pl. 178, Vol. III, and Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), II: 470. The above specifications which were entered in these Records, and quoted in Riker's Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.) 453, are printed in the description of Pl.
 39, I: 296. This edifice was destroyed during the Revolutionary War; it was rebuilt in 1788, and taken down in 1825. The new building is shown in Pl. 60-b, Vol. I, for description of which see I: 437, citing Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 459. See also Randel's Map of the Farms, Pl. 86, Vol. III.

Apr. Mesier's wind-mill is first mentioned of record.—See June 18, 24 The common council agrees to give the governor £200 upon his signing the charter, and security for £100 more to be paid in six months.—M. C. C., I: 178. On May 11, the mayor reported that he had paid Dongan £300 for the "Patent" (charter) and £24 to the secretary, and that he had "taken the same up at ten  $\frac{3}{4}$  Cent Interest, to be payed in a year." The common council approved, and it was resolved that care be taken "to raise money for Satisfying thereof."—Ibid., I: 178. To pay this debt, 14 lots on the water front between the docks and the city hall were sold, and 16 acres on the North River shore near the present Gansevoort St.— Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 307. See Dec. 3, 1686.

27 Gov. Dongan grants, signs, and seals the second English charter of the city of New York. The first was the Nicolls Charter of 1665 (q.v.). The original document (see Pl. 18, Vol. IV), which is still owned by the city, is in the custody of the New York Public Library, where, with the Montgomery Charter and other documents, it was deposited for safe keeping by Comptroller Bird S. Coler, in 1899.

It is thus described: "Beautifully engrossed on five very large and thick sheets of parchment, it is so massive, so imposing to the eye, that it seems to have been prepared as a guaranty of the liberties not of a little colonial capital of some four thousand inhabitants but of a city like the New York of to-day. Once pendant from it but long ago detached by the hand of time, is an impression of the large provincial seal bestowed when Lovelace was governor in 1669, protected by a silver bow bearing on its cover the inscription:
 "N. Bayard Esq<sup>r</sup> Mayor, 1686."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 299; cf. Wilde, The Civic Ancestry of N. Y. City and State, 42, and Pl. XII; also ibid., 45, footnote. The complete charter is reproduced for the first time on Pls. 18 a to e, Vol. IV. For reproduction of Dongan's provincial seal, see Frontispiece, Vol. V.
 Gov. Bellomont, writing to England on Nov. 29, 1700, said of the charter: ". . . 'tis sealed with the Duke of Yorke's seal, and neither the Great Seal of England nor Seal of the Province, yet it bears date the 2<sup>d</sup> year of King James, so that the whole foundation is wrong." This led him to declare that it was "not a legal Charter;"
 that "In strictness this is no City, and all the judgments that have been pass'd in their Mayor's Court are void."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 812.

The charter was transcribed into the Minutes of the Common Council (I: 290-306) under date of Jan. 5, 1693.

Although Dongan states, in the charter, that he gives it "for and on behalf of his most Sacred Majesty . . . his Heires Successors and Assigns," and "by Vertue of the Commission and Authority unto me Given, and power in me residing," it did not emanate directly from the crown, but from the governor individually. It begins: "Thomas Dongan Lieut<sup>e</sup> Governor and Vice Admiral of New York and its Dependencies under his Majesty James 2<sup>d</sup> Second . . . Proprietor of y<sup>e</sup> Collony and Province of New York, and its dependencies in America &c: To all to whom this Shall come Seneath Greeting."—M. C. C., I: 290. It was confirmed and extended, however, by the Montgomery Charter, granted by King George II himself.—See March 23, 1739; see also Gerard, A Treatise on the Title of the Corporation, etc. (1872), 31 and 36; a history of the charter by Gerard in Mag. Am. Hist., (1886), XVI: 30-49; and Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th
Cent. Municipality (1917), 13-38.

Dongan states that the charter is granted, "att y<sup>e</sup> humble petition of the now Mayor, Aldermen & Commonality of the Said City of New York," and "for Diverse Other good Causes and Considerations." His purpose is to "give Grant Ratifie, and Confirm" unto them "every Such and the Same Priviledges, Liberties, Franchises, Rights, Royalties, Free Customs, Jurisdictions and Immunities, which they by the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, & Commonality or otherwise, have anciently had, held, used or enjoyed," provided that none of these liberties, etc. be "Inconsistent with or Repugnant, to the Laws of his Majesties Kingdom of England, or any other the Laws of the Generall Assembly of this Province."

The charter recites that the citizens and inhabitants of the city
 "have erected, built, and Appropriated at their own proper Costs and Charges, severall Publick Buildings Accommodations and Conveniences for the said City, that is to say, the City Hall or State-house with the Ground thereunto belonging, two Markett houses [see De Voe, Market Book, 59] the Bridge into y<sup>e</sup> Dock the Wharfs or Dock with their appurtanances and Conveniences; and the New Buriall place, without the Gate of this City; and have Established and Settled one Ferry from the said City of New York to Long Island, for the accommodation and Conveniency of Passengers,
 . . . . These and the benefits arising from them are confirmed.

There is also a grant of the streets, lanes, highways, and alleys 1686 on Manhattan Island, for public use. The charter confirms to the Apr. inhabitants their lands obtained through former governours, lieutenants, or commanders-in-chief, or from the mayor, etc., by deed or otherwise. It gives authority to the mayor, etc., to establish, lay out, etc., or direct the laying out, repairing, or amending of all necessary streets, lanes, alleys, highways, water-courses, ferries, and bridges in the city and island; no private lands to be taken therefor except by consent of parties, or all the waste, vacant, unpatented, and unappropriated lands within the city and island, extending to low-water mark in all parts of the city and Manhattan Island; all rivers, rivulets, coves, creeks, ponds, waters, and water-courses therein not heretofore granted by former governours, etc., or by any of the former mayors, etc., to some respective person or persons, etc.; also certain royalties of fishing, fowling, mining, etc. The city limits are established at low-water mark around the island of Manhattan.

The city government is established as a body politic or corporate, and various officers are specified. These are a mayor, recorder, town clerk, six aldermen, and six assistants, who are to be called "the Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty, of the City of New York;" also one chamberlain or treasurer, one sheriff, one coroner, one clerk of the market, one high constable, seven sub-constables, and one marshal or "Sarjeant at Mace." The mayor, recorder, aldermen, and assistants, or the mayor, recorder, or any three or more of the aldermen, and any three or more of the assistants shall be called "the Common Council of y<sup>e</sup> Said City."

The mayor and sheriff of the city, by the terms of the charter, are to be nominated and appointed yearly, "upon y<sup>e</sup> feast day of St Michael the Archangell" (Sept. 29) by the lieutenant-governour or commander-in-chief, with the advice of his council. On the 14th of October following this, they are to take the several "Corporall oaths" before the governour and council. According to "the new Usage & Custom of the Said City" the recorder, town clerk, and clerk of the market shall be such persons "as his most Sacred Majesty Aforesaid his Heirs & Successors shall Appoint & Commissionate;" but in case of "Defect" (omission) of such appointment by the king, etc., the appointment shall be made by the governour or commander-in-chief. The aldermen, assistants, and petty constables are to be "Chosen by Majority of Votes of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of each Ward," on "y<sup>e</sup> feast day" aforesaid. The high constable is to be appointed by the mayor. The chamberlain is to be chosen "on y<sup>e</sup> Said feast day" in the city hall by the mayor, three or more aldermen, and three or more assistants. Dongan, in the charter, names John West to be town clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the court of pleas which is to be held before the mayor, recorder, and aldermen.—M. C. C., I: 298-300.

The charter provides that the corporation shall have a common seal, with power to break, alter, or remake it (see also July 24); that it may purchase lands, tenements, etc., in fee simple, not to exceed the value of £1,000 per annum, and may lease and dispose of the same. (This value was increased to £3,000 by the Montgomery Charter, 1730; as to later increases, see Gerard's Treatise, op. cit., 105-8.) The corporation is authorized to fill, make up, lay out, make use of, or build upon, all the lands in and about the island as far as low-water mark.

The charter confirms all former franchises, powers, and privileges held or enjoyed within 20 years, by pretence of any former charter, custom, prescription, etc., even though such were supposed to be forfeited, if not inconsistent with the English or colonial laws. The mayor is given power to grant licenses to tavern-keepers and liquor sellers.

The Dongan Charter considerably extends the terms of the city ordinance relating to the admission of freemen (cf. March 15, 1684). The mayor, recorder, and aldermen, or the mayor and any three or more aldermen, are given "Full Power And Authority under y<sup>e</sup> Common Seal to make Free Citizens of y<sup>e</sup> Said City And Liberties thereof." Only free citizens may "use any Art Trade Mystery or Manual occupation" within the "City Liberties And Precincts thereof," save in times of "Fairs." If any person, not a freeman, engages in any such occupation, or shall "by himself themselves or others" sell or expose for sale any merchandise at retail, in any house, shop, place, or "Standing," at a time when no fair is being held, and shall persist in doing so after being warned, the mayor may "Cause Such Shop Windows to be Shut upp." He may also impose a fine not exceeding £5 for each offence, under a warrant to take and sell the offender's goods, paying him the

"Overplus." This may be done without rendering any account of it to "y<sup>e</sup> Lieutenants, Governours or Commanders in Chief of this Province." No person shall be "made free" who is not one of "his Majesties Natural born Subjects or Such as Shall first be Naturalized by Acts of Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly or Shall have Ordained [obtained] Letters of Denization under the hand of y<sup>e</sup> Lieutenante Governour or Commander in Chief. . . . And Seal of y<sup>e</sup> Province." The person so made a freeman shall pay the city the charge formerly exacted for this purpose not exceeding £5.—M. C. C., I: 302-3. Five years later, April 24, 1691 (q. v.), the old ordinance of March 15, 1684 (q. v.) was re-enacted with very slight change in wording and without violating the purpose of the charter provision.—Ibid., I: 222. The general provision in the Dongan Charter relating to freemen was re-enacted in the Montgomery Charter of 1731.

Certain exceptions are made in the grants to the city, the first being the use and possession of Fort James; also "one Messuage or Tenement next y<sup>e</sup> City Hall and one Messuage by the Fort Now in the Possession of Thomas Coker, The Piece of Ground by y<sup>e</sup> Gate Called y<sup>e</sup> Governours Garden & y<sup>e</sup> Kings Farme with y<sup>e</sup> Swamp next y<sup>e</sup> Said Land by y<sup>e</sup> fresh water;" also reserving all quit-rents, and requiring that all lands, etc., heretofore set apart for pious or charitable uses, shall not be wasted or misemployed contrary to the trusts or intents of the founders or givers of the said ground.—M. C. C., I: 290-306. Regarding the locations and descriptions of the "City Hall," the "Governour's Garden," and the "King's Farm," see Gerard, Treatise (op. cit.), 34; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, Vol. III.

Below the signature of "Thomas Dongan" in the transcribed charter in the Minutes is the following: "Recorded in the Secretary's Office for the Province of New York in lib. N<sup>o</sup> I: book of Patents begun 1684, from Page 278 to 309"—signed "J: Spragg Sec<sup>y</sup>." Following this is the entry: "May it Please y<sup>r</sup> Honour The Attorney General hath perused this Patent and finds Nothing Contained therein prejudicial to his Majesties Interest Ja: Grahan Recorded & Examined by y<sup>e</sup> Original Will Sharpas Cl." See also Lincoln, Constitutional Hist. of N. Y. (1906), III: 610.

At a meeting of the committee of trade and plantations, "A Draught of Instructions prepared for Coll. Dungan read, Whereupon it is thought fit that a clause be added signifying his Mat<sup>ty</sup> pleasure that a Bill or charter of Franchise passed in the late Assembly at New York be forthwith repealed & disallowed but that Coll. Dungan do Nevertheless with the Council Continue the Duties & Impositions therein mentioned to be raised untill he shall with y<sup>e</sup> Consent of the Councill Settle such Taxes and Impositions as shall be sufficient for the support of the Governm<sup>t</sup>."—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations, 1670-1686 (MS.), III: 241-42. See May 29, Dongan is given an increase of salary from 400<sup>l</sup> to 600<sup>l</sup>, to be taken from New York revenues.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 367.

The king's new instructions to Dongan are issued at Windsor. Among its 67 articles is one (No. 12) repealing the Charter of Franchises, but contending the taxes and duties imposed by it until new taxes are imposed by the governour and council for the support of the government (see May 20). Another article (No. 16) orders Dongan "to observe in the passing of Laws, that y<sup>e</sup> Stile of Enacting the same By the Governour & Council, bee henceforth used and noe other." This order vests all legislative authority in them, instead of in a general assembly. The names of the governour's council are given, and the governour's duties defined regarding the choosing of other members, the enactment of laws, etc. There is also an order that the Book of Common Prayer be read each Sunday and holy day, and the Blessed Sacrament administered according to the rites of the Church of England. "You shall be careful that the Churches already built there shall be well and orderly kept and more built as y<sup>e</sup> Colony shall, by God's blessing, be improved." The ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury is to be upheld. No schoolmaster is to be permitted to come from England and keep school in the province without a license from this archbishop. Other instructions relate to military affairs, trade, the administration of justice, the building of workhouses for the poor, etc. A prohibition is placed upon printing without a license from the governour.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 369-75. See Addenda.

An order is received from the committee of trade at Whitehall by the governour and council of New York to transmit quarterly reports on the state of the colony.—Cal. Coun. Min., 61.

The king issues a commission to Sir Edmund Andros as govern-

 Andros reached Boston on Dec. 30 (see Addenda).

4 King James writes to Gov. Dongan: "We have therefore given strict Order to Our Trusty and welbelovd William Blathwayt, Esq<sup>r</sup> Our Surveyor and Auditor General of all Our Revenues in America, Carefully and diligently to pursue Our Service and perform his Duty in relation to Our Revenue in that Our Province and Territories committed to your Government." The governor is given especial instructions to aid Blathwayt in every possible way, and is informed that as "we are graciously inclined to apply Such of Our Revenues, as accrue within Our said Province to the immediate Support and Security thereof, So we are resolved to hold a strict hand" upon the execution of the duties of the revenue officials.—Blathwayt's Jour. (transcript), in Lib. of Cong., I: 304-5.

10 Up to the time of King Charles II's death (see Feb. 6, 1685), personal considerations had compelled the duke to concede the granting of a legislative assembly in the province of New York.— See "Historical Introduction," Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), I: xvi. On his accession to the throne as King James II, he now abolishes the assembly by a new commission giving Gov. Dongan "full power and authority, with the advice and consent of the council, or major part of them, to make, constitute and ordain Laws, Statutes and ordinances for the Publick peace, welfare and good government of the Province and of the people and inhabitants thereof;" such laws to be transmitted to England within three months after their enactment, for the Royal approbation, and to be null and void if "at any time disallowed and not approved." This commission (for Dongan's instructions, see May 29) was received in New York (on Sept. 14 (q.v.)), and on Jan. 20, 1687, Dongan dissolved the assembly, and set up, in its place, a government, executive and legislative, by governor and council, respectively.—Ibid., I: xvi-xvii, citing N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 370, 378. See Dec. 9; and Addenda.

22 A packet for Col. Dongan containing a warrant for "Authorising the Present Seal" is delivered to the captain of the "Susanna,"
 "Ready to sail to N York."—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations, 1670-1686 (MS.), III: 253a.

30 Initial steps are taken to run the New York-New Jersey boundary line.—See Addenda.

July According to a new book by Richard Blome, of London, licensed 20 July 20, 1686, and published in 1687, the houses in New York were "built with Dutch-brick, and the meanest not valued under one hundred Pounds." The city was "encompassed with a Wall of good thickness" to the "landward," and fortified "at the entrance to the River" by a fort called "James Fort," so as to "command any Ship which passeth that way."—Roger L'Estrange (Richd. Blome), The Present State of His Majesty's Isles and Territories in Am.

24 The Dongan Charter (see April 27) provided "that y<sup>e</sup> Said Mayor Aldermen & Commonality of y<sup>e</sup> Said City of New York and their Successors Shall and may for ever hereafter have one Common Seal to Serve for the Sealing of all and singular their Affairs & Businesses touching or Concerning the said Corporation;" and that it shall be lawful for them "as they Shall See Cause to breake, Change, Alter and New Make their Said Common Seal, when and as often as to them itt Shall Seem Convenient."—M. C.
C., I: 296. The mayor now presents to the common council "the New Seal of this City with this Inscription, SIGILLUM CIVITAT[is] NOVI [EBORACI]—See Pine, op. cit., 8." The common council agrees upon it, and orders that it "be the Comon Seal of this City," and "Remaine in the Custody of the mayof for the time being."—Ibid., I: 179. See Frontispiece, Vol. V.

The earliest known impression of this seal, and the only impression known of this "state,—i. e., having a ducal coronet instead of an imperial crown,—is upon a grant of a water lot by the city to Coarad Ten Eyck, dated Sept. 1, 1687, owned (in 1920) by Mr.
 Frank W. Demarest, East Orange, N. J.—Pine, Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y. (1915), 38-39. See Frontispiece, Vol. V.
 The history and symbolism of this seal are described at length by Dr.
 E. Hagaman Hall, in ibid., 38-51, its principal features being the wind-mill, the two flour barrels, the two beavers, the Indian, the sailor, the crown, the date, and the Latin name of New York.
 The seal is reproduced in ibid., on plate 3, opp. p. 38, which shows both states, one with ducal coronet, the other with imperial crown.
 Of this feature, it is said:

"The Crown, forming the crest of the seal of 1686, on the Ten

July Eyck land grant of 1687, is a ducal coronet. This is surprising, 24 because in 1685 the Duke of York ascended the throne as James II. [Cf. Dongan Charter, April 27.] At a date not known at the present writing [vide infra], the crest on the seal was properly changed to an imperial crown, showing the distinguishing arches rising from the circlet and supporting the orb and cross. The Manuscript Section of the New York State Library can give no light on the question of the date of the change from the ducal coronet to the imperial crown, owing to the fact that all the seals which appeared on documents in the New York Colonial Manuscripts or other manuscripts in the collection were so melted by heat at the time of the fire in the Capitol in 1911. . . . But the change was made at least as early as 1701, for a beautiful impression of the seal with the imperial crown may be seen at the New York Historical Society on a document dated October 1, 1701, certifying that Thomas Evans had been made a freeman of the City."—Ibid., 48-49, and footnote, comparing it with the seal (showing imperial crown) reproduced and erroneously described (as having a ducal coronet) by O'Callaghan in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo ed.), III: 398. Compare provincial seal with coronet in ibid., IV: Pl. 2. See, however, Jan. 7, 1690, from which it now appears clear that the change was made in 1688 or 1689.

The other impression of this seal with the imperial crown, which was used as the corporation seal from 1688, or 1689, to the Revolution, is reproduced by Wilde in his Civic Ancestry of N. Y. (1913), Pl. 26, from the John Paulding collection, presented to the N. Y. Hist.
 Soc. in 1844.—See Frontispiece, Vol. V. The seal was also alluded to and partially described by Du Simitière in May, 1769.—See volume lettered "Papers relating to N. England, N. York, etc.," formerly belonging to Du Simitière, now in Ridgway Branch of Library Co.
 of Phila. (shelf mark, No. 1412 G.); Van Rensselaer, Ibid.: 304-5.

Besides the mystery of a ducal coronet on the first city seal of 1686, there is another in the fact that a smaller "common seal" of the city, also having a ducal coronet, was in use at the same time as the other (1687). This is described in Pine, op. cit., 51-53. The earliest known impression of this seal is on the certificate of allegiance of Johannes Kipp (dated Sept. 8, 1687), in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.
 Other impressions are upon a land grant to Anna Maria van Horne (April 21, 1692), in possession of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; and on warrants signed by Mayors Ebenezer Willson (1709), Caleb Heathcote (1711), and John Johnston (1719), now preserved in the city clerk's record-room.—Ibid., 51-52. Of this seal, it is said: "It is not known when and under what circumstances this seal came into existence. Between the granting of the seal of 1669 and the year 1687, when we find this other seal in use, there is record of the making of only one City seal, namely, that of 1686 with the legend. If this were the seal of 1669 still continued in use, the problem would be solved, but that cannot now be established. That the use of both seals was officially recognized is evidenced by the fact that on April 24 and again on October 15, 1691, the Common Council fixed the Mayor's fees for affixing the seals at 'Six shill. for Euery great Seal and three Shillings for a small Seal' [M. C. C., I: 222, 246], and on October 14, 1689, ex-Mayor Stephen Van Cortlandt was directed by the Common Council to deliver to the High Constable "y<sup>e</sup> Citys Charter and also y<sup>e</sup> City Seales" [ibid., I: 208]—showing that there were more seals than one.—Pine, op. cit., 52-53. The impression of this smaller seal on the Van Horne deed, above referred to, is reproduced by Wilde in his Civic Ancestry, Pl. 29, with accompanying description (pp. 72-73), attributing its origin to Lovelace in 1669 (pp. 43, 63).

It is ordered by the common council "that the ground from the house of freedrike Phillips to the house of Lucas Kirstead and from thence to the house of Widow Mathews and from the house of Thomas Crundell to the said City Hall be by the Severall inhabitants Paved from the front of their houses nine foote deep into the Streets."—M. C. C., I: 179. This ground, on the modern plan, lay along the easterly side of Whitehall St. from Stone to Pearl St.; and along the northerly side of Pearl St. from the easterly corner of Whitehall St. to the westerly corner of Coenties Alley.

Negroes and Indian slaves are regularly employed by their masters "to worke on the bridge Weighhouse and Markett house of this City about the goods of their Respective Masters." This tends "to the discouragement and Losse" of the "Sworne porters" of the city. The common council therefore orders that notice of these slaves "be admitted to worke upon or intermeddle with any goods whatsoever," at these places, whether imported or to be exported; but that such goods "Shall be Received and delivered by 1686 The Sworne Decrees of this City and Noe others.—M. C. C., I: 180. See Dec. 1, 1674.

1724 The common council orders "that the Market house of this City be and Employed as a warehouse for goods." The charge for "Each tunne of [of] Caske" is fixed at 9d. for 24 hours; and for "each bayle of goods"—(amouunt not stated), "and so Proportionably." The order requires that the mayor appoint "a fit person to be Keeper of the same Who Shall for the next Six months Have the half of the profite thereof for his Service."—M. C. C., I: 179. See Nov. 24, 1687.

Aug. 28 Gov. Dongan and the mayor and aldermen of the city deem it "fit and convenient" that a street shall be laid out from Broadway to "the Smiths Vly." For this purpose, it is necessary to take part of the land of George Heathcote. For public convenience, Heathcote conveys to Dongan, for £12, "A certain piece of land situate in the King street, Begiuning at the land of Jan Vangee [Vinge] and so along the east side of said street to the Smiths Vly, 16 rods, 4 feet, Dutch measure; And in breadth at the upper end 23 feet like measure, and fronting to the water side, 14 feet like measure."—Abstract of Wills, II: 443, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1893). In a footnote, Pelletreau explains that this tract, measuring 202 ft. long and 214 ft. wide, English measure, is the east end of Pine St., next west of Pearl St. For the origin of Pine St., see Dec. 17, 1685.

Sept. 4 The general assembly, having been adjourned until Sept. 25, 1686, Dongan prorogues it until March 25, 1687, "for weighty and important Reasons," and gives notice to that effect by proclamation.—M. C. C., I: 180.

"Francisco Bastian, a negro, receives a patent for "A piece of land part of which is improved and is adjoining to the rere of the Bass Bowry upo York Island, beginning at the northeast corner of the land of Solomon Peters the Negro and runs as the Highway or Road, north 24° easterly 56 rods and from the east 18° southerly 44 rods and thence south 24° westerly 56 rods and thence west 18° northerly 44 rods, to the first marked Tree being bounded on the south by the land not laid out and the west by the High Way or Road on the north by the land not laid out and the east by a Swampe, containing 15 Acres and 64 Rods."—Liber Patents, VI: 67 (Albany).

10 The common council orders that public wells of stone he made in specified places, half the expense to be borne "by the inhabitants of every Street proportionably and the other half by the City." There is to be one before each of the following houses: Those of Corbett and William Vermerre "in the broadway;" that of William Merrett (location not given, but possibly in "Field Street," as appears by the tax list of 1677); and before those of James Provoost, Thomas Lewis, Andreas Teller, and William D. Troneour (locations not given); also one to front Smith St. near the house of John Cavaliere, and one to front the upper end of Bridge St.—M. C. C., I: 181. Arrangements for the assessment and collection of dues for this work were made on Jan. 13, 1687.—Ibid., I: 185, 186. Regarding the location of other wells and pumps placed from time to time throughout the city during the colonial period, see Index to ibid., VIII: 468-69, titles "Wells," "Wells," and "Pumps." See also Feb. 28, 1677; Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y., 216.

"An order is made in common council for a survey of "the Land in the Swamp."—M. C. C., I: 181. This swamp was the Crippel-bush, frequently referred to as Beekman's Swamp and so depicted on Pl. 27, Vol. I. It did not belong to William Beekman, however, but lay behind his land at the river. See Sept. 5, 1728.

14 Gov. Dongan receives his commission as captain-general and governor-in-chief of the province of New York, and takes the oath.—Cal. Coun. Min., 50. This commission had been signed by King James II on June 10 (3. v.)—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 377-82. For his former instructions and commission, see Jan. 27, 1683.

space was to be left was either Dock (present Pearl) St. or the water-side, which later became Water St. Regarding the filling in of the waterside around the custom-house bridge, and the derivation of the name Moore St., see Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 404; and drawing in Chron. opposite 1700.

20 Charges of fraud and misconduct are made against Luke Santen, the collector of customs. These developed on Sept. 23, Nov. 22, and Dec. 9. On Jan. 10, 1687, an examination was ordered by the governor and council. The assembly was dissolved, Santen suspended, and Peter Delanoy appointed collector pro tem. Santen, when arrested, was ordered to deliver his books to Stephen van Cortlandt; he refused, and Isaac Swinout was ordered to search and seize them with the help of the sheriff.—Cal. Coun. Min., 59, 52. On Feb. 22, Dongan stated in a report that Santen had been so troublesome that he was forced to send him home to England.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 421. See also Feb. 21, 1687.

29 This is "y<sup>e</sup> feast day of St Michael the Arch Angell," named in the Dongan Charter as the day on which the mayor, aldermen, and sheriff are to be appointed, assistants and petty constables elected, and the chamberlain chosen.—M. C. C., I: 298-300. "Michaelmas Day . . . properly named the day of St. Michael and All Angels, is a great festival of the Church of Rome, and also observed as a feast day by the Church of England . . . It will be learned with some surprise, that these notions of presiding angels and saints are what have led to the custom of choosing magistracies on the 29th of September . . . Local rulers were esteemed as in some respects analogous to tutelar angels, in as far as they presided over and protected the people. It was therefore thought proper to choose them on the day of St. Michael and All Angels . . ."—Chambers, The Book of Days, II: 387 et seq.

An order is issued by the governor and council to the several sheriffs throughout the province to make a return of the number of horse and foot within their respective counties; also the number of inhabitants and merchants, English or foreigners, servants and slaves; the number of marriages, christenings, and burials, for the seven years last past, with the names of persons holding lands from the crown, etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 155. For results, see Dongan's report of Feb. 22, 1687.

14 This day of the month is designated in the Dongan Charter as the one on which the mayor and sheriff are to take their oaths of office before the governor and council.—M. C. C., I: 298. It is likely it was chosen because it was the birthday of King James II (see Chambers's Book of Days, II: 443), as well as because it followed at a convenient interval after Michaelmas Day (see Sept. 29), when elections and appointments to office occurred. In England, the mayor was sworn in on St. Simon and St. Jude's Day.—See The Privileges of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen (London, 1722), 107.

16 A "Court of Lientancy," or military tribunal, begins in the city of New York. The records of its transactions, through 1696, are now preserved in the custody of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and have been published in the society's Collections, 1880, where an "Introduction" explains the province and influence of this court.

Nov. 4 The magistrates of Harlem pass an ordinance forbidding the inhabitants to cut any more wood within the town than is needed for their own immediate use, under penalty of 200 guilders ($80).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), II: 475.

6-16 A treaty of neutrality for America, between France and England, is signed at Whitehall.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 346; V: 476; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 505; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 321-22.

25 William Merritt receives a patent for a tract granted to Wolphert Webber by Director-General Stuyvesant, April 2, 1650. It is described as follows: "One certain piece of land situate and being upo the Island Manhattans on the further side of the Fresh Water lying between the land of Cornelys Jacobsse Stille and the Valley or Meadow Ground, being in length from Beginning of the run or creek along the High way northeast to the marke which Divides Cornelis Jacobs Land, 51 rods; thence in length along the said Stille's land to the Meadow south-by-west, 40 rods; thence, along the Meadow to the corner or angle north-west, 40 rods; thence along the Hills northerly to Beginning 84 rods" (a mistake for 48 rods). Various conveyances (not dated or particularly referred to) are recited from the assigns of Wolphert Webber to William Merritt of the city of New York, mariner, who is now in possession; and this patent confirms him therein.—Liber Patents, VI: 64 (Albany).

1686 Blagge."—Water Grants (1686-1701), I. 1. This was the beginning Dec. of the sale of water lots by the corporation, jurisdiction over the land "as far as our water mark" having been determined by the 3 Dongan Charter (M. C. C., I. 294). The mayor had been entrusted by the common council on Sept. 13 "to manage the Concerne of the Land in the Dock as to him Seemes meet."—M. C. C., I. 181. On May 1, 1687 (g. v.), he reported the sale of 14 lots, yielding £470, the record of which appears under date of July 25, 1687.—Ibid., I. 188. For the beginning of the city's policy of leasing, rather than selling, public lands, see May 25, 1704.

9 The records of the proceedings of the legislative council under Doogan and his council (after the abolition of the general assembly, —see June 10) begin. All branches of the revenue, and all other laws made since 1683, except those repealed by the king, are continued.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I. xvii.

12 The minister, elders, etc., of the Dutch Church prepare a petition to the common council (but it is not presented) for a site for a new building, requesting "a certain vacant piece of ground formerly designed for that purpose," and "a parcel of clift stone that are at the old fortification of this City, which would be a great help towards the building of said church." The estimated cost of the church, 120 ft. long by 90 ft. broad, 7 ft. in the ground and 25 ft. above ground, was 91,940 florins (or $36,776).—Eccles. Rec., II: 929-30.
See A. The petition was renewed and presented April 4, 1688 (g. v.).
20 The mayor appoints William Butler chimney sweeper, and requires him "frequently to pass through all the Streetes Lanes and Passages " in the city, and to make "such noise or Cry" as may "Discover" himself to the inhabitants. The mayor's warrant prescribes his fees.—M. C. C., I. 184.

— By the will of Judith Stuyvesant, widow of Peter Stuyvesant, who died this year, a burial-place was bequeathed to Nicholas Bayard and his family "In the Tomb or Vault [vault] of my last deceased husband In the Chappell or Church at my Bowerie." She gave "to the Reformed nether Dutch Church or Congregation of the City of New York My Testracies Church or Chappell Situated On my bowry or farmes."—Eccles. Rec., II: 934. In 1799, the Episcopal Church of St. Mark's was founded on the site of the chapel.—See March 11, 1799; Memorial of St. Mark's Church in the Bowery (1899).

— At this early date the city employs a physician to care for the poor at a salary of five pounds per annum. Dr. Johannes Kerfbyl served in that capacity for at least two years.—M. C. C., I. 206; II: 68. Jacob Provoost was "Doctor to the poor of this city" in 1713, at a salary of eight pounds.—M. C. M. (MS.), June 9, 1713.

— "At this time there were three Jesuit fathers in New York:
Thomas Harvey, of Loadon, who had accompanied the governor from England; Henry Harrison, of Ireland; and Charles Gage, of Norwich. One of them seems to have taken charge of the Latin school which Jamison had relinquished; and Dongan asked James to endow it with the King's farm."—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 487, and authorities there cited. Regarding this school, Leisler wrote to the acting governor at Boston, on Aug. 13, 1689, "that Coll: Dongan in his time did erect a Jesuite College . . . Mr.
Graham Judge palmer & John Tuder did contribute their sones for some time, but no boddy imitating them the collidge vanished."
—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 14. He wrote a similar statement on Sept. 13, 1689, which does not show to whom addressed, but perhaps to Gov. Bradstreet of Massachusetts.—See MS. volume (endorsed "Letters and Papers 1686-1720"), 21, in Prince Collection, Mass.
Hist. Soc. He is also the supposed writer of a letter written about June, 1790, which stated that these "somes" went twice daily to this "Collidge" to be instructed "by that hellish brude of Jesuits."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 147. "Father Harrison appears to have assisted Harvey as Dongan's chaplain; and one of them seems to have taken the name of John Smith. He had a small chapel adorned with images, which the governor arranged in Fort James." Sixty pounds a year were paid to "two Roman priests that attended on Governour Dongan."—Brodhead, op. cit.

Jan. One Francis Steppney, a dancing master, having been forced 3 to leave Boston "for his ill-behavior," and "it appearing that he hath been of loose carriage here, and y<sup>e</sup> he has neither a visible estate nor any manuell occupation whereby to get an honest lively-hood nor yet has given in y<sup>e</sup> security required by an act of Assembly of this province," it is ordered, at a council held this day, that he "never hereafter teach dancing within this province, and that forthwith he give before M<sup>r</sup> John Spragge, Security to y<sup>e</sup> Value of Jan. one thousand pounds by recognizance with two sufficient securitiees 3 to be of y<sup>e</sup> good behavior for and during the Space of one year after y<sup>e</sup> date of these presents, and likewise that he give before the said M<sup>r</sup> John Spragge, security to y<sup>e</sup> Value of £500 by recognizance with like sufficient securitiees to continue for y<sup>e</sup> space of two years, that he be of noe charge to y<sup>e</sup> place in manner as is required by the said act of assembly or in fayleur of such sureties he shall within the Space of Six days depart out of this province."—From Council Minutes (MS.), V: 191 (Albany).

In the division of the city made by the mayor for the purpose 13 of assessment, to raise thereby one-half the amount required for the maintenance of the public wells of the city, mention is made, among other locations, of "brewers Streete" and "garden Streete."— M. C. C., I. 185. The former of these later became Stone St.— Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1010. The latter (originally Tyn St., this Dutch name being literally translated) is now Exchange Pl. between Broad and William Sts.—Ibid., III: 999. See Sept. 10, 1689.

It is resolved by the common council that application be made " to the governour for confirmation, by him and the council, of the charter which he granted to the city. His recent commission from the king made provision for this. The mayor and recorder are empowered to procure confirmation.—M. C. C., I. 184. The petition for this purpose was under date of Jan. 29.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 162. This and the answer of the governour and council were read at the common council meeting of Feb. 24.—Ibid., I: 187.
The text of the answer does not appear. The subject was not again brought up until Feb. 4, 1693.—See Jan. 5, 1693.

John Robinson and wife transfer a lot (now known as 119 and 21 121 Pearl St.) to William Cox.—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 27-33 (New York). This lot became the property of Capt. William Kidd, in 1691, by his marriage with the Cox widow. For other properties of Kidd, see May 19, 1688, and April 18, 1689.

Dongan makes a long report on the state of the province, in the Feb. answer to questions by the lords of trade. The following extracts contain the leading facts relating to New York City:

Courts of justice are established principally by "Act of Assembly."
The court of chancery, consisting of the governour and council, is the supreme court of the province, and appeals may be brought to it from any other court. A court of oyer and terminer is established, to be held once a year in each county, in place of the court of assizes which was held yearly for the whole province at New York.
This court likewise hears appeals from inferior courts. The change was made because of "the inconvenience of bringing of y<sup>e</sup> peace, Sheriffs, Constables & other p<sup>er</sup>sons concerned from the remote parts of this Government to New York."

"There is likewise in New York & Albany a Court of Mayor & Aldermen held once in every fortnight from whence their can be no appeal unless the Cause of Action bee above the value of Twenty pounds, who have likewise privilege to make such by-Laws for y<sup>e</sup> regulation of their own affairs as they think fit, soe as the same be approved of by y<sup>e</sup> Gov<sup>t</sup> & Council.

"Their Mayors, recorders, Town Clerks & Sheriffs are appointed by the Governour."

Courts of sessions are held by the justices of the peace twice a year in each of the counties, except New York where they are held four times, and Albany three times, a year.

Dongan reports that "in Feb. last," with the advice and consent of the council, he established a court of judicature (exchequer), to be held by the governour and council, or before as many of the council as the governour might authorize, on the first Monday in every month at New York.—See Feb. 19, 1686. Heretofore, there had been daily difficulties in these cases, on account of "the great distance betwixt the Cursory settled Courts," the consequent delays, and the hazard of submitting the king's causes to "country Jurors who over and above that they are generally ignorant enough & and for the most part linked together by affinity are too much swayed by their particular humors & interests."

"The Laws in force are y<sup>e</sup> Laws called his Royal Highnesses Laws and the Acts of the General Assembly."

There are in the province about 4,000 foot-soldiers, 300 horse, and one company of dragoons.

"At New York there is a Fortification of four Bastions built formerly against the Indians of dry stone & earth with Sods as a Breast work well and pleasantly situated for the defence of the Harbor on a point made by Hudsoo's River on the one side and by 1687 the sound on the other. It has Thirty nine Guns, two Mortarpeeces, Feb. thirty Barils of Powder five hundred Ball some Bomb-shells & 22 Granados, small arms for three hundred men, one Flanker, the face of the North Bastion, & three points of Bastions & a Courtin has been done & are rebuilt by mee with Lime & Morter, & all the rest of the Fort pined and Rough Cast with Lime since my coming here

"And the most of the Guos I found dismounted & some of them yet continue to bee soe which I hope to have mounted soe soon as the mills can save

"I am forced to renew all the Batterys with three-inch-Plank & have spoke for new planks for the purpose

"And the Breast-work upon the wall is soe moultered away that its likewise needful to make a reparation thereof. The Officers quarters had formerly a flat Roof which I finding to be Chargeable to maintain & that it could not be kept high, have caused a new roof to bee upon it. As alsoe finding water to run through the Arch of the Gate I have been forc't to put a Roof over it. I am forc't every day by reason of the rotteness of the Timber & Boards to bee making reparations in the Soldiers quarters or my own.

"The Ground that the Fort stands upon & that belongs to it contains in quantity about two acres or thereabouts About which I have instead of Pallisadoes put a fence of Pales which is more lasting.

"Tho' this Fortification bee inconsiderable, yet I could wish the King had several of them in these parts,—the people growing every day more numerous & they generally of a turbulent disposition."

Dongan asks for an order "to make up a small Fort with twelve guns upon Sandy Hook the Channell there being soe near the shore that noe vessel can goe in nor out but she must come soe near the Point that from on board one might toss a biscuit Cake on Shore.

"We in this Government look upon that Bay that runs into the Sea at Sandy Hook to bee Hudsons River, therefore there being a clause in my Instructions directing mee that I cause all vessels that come into Hudsons River to Enter [i. e., pay duties] at New York, I desire to know whether his Maty intends thereby those Vessels that come within Sandy-Hook, the people of East Jersey pretending a right to the River soe farr as their Province extends which is eighteen miles up the River to the Northward of this Place . . .

"The principal Towns within this Government are New York Albany & Kingston at Esopus. All the rest are Country villages, the Buildings in New York and Albany are generally of Stone & brick. In the Country the houses are mostly new built, having two or three rooms on a floor. The Dutch are great improvers of the Land—New York and Albany live wholly upon Trade with the Indians, England and the West Indies. The returns for England are generally Beaver Peltry, Oile and Tobacco when we can have it. To the West Indies we send Flower, Bread, Pease Pork and sometimes horses; the return from thence for the most part is rumm, which pays the King a considerable Excise, & some Molasses which serves the people to make drink & pays noe custom

"There are about nine or ten three Mast Vessels of about eighty or a Hundred Tuns burthen, two or three Ketches & Barks of about forty Tun; and about twenty Sloops of about twenty or five, and twenty Tunn belonging to the Government—All of which Trade for England Holland & the West Indies except six or seven Sloops that use the river Trade to Albany . . .

"A thousand Ships may ride here safe from Winds and weather. I send here to you a Lo<sup>ps</sup> a Map from the coming in of Sandy-hook to the northernmost end of this Island wherein the Soundings are markt, by which you'll perceive the coming in and conveniency of this harbor . . .

"I beleave for these 7 years last past, there has not come over into this province twenty English, Scotch or Irish Families—But on the contrary on Long Island, the people increase soe fast that they complain for want of Land, . . . But of French there have since my coming here several families come both from St. Christophers, and England & a great many more are expected as alsoe from Holland are come several Dutch Families which is another great argument of y<sup>e</sup> necessity of adding to this Government the neighbouring English Colonys, that a more equal ballance may be kept here between his Maty's naturall born subjects and Foraigners which latter are the most prevailing part of the Governm't."

Dongan also answers questions regarding obstructions to trade; the tariff on certain imports; quit-rents; collectors of revenue; the appointment of Thomas Coker to the office of surveyor, and the turning out of John Smith from that position; the difficulty he has in making Santen account for moneys received; the mismanagement of the revenue; etc. Concluding, he replies seriatim to charges made against him by Santen, stating, among other things:

"Every Town ought to have a Minister. New York has first a Chaplain belonging to the Fort of the Church of England; secondly a Dutch Calvinist, thirdly a French Calvinist, fourthly a Dutch Lutheran—Here bee not many of the Church of England; few Romao Catholics; abundance of Quakers preachers men and Women especially; Singing Quakers; Ranting Quakers; Sabbatarians; Antisabbatarians; Some Anabaptists some Independants; some Jews; in short of all sorts of opinions there are some, and the most part, of none at all.

"The Great Church which serves both the English & the Dutch is within the Fort which is found to bee very inconvenient therefore I desire that there may be an order for their building an other, ground being layd out for that purpose, & they wanting not money in Store where with all to build it.

"The most p'vailing opinion is that of the Dutch Calvinists."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 389-415. In a footnote (p. 415), the names of the ministers referred to are given.

Dongan adds in a postscript to his report that he has caused Santen to be arrested for misappropriating revenues and falsifying accounts, and that he will be sent to England (p. 416). This document is printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 95-118, where the date assigned to it is Feb. 22, 1687.

In a letter to the "Lord President," Dongan states: "Mr Santen the late Collector here having been proved by the Auditors of his accounts very considerably indebted to His Majesty as likewise being convicted by the Judgment of the Council on sev'n articles exhibited against him of sev'n other crimes & misdemeanors was by me by the advice of the said Council suspended from the said offices of Collector & receiver until his Maty's pleasure should be known therein."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 421; and see, further, pp. 422-24; also, regarding Santen's charges against Dongan and Dongan's answers, see pp. 407-14, 493-500.

Gov. Dongan acknowledges that he received £300 from the city for the charter.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 495.

Replying to an address from "y<sup>e</sup> Quakers," the council, after examining "y<sup>e</sup> acts requiring trayning" (doubtless referring to military training), give the unanimous opinion "that no man can be exempted from y<sup>e</sup> obligation," and that if any fail to train, "let their pretences he what they will," they must submit to the penalties prescribed in the act.—From transcript of Council Minutes (MS), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

In an ordinance requiring householders to provide fire-buckets it is stated that "great Damages Have bin Done by fire in this City by reason there were not instruments to quench y<sup>e</sup> same."—M. C. C., I: 187; and see ibid., 139. For the first fire-buckets, see Dec. 15, 1657. See also "Sketch of the Origin of the Fire Department, of the City of New York, as at present organized," in Man Com. Coun. (1856), 521-29.

Not one of the aldermen puts in an appearance at a regular meeting of the mayor's court. The mayor and recorder vent their rage in the following order: "Ordered that Mr Alderman Rumbouts, Mr Alderman DePeyster, Mr Alderman LeBryune, Mr Alderman Courtland & Mr Alderman Craudall doe each of them pay a fine of Six Shillings for being absent and that y<sup>e</sup> Court be Adjourned for fourteen days longer."—M. C. M. (MS), March 1, 1687. See June 9, 1697.

Seals are made for the court of exchequer, the court of oyer and terminer, and the court of sessions.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 164.

Dongan, as governor, conveys to Thomas Hardwarding a lot 70 ft. long bounded west by the bridge, north by the weigh-house (26 ft.), east by the lot of Peter Delanoy (70 ft.), and south by the wharf which is to be made. The water front thus was gradually being filled in. In the old weigh-house still stood on the north side of the bridge.—Libor Deeds, XIII: 289.

William Bogardus is appointed post master for the province of New York by Gov. Dongan.—See March 2, 1685. Cal. Hist. MSS. (Eng.), 164. Cf. N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 356.

William St. was laid out prior to this date.—See III: 1012; C. P. 87, Vol. II.

The management of the sale of "y<sup>e</sup> lands about the Doque and in other parts of y<sup>e</sup> City" having been left by the common council, on Sept. 30, 1686, to the mayor, he now makes an accounting. This

1687 shows the sale of 14 lots to several persons, yielding a "Balance" June May of £470. His report not having been entered in the "Council 13 Book" at this time, was recorded on July 25, 1687.—M. C. C., I: 188. See Dec. 3, 1686.

5 Gov. Dongan executes a lease to William Smith, for 99 years, at a yearly rent of £5, of "All that Old Decayed Messuage or Tenement, Toft or Parcels of Ground with the Appurtenances, situated, lying and being in the City of New York aforesaid, now or late in the tenure and occupation of Thomas Coker, containing in breadth to the west or river 54 feet, and in length to the north 130 feet."—Liber Patents, VI: 221 (Albany). See Dec. 8, 1683; Nov. 15, 1753; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 949; Pl. 174. Vol. III.

9 The French Protestants of New York, in a petition to Dongan, swear obedience to the king, and ask in return "that Merchants, Masters of Vessels, and others who settle in this Country, may have the privilege of trading, going and coming in & to all places in America, Islands and Mainlands, that are under the Kings dominion without the Governors of said Countries giving them any trouble, disturbing their Commerce and treating them otherwise than as his Majesty's Natural Subjects."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 419. On July 19, the "Lords of Trade" wrote Dongan to give encouragement to French Protestants to settle with their families within the province and to trade as "natural born subjects." Their names were to be sent to England so that "Letters of Denization" might issue under the great seal, as required by the "Acts of Trade and Navigation."—Ibid., III: 426-27.

18 Dongan informs the "Lord President" that he has appointed James Graham and Stephen van Courtlandt to manage the revenue.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 424. See, further, Nov. 4.

20 Dongan writes—"I am a bold man and have many irons in my fire, building chimneys from the ground, sodding the fort, mounting all the guns, and paving the batteries with freestone from Newark, which, though expensive, will be made up by its lasting maybe for ever."—Extract from a letter, pub. in Cal. of State Papers, America and West Indies, 1699, with addenda 1621-1698 (London, 1908), p. 604, item 1153.

" Referring to the shipping of Boston as compared with New York, Dongan writes to Lord Sunderland: "They [the Bostonians] can load thirty or forty ships in a year for England Spain and other Countreys whereas we cannot load above three and that mostly of whale oyle taken at the East End of Long Island which too they are angry they cannot deprive us of." He says there should be encouragement of the trade here because all the king's revenue comes from it. "And in truth my Ld we are very bonest in our trade we doe nothing contrary to the acts of navigation. . . . I hope those Gentlemen that now have the management of the Revenue will give a better acct of it then ever yett has been given. I am sure it could never happen in a better tyme for I'm in debt over head and eares both upon the King's acct and my own, it having been my misfortune to come into a place where neither houses, forts, batteries, carriages of guns nor nothing in repayr."

"And I can safely take it upon the Evangelists that of the small Revenue I have been a better husband for the King than ever I was for my selfe in my own concerns. "And truly my Lord this place where I am is very expensive every thing being very deare."—From a copy (among the Dongan MSS. in the N. Y. Pub. Library) of the original letter in the Public Record Office, London.

31 It is ordered by the governour and council that "a tax of ½ d. on the pound" be raised to defray the expenses incurred or to be incurred in England for the good of the province.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 165, citing "Legislative Minutes." Such an act was passed on June 14.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xix.

June The "Mayor, Aldermen, etc." are required by the governour and his council "to make an ordinance that all new buildings be uniform and with party walls."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 166, citing "Council minutes." On July 25, because the governour thus desires that the mayor shall "take Care that the buildings to be made at y<sup>e</sup> Dock be Uniforme," it is ordered by the common council that the mayor, with others of his choice, shall "Discourse y<sup>e</sup> severall Purchasers of y<sup>e</sup> lots there upon that Point."—M. C. C., I: 188.

13 The business transacted by the governour and council on this day concerns the following subjects: "The negroes of the Bowry to clean the easement behind the fort; proclamation in regard to naturalization ordered; petition of the Lutheran elders rejected, and petitioners referred to the court; Jacobus Vandewater ordered to deliver the books of the States General or W. I. Company to Wm. Nicolls."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 166.

The attorney-general is ordered by the governour and council to draw a legislative bill enacting that all bills, bonds, records, etc., shall be in English. The bill was passed the next day.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng, 166; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xix. See Nov. 17, 1674.

In the absence of Gov. Dongan at Albany, Maj. Van Cortlandt is to take charge of the seals, Maj. Flypsen of the keys of the presses containing the books and records, and John Knight of other books, etc., and act as deputy secretary. On July 26, Charles Lodwyck, John de la Val, and George Mackenzie were required by the council to take an inventory of the books and records in the secretary's office with a view of opening it for public business. Copies of proclamations and acts of council were to be made. On July 30, these copies were to be sent to the sheriffs of all counties; rules being prescribed for receiving and opening them. On Aug. 1, an inventory having been taken of the secretary's office, the keys were to be delivered to John Knight.—Cal. Coun. Min., 53.

A committee of the common council is appointed to "view the streets of the City and Reporte . . . how they find them that that Care may be taken for making Common shores [sewers] and to Pave . . . them as will be found necessary."—M. C. C., I: 188. They reported, on Aug. 8, that they "think convenient that the Pavement of the Guttinger y<sup>e</sup> Here Graff be taken up from Cornelius Barnes his house to Alderman Crundels and be new paved so that the descent all along may be Equall and that it be paved on both sides for y<sup>e</sup> Descent of the water to y<sup>e</sup> River as shall be Directed by y<sup>e</sup> sworne surveyors." It was ordered "that the sd street be new Paved as Is proposed;" also "that the Mill Street be Repaired in y<sup>e</sup> same Manner and that y<sup>e</sup> Pavement of y<sup>e</sup> Brewers street be likewise new Layd from Jasper Nessepats to Brant skaylers house."—Ibid., I: 189.

The common council orders the constables to summon all the inhabitants of the several wards of the city, to appear before a committee of aldermen at the city hall and "Give an account of their freedomes." The aldermen are to determine "who shall be allowed as freemen and who not;" that the names of those allowed may be enrolled.—M. C. C., I: 188. Such an order was again made in 1691-2 (Ibid., I: 228, 248, 264), and again in 1695 (Ibid., I: 373, 389, 393). A later order, Dec. 13, 1695 (q. v.), was more sweeping.

The common council orders "that Alderman Cortlandt Assisted with the surveyors Make two Drafts of the land by the waterside from Coenraat teneycks to Martine Clocks [i. e., from Coenties Slip to Burger's Path] the same to be laid out in lots."—M. C. C., I: 189. The property of both Ten Eyck and Clock may be located on the Burgis View (Pl. 25, Vol. I) by means of the key (I: 132) and the plate description (I: 247). See also Oct. 13.

King James sends to Dongan from Windsor a seal, appointed for the use of the province of New York. He describes it as "being engraven on the one side with Our Royal Effigies on Horsback in Arms over a Landskip of Land & Sea, with a Rising Sun and a Scrole containing this Motto. Alisq[ue] et Idem. And Our Titles round the circumference of the said Seal; There being also engraven on the other side Our Royal Arms with the Garter, Crown, Supporters & Motto, With this Inscription round y<sup>e</sup> Circumference Signillum Provincie Nostrae Novi Eboraci & in America; which said Seal we doe hereby authorize & direct to be used in the Sealing all Patents & Publick Grants of Lands, and all Publick Acts and Instruments which shall be made & passed in our Name & for our service within our said Province and the Territories depending thereon. And that it be to all intents and purposes of the same force & validity as any former seal within our said Province, or as any other seal whatsoever appointed for the use of any of our Plantations in America is or hath been."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 427. (A footnote suggests that the motto is from Horace's "Carmen Seculare.") See, further, Aug. 11, 1688.

On or about Aug. 15, Dongan wrote to the "Lord President" of the lords of trade: "A Great part of the Fort & Brest Work which was down I have rebuilt, have, and still am repairing the Batteries have remounted seven & thirty Guns, with new Carriages have new Roof'd the Officers quarters & am patching & mending y<sup>e</sup> Soldiers & my own, Dayly the timber & Plank in this Country mounting away to dust in four or five year time."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 429.

Dongan recommends to the "Lord President" that people be sent from Ireland to colonize New York Province.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 157.

- 1687 An order is issued for a draft of every tenth man of the militia of the province, to defend the frontiers of Albany and Schenectady. —
- Sept. —
11 The council having heard that "ye french at Canada are providing fifteen hundred pair of Snowshoes," and letters from Albany expressing apprehension lest the French come "down upon them this Winter," therefore, the militia here and elsewhere in the province is ordered put in readiness "to go up thither."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.). I: 166. Col. Nicholas Bayard is to be in command of the militia here.—Cal. Coun. Min., 54-55.
- 27 The resolutions of the "Court of Lieutenant" (see Oct. 16, 1686) are confirmed.—Cal. Coun. Min., 55.
- 29 Stephanus van Cortlandt is appointed mayor.—Cal. Coun. Min., 55. He had held the office ten years earlier.—See Oct. 13, 1677. On Oct. 14, he was installed.—M. C. C., I: 191. With all the other civil magistrates, he was continued in office for 1688-9 (ibid., I: 198-200), a fact which was overlooked in a note by the editor of the Minutes in VIII: 149.
- " William Merritt, collector of excise for the city, petitions for the licensing of persons who keep boarders.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 168.
- Oct. The common council orders "that ye street to be made by the 13 New lots by ye<sup>e</sup> Water side from the Weigh house [present Moore St.] to Martin Clocks [Hanover St.] be hence forth called ye See A. Dock street."—M. C. C., I: 190. Formerly, this street was The Strand, or The Waal.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007.
- 24 On or about this date, Gov. Dongan left New York for Albany, and the council empowered Maj. Anthony Brockholls to sign warrants, passes, etc. in his absence.—Cal. Coun. Min., 56. See March 28, 1688, regarding Dongan's return. Brockholls's commission as commander-in-chief first placed him in charge of the government on Nov. 7, 1677 (q.v.), and again on Jan. 7, 1681 (q.v.).
- 31 Andros visits Hartford to establish his authority. He writes the word "Finis" at the bottom of the assembly records of that colony, and demands the immediate surrender of its liberal charter. Tradition relates that this was secretly taken by Joseph Wadsworth and hidden in an oak-tree.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 335; Bancroft, op. cit., I: 587-88.
- See A. Nov. 1 After hearing the charges against Lucas Santen (see Sept. 20, 1686), the king appoints Matthew Plowman to be collector at New York in Santen's place, at a salary of £300 per annum. Plowman's instructions were given on Dec. 13. Among these is the direction that all vessels coming within the channel of New York or the Hudson River shall be obliged to make entries of their lading at New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 500-3.
- 4 In a letter to Dongan of March 20, 1688, the lords of the treasury directed the governor to require from Plowman the security which he had been ordered to give in England but had neglected giving. If Plowman failed to give security in New York before entering upon his office as collector, the lords ordered Dongan to suspend him until such obligation should be fulfilled.—Blathway's Jour. (transcript), I: 492-93.
- 10 Hitherto, Dongan had not succeeded in getting the king to recognize the Iroquois as his subjects; but now a warrant arrives from England authorizing the governor to protect the Five Nations, and to repel the French from their territory by force of arms, should they attack the villages again.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 503-4; Winsor, op. cit., IV: 349; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 326.
- 24 The common council orders that James Larkin "Deliver the Key of ye<sup>e</sup> City Market house to ye<sup>e</sup> Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 192. This was now the public warehouse.—See July 24, 1686. See, further Feb. 26, 1688.
- 27 Matthias Nicolls, writing to Maj. Gen. John Winthrop, says: "It was my hap to be at Southold the beginning of this month, at our annual Courts, when the great Guns echoed to us on Long Island side, his Ex<sup>ty</sup> Sr Edmund Andros, welcome back to the rivers mouth, from his progress through Connecticut, where he was accompanied by an honourable suite, amongst whom your worthy self was one . . . the times are well alter'd in the reception of Sr Edmund Andros in those parts now, to what the[y] were formerly."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 163.
- Dec. The consistency of the Dutch Reformed Church, after considering "the great decay of their church building, which there is no hope of repairing," believes "it necessary to inquire after the proper means of building a new church." They pass a resolution to solicit contributions, which shall be payable in three installments, on July 1, 1688, 1689, and 1690, respectively.—Eccles. Rec., II: 950-51. See Dec. 12, 1686; April 4, 1688; Aug. 21, 1688; Dec. 8, 1691.
- 1688
- Prior to this year, a spur or fortification was erected before the gate of the fort.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892), 170-77. This was called "a Horoworke," in 1695, on Miller's plan of "The Fort in New York" (Pl. 23-b, Vol. I). It evidently had been removed before c. 1773, as it is not shown on Pl. 46-a, Vol. I.
- In a memorial to the British board of trade in 1696, Jacob Leisler (2d) and Abraham Gouverneur stated that in 1688 there were in New York province "about 8000 families out of which there might be raised 12000 fighting men, from 16 to 60 years of age."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 213.
- In or about this year, the French Huguenots (Protestants) had a church "butting Northward on the Pettycoat Lane."—Wittmeyer, Hist. Sketch of the Eglise Francaise. There is no record showing that this edifice was erected by the congregation for a church, and the probability is that it was the house of one of the members, so used. Pettycoat, Petticoat, or Petticoat Lane was later called Marketfield St.; it extended from Whitehall to Broad St. Part of this street was closed when the New York Produce Exchange was erecting its building, and that structure now covers the site of the earliest French church in New York.—See The Castello Plan, II: 255-56; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933, 1007; Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 679, 682, 743 et seq. This church building was sold, and on July 8, 1704 (q.v.), the corner-stone of a new church, the Eglise du St. Esprit, was laid on the north side of Pine St., east of Nassau St.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 72; Wittmeyer, op. cit.; Eccles. Rec., III: 1528. For the succession of its pastors, see Curwin, A Manual of the Reformed Church in Am. (1902), 1002. Du Simitière, writing in or about 1769, asserted that "Before 1690, the French Protestants, at the beginning a small number in New York, held their assembly in a certain house in the little street which runs from Broadway to North River past the new house of P. R. Livingston. It was afterwards transferred into the street which runs from Broadway to Broad Street, named Marketfield Street but commonly called Petticoat Lane, from where it was transferred into the present church which was built in 1704."—Translated from a volume, lettered "Papers relating to N. England, N. York, etc., formerly belonging to Du Simitière," now in the Ridgway Branch of the Library Co. of Phila.
- Instructions are sent to Dongan to maintain friendly relations with Dennville, the French governor of Canada.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 504; Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I. (1688-88), 488.
- The common council orders that Anthony Demelt "Shall Keepe ye<sup>e</sup> Key of ye<sup>e</sup> market house" (the city warehouse—see July 24, 1686) until March 25; and receive od. per ton for "Every Night of Such Goods as Shall be hosed in ye<sup>e</sup> same," and "two Stivars Wampum" for "Every half Bar<sup>ll</sup>." This shall be for the city's benefit.—M. C. C., I: 194. On March 24, Demelt's time was extended.—Ibid., I: 195.
- The common council appoints Leonard Beckwith surveyor for the city and county of New York.—M. C. C., I: 194-95. Beckwith's name first appeared as surveyor in an undated record of March 15 or 16, 1677.—Cal. Land Papers, 14.
- 28 Gov. Dongan returns from Albany.—Cal. Coun. Min., 57. See Oct. 25, 1687. Capt. Jervis Baxter, one of the councillors, had come down from Albany to New York on March 13 with instructions from Dongan "for the Council to consider ways and means to defray the extraordinary charges which the French movement had caused the province. These charges were more than eight thousand pounds; and the Council, finding that New York 'alone is no way able to bear so great a burthen,' advised that the 'neighboring colonies' should be invited to contribute."—Brothhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 495-96. With the authority of the king's letter of Nov., 1687, Dongan calls on the governments of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and New Jersey to aid that of New York with money; as New England, "being to help us with six hundred men, any other assistance cannot be proposed from them."—Ibid., II: 496.
- At this council meeting, called by Dongan on his return to New York, and at which he gave an account of his doings at Albany, it was resolved to address the king in support of the appeal to Lord Sunderland made by Dongan from Albany, and in this they stated "that this government has been much diminished by taking 1688 away Pemaquid, the Jerseys, Pennsylvania, and the lower counties

 Mar. of Delaware; that this is the bulwark of all these parts of America; 28 that the revenue is but small, yet the charges very great; that Connecticut in his Majesty's patent from Charles the Second, is added to Boston by the contrivance of the Governor of it and the Clerk of the Colony, and unknown to the major part of the Colony; that the French war has stop't the beaver trade; so that, without some speedy help, this place will be ruined."—Ibid. See A., Feb. 19.
 Apr. The king having issued a proclamation at Whitehall on Dec. 23, 2 last, relative to the queen's expectation of the birth of a child, Dongan issues a proclamation appointing April 11 as a day of public thanksgiving.—Eccles. Rec., II: 951-52. See Aug. 24.

" Daniel Vervelen, who petitions the council for "a new grant of the Island and the Ferry at Spiteing Devell," formerly held by his father (see July 3, 1667), is permitted to hold the premises until further order.—From Council Min. (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library, copied from Albany records; N. Y. Col. MSS., Eng., 169.

4 "The "Minister, Elders and Deacons," as representatives of the "Dutch Reformed Congregation within this city," petition Dongan that they may be incorporated as "The Minister or Ministers the Elders and Deacons of the Dutch Reformed Church in New York." The petition states that they "are informed of his Excellency's inclination that a church should be built outside of the fort and within the city," and they desire to be made "a Body Corporate and Ecclesiastical," so that persons contributing to build the church may be safeguarded.—Eccles. Rec., II: 952-53. At the same time, they petition the common council for a grant to them and their successors of "a certain vacant piece of ground formerly designed for that purpose, . . . or any other convenient place" fit for their church building.—Ibid., II: 953-54. The latter petition is the renewal of one drawn but not presented on Dec. 12, 1686 (q. v.). Although this petition is apparently the one specified as granted in the resolution of Aug. 21, 1688 (q. v.), it was again presented on Dec. 8, 1691 (q. v.), granted, and a deed soon executed.

7 "A change in the constitution and government of the province is resolved upon in England. The entire country from the Delaware to the St. Croix, in Maine, is consolidated into one government, and placed under the rule of Sir Edmund Andros. His commission
 "passed the Great Seal" on April 7, appointing him "Capt<sup>l</sup>
 Plymouth, new Hampshire, Main, the Narraganset Country, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York and East @ West Jersey, and of all the Continent in America from 40° Deg: No: Lat: to the River of St. Croix (Pensilvania @ Delaware excepted) by the name as formerly of New England."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 536.
 By this commission, Andros's authority, which had been conferred upon him in June, 1686 (see A.), and which extended over the colony of Massachusetts Bay, the colony of New Plymouth, and the provinces of New Hampshire, Maine, and the Narraganset country, is now extended over the other colonies and provinces named, which are thereby annexed to New England. The powers conferred by this commission are exceedingly broad and strong. For example, he is given authority "to erect raise and build within our Territory and Dominion aforesaid, such and so many forts, platforms, Castles, cities, boroughs, towns, and fortifications" as he shall judge necessary; and "any of them to demolish or dismantle as may be most convenient." He is to hold office, or may be recalled at the king's pleasure.—Ibid., III: 537-42.

16 "One of the instructions given by the king to Andros is that the seal which the king gave the province of New York on Aug. 14, 1687, shall be "forthwith broken and defaced," in Andros's presence; and "that the Seal appointed for the said colony of New England be henceforth made use of for all that our Territory and Dominion in its largest extent & boundaries aforementioned." Another instruction is: "And you shall transmit unto us by the first opportunity a Mapp with the exact description of all the whole country as far as any discovery shall be made thereof, and of the several fortifications you shall find or erect there." Another is:
 "And inasmuch as great inconveniences may arise by the liberty of printing within our said Territory, under your Government, you are to provide by all necessary orders, that no person keep any printing press for printing, nor that any book pamphlet or other matter whatsoever be printed without your special leave and license first obtained."—Ibid., III: 543-49. The legislative power is continued in the governour and council, as under Dongan.—
 "Historical Introd.," Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xxii. Cf. Aug. 11.

Capt. Francis Nicholson is given a commission as lieutenantgovernour of New England, with directions to observe such orders as he shall receive from "the Chief Govf of New England" (Andros).—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 537.

The king at Whitehall issues an order to Dongan to deliver the seal of the province of New York, public papers, and ensigns of government, to Andros, and to return to England, there to receive marks of the king's favour for his services in America.—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, III: 550. This order was read in the meeting of the govern-our council at New York on July 28 (q. v.).—*N. Y. Hist. Soc.
 Collections* (1821), III: 353. It reached Dongan prior to that date on his return from Albany. Credit is given by Brodhead to the policy and firmness of Gov. Dongan in bringing to pass the abandonment of Niagara by the French, although before it was accomplished his authority over New York had ceased.—Hist. State of N. Y., II: 509.

The proprietors of East Jersey submit to Andros.—N. J. Archives, 1st ser., II: 26; Bancroft, op. cit., II: 311-2.

For the support of the government, the council resolves to make a new tax levy of £2,556 upon all the inhabitants and freeholders in the province, to be paid to the collector at the custom-house in New York before Nov. 1. The amount to be levied in N. Y. City is £434.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 167.

King James issues an order that the New York "Company of Foot" be formed into two companies of fifty private soldiers, the "Establishment" to take effect Aug. 4. Beside the privates, each company is to have a captain, a lieutenant, an ensign, two sergeants, three corporals, and one drummer. In addition there are to be one master gunner, four matrosses, a "chirurgion," a chaplain, and a store-keeper. Compensation varies from eightpence per day for a private to eight shillings per day for the captain. The total daily cost is estimated at £87:10: the annual cost, at £2,332:19:2.—

Mayor Bayard's order of Sept. 15, 1686 (q. v.), requiring the city surveyors to survey the vacant land "near and in y<sup>e</sup> Dock," and "to lay y<sup>e</sup> same out in lots," is entered in full in the Minutes at this time, with the additional order "that m<sup>r</sup> John Kipp and
 m<sup>r</sup> Thomas Crundell and M<sup>r</sup> Dirik Van Clyff and Make Report thereof under their hands to this board the second Monday in June Next."—M. C. C., I: 195-96.

The common council appoints a committee to "vieu y<sup>e</sup> New other Inconvenience to y<sup>e</sup> City or any of y<sup>e</sup> streets therein is occasioned by laying out y<sup>e</sup> sd lots as they Now are if they shall be of y<sup>e</sup> Heer Graft to Ruun into It."—M. C. C., I: 196. The street to be laid out running into the dock is the extension of Broad St.

 from Dock or Pearl St. through the new-made land.—See June 14.

The court of mayor and aldermen assigns definite places on the water side for wood to be "Coarded," namely, "at y<sup>e</sup> Burgers Gate and between y<sup>e</sup> Weigh house and Francis Parsons his house."—

Gov. Thomas Dongan transfers to George Browne a lot now known as 56 Wall St.—Liber Deeds, XVII: 90-91 (New York).
 Browne sold to William Cox (Ibid., XVIII: 92-94) on March 13, 1689. In 1691, Cox being then dead, Capt. William Kidd married his widow, and came into possession of this parcel which, with his wife, he transferred, Jan. 27, 1694, to John Watson and Katherine, his wife.—Ibid., XXI: 75-77 (New York). For other properties of Capt. Kidd, see Jan. 21, 1687; April 18, 1689.

Privateers being reported off the coast, the council orders that a military watch be kept in New York City.—Cal. Coun. Min., 60.

At a "Court of Lieutenantcy," held in New York on this day, there are adopted "Orders to be Observed by the Military watch Appointed for the City of N: York." These orders provide, among other things, "That the Watch bee Sett Every Night by nine of y<sup>e</sup> clock immediately after the ringing and continew till the ringing of the Bell in the Morning;" and "That frequent rounds be made about the City and Especially towards the Water side and not less then three tymes a night."—These records are deposited in the N. Y.
 Hist. Soc., and pub'd in Collections (1880), 398-400; see also 1682.

14 It is also ordered "that the Carpenters M<sup>r</sup> Adolph Peterson and Peter King fourthwith Sett vp The frames of the Inlett into the Heregrat of Sixteen foot wide leaving on each Side twenty Eight foot for the Streets."—Ibid., I: 196. This is in reference to the extension of the Heregrat through new-made land at the water-side. The graft had been ordered fill'd up May 9, 1676 (q. v.). A sewer now ran beneath the surface of the street, but this sewer was evidently allowed to empty into the inlet.

It is further ordered "that every one Complete their wharfe fitt for Use between this & 1st day of October."—Ibid., I: 196. On April 29, 1691, this order, not having been observed, was re-ueued.—Ibid., I: 225.

July 28 The king's order of April 22 (q. v.) directing Dongan to turn over the government to Andros is read in the meeting of the governour's council.—Cal. Coun. Min., 61; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, III: 353; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 345. See Aug. 11.

30 The Quakers of New York and Long Island make a petition regarding their grievances "for conscience sake." A schedule is made of property taken from the Friends in New York Province since the arrival of Gov. Dongan, showing on what account it was taken.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 171.

Aug. 2 The last legislative act in the Doogan administration is passed. It relates to the tanning of hides.—Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), I: xxiii. For a sketch of the life of Gov. Thomas Dongan, see ibid., I: xxiii (footnote by O'Callaghan, citing "the manuscript Introduction to The Laws of New York" from 1664-1691, about to be published by George H. Moore, Esq."). He remained in America until 1691, when he returned to England.

4 It is ordered by the common council "that Fredrick Phillips Builds his house: Square vpon the Wharfe and fill up and make: the Said Wharfe whereon the Said house is to be built, twenty five foote broad; from the front of the Said house to the End of his Ground: rounding twenty five foote to the old Dock, and that the Said Fredrick Phillips doe leave for the breadth of ther Street fronting from the Said House: tenne foote, the Same to be Don and Completed by the first of January next."—M. C. C., I: 200.

11 Andros, having received the king's commission (see April 7) "for the annexing the Province of New York and 1st East & West Jerseys to his Majesty's territory of N. England," thereupon "addressed himselfe to that service with all convenient speed." Leaving Francis Nicholson installed as lieutenant-governour at Boston, and "being accompanied with severall of the members of His Majesty's Council," he arrives at New York on Aug. 14, "being mett by a regiment of foot and a troop of horse belonging to that place."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 554-567. "His Majesty's commission was read in 1st Fort and afterwards published at 1st City Hall, and immediately His Excellency [Gov. Andros] sent far and received from Coll. Dongan the seal of the late Gov<sup>t</sup> which was defaced and broken in Council; then a Proclamation for continuing the revenue, and all persons civil & military in their respective offices till further order was published."—From Randolph's letter to the lords of trade, dated Oct. 8, 1688, in ibid., III: 567; M. C. C., I: 198.

"The breaking of Dongan's provincial seal, which had been in use less than a year (see Aug. 14, 1687), and which Brodhead refers to as the "almost virgin seal" (Hist. State of N. Y., II: 512), was in accordance with King James's instructions of April 16 (q. v.) to Andros: "And whereas since our Accession to the Crown, Wee have appointed a new Seal for our Colonies of New England, as also another Seal for our Province of New York [Aug. 14, 1687], which being now united under one governm<sup>t</sup>, Wee do hereby direct and require that the Seal appointed for the said Colony of New England be henceforth made use of for all that our Territory and Dominion in its largest extent & boundaries aforementioned; and that the Seal for our Province of New York be forthwith broken and defaced in your presence."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 546.

A description of the seal of New England is contained in the receipt given for it by Andros, as governor of New England, on Sept. 29, 1686: "Engraven on the one side with His Majesty's effigies standing under a canopy, robed in his royal vestments and crowned, with a sceptre in the left hand, the right hand being extended towards an Englishman and an Indian, both kneeling; the one presenting the Fruits of the Country, and the other a scroll, and over their heads a Cherubim holding another scroll with this motto: Nunquam libertas gratior extat, with his Majesty's titles arround the circumference; there being on the other side the King's Arms, with the garter, crown, supporters and motto, and this inscription round the Circumference: Sigillum Novae Angliae in America."—From the original receipt in the State Paper Office, London, N. E., IV: 267; cited also in Cal. State Papers, Am. and West Indies, 1685-88, 252. A parchment, having attached to it the great seal of New England which was received by Andros in 1686, is in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. An historical account of this seal accompanies it, written by Geo. Adlard, of New York, Feb. 4, 1862, and addressed to Luther Bradish, president of the society. It was published in Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 738 et seq.

It is evident, as Mrs. Van Rensselaer has pointed out (Hist. City of N. Y., II: 347-51), that New York was now "no longer in the old way a city-state." See, further, Addenda.

"Thus Andros began his second government of New York. He had left it seven years before to be justified with the Duke of York. In the interval, the province had gained and lost a popular assembly. Her old governor now revisited familiar scenes to assume almost imperial authority as the viceroi of James the Second."—Brodhead, op. cit., II: 512; Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 1. The loss of the popular assembly is seen in that part of Andros's instructions (of April 16, q. v.) where he is directed "to observe in the passing of laws that the Stile of enacting the same by the Governour and Council be henceforth used and no other."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 218.

"One of Andros's first official acts, after being installed governour at New York, is to write to M<sup>rs</sup>ieur De Denonville, gouverneur of Canada, that the king has placed the government of the province of New York and "other parts of his territory," together with the "dominion of New England" (see April 7), all under his command; and he gives notice to Denonville that the king "bath thought fitt to owne the Five Nations or Caotons of Indians . . . and to protect them as such."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 555.

The common council orders that the recorder draw an address "to his Excellency [Andros] for Confirming the Severall: Priviledges belonging to ther: City: and Congratulating his Coming here:"—M. C. C., I: 200.

"All Civil Magistrates &c<sup>s</sup> are Continued by Publication of the Governour & Council."—M. C. C., I: 200.

The common council orders that "a Transport" (or conveyance) be drawn "for the peec of ground formerly appointed for the building of a Church."—M. C. C., I: 200. The reference here is evidently to the ground petitioned for by the Dutch Church on April 4, 1688 (q. v.). The order appears not to have been carried out, for the same petition was again made on Dec. 8, 1691 (q. v.).

24 "Capt. Francis Nicholson, who is in Boston, having sent to Andros "ye joyfull news of a Princes being borne" (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 554), Andros issues a proclamation at New York announcing the birth of a prince, and appointing Sunday, Sept. 2, as a day of thanksgiving.—M. C. C., I: 199. Dr. Corwin, in annotating the Eccles. Rec. (II: 955), is in error in stating that "a Princess" was born; it was James Francis Edward.—See memorandum under title "Thanksgiving" in Index of M. C. C., VIII: 450.

A side-light on the character of Capt. Nicholson was revealed by Andrew Hamilton in the course of his argument at the trial of John Peter Zenger, Aug. 4, 1735 (q. v.), when he explained that the first libelling of a governour that he had ever known of in America was of Nicholson. He related the circumstances, which, he said, "may look like a romance," and which he presented as an example of the exercise of arbitrary power. The alleged libeller was a parson, whom Nicholson prosecuted, until the proceeding was stopped by order of Queen Anne, "with sundry others set on foot by the same governour, against gentlemen of the greatest worth and honor in that government" (Boston).—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 457-58.

An act having been passed on May 17, by Dongan and his council, for raising £2,555:6 by taxation, before Nov. 1, to pay the charges of the government, and this having been suspended on July 30, it is now ordered by Andros and his council "that ye said act be fully and duly executed according to the tenor and true intent and meaning thereof, and ye<sup>r</sup> money therein mentioned duly levied, raised, collected and paid, as therein is directed, of which all Justice of ye<sup>r</sup> peace & other officers & persons concerned are to take notice & conforme themselves accordingly."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xxi, xxiii, and xxiv, citing Tribullant's Connecticut Records, III: 447; see also mention of this "arbitrary and despotic form of government," overthrown by Leisler in 1689 (ibid.).

1688 The proprietors of West Jersey vote to surrender their government to New England.—Bancroft, op. cit., II: 32.

Oct. 4 Andros leaves New York for Boston. "Some days after that Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson delivered in an order" (presumably to the New York council) from Andros "to view and take an account of the condition of the fort and City fortifications, ammunition of war, &c . . .
the fort being extraordinarily out of repair."—N. Y. Col. Docs., etc., to take an inventory of the guns, munitions, and military stores,

"Peter King, John and Andrew Moyer, Carpenters, Swert olpherts & his son were employed only to repair the necessary worke, making the houses, soldiers' rooms, Courteguards &c. only wind and weather tight which took up the time till the winter and cold weather hindered their worke." After that Stephen van Cortlandt got an order from Andros "to furnish all materials for the repaying of the ffort, as Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson should order." Nicholson told Van Cortlandt "to provide the plank and slippers for to make the platformes," and the "said Carpenters" gave Van Cortlandt the dimensions, who "had them sawed and cutt by one John Mash & Josiah ffljmar and were ready in the month of March and April" (1689). "The lime for the mason's worke" Van Cortlandt "had spoken for to be ready when there should be occasion for to use the same which was resolved on by Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson to be done out of hand if this unhappy revolucon at Boston had not happened."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 590-91.

King James II abdicates the crowne and leaves England.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 572. From this day until Feb. 13, 1689 (q. v.), was the "Interregnum," when England was without a government. Dec. 11

"In the year 1688, war broke out in Europe between the French and Spaniards; and in a short time the English joined the Spanish against the French. This war continued nearly to the end of King William's reign—and, during that time, New York became the principal headquarters of the privatere and adventurers from Europe and other parts."—"The Red Sea Men," in Man. Con.
Coun. (1857), 461. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 223.

"The first privatere commissioned by the government of New York, which is found to have turned from the legalized capture of enemy's property to the more profitable one of piracy upon the commerce of friendly nations, is William Mason, who received his commission in 1689 [for May 19, 1690, q. v.], authorizing him
"to sail for Quebec in Canada, to war as to his wisdom should seem meet, and to assault, and destroy . . . the French interests in Canada, and to seize and make prize of all goods on shore, and vessels at sea belonging to the French king or to Frenchmen, and to kill, slay and injure the people of that nation in any way possible." Several vessels similarly commissioned sailed from New York about the same time, with instructions to act under Mason as their admiral.
Some of these vessels were successful in the design of crippling the enemy's commerce, and brought in several French prizes to the port of New York, which were regularly condemned in the admiralty, and there is no reason to suspect the government, then in power (Leisler's administration), of any design to countenance any but the recognized system of war. But Mason himself, being less successful in obtaining prize money on the American coast, pushed his adventure to a distant region, then but little known to the commercial world except to slave traders, and cruised along the eastern coast of Africa, near the island of Madagascar, in the Arabian gulf, and in the Red Sea." How he turned pirate, and how his successor in command, Edward Coats, returned to the east end of Long Island in April, 1693, and procured the favour of Gov.
Fletcher, who, with his council, benefitted by gifts from Coats,—is engagingly told in Man. Con. Coun. (1857), 462-63.

In this year, the wind-mill on the Common was destroyed by lightning.—See Nov. 24, 1694.

During this year, or somewhat earlier, the Fly blockhouse, in the Smith's Vly or Valley, was erected.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo ed.), II: 399, 407. Depositions, two years later, recounted the surrender of the Fly blockhouse, held by Leisler, to Ingoldesby.—See March 13, 17, and 18, 1691. Its site was at what now is Wall St., at its intersection with Pearl St. See Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.

1689 The Chevalier De Callieres, of Montreal, gives to the Marquis Jan. of Seignelay an account of a project for the conquest of the province of New York. It includes an attack upon "Manathe" (N. Y. City). "This place," he states, "consists of a town composed of about 200 houses and can put about 400 inhabitants under arms. They are divided into four Companies of Infantry of 50 men each, and three Companies of Cavalry of the same number, the horses being very common in that country. . . . The king of France assented to the proposal on June 7, and gave instructions to Count De Frontenac accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 179-85. Andros issues, at Fort Charles, Pemaquid, a proclamation informing the public of a letter from King James, dated Oct. 16, 1688, which states that the king has received advice that "a great and sudden Invasion from Holland, with an armed Force of For- eigners and Strangers, will speedily be made in an hostile manner upon His Majesty's Kingdom of England;" that, while false pre- tensions may be given out, "relating to Liberty, Property, and Religion," it is manifest that this invasion purposes "an absolute Conquest of His Majesty's Kingdoms;" and that this purpose is promoted by "some of His Majesty's Subjects, being persons of wicked and restless Spirits, implacable Malice, and desperate Designs, who . . . do again endeavour to embroil His Majesty's Kingdom in Blood and Ruin, to gratify their own Ambition and Malice, proposing to themselves a Prey and Booty in such a publick Confusion." The proclamation states, further, that the king will rely upon his own people and not upon foreign succour for defence; and that he "does solemnly Conjure His Subjects to lay aside all manner of Antimosities, Jealousies, & Prejudices," and unite in defence of His Majesty and their native country. While the king has made "such provisos as did become Him," and has no doubt "of being found in so good a Posture that His Enemies may have cause to repent such their rash and unjust Attempt," this proclama- tion is made to the king's subjects of New England "that they may be the better prepared to resist any Attempts that may be made by His Majesties Enemies in these parts, and secured in their trade and Commerce with His Majesty's Kingdom of England."—From one of the printed originals in N. Y. Soc. Library; there is a facsimile in Man. Com. Coun. (1859), opp. p. 452. Cf. Brodhead, op. cit., II: 548.

Feb. The reign of William III and Mary begins. It ended March 8, 1702.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: Intro'd., p. viii; ibid., III: 572. A most useful printed source-book of the history of that series of important events involved in the English religious and political revolution of 1688-9, is Cobbett's Parliamentary History of England (London, 1809), V: 1 et seq. Brodhead, evidently following this authority in his Hist. State of N. Y., II: 535 et seq., gives an excellent summary of these events as current history, with reference to their bearing upon American affairs, particularly in this province.

Following the abdication of James (see Dec. 11, 1688), Brodhead observes (pp. 536-39): "Prompt action was necessary to prevent anarchy in the deserted kingdom. In this crisis, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, with other British peers, met at the London Guildhall [Dec. 11, 1688], assumed provisional direction of English affairs, and declared for the Prince of Orange [son-in-law of James II]. William soon afterward came from Windsor to Saint James [Dec. 18] where a great multitude of Protestant Englishmen, wearing Orange ribands—"the emblem of civil and religious freedom"—assembled to welcome their Dutch 'Deliverer.' . . . Having received the communion according to the Episcopal ritual of England [Dec. 30], as his 'first act' of administration the Dutch prince published a declaration authorizing all civil officers in the kingdom, "not being Papists," to act in their several places until further orders.

"The Convention called by William declared that the throne was vacant by the abdication of James. It was then considered how the vacancy should be filled [Jan. 22, 1689]. The Commons resolved that the 'religion, laws, and liberties' of England should be first secured [Jan. 29]. Somers accordingly submitted a report [Feb. 7] reciting the causes of the revolution, and contemplating, among other things, that the forfeited or surrendered charters of the Plantations should be restored. But the clause respecting the restoration of colonial charters was omitted from the Instrument adopted by the Convention [Feb. 12]. That famous state paper—chiefly the work of Somers—set forth the errors and crimes of James; reviewed his administration; asserted the rights of subjects and Parliament; defined the authority of the sovereign, and then settled the English crown on William, Prince, and Mary, Princess of Feb. Orange, during their lives, and the life of the survivor of them, with the executive power in the prince; after them, that on the posterity of Mary; then on the Princess Anne and her posterity; and then on the posterity of William. New oaths of allegiance and abjuration were ordained in place of the abrogated oaths of allegiance and supremacy. This instrument—the most important in English annals next to Magna Charta—is known as the 'Declaration of Rights.' "

According to the chronological record of the debates in parliament on the "Bill of Rights and Succession," it was under consideration throughout the year 1689.—See Cobbett, op. cit., V: 249-53, 339-41, 345-47, 382, 481, 483. It is cited "1 W. & M., sess. 2, c. 2; and 2 W. & M., Chap. 1."

A "Board of Trade and Plantations" is appointed at Whitehall, and ordered to meet Feb. 18 to prepare drafts of proclamations "for Proclaiming their Majesties in the several Plantations and for continuing all persons in their Employments and Offices till further order."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 572; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1868) 12-13.

Information is brought to Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson by letter from Philadelphia that the Prince of Orange has invaded England. At the council meeting at Fort James on this day, it is decided to open a number of private letters addressed to persons in New York and Boston, which were brought by the same messengers from Philadelphia, their object being "the prevention of any tumult and the divulging of soe strange news." They find the same news is contained in two of these letters. Whereupon it is further resolved "forthwith to send Expresses both by water and land, unto his Excellency Sr Edmond Andros Governour" in chief to acquaint him with this matter. "This is accordingly done.—Coun. Min. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 241-43. This news when given out troubled the Papists.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591.

The council considers the money in the hands of Matthew Plowman, the Roman Catholic collector, "not safe at his lodging being a private house and a great distance from the Fort." They resolve that he "bring all the said money he hath in his hands into his Majesties Fort James there to be locked up in a stroog chest and sealed by him for the better securing of the same till further order from his Excellency."—Coun. Min. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 243. The amount is about £1,200.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591. For the similar case of Collector Santen, see Feb. 23, 1687.

The common council appoints a committee to agree with Capt. John Tuder and others about letting "Such Shops: in the Market house" as it may Conveniently Containe: proport[io]nable to the Length thereof."—M. C. C., I: 202. At the next meeting, the committee reported that they had leased to Tuder "a Place To build a Shop on in the Said market House" for the term of three years from March 25, for a rental 40 shillings a year. This appears to have been the erstwhile warehouse.—See July 24, 1686; Nov. 24, 1687; Feb. 26, 1688. The committee reported on March 30 that it had leased other shops in this market-house. At that time Tuder was appointed to "recieve of all persons Such incomes and benefits as shall accrue to the markett house [warehouse] for Lodging of Merch<sup>ts</sup> Goods: according to the rates Establish<sup>t</sup>," of which he is to have one half and the city [the other].—Ibid., I: 203.

A warrant is issued at Whitehall to pay the two foot-companies to be employed in the province of New York; and a chaplain, surgeon, store-keeper, armorer, master gunner, and two "Matrosses" (or assistant gunners and guards), who are to be employed at specified rates per diem.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 691-92.

It is ordered by the common council "that the Street before m<sup>r</sup> Beckmans Doore be thirty foote wide."—M. C. C., I: 203. This street became known as Queen St., and later the modern Pearl St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007; and Oct. 13, 1694. On April 5/15, Louis XIV declares war on Spain.

Lucas van Tienhoven and wife transfer a lot on Tienhoven St. to William Cox.—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 97-100 (New York). This property is covered by the present Nos. 25, 27, and 29 Pine St. On the death of Cox, Sarah (Bradley) Cox, his widow, married, first John Oort, and second, in 1691, Capt. William Kidd, later notorious as a pirate and commander of the "Adventure" galley. On July 3, 1693, Capt. Kidd, and Sarah, his wife, and Samuel Bradley, her brother, conveyed this parcel of land to Thomas Clark.—Liber Deeds, XXVI: 158-59 (New York). For other of Kidd's properties, see Jan. 21, 1687; May 19, 1688.

- 1689 as governour; with a commission for the government of New England. He was detested by that colony, and the people only needed a rumour of the revolution in England to provoke a rising; he is now thrown into jail.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 321; VI: 65. See also Addenda.
- Edward Randolph, writing "From the Common Gaule in Boston the 29th of May 1689," also gave an account of the imprisonment of Andros.—Ibid., III: 578. Col. Bayard referred to in his narrative of events, dated Dec. 13, 1689.—Ibid., III: 636. Andros himself referred to in his report on his administration, received by the lords of trade May 27, 1690.—Ibid., III: 724.
- The lieutenant-governour convenes those of the council who are in New York, and produces "a declaration from the gentlemen, merchants and Inhabitants of Boston, and the Country adjacent dated April the eighteenth 1689, setting forth the reasons for their apprehending and taking in custody his Excellency the Governour Sr. Edmond Andross." This declaration was brought by one Mr. Veasey, an ensign of a company in "Brantry (Braintree), near Boston. He stated that Andros had been secured in the fort at Boston; that they had taken the castle and frigate, and had imprisoned other persons. "This newes was a great surprizall to the Leftenant Governour and Council," who resolve, because of the small number (four only) in attendance, "That the Mayor should call the Aldermen and Common Council forthwith together to acquaint them with this ill news, and to advise together what best is to be done for his Majesties service and the quieting of the Inhabitants in this conjuncture and troublesome times."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 244-45; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591.
- "Upon hearing the Revolution at Boston and rumors of war from abroad between England and French and the number off the Council being so few, considering the necessity that all affairs ought to be put in good order, the peace kept and government secured from invasion abroad," it is ordered by the lieutenant-governour and council that the mayor, aldermen, and common council with the chief military officers be called together this afternoon, to meet the lieutenant-governour and council at the town hall, to consider what is needed. A letter is sent to the several councils to meet the council in New York on certain days next week.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 246. The news of the war from France, and that the French maltreated the English and Dutch, created "a great frett and tumult in the Towne."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591.
- The four members of the council, Nicholson, Phillips, Van Cortlandt, and Bayard, who are the only ones left out of thirty-nine, write to Maj.-Gen. Winthrop, Col. Treat, Col. Allen, Col. Yongs, Col. Pinchere, Walter Clarke, Esq., Walter Newbury, Esq., and Maj. Smith, urging them to "come with all expedition to advise and consult" with them as to what is proper to be done "for the safety and welfare of the Governement [of] this City," etc.—Ibid., III: 248-49.
- At the "Generall Meeting held att the City Hall," in the afternoon, consisting of the lieutenant-governour, the three members of the council (Maj. Stephen van Cortlandt, Frederick Phillips, and Col. Nicholas Bayard), the aldermen, common councilmen, and military officers (including Jacob Leisler, Charles Lodwick, and others), it is unanimously agreed "that the City be forthwith fortified," and a committee is appointed to see what is needed for this object. It is also agreed "for the more security of the fort since the present garrison is but a very small number that some part of the City militia help the Guard in the fort." It is believed this will "remove all the jealousies of the people," and Col. Bayard is recommended to give suitable orders accordingly.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 272-73. The inhabitants begin to keep watch at the fort the following day.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591.
- The justices of the peace and captains of the militia of King's County come to New York to meet the council as requested (see April 27). They promise to do all in their power to keep the people in quietness and defend the country against the common enemy. They resolve to set sentries at Conny Island to watch for incoming vessels and to give warning.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 246-47.
- Capt. Nicholson (the lieutenant-governour), the council, mayor, aldermen, common council, and all the military officers, meet and resolve "upon the fortifying the City;" but "the City being poor and no time to lay taxes upon the people and the Merchants also beginning to dispute the Customes," Capt. Nicholson proposes that the revenue from the first of May be employed toward the city fortifications, and this is thankfully accepted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 592. The committee on fortifications which was appointed on the 27th, reports that five of their number "think it very necessary that the fortifications be according to the bounds of the ancient fortifications," but that Abraham Depewster thinks they should be "according to the later bounds layed out being somewhat further."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1868), 274. See May 16.
- Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson, and the councilors, "Frederick Flypse," "N. Bayard," and "S. Courtlandt," write to Simon Bradstreet, Wait Winthrop, and other gentlemen of Boston, expressing surprise on hearing of "the confusions the Inhabitants at Boston have occasioned by taking that part off the governement to themselves, and that they have seized upon the person of his Excellency and severall of the officers." They add: "We cannot imagine, that any such actions can proceed from any person of quality amongst them, but rather promoted by the rabble. And that for the safety off his Excellency's person those measures have been taken, but hope and doubt not before this time the furie off said persons may be allaid, and that his Excellency and the rest off the officers may be restored to their former stations, or at least have liberty to come hither, for this part of the governement wee find the people in general inclined to peace and quietness and doubt not but will remaine in their duties . . ."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 251; Hutchinson, Hist. of Mass. Bay (ed. of 1765), I: 384-85. The Boston gentleman replied that it was not in their power to grant liberty to Andros.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 592.
- At a "Generall meeting" of the lieutenant-governour, mayor, council, aldermen, common council, and military officers, it is ordered that no rum shall be sold to the Indians in this city and county until further order.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 275.
- "The Justices off the peace off Bergen County and East Yarsay came and met the [Lieut.] Governour" at New York. As there were no military officers in commission there, a captain, lieutenant, and ensign were given commissions.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 247-48.
- A "Representation," dated April 26, from the committee of trade and plantations, is read at the meeting of the privy council at Hampton Court, regarding the state of the provinces and the war with France. It recommends, among other things, "y<sup>e</sup> speedy settling of such a government in New-England, New York and y<sup>e</sup> Jerseys" as will enable the inhabitants of these provinces to oppose their united forces against the French of Canada and Nova Scotia. It is so ordered by the king and council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 573-74.
- All the magistrates and military officers meet to determine where the platforms shall be made and the guns placed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 592. At this "Generall Meeting," a committee reports that they find 17 guns throughout the city without carriages. They recommend that four be placed "against the Widow Richardson's;" three "on a platt forme without the Batterie at the Water gate to be placed vnder the fort;" three or four "on the Wharfe by Col. Dungan's House;" and one or two "on the Wharfe night the State house." A committee of carpenters and masons is appointed "to view the places for to make the platt formes," and to report what planks, etc., are necessary. They reported on May 6, showing in detail what timber, planks, beams, etc., were needed for stockades, platforms, wheels for gun carriages, breastworks, gates, etc. A committee was appointed "to provide the materials for the fortifications;" and it was ordered "that the Proclamation for fortifying the City be forthwith published and coppies thereof put vp att the State House and att the bridge."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 275-78.
- "The civil and military officers from Richmond County came and met the [Lieutenant] Governour and Council at the townehall." He recommends to them "to be watchful with courage and if any ships above the number off two should come within Sandy hook to give us notice thereof and in meantime to keep peace and unity amongst the people which they promised to do."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 248.
- The lieutenant-governour and council write to Maj. Howell at Southampton, L. I., stating, among other things, that they "are daily bussie to fortify the fort and City that wee may be in a fitt posture to resist any forraign enemy," etc. They desire to buy certain "great guns" which are said to be in that part of Long Island.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 252-53.

1689 News reaches members of the council in New York regarding May "the Revolutions at the East End of Long Island and of the dis-4 satisfaction of the people there." Letters are sent by the council to Col. Young and Maj. Howell "to pacify the people" as much as they can.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 592.

5 A merchant from Boston, one Philip French, is stopped near the Fresh Water Pond by a sergeant and a musketeer. He is told there are sentries on all sides of the town. He is taken to the fort, and on the way the soldiers keep the people back with their halberds. The commanders, "M<sup>r</sup> Jacob Laysler and M<sup>r</sup> Charles Lodwick," are sent for, and they examine French "about the present affairs in England" and whether he has any letters for this place.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 587. For Leisler's career, see May 16.

6 At a general meeting (such as was held almost daily) of Lieut-Gov. Nicholson and his council, with the mayor, aldermen and common councilmen of the city, and the military officers, it is ordered "that the Proclamation for fortifying the City be forthwith published and coppies thereof put vp at the State House and at the bridge" (the customary places for government bulletins).—
N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 278.

13 "The Auditor Stephanus Van Cortlandt complaining that the Collector M<sup>r</sup> Matthew Plowman is much backward in making up his acc<sup>t</sup>s, and by his computation much indebted, and also that the said Collector refuses to pay a Bill drawn upon him by the Lieftenant Gouvenor . . . It is ordered that M<sup>r</sup> Plowman be sent for, who coming said he had no money in Cash. Then it was further ordered that the Collector M<sup>r</sup> Plowman bring in the Secretaries office all his bookes, and papers relating to his Majesties revenue both off receipts and disbursements together with his Commission and Instructions and to remaine and stay till he hath given an exact account thereof."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 258-59.

15 Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson, and the council of the province, write from the fort in New York to the lords of trade that the inhabitants of Boston have imprisoned Andros, and several of his council, officers, etc. There is rebellion in Suffolk, Queens, and Westchester Counties. Armed militia have approached as far as Jamaica "in order if they could to make themselves Masters of this City" and fort. Alarming rumours are heard of war with France, "which occasioned a resolve to be made for the new fortifying of this City since all the former [fortifications] . . . are supposed to fall to ruine, if not for some part demolished. But how to raise any money for the accomplishing of any such Fortifications no way could be found to resolve us therein as our condition is now." The civil magistrates and military officers of the city have convened, and by their advice it is ordered that all the revenue arising from the customs, excise, and weigh-house be applied toward defraying the expense of fortifications. Plowman's accounts are being examined.

Judges appointed for this circuit are in custody in Boston.
 Nicholson states it has been fatal to the city and province of New York to be annexed to "that of Boston," and "if it had continued would have occasioned the total ruin of the Inhabitants of said Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 574-76.

16 Certain inhabitants petition the "General Meeting" that "the line for fortifying the said City" be not run "through or before their Lotts of Ground;" but at the next meeting, May 18, there being the rumour of war and the invasion of the French, it was ordered "that the fortifications for this City be layd according to the ancient bounds," as recently ordered.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 281-82.

" Jacob Leisler begins to make his influence felt in the public affairs of the city and province. Col. Nicholas Bayard's narrative of what occurred this year (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 637) alleged that, while the work on the fortifications was begun with vigour and was soon perfected, it was obstructed by "many discords and divisions promoted by the ill contrivances of Jacob Leisler and his associatts." Both in convention and elsewhere, they were endeavouring "to stir up the minds of the people to sedition and rebellion agst the established Authority, and to destroy the Revenue, Upon hopes thereby to be exalted, and reipe [reap] some particular benefit."

Leisler had a ship in port, at this time, laden with wines, on which he refused to pay customs, and "enticed others to do the same." Another narrative (attributed to Bayard) states that the duty on this cargo amounted to more than £100. Leisler contended that the collector (Plowman), being a Papist, was not qualified to act for the Prince of Orange, denying that he had legal power to receive customs. Bayard, however, questioned the sincerity of Leisler's refusal to pay. He intimated that it was for his own private interest; and prefaced his detailed story of the events which followed with the comment, "let the impartial judge."—Ibid., III: 667-68; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 382.

To aid the reader in examining the career and studying the character of Jacob Leisler, the following brief summary of his earlier activities will be found useful. He was "one of the many Protestant Germans who drifted from the Rhine countries into Holland . . . , the son of a clergyman driven by persecution from the Palatinate to Frankfort-on-the-Main."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 184. His name first appears, in records relating to the province of New Netherland, as "Jacob Loyseleur, from Francfort," in a shipping list of soldiers who embarked April 27, 1666, for New Amsterdam.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 37.
 He was then in debt even for his musket (Van Rensselaer, op. cit.
 II: 184); but he soon began to lay the foundations of an ample fortune. Court records of Jan. 1 (q. v.) and 16, 1667, show him a successful trader in tobacco and other goods at wholesale.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 47-49; Rec. N. Am., IV: 180. On March 18, 1667, he was married to Elsie Tymens, a step-daughter of Govert Lockermans, a niece of Annetje Jans, and widow of Peter Cornelisen Vanderveer, merchant.—Marriages in Ref. Dutch Ch., 28; Van Rensselaer, op. cit., II: 185; Man. Com. Conn. (1869), 738, 747. For an account of Leisler's real estate holdings, part of which he acquired by this marriage, see Castello Plan, II: 278, 284.

A curious domestic incident stands out in the records of that time and illustrates his manner of living, and his stubborn will. A maid-servant whom he had discharged sued him for a year's wages (100 guilders in seawant and four beavers). He answered that, as she had consumed "almost a bottle of preserved strawberries, also biscuit of his," as well as received visits from two men, who climbed over the wall while he was at church with his wife, he wanted nothing more to do with her. She entered a general denial, and reported that the children had eaten the strawberries. The court ordered him to pay a quarter's wages according to agreement. At the end of a week, the marshal was required to execute the order.—
Rec. N. Am., V: 77-78, 84.

When it became necessary to fortify the town, Leisler subscribed, on Feb. 24, 1664, 250 fl. toward this object.—Rec. N. Am., V: 30.
 He was one of the many signers of the successful remonstrance addressed to Stuyvesant and his council, in the summer of 1664, in which they pictured the expected destruction by the English of the town and its inhabitants, and pleaded that the generous terms of capitulation offered by the foe might be accepted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 248. In October of that year, he took the oath of allegiance to the government of the Duke of York.—Ibid., III: 74-76.
 The next year, he contributed two fl. toward quartering soldiers (Rec. N. Am., V: 223), and, a few years later, he subscribed 50 guilders "in Goods" toward the repair of Fort James.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 2.

Leisler's name often appeared in court records, as plaintiff, defendant, or otherwise, revealing his enterprise and responsibility.
 On April 22, 1664, a litigant pleaded that he had paid a debt by drawing upon Leisler to the amount of 212 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 47. That his judgment and fairness in business were greatly respected is indicated by the many times, during those years, that he was made referee or arbitrator by the courts in suits at law. For example, on July 25, 1665, he was appointed a referee to inspect tobacco.—Ibid., V: 281-82. For other occasions of the kind, see ibid., V: 79, 162, 246, 250, 376, 401, 4095; VII: 23; Cal. Coun. Min., 17. Between 1667 and 1674, besides doing ordinary duty as jurymen, (Rec. N. Am., VI: 103, 242, 247), he was one of a committee, on Jan. 7/17, 1674 (q. v.), to render a report on amounts due to workmen at the fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 22.

He was equally faithful as a church member, contributing (Feb.
 7, 1667) 12 beavers toward the maintenance of one of the Dutch ministers (Rec. N. Am., VI: 58); and (June 5, 1670) serving as a deacon in the "Reformed Christian Church in New York" (Eccles. Rec., I: 611). Leisler's leadership in opposing what he considered the heresy of Domine Van Rensselaer of Albany (see Sept. 15, 1676) was significant of his intensely religious nature, inherited from his father; and significant also of the fanatical role he was later to play so prominently in 1689-91.

The importation of a ship-load of wines indicates that Leisler was one of the heaviest traders in the province. Indeed, we find that, as early as 1673, he was making large shipments of tobacco, the commodity in which, apparently, he then chiefly dealt. On Oct. 31

of that year, he was defendant in a suit in which the plaintiff demanded "2000 lbs. of tobacco for freight of 25 hogsheads of tobacco from Virginia, according to charter party" (Rec. N. Am., VII: 16, 18, 19); while, on Dec. 12, he was required to pay the "dead freight" on 25 hogsheads of tobacco, which had not been shipped from Maryland by Leisler's factor as agreed (ibid., VII: 32).

He was one of the merchants appointed Feb. 1, 1674, on a commission to make a general assessment upon the "most affluent inhabitants," whose capital was estimated to exceed 1,000 guilders oach (wampum value).—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 685. Their report on Feb. 19, 1674, presented a list of such inhabitants and the amount of their individual wealth. Leisler himself, with a fortune of 15,000 fl., was one of the richest men of his time in New Orange. Only six inhabitants were wealthier. These were Frederick Philipse (sometimes spelled "Philipsen" or "Flipsen"), 80,000 fl.; Cornelis Steenwyck, 50,000 fl.; Nicholas de Meyer, 50,000 fl.; Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, 45,000 fl.; Jeronimus Ebbingh, 30,000 fl.; and Cornelis van Ruyven, 18,000 fl. Johannes de Peyster had the same capital as Leisler.—Ibid., II: 699-700.

He continued to fulfill the usual obligations of citizen and man of business. We find his name in the municipal tax list of Nov. 10, 1676, which reveals the fact that only Frederick Philipse and Cornelis Steenwyck then had greater taxable estates than he.—M. C. C., I: 32. The city was his debtor on Feb. 6, 1677, to the amount of 326 fl. "in wampum" (ibid., I: 45); and he paid the small real estate tax exacted on July 24, 1677 (ibid., I: 50, 52).

His trip to Europe in the summer of 1678, in his own vessel, when he was captured by the Turks and paid his own ransom, stirred the benevolence of the citizens of New York to pay for the release of his fellow sufferers.—See Aug. 17, 1678. On Sept. 15, 1683, he was appointed by Dongan a member of an admiralty court to inquire into any piracies or felonies committed by Capt. Nicholas Collop of the ship "Camelion" of London, his officers and men.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 153.

Public and business obligations of considerable importance were duly performed in the succeeding years; it does not appear that he sought these special public duties, which became matters of formal record, but rather that he was chosen for his conspicuous fitness. He was commissioned captain of militia Sept. 10, 1684.—Ibid., 131. He was appointed a justice of the peace of New York Oct. 13, 1685.—Cal. Coun. Min., 45. He was empowered in 1686 by the inhabitants of Suffolk County, L. I., to represent them in a petition to Gov. Dongan regarding their commercial rights and trade practices.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 124, 164. On Sept. 20, 1689 (q. v.), he purchased a, as agent employed by Huguenots about to come from England, land in New Rochelle.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 368. Doogan appointed him, Sept. 21, 1686, as one of several experts to fix damages sustained by Frederick Philipse (the leading citizen in point of wealth and a member of the council), with his partners, "in the case of the ship 'Beaver.'"—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 159. The records of a contested case, in Nov., 1687, show Leisler concerned in a transaction in salt (ibid., 172); and, in the same month, the governor's council granted him permission "to enter a wreck" (Cal. Coun. Min., 56). One of his various enterprises was said to be "searching the depths of the sea for treasure from the wrecks of plate ships."—Man. Coun. Coun. (1869), 738.

For other facts relating to his career (involving various family connections and associates), revealing his character and ability with impartial fairness, explaining the trend of events just prior to the actual outbreak of the rebellion, and presenting some of the documentary sources of the history of the rebellion, see Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., Vol. II, Chap. 25; De Peyster, Address before the N. Y. Hist. Soc., Nov. 22, 1864.

One George Wodderborne delivers to Nicholson verbal instructions given to him by Andros in Boston. Nicholson is required to call the council together and "intimate to them the unjust proceedings of the people in Boston by keeping his Excellency prisoner and the other gentlemen upon frivolous pretences of their own without any shadow of reason." They are to "send Coll. Hamilton and Coll. Smith to Boston with commission to demand his Excellency and the other gentlemen to be at liberty that they may come amongst you." They are to "take special care to keep Albany in quiet and endeavour not to let the Indians know that his Excellency is prisoner;" and they are to send a sloop to Pemaquid to relieve Maj. Brockhols. The governor and council require Wedderborne to swear to the truth of his message. They then order that "the Kings Barke should be repaired if occasion should be to use her, and that the Mayor [Van Cortlandt] should see the same done."

Hamilton and Smith are summoned by letter, and come to New York. Both express their desire and willingness to serve Andros, but make the following objections to going to Boston: Hamilton states that he "finds him self obliged by a Commission off Sr Edmond Andros to be judge off the inferior Courts off Comon Pleas in East Yarsy, which are to be kept the first, second and third Wednesday in June and also that the people there is still in quiett and fears that his absence from those Courts might throw the people in mutiny or rebellion and since he came in New Yorcke finding the people all in an uporre and disaffected to his Excellency by reason off the rumors they had from people coming from Boston did thinck it not advisable in these dangerous times to act any further for fear it would bring the place in actual rebellion."

Smith, on his part, states that he lives "att Seatalkett the middle of Long Island ware the people already shoocke off these governm<sup>t</sup> and taking him to be a papist or a frind off them fears if hee should goe to Boston that the people in his towne would rise and plunder his house." Nicholson and the council, therefore, "seeing the uprores in all parts off the Governm<sup>t</sup>," the people being "increased against his Excellency by the libells and other reports from Boston;" and having received letters from Boston that "they refuse to sett his Excellency att liberty," and that Brockhols and others "are taken att Pemaquid," decide "to for bear acting in the premises till they see the minds off the people better satisfied and quieted."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 264-66.

During this month, the governor's council, led by Mayor Van Cortlandt, endeavours to suppress mutiny throughout the province, repair fortifications, pay the troops, and collect the revenues. "The people worked hard at the City fortifications, but M<sup>r</sup> De Peyster having bought the land [on Wall St.—see description of the Depeyster Garden, I: 23] here the fortifications lay upon would not have the new fortifications layd where the old ones lay, but would have them layd out further, which caused a great trouble." On May 22, the common people, who were very willing to work to fortify the town, on seeing a disagreement among the councilmen, presented an incoherent petition to the council, which Van Cortlandt answered as best he could.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 592-93.

This petition is described in the minutes of the "General Meeting" as "A Paper, . . . brought to this Board by Coll Bayard which was delivered vnto him last night in the p<sup>s</sup>ence of the Liev<sup>t</sup> Govern<sup>r</sup> by severall of the Inhabitants of this Towne containeing severall jealousies and demonstrations of their disturbed minds." Van Cortlandt "gave them satisfaction of almost all their desires except the last article concerning Coll<sup>d</sup>. Dongan who they desired might come and live in Towne as formerly and not to depart this Government." The "General Meeting" ordered "that Cap<sup>t</sup> Leisler and Cap<sup>t</sup> Lodwick retorne the peition to the people and answer them verbally that two or three messengers shall be sent to Coll. Dongan for to desire him to retorne to this place to remove all jealousies of his departure provided they doe promise vpon Oath to their respective Captaines that they will doe no harme to his person."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 284-85.

Nicholas Bayard and Abraham de Peyster purchase from Gov. Dongan land north of Wall Street, known later as the "De Peyster Garden." On Oct. 4, 1695, the land was partitioned.—Liber Deeds, XXV: 61-62; XXXI: 25-27. For description of the De Peyster Garden, see I: 238.

Nassau Street was surveyed and laid out before the conveyance of this date of Dongan's land to Bayard and De Peyster, for this conveyance refers to it as "a certain piece of ground in breadth six and twenty foot laid out and surveyed for a street."—21st Ann. Rep., Ann. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 130-31, insert. This deed is recorded in Liber Deeds, XXXI: 25-27. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006.

Edward Randolph, in the "Common Goal" in Boston, writes to the lords of trade a narrative of the unsettled state of affairs in New England, which throws light on the foregoing incidents in New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 578-83.

Hendrick Jacobsen, a corporal in Capt. De Peyster's company, acting under orders from Lieut. Henry Cuyler, who commands the trained hands in the fort, undertakes "to place a sentinell at the sally port in the said fort," but is challenged by "a sentinell belonging to the King's Soldiers." Then Cuyler and Jacobsen go to Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson, who, seeing Jacobsen, threatens him with a 1689 pistol and drives him out of the fort.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), May II: 8. Nicholson is overheard to say that "if they should any 30 more so trouble him he would set y<sup>e</sup> town a fire."—Ibid. This alleged threat was one of the principal reasons why Leisler and his followers seized the fort on May 31 (q.v.). The circumstances were described by Henry Cuyler in an affidavit on June 10.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 292-93.

31 The Leisler rebellion, soon to overthrow the government at New York, begins. At a meeting of the council, Lieut.-Gov.
 Nicholson informs them "that most part off the City's militia were in rebellion, that two comands, either from him selfe or their Coll. were in any ways regarded nor obeyed, That he was Credibly informed some off the officers ware the Instigato<sup>r</sup> and Inflamers off it, and therefore desired the Mayor to convene this afternoon att the City hall the Court of Mayor Aldermen Comon Councell and all the military officers of this City for to advise with them off this matter off great moment."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 268.

At a meeting of all the magistrates and officers at the town hall, Nicholson informs them "that divers of the Inhabitants were very factious and rebellious." Several of the magistrates, and all the others, "protested against such people," declaring "they would with all their power stand up for the good of the Governemnt and Crowne of England." He stated that most of the city militia was in rebellion, that they would obey neither him nor their colonel, and that some of the officers were "the instigators and inflamers" of it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 593.

Hendrick Cuyler, who had the watch in the fort with half a company, "complained that Capt. Nicholson would not suffer him to sett a sentinell at the Sally Port, and, when he told Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson of it, that he was threatened and his Corporall to be pistolled and that Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson would fire the Town" (see May 30). This Nicholson denied, and explained the circumstances as they occurred. What he had said to Cuyler was: "I rather would see the Towne on fire than to be commanded by you." This opened a feud between Cuyler and Nicholson, in which Cuyler's commission as Lieutenant was taken from him. Cuyler's captain, Abraham de Peyster, also had a controversy with Nicholson.
 Van Cortlandt, in describing later to Andros the events of the day, said:—

"We heard the drums beat and the Towne full of noise, and seeing the people rise and run together in armes M<sup>r</sup> Phillips and I went to Jacob Leyslaer's door where the people mett and endeavoured to allay them but in vain, they marched to the fort where Henry Cuyler received them, in ¼ hour's time the fort was full of men armed and enraged, no word could be heard but they were sold, betrayed and to be murdered, it was time to look for themselves." Nicholson then, on demand, gave up the keys of the fort. For details see N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 593-94.

Osgood, in The Am. Colonies (1907), III: 454, observes, in regard to Nicholson's surrender of the keys: "This was indeed an important decision, for it left the mutineers to their own course, men who were not simply civilians, but who were enrolled and in service as militia and were thus properly subject to military discipline. It sealed the fate of the Andros régime in New York as effectually as did the Boston uprising of April 19 in New England."

Another account of the events of the day is given in the minutes of the "General Meeting":—"The Inhabitants of New York rising this afternoon have taken Possessions of the Fortt, disarmed the soldiers, and came with a squadron armed in Court demanding the keys of the Garrison and with force would and will have them they forced Cap<sup>t</sup> Lodwick to come into the Towne hall and came there armed demanding the keys againe and would have them delivered to Cap<sup>t</sup> Lodwick, the Lieut<sup>t</sup> Govern<sup>r</sup> seeing himself forced asked the advice of this Board what to doe in this confused business.

"This Board for to hinder and prevent bloodshed and further mischief and for endeavouring to quiett in the minds of the people think it best considering they being forced to itt to let them have the keys." In considering the problem of ways and means "to reduce this people from their rising," etc., this board "are of opinion that there is noe way to reduce them by force," and that "they be lett alone for some time." It is thought best, however, to remove the money from the fort to the house of Frederick Phillips.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 288.

Still another account of the revolution is given by the council of New York in a letter to the Earl of Shrewsbury on June 10:—

"Fort James was seized by the Rable whilst the Lieutenant Gov<sup>r</sup> May and Council with all the Civill Magistrates and Military officers 31 except Cap<sup>t</sup> Leisler were met at the City Hall to consult w<sup>t</sup> might be adviseable tending to the common safety of the place and allaying of all Uproar and Rebellion."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 585.
 A statement in writing, made on May 31, evidently prepared (but not signed) by Leisler, gives his reasons for taking the fort. It is entitled "A Declaration of the Inhabitants Soudiers Belonging under the Several Companies of the Train Band of New York." Affidavits taken the latter part of February, 1691, brought out other details of the events of May 31 and the days that followed. These are printed in the Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 226-33.

From this time until Aug., 1692, there was no recognized government in New Jersey, on account of conflicting claims.—Bancroft, op. cit., II: 32.

Although William and Mary have not yet been "proclaimed amongst us, no shipp as yet being arrived to us from England," the militia of New York prepare an address to the new king and queen, on hearing from Barbadoes of their being proclaimed. This address expresses joy over "our deliverance from Tyranny, popery and slavery." It states that the government here has been lately mostly under Papists, who have "in a most arbitrary way subverted our ancient priviledges making us in effect slaves to their will contrary to the laws of England; and this was chiefly affected by these who are known enemies to our Religion and liberty." The militia states that they have taken possession of the fort in this city, "disarming some few papists therein and do keep and guard s<sup>d</sup> fort against all your Majesties enemies whatsoever until such time your Majesty's Royall will shall be further known, wholly submitting ourselves to your Majesties pleasure therein," etc. The address further states that "Our late Governour Sir Edmund Andross" exercised "a most arbitrary commission procured from the late King, most in command over us being bitter papists." It also states that "our Lieut. Gov<sup>r</sup> Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson, altho a pretended protestant, yet contrary both to his promises and pretences, countenancing the Popish party, denying to exclude both Officers in the custom house and Souldiers in the fort, being most Papists, contrary to the know laws of England," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 583-84.

Leisler publishes a proclamation expressing his intention to preserve the Protestant religion and "the fort of this City, to the end that we may avoid and prevent the rash judgment of the world, in so just a desigo." He declares that on "the safe arryval of the ships that we expect every day from his royall Highness the prince of Orange with orders for the government of this country," etc., he will "execute the said orders punctually."—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
 (4to ed.), II: 3-4. See also Winsor, op. cit., V: 189, 340.

Information is brought to Nicholson and his council that four or five ships are seen in the bay. "Capt. Jacob Leisler commanding in the fort gave the sign of an alarm by firing off guns and beat of drums." The lieutenant-gouverour and council required Col.
 Bayard to "act in this conjuncture by vertue off his commission as Colonnell of the Regiment and give suitable orders." He had at first declined to appear in arms except as a private soldier, "Since his comands as well by officers and soldiers had been soe ofte disobeyed and the government not being in state to support his comision whilst the fort was detained from the Letten<sup>t</sup> gouverour by force."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 268-69.

Armed men board a vessel from Barbadoes off Cooney Island, and seize one John Dischington. They bring him before Leisler at the fort, and take newspapers from him, including a London Gazette of Feb. 14-18, 1689, containing the proclamation of William and Mary as king and queen. Dischington has difficulty in recovering them, but as soon as possible delivers them to "his Honour the

Referring to the events of this day, Van Cortlandt wrote to Andros (on July 9):

"Cap<sup>t</sup> Nicholson sent for Mr. Bayard and me at the house of M<sup>r</sup> Phillips where he lodged, saying that a message was sent by Capt. Lodwyck, that an expresse was come from Long Island reporting that 4 to 5 Shippes were seen within Sandy hook. We sent and I went my selfe through all the Towne but could not find the mao that brought said news. Immediately Cap<sup>t</sup> Leyslaer gave the alarm which created such a tumult that some were ready to fall upon us thinking really that the French ships came.

"The people all mett before the fort, would not obey their Officers, lett them and runn in the fiort to Jacob Leyslaer."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 594.

1689 Col. Bayard relates to the council how most of the soldiers of June 4 four companies, while "in arms at the place off Parade before the fort," the day before, had disobeyed commands, had rebelled, and gone "to the fort to side with Capt. Laysler [Leisler] and committed insufferable insolences." He also complains that Leisler, meeting him in the custom-house, used "filthy and scurrilous expressions" to him, calling him "a Coll. [colored] off a tyrannical power," saying that "he would see him hanged," etc.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 269.

" Leisler writes to "the Governor and Committee of Safety at Boston," in part as follows:

" . . . The Lieut Governor Nicholls is departed last night without taking leave. It is believed he intends to goe with Col<sup>l</sup> dangan who has layen in the bay this sixteen dayes. . . . I have made one full Inventory of the fort with guns and ammunitiōne, and found of 33 great guacs but fifteen fit to use of 50 barrells powder was but one that could goe 7 degrees . . . the fort is guarded by five companies two watches 1½ company per night, and the Capt whose watch it is for that tyme Capt of the fort, the Collector in the Custome house is a rank papist, I cannot gett the other Captaines to resolve to turne him out but [he] acts still as before . . . sir Edmond Andross & his wicked crew have carried all the Records out of this country to Boston," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 3, citing a "Vol. in Sec's Office, endorsed, Papers &c., in Leisler's time."

6 "The council deems it "most safe for the Leften Governour to depart for England by the first ship, for to give an account of the desperate and deplorable state of the government, and to pray for some immediate release." It resolves also "that the Court of Mayor, Aldermen and Comon Council be conveyaned and to desire their opinions whether itt be not advisable to send to the severall Captaines off the City, or such off them as have encouraged the rebellion of the people, and to protest against them for all the losses, damages, detriments, and blood-sheds that shall or may arrize by occasion of sd rebellion." Particular reference is made to several offences already committed, such as "For the detaineing off the Fort James from the Lt Governour," etc. The court of the mayor, etc., was convened accordingly.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 270-71.

This general meeting, consisting only of the lieutenant-governour the council, and aldermen, but not the common councilmen, met at the house of Mayor Van Cortlandt. They complained of the "many Insolencies the people in the fort committed," and Nicholson directed two of the aldermen to ask the officers (captains of militia) to come to the meeting, but one of them would come.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 595. Leisler's reply to this summons was that "he would not come neither to the Governour Council Mayor or Ald<sup>r</sup>men nor had not anything more to doe with them." The board resolved that a protest be drawn against all the captains, except one.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 289.

8 "The committee of safety appoints Leisler captain of the fort, "Till orders shall come from their Majesties." He is promised aid, when needed and demanded by him, "from the city and county to suppress any foren Etnemy & prevent all disorders."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 7.

10 "The lieutenant-governour and council resolve "that the three gentlemen off the Council dispose off the Kings Barcke, woodhoast and pinace, either by sale or hire as they shall see cause since the same ley upon decay,"—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 271.

" The council of New York writes to the Earl of Shrewsbury expressing delight on learning from Barbadoes and Boston of the Prince and Princess of Orange being proclaimed king and queen of England. They state that "by the means and ill contrivances of some disaffected and daogerous persons all manner of Government is totally overthrowen here," as in Boston, "whereby the state of this City (who depends wholly on Trade) is become vry desperate, no person being safe either in Person or Estate which undoubtedly will cause its utter Ruin unless prevented by sending some sudden Relief, For on the 11st day of May last [q. v.] the Fort James was seized." The list of the council continues: "And now we are assured sufficiently that although Orders from his now Mat<sup>y</sup> should arrive for the continuing of the Persons formerly entrusted in the Government that no such orders would be obeyed.

"We have therefore thought it advisable that the Lieut<sup>r</sup> Governour Capt<sup>r</sup> Francis Nicholson doe depart by the first ship for England to render an account of the present deplorable state of affairs here, most humbly praying that his Mat<sup>y</sup> will be graciously pleased to afford this City & Province such speedy Relief as the present exigency & necessity requires." The letter is signed by "Fred Flypse," "St. Courtlandt," and "N. Bayard."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 385-86.

" Nicholson leaves secretly for "the Netherlands," and there meets Doongan, who has gone to sea but was forced to return by rough weather. Nicholson, unable to persuade any one of three shipowners or captains to accept him as a passenger, bought an interest in a brigantine and cargo, and so sailed on June 24. Van Cortlandt, in relating the event on July 9 to Andross, explained: "He doth ot doubt but he will doe Yo<sup>r</sup> Excell good & better service in going over then here, for they have several times threatened to fetch him back and putt him, fredrick Phillips, M<sup>r</sup> Bayard & me in prison."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 595.

16 Leisler changes the name of Fort James to Fort William, as appears by a letter of this date which he wrote to Major Nathan Gold.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 4. This name was retained until the coming of Slaughter.—See March 24, 1691.

19 "Leisler writes to "the Governor of Boston" from "fort w<sup>m</sup>": "I am daily working in the fort with sixteen carpenters & twenty men which I shall continow till it is truly in good posture of defence, I am digging up the old wall [well] which was filled up by Col. dangan I intend to stockaded the fort round and hopewethin three weeks if it please God to have it compleat," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 5. Regarding the well, see Nov. 15, 1688; Aug. 5, 1689.

20 Leisler putt Peter Delaoy and George Brewster in charge of the custom-house. He himself signs passes for vessels thus: "Cap<sup>t</sup> appointed to secure the fort at New Yorke on behalfe of King William and Queen Mary."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 596, 608, 609. See also, Dec. 11.

22 Maj. Nathan Gold (or Gould) and Capt. James Fitch, delegates from the "Court" of Connecticut to Leisler, arrive at the fort. Having "some printed papers of news," they give them to Leisler, who, "finding amongst them a printed Proclamacon to proclaim King William and Queen Mary King & Queen over England & Ireland," requests "the use of that paper for one hour or two," and has "the drum beaten and the King and Queen proclaimed in the forenoon."—From Stephen van Cortlandt's narrative of July 9 to Andross, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 595.

Of this day's events, Van Cortlandt further said: "About 5 O Clock they sent for me to be at my house, I went home there, the 2 Hartford Gentlemen and our Cap<sup>t</sup> came with their Halberdiers, being sett down Leysler asked me whether I would not proclaim the King and Queen, I told him it was done already. He answered if I would not do it he would do it at the Towne hall, I told him he might doe what he pleased: They fell out Call'd me a Papist, or Popishly affected, and severall abusive words in my house; At last Major Gold and Cap<sup>t</sup> fitts desired me to go along to the Town Hall where they should proclaim their Matjes. I told them I would acquaint the Aldermen with it which they approved off, and gave one hours time, I sent for the Aldermen, who came and resolved that we would waite upon them. When they came at the Town hall Leysler comes and would have me proclaim the King. I answered, He that read it before the fort can read it here, I have no clark: Upon which he falls into a rage saying if it was to set up a Tyrannical King, a Prince of Wales, then he would do it, Yo<sup>r</sup> a Traitor, a Papist, &c. and made the people just ready to knock me in the head. Others said, Take hold of that Rogue, So I was foret to answer for myself, saying, that Leysler told a false untruth, I did not hinder the reading or proclaiming of their Majesties &c. These 2 Gentl. would not lett me goe, but kept me fast, and persuaded me to go along to the fort, which I did: Coming in the fort they and we drunk the King's health. After that they fell upon the Sheriffe, took his sword and abused him sadly. They took Alderman Crundell and turned him out the fort. After that M<sup>r</sup> French and M<sup>r</sup> John Smith. They sent and fetcht M<sup>r</sup> Middleton's sword from his side at M<sup>r</sup> Pettys. I expected the same, went through the people out the fort. Going out, one said Goe, we d'ont want you here. . . ."—Ibid., III: 595-96. See also May 15, 1699. Another proclamation of William and Mary was made by Leisler on Dec. 10 (q. v.).

24 Mayor Van Cortlandt is given by William Merritt a printed proclamation from Willian and Mary, dated Feb. 14, 1689, continuing in office all Protestants who, on the first of last December, were sheriffs, justices, collectors, etc. He sends for the aldermen

1689 and common council; they meet at the town hall, and resolve to June publish this proclamation. When published it greatly angers the 24 Leisler faction.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 596.

25 The aldermen and common council, meeting with the mayor at his house, resolve that under the existing circumstances Matthew Plowman desist from acting further as collector of customs. They appoint commissioners of customs, with prescribed terms for paying over the customs. One of them is Col. Bayard. They go to the custom-house; and soon Leisler enters with armed men, who pull them out, "severally cutting at Coll Bayard but the crowd being so thick cutt only his hatt and he escaped into the house of Peter De La Noy where he was all night. They watched the house and swore they would kill him. Afterwards he gott out the house.
They searcht for him, but he went for Albany" (June 28).—Van Cortlandt's letter to Andros, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 596. For Bayard's own Journal of what transpired from June 11 to July 5, see ibid., III: 599-604; see also 617.

26 The two military delegates from Hartford (see June 22) write a communication to Leisler while they are still at the fort, and to other captains who have been active with him in taking the fort
"for His Majesties service," giving the following facts and advice: They find the fort much out of repair, most of the great guns unfit for service, very few platforms "for guns to play," powder unfit for service, and Capt. Nicholson (the "late Leifteenant Governour") goe from the fort to join Dongan and other Papists about seven leagues from the city. They therefore advise Leisler to continue in the fort and secure this and other fortifications, and make repairs.
They also advise "That no Papist be sufrted to come into the fort, let not the warning given that day His Majesty was proclaimed: bee not soon forgotten bye you wherein the torrat in the fort was fired in three places under which roof lay your ammunition . . . a papistical design: to have destroyed you and us: the fort and towne. . . ." They advise that "no knowne Papist be sufrted with arms in his house;" that persons found with arms and ammunition belonging to the fort be seized; and they offer their assistance "in defence of the Protestant Religion and in securing this fort for His Majesties servis."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 589-90.

" "Leisler had the letter J in the King's arms standing before the fort altered in the letter W."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 604.

July Stephen Van Cortlandt, writing to Andros an account of what 9 has transpired since the preceding October, states that a committee of safety has been appointed (at some time after July 2), whose New York City members are Peter Delanoy (in charge of the custom-house) and Samuel Edsall. They have raised 60 men, with Jacob Leisler as captain, and William Churchill as lieutenant.
This committee opens all letters. Van Cortlandt further states:
"I had thicke plank provided for the platformes and Carriages, and the fort being taken had carryed them by Phillip Smith's house, but Laysler caused them to be brought to the fort." Van Cortlandt closes with: "I long to hear the arrival of the two expected Com-micioers or other orders from England that we may be released from all these troubles and threats we have every day, and that Yo<sup>r</sup> Excell. may be put at liberty and conquer all yo<sup>r</sup> Ennemies."—
N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 597.

10 In a letter to William Jones of New Haven, Leisler writes, in hardly intelligible English, an account of recent happenings at New York. It is imbued, as usual, with distrust and fear of so-called "Papists," and recounts his efforts to guard against them, and to carry on the government for William and Mary. He has a carpenter at work to repair the fort, but "his work little appears in a fort so out of repaire." He hopes to have some of the Papists disarmed within two days, and "those Idolls destroyed which we heare are daily still worshipped."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 5.

24 An inventory of the books and papers in the secretary's office is ordered by the committee of safety.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 174.

29 An order is given from the council at Whitehall, London, to proclaim William and Mary in New York. It is addressed "To our loving friends Francis Nicholson Esq<sup>r</sup> their Ma<sup>y</sup>s Lieut Govern<sup>r</sup> and Commander in Chief of the Province of New York. And in his absence to such as for the time being take care for preserving the Peace & administering the Laws in their Ma<sup>y</sup>s Province of New York in America."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 605. It was this order, so addressed, which, when it came into Leisler's hands, on Dec. 8, gave him the power of chief executive in the government of the province; but for so seizing the government and carrying it on with fanatical zeal, he was imprisoned and executed.—See Dec. 13, 1689; March 10, April 13, 1691.

The king, having received letters from Nicholson and others containing reports of Nicholson's faithful services, authorizes and empowers him to take upon himself "the Government of the said Province," calling to his assistance the principal freeholders and inhabitants, or as many as he shall think fit.—Ibid., III: 606. The king's letter of July 30, signed also by Nottingham, was sold by Henkels, Phila. (item No. 766), Oct. 22, 1919.

At the quarterly session of the court of general sessions, the records show the following variety of cases appearing in succession:
— the proving of a will, the appraisement of an estate, the report of inquisitions into two deaths by drowning, and the sentencing of a thief to the whipping-post.—General Sessions of the Peace, Vol. I, August, 1689. In general, however, cases appear to have been reserved for this court when the royal authority was in question, the plaintiff appearing as "Dom Rex." One such case is printed by Peterson & Edwards in N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, appendix, p. 409.

5 Col. Nicholas Bayard, who is still in Albany (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 610), writes to Capt. Nicholson: "Itt is greatly feared if no sudden orders or releefe arrives from His Majesty that some great mischeefe will befall, for the abuses and threats of Leisler and his rabble increase daily to imprison, plunder and massacre those who will not acquies, although they do submit to their illegal proceedings."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 611.

Van Cortlandt, writing to Capt. Nicholson, states that Leisler, Churchill, and Stoll have made a new well, using the planks provided by Van Cortlandt and Nicholson; they have also made the platforms and carriages just as Nicholson had ordered; and "are now providing the Stockades to stockade the fort about as it was formerly—and have made a battery behind the fort upon the flat rock to the westward." One Mr. Willson, who had been sent by Leisler to proclaim the king and queen in New Jersey, fell out of a canoe at Staten Island and was drowned; he was "burried in a great state, the whole town invited, Every man and woman gloves, all ships and vessels their flaggs halfe staff, firing all when he was carried to the grave. The Kings flagg at the fort halfe staff, all the men upon the Fort in arms, the Drumms beating mournfully the guns firing continually till he was in the grave. his death is much lamented by them, as being a man that stood up for the liberty of the people and protestand Religion." Another account of the drowning gives the name as "M<sup>r</sup> Cox."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 609, 617.

Continuing, regarding the conduct of Leisler, Van Cortlandt explains: "Their threats, insolencies, abuses, falsities and lyes unlawfull actings and mischeefs are soe many and soe unseffable that if noe speedy relect [relief] and orders doe come from England many of the Inhabitants will leave the city and goe to live in the country, for fear of life and Estate, for they imprison whom they please, and take out of prison those that are there for debt, they take peoples goods out of their houses and if hindered by Justices of the peace, they come with great numbers and fetch it out of the Justices house by force, and doe what they please, soe that their Capt<sup>ns</sup> can no more Rule them—It troubles them that they did not put you in prison [i. e., Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson] and seized upon your papers, there they would have found the reason, for you are a papist and so is D<sup>h</sup> Innes and have severall witnesses as they say against you both."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 609-10.

7 In a letter to Gov. Treat of Connecticut, Leisler reports the following preparations for defence:—He has used "all the diligence imaginable" to fortify and repair the fort. The "wall" (well) is completed (see Aug. 5), and there are seven feet of "very good water," which is "36 feet deep." All the platforms are renewed, and all the guns substantially mounted. The powder-house will be ready on this date, and the "powder" (possibly error for platform) "is made good and elevates the engine from 13 to 26 degrees." There are 6,000 lbs. of the king's powder in the fort, and 800 lbs.
of "the best spoiled powder for salutations." About 100 arms are "well fixed." He states that "there was a battery under the fort, which being quyte demolished and ruined in place of which I am making an halfe moone of 100 foot over grass which defends the landing of both rivers & also the coming in, and it is defended easily by the fort." Stockades and sod are being obtained "to stockad & breastwork the fort according to your advice for which I am obliged & hope within fourteen days if it please God to compleat all . . ."

He also states that when Captain Cuyler's company was at work at "the spurre," and wanted stoe to finish it, they "resolved

- 1689 to pull down the pigeon house of Coll. dongane which was made of Aug. the stone so missing & went armed with collours & drum without 7 Capt. or Lieut: & began to break; but they were offered 50 loads of stone, and "they left of & had done very little damage," They intended at the same time "to break some wall and stairs at Grahames house made of the same stones" (as those desired), but 36 loads were given for that. He states they are "compleat 53 men in the fort."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., II: 13. The "half moon" battery to which he refers was situated within the enclosure of the present Battery Park, a little south of Battery Pl., on the lioe of Greenwich St. It is shown on the Miller Plan of 1695, Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.
- 9 Leisler, writing to Gov. Treat, acknowledges receipt of a letter from Gov. Bradstreet, which Treat had sent him, and which gives information regarding the escape of Andros. He informs Treat that "we have had newes of his stope at Rhode Island about two days agoe." There has been expectation on the part of "the gracces" of seeing him in New York. The mayor and several others, he says, "are departed from hence, it is thought now to meet sir Edmund."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 13-14.
- 15 Capt. George McKenzie, in a letter to Nicholson, recounts his recent experiences with Leisler and his men. Having returned from Albany at 11 o'clock on the night of Aug. 11, McKenzie requested the skipper to set him ashore "above the wind mills" (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961), in order to save the letters he carried from being opened by Leisler's men. On the following day, he was ordered to appear at the fort, but refused to obey the summons without a proper warrant. On the 13th, he was seized while walking "in the broad way," and taken to the fort. Questioned by Leisler, McKenZie denied being a Papist, or "Popishly affected," and declared that, "in all the six years" he had known New York, he had never "so much as out of curiosity looked into their [Catholic] Chappell." After a number of questions had been put to him, and answered, McKenZie was allowed to go. He reports to Nicholson that "Sir Edmund [Andros] got out of prison and escaped as far as Rhod Island, but was there seized on, and it is reported that Coll: Dongan is likewise kept prisoner, who went thither much about the same time with a design to sell Martins Vineyard, upon which, foolish and ridiculous reports were raised, viz: that they were to join together and with I know not how many men, to come to take the fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 612-14.
- 16 The committee of safety issues a commission to Capt. Leisler to be "Commander in Chief of the said Province to administer such Oaths to the people, to issue out such Warrants, and order such Matters as shall be necessary & requisite to be done for the preservation and protection of the peace, of the inhabitants taking all ways, reasonable advice with Militia and Civil Authority as Occasion shall require."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 14-15.
- 19 Leisler informs the governour of Boston that "the fort artillery & ammunition, is now in one posture of defence, one water port now made to the westward of the fort," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
(4to ed.), II: 15.
- 20 Leisler writes to King William and Queen Mary a letter, which he sends "by the express bearer Joost Stoll the Esquire of Your Majesties fort," giving his account of events since the imprisonment of Andros in Boston. He accuses Nicholson of a design to "fyre the tower," for which reason the captains seized the fort. He states that on June 22, when he proclaimed the king and queen, they had a "miraculous deliverance of a fyre which had been kendeled in three severall places upon the Turret of the Church in the fort 6000 lb powder being next under the same roof and suspected to be done by one Papist who had been there before and was discovered by one Neeger," etc. He tells about the committees formed in the neighbouring counties and in New York, the electing of himself commander in the fort "till your Majesties order,"—an authority which he has exercised from the first of July. He says:
"I have caused to mend, and make most all the guon carriages, there being not above 8 or 10 able to make use of, all the rest were sunk upon their platforms, which I have caused all to be made new with the curtins and bostions, and for the better defence I have caused one battery to be made at the River side at the west of the fort, where I have planted seven great guns—I am now mending the breast works and palissading the fort round, and the well in the fort, which was filled up by Coll: Dongan is made new againe and gives good water enough, the sally port being quite rotten and ruined is reoued and in good condition . . . the city is fortified
- at the landside, with good pallisades, and in several places there are guns—I have fifty men in the fort, which the country has promised me to pay, and above that, the train bands, mounts every eight with one company to the guard, so that we watch for our conservation," etc. He states that Mayor Van Cortlandt has gone to Albany to join Coll. Bayard.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 614-16.
- A "List of the Papers delivered in the hands of the Ensigo Mr.
Joost Stoll sent to England" has been translated from the original Dutch, and is printed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Col. (1868), 297-98.
- Jacob Milborne, just from England, becomes Leisler's chief adviser, and later his son-in-law.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 674, 826.
- The king, in court at Whitehall, declares his pleasure "that two Sept. 2 Companies of Foot of sixty men in each Company besides Officers, be forthwith raised, for their Mat<sup>ys</sup> service in New York, to be carried thither on board the ship, which shall be appointed by the Right Honble the Commissioners of the Admiralty, to carry the Governour of New York to that Government, and His Mat<sup>ys</sup> is further pleased to order that the said two companies be paid out of the Revenue here in England until the Government of New York be settled." It is ordered, also, by the king that £100 be paid to Henry Slaughter, the governour of New York, for buying presents to be given in the king's name to the Five Nations of Indians, bordering upon New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 618-19. See also Addenda, Sept. 16.
- In a manuscript record of this date regarding Jacob Leisler, "In y<sup>e</sup> fort of New York," complaint is made against Andros; it tells of guns mounted at the fort, and compares the present with the earlier state under the Dutch government.—From a MS. volume in Mass.
Hist. Soc., Prince collection ("Letters and Papers 1686-1720").
- One Nicholas Brown signs an affidavit that in July or August, 1686, he saw Nicholson exercising his devotions as a Papist.—*Doc.
Hist. N. Y.* (4to ed.), II: 17. On Sept. 26, two workmen named Meyers made an affidavit before Leisler that, on orders from Nicholson, they helped the Roman Catholic priest John Smith remove the "Images erected by Col<sup>o</sup> Thomas Dongan in the fort" to "a better room in the fort," where they were ordered "to erect all things" as the priest directed. This was after the departure of Andros, when it was supposed Nicholson "would defend and Establish the true Religion."—Ibid., II: 28.
- Nothingham writes to the lord president regarding the new governour for New York.—See Addenda; and Sept. 2, supra.
- John Pell, lord of the manor of Pelham, conveys to Jacob Leisler a tract of land constituting the present township of New Rochelle. This is for a consideration of £1,675; sterling. The tract is described as "lying and being within said manor of Pelham, containing six thousand acres of land, and also one hundred acres of laod more, which the said John Pell and Rachel, his wife, do freely give and grant for the French church erected, or to be erected," etc.—Scharf, History of Westchester Co., I: 27. This was in trust for the Huguenots who were then arriving in large numbers from England.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 75.
- In a letter written by Col. Bayard from Albany, it is stated, as the reason why Andros was appointed in Dongan's place, that—
"Millbourn arriving in New York from Holland it was reported, that the late King James had sold this country to the French, and because Governour Dongan would not be such an ill person as to deliver it he was removed and Andros put in his place with me and some others had undertaken to surrender it unto their power, but this lye as all the rest having no root suddainly vanished so they are daily inventing new ones to keep up the people in their madnes but it will not continue."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 621.
- An affidavit is entered among the records of the committee of safety showing, by various incidents, the fear which the people of New York and vicinity have of the Papists.—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
(4to ed.), II: 17-18.
- By unusual effort, Leisler succeeds in procuring the election of his son-in-law, Robert Walters, as alderman of the South Ward.— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 674; M. G. C., I: 204.
- At a common council held at the city hall, new aldermen, assistants, and constables are selected from all the wards, Peter Delany being continued as chamberlain.—M. G. C., I: 204. The next two meetings of the old board were held, on Oct. 5 and 7, at the house of Alderman William Meserit, with Mayor Van Cortlandt presiding.— Ibid., I: 205, 206. On Oct. 14 (q. v.), a new city government, under Leisler and his followers, began.
- Frotenac returned this autumn from France to Quebec with secret instructions to organize an attack on New York by sea and 1689 land. He soon sent expeditions against New York and New St.—England.—Winsor Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 351-52.

 Oct. Edward Buckmaster is paid by the city £64:14:9 for "Sessions 7 Expences & dyett for prisoners & for a Treatie to S<sup>d</sup> Edmond Andrews."—M. C. C., I: 206. Buckmaster was an innholder, and these payments for services, etc., indicate the variety of interest, public and private, centring in the tavern. On the same date a payment of £173:10 is made "for two Sessions Expences at y<sup>e</sup> house of J<sup>o</sup> Patty."—Ibid. Buckmaster's house was appointed in 1694 as the place for leasing the dock (ibid., I: 358), at which time he was still an innholder.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 237-38.
 " For results of city elections (erroneously placed under Oct. 7 in M. C. C., I: 206), see Oct. 14.
 10 C. Col. Bayard, writing to Andros, who is still a prisoner, states:
 "Leysler took yesterday [Oct. 9] his seat in Y<sup>e</sup> Gov<sup>t</sup> s<sup>e</sup> pewe at Church, wth a large carpet before him . . . Henry Cuyler y<sup>e</sup> betrayed y<sup>e</sup> Fort, a silly fool and coward is made Majeor of y<sup>e</sup> Regiment and Gorit y<sup>e</sup> Mason [Gerrit Duyckynck] Capt in his room. The roote of his Councell it [is] said [is] one Samuel Staets, P [De] Lanoy, Sam Edsals & Jac. Milborne who is also Secretary.
 The Committee [committee of safety] being laid aside."—N. Y.
Col. Docs., III: 636. For the creation of the council, see Dec. 11.
 14 Leisler, as commander-in-chief (he did not act as lieutenant-gouverneur until Dec. 8), assumes control of the city's affairs as representative of Protestant freemen, and procures the election by popular vote of Peter Delano as mayor, Joannes Johnson as sheriff, and Abraham Gouverneur as clerk. His proclamation, "At Fort William y<sup>e</sup> 14 octof 1689 & in y<sup>e</sup> first Year of their M<sup>t</sup>ies Reigne," reads:—
 "Whereas y<sup>e</sup> Comitte of Safety have appointed Me to Confirme
 chosen by y<sup>e</sup> Protestant freemen of S<sup>d</sup> City & Countie of NYork According to Returns Made by virtue whereof I doe hereby accordingly Confirme Peter De La Noy to Be mayor Joannes Johnson Sherif & abraham Gouverneur towne Clerke for S<sup>d</sup> City & Countie of N York to Continue in their S<sup>d</sup> Stations afoerd to y<sup>e</sup> true intend & meaning of y<sup>e</sup> act of Said Comitte. [The aldermen and assistants are also confirmed by name.]
 "Therefore are all Inhabitants hereby required to give due obedience to s<sup>d</sup> Magistrats & officers & are to acknowledge the same afoerdly."—M. C. C., I: 206-7. Delano's commission as mayor is dated Dec. 12, 1689.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 188.
 Up to this time, the mayor had been appointed by the provincial gouverneur and council. After the Leisler régime, up to the Revolution, the mayors were again so appointed. Under the constitution, until 1821, the appointment was by the gouverneur of the state; after which, until 1834, it was by the common council. For a brief sketch of the life of Peter Delano, see Man. Com. Coun (1853), 390.
 " At the first meeting of the common council under Delano, it is ordered "that y<sup>e</sup> Late Mayor Stephen vao Cortlandt forthwith deliver up to y<sup>e</sup> high Constab: Nicholas Blanck y<sup>e</sup> Citys Charter as also y<sup>e</sup> City seales with all other Papers & Bookes w<sup>ch</sup> might Be in his Custody Belonging to S<sup>d</sup> City & Countie."— M. C. C., I: 208. There evidently was no response, for a more peremptory order was sent on Oct. 16. The high constable reported back that he delivered the order "to y<sup>e</sup> wife of m<sup>r</sup> Cortlandt & that she did throw it away out y<sup>e</sup> doors."—Ibid.
 At the next meeting of the common council, a complaint was drawn up "to Cap<sup>t</sup> Jacob Leisler y<sup>e</sup> Comandr in chief," reciting these occurrences, and asking "Protection in y<sup>e</sup> P<sup>ri</sup>mises . . .
 that y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> M<sup>r</sup> Cortlandt may Be Constrained to P<sup>er</sup>forme his duty."—Ibid., I: 209-10.
 " About this time, Mayor Van Cortlandt, to save his life, is forced to escape to Albany, where Col. Bayard is.—N. Y. Col Docs., III: 645; see also 610. "With this, the last vestige of government as organized in the dominion of New England vanished."—Osgood, The Amer. Colonies (1907), III: 457.
 16 A ship from Nevis (one of the islands of the Caribbean Sea) arrives at New York with "a parcell of negroes," some of whom have "y<sup>e</sup> small pocks." The common council orders that the sick
 "Be Landed a Mile or thereabouts from this City," and permits no one "to Come to them but y<sup>e</sup> doctors Chirurguons & attendors."— M. C. C., I: 208-9. Small-pox is here first mentioned in city records.
 20 Writing from Albany, Col. Bayard addresses an order to Capt.
 Abraham de Peyster and Capt. John de Bruyn, commanders of two companies of the train-bands in New York, which is to be communicated to the rest of the commissioned officers, commanding them immediately to "desist from any wayes counselling aiding assisting or abetting the illegal proceedings of the said Jacob Leysler and his associates," etc. Bayard explains in this order that he finds this step his present duty to the crown; that he is acting as one of the council and as colonel of the train-bands, under commissions which have not been vacated or superseded, and that Leisler has not "the least shadow of authority" from the king and queen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 638.

 30 Writing from "fort william," Leisler informs the gouverneur at Boston that "Collonell Byard and the late Mayor & custome master abscond themselves & cannot be fouod."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 23-24.
 — At about this time, the Present State of New English Affairs, the earliest precursor of the newspaper published in America, was issued in Boston by Samuel Greco. See April 24, 1704, and Addenda.
 Nov. The Leisler faction celebrates the birthday of the king "with boonefires & roasting one ox &c."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 24-25.
 5 "Gunpowder Treason Day" is celebrated by Leisler and his party "with boonefires & burning the pope."—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
 (4to ed.), II: 25.
 14 The draft of a commission for Henry Slaughter, Esq., to be gouverneur of New York, is approved by the king and council at Whitehall. It is ordered that the Earl of Shrewsbury, one of the king's principal secretaries of state, "prepare a Warrant for His Mat<sup>y</sup>s Signature for passig the said Commission under the Great Seal."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 623-29; see also Jan. 30, 1690; March 19, 1691. For his instructions, see Jan. 31, 1690.
 16 Esioje John Stoll, agent for the committee of safety, having presented an address to the king and queen in London from the deputies and militia officers at New York, on Nov. 9, submits a brief for the information of the Earl of Shrewsbury, who has been made commissioner to examine the condition of the affairs of New York. This brief is a list of declarations, testimony, proclamations, affidavits, etc. One of these is "a printed paper, entitled, An account of the proceeding at New Yorke 1689, printed at Boston by Samuel Green 1689." Another is "An inventory of the fort of New York as it was found when the Trainebands took possession of it."
 In an accompanying petition, Stoll asks, among other things, "that His Majestie might be pleased to grant New Yorke a Charter, in the like manner and with the same or more priviledges as the city of Boston, being that the contents of that Charter, both best agree with the humour and nature of those inhabitants, and with the constitution of the said city."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 629-32.
 23 Leisler writes to the gouverneur of Barbadoes regarding affairs at the fort; about Capt. Blagg's bringing a French man-of-war into New York harbour; about a council of war, and sending the prisoners from this ship back to Barbadoes as criminal suspects. He adds that there is "no better meates to the conducing to their M<sup>t</sup>ies service & interest then a friendly amicable & mutual correspondy between their severall governments," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
 (4to ed.), II: 24-25; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 184.
 Dec. Several "merchants and adventures trading to and interested — in the province of New York and the adjacent Colonys" send a petition to the king, expressing thankfulness for his care of these colonies, "and more particularly in appointing Coll Slater [Slaughter] Governor of New York, whose integrity courage and conduct render him worthy of your Majesty's choice and so important a trust." They ask, for defence against "those inveterate enemies" to the king's person and dominions, the French, that he will furnish a considerable number of men, with arms and ammunition, and ships of war. In support of this petition, they give several reasons, describing the growing strength of the French in Canada, who have taken away the beaver trade, excepting from the Five Nations of Indians, who are friendly to the colonists, and whose trade is also menaced. They therefore recommend:
 "1. That a platform be built at Sandy Hook or Sandy Bay in East Jersey at the entrance into Hudson's River from the sea which lies so conveniently situated by reason of the great settled sandbanks there that no ship can pass up into Hudson's river but within muskett short, as will appear by the mapp, which said platform will require twelve guons and eighty men with arms and ammou-nition proportionable.
 "2. That the Fort of New York be sufficiently repaired and 1689 fortified with suitable outworks as it was formerly, or otherwise as Dec. shall be found most convenient, and that fifty gunns may be allowed — to the said fort and outworks, and that two hundred men be kept in that fort in time of war, and one hundred and twenty men be constantly kept there in time of peace; [as] the Town of New York [is] as liable to be attacked by land as by sea."

They also recommend that certain forts be built in other parts of the province, and

"6th. That four hundred Carabines with Belts, Saddles, Holsters, and Pistolls be sent over to equip the Militia horse of New York and Long Island and one thousand small fire arms with Bandeliers and ammunition proportionable for foot, . . .

"7. That the Governour of New York have power to issue out commissions for raising volunteers in New England upon any emergency.

"8th. That two fifth rate man of war may be appointed to cruise upon coasts as the Governour shall see occasion . . ."
— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 651-5.

" Among the records of the committee of safety there is "A Memorial [of this period] of what has occurred in their Maties Province of New York Since the News of their Maties Happy Arrival in England."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 33-34

8 Capt. Jacob Leisler assumes the title of lieutenant-governour.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 675; 676. See Dec. 13.

10 William and Mary are "very solemnly" proclaimed a second time king and queen, etc., by Leisler, who received by way of Boston
"two gracious letters the one from their maties with orders to doe & performe all things which to the place & office of his Maties Lieut. Governour & Commander in Chief of New York doth or may appertaine until further order."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 28, 29-30. But see Bayard's explanation of Dec. 13. The first proclamation occurred on June 22, 1689 (q. v.).

11 "After a due deliberation and consult" with the committee of safety, Leisler, as lieutenant-governour and commander-in-chief, appoints the members of his council.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 27. See Oct. 10.

" Peter Delanoy, who was appointed receiver of the revenues of the province by Leisler and his council (Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., II: 29), while still acting as mayor, is now given a commission as collector of the port of New York.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 185, 187.

13 Col. Nicholas Bayard writes concerning the occurrences in New York since the preceding April 27. Concluding, he states that, on Dec. 8, John Riggs, the despatch-bearer, who had been sent to England by Van Cortlandt on May 18 (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 593), arrived with two packets from the king and queen, directed "To our Trusty and well Beloved Francis Nicholson," etc., "or in his absence such as for y<sup>e</sup> time being take care for y<sup>e</sup> preservation of the peace," etc. Before the council could meet, Riggs was commanded to the fort and forced to deliver the packets to Leisler.
Since then Leisler "has taken upon him the titull of Lt Govern<sup>r</sup> and Commander in Chief."—Ibid., III: 648. On Dec. 13, also, "Fredryck Flypse" and "S. v. Cortlandt" made certificate that on Dec. 9 they too demanded the two packets, "being of the King's Council." They claimed them as their right "to preserve the lieutenant-governour, who had deputed them" to preserve the peace during his absence and until his Majesty's pleasure should be knowne therein. Leisler, however, told Riggs that they had nothing to do with the government, that they were Papists, and that the packets were directed to him. He took the packets from Riggs, and told Phillipse and Van Cortlandt, with "many approbri-ous words," to leave the fort.—Ibid., III: 649.

14 Leisler and his council order that the customs and excise be collected according to the act of Oct. 30, 1683, entitled "A continued bill for defraying the requisite expenses of the Government."
—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 185, citing the council minutes; see also Oct. 30, 1683. On Dec. 16, Leisler issued a proclamation declaring that act in force.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 30.
He thereby undertook to enforce a law made by a Papist governour.
The incident was discussed in a London pamphlet of Jan. 21, 1690 (q. v.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 676-77, 683. Some "disaffected person," as Leisler called him, having taken this proclamation down from the weigh-house or custom-house door where it had been posted, and "in a Contempuous manner" affixed other papers which, Leisler asserted, contained "false construction on the wholesale Lawes of England," Leisler issued another proclamation, on Dec. 20, warning the public against a repetition of such action.—

Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 30.

A commission of this date is given to Abraham Gouverneur as city and county clerk.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 188.

Leisler issues a proclamation ordering all persons holding civil or military commissions from Dongan and Andros to surrender them.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 32.

"Feeling that the French "have a designe upon New York," Peter Reverdy writes to the Bishop of London that there are 200 French families about New York "which will be putt to the torture if the french takes it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 650.

1690

About 1690, the wardrobe of an English officer stationed at New York, Capt. Caesar Carter, included a blue cloth coat with silver buttons, a frize coat, a white flowered jacket, white Holland jackets, a silk flowered waistcoat, green silk breeches flowered with silk and gold, silver gazer breeches, scarlet stockings, black silk stockings, white cotton stockings, embroidered belt with silver buttons, a campaign wig, bob-wigs, silver-hilted sword, lacker hat, laced shirts, laced neckcloths, laced handkerchiefs, flannel jackets, and fur cap.—Man. Con. Coun. (1855), 539-40; ibid. (1858), 509-10.
See also Abstracts of Wills (1892), 221.

Claiming that "a hellish conspiracy" to subvert the government "hath been detected," Leisler issues a search-warrant to discover suspected letter-carriers coming or going between New York and Boston.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 32. As explained by Brodhead, "it was known that the king had ordered that Andros, Randolph, West, Farewell, and the others whom the Boston insurgents had imprisoned, should be sent to London, letters to some of them were written by Bayard, Van Cortlandt, Nicolls, and others, which were given by Colonel Lewis Morris to the post rider, John Perry, as he passed his house in Westchester."—Hist. State of N. Y., II: 600-1. See, further, Jan. 16.

Leisler, who signs himself "Lieut. Gov<sup>r</sup> and in the name of the Council," writes to the king that he has undertaken to obey the instructions contained in the packets which came by Mr. Riggs, and that he has made a second proclamation of the king and queen
"with due solemnity and the suitable ceremonies."—N. Y. Col.
Docs., III: 654; see Dec. 8 and 10, 1689.

On this day also, Leisler and several of his council write to the Bishop of Salisbury, reviewing matters pertaining to the government of the province, as considered by them. They state:

"When Sr Edmund Andros was here with Sec<sup>ry</sup> Randolph, most of the Records, Bookes, papers, and seale which belonged to this province were transmitted to Boston, whereby we are incapacitated to present your Lordship with such a state of things as becomes the case, and our duty, having adventured to make a new seale for the province, altering the Duke of York's coronet, and placing the Crowne of England in its stead. Nothing can abate our service, except the want of 25 Canon of 24<sup>lb</sup> Caliber, firelock musketts Pistolls, Bandeliers 150<sup>lb</sup> powder, match, Handgran-ades, Bayonettes, Crowfeet &c with 40<sup>lb</sup> weight of muskett bullets in case the French visit us in the spring."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 654-57.

The answer (dated New York, 1691) to a memorial presented by Captain Blagge to the king stating that Leisler "made to himselfe a Broad Seale wch he called y<sup>e</sup> Seale of y<sup>e</sup> Province, with y<sup>e</sup> usuall armes of Kings of England, and affixed the same to some unlawfull graunts of land within this Province, and commissioned under y<sup>e</sup> same [seal] Justices of y<sup>e</sup> Peace . . ."—Ibid., III: 765.
Probably at this time the corresponding change was made in the city seal.—See July 24, 1686; Frontispiece, Vol. V; Pine, Seal and Flag, Pl. III, and p. 48.

Accompanying Leisler's letter to the bishop is Bayard's order of Oct. 20, 1689 (q. v.), also the depositions of three inhabitants, taken before a justice on Aug. 14, 1689, to the effect that Andros, in April, had agreed with an Indian sachem named Wessecanow (their informant) to attack New York City with a band of Indians, and destroy the Christians; also an affidavit intended to show the violent disposition of Nicholson when the news reached him about the landing of the Prince of Orange in England.—N. Y.
Col. Docs., III: 683-60. Both factions made wild charges.

- 1690 a warrant from our Usurper Leisler, & brought backto this place— Feb.
 Jan. New York with his Letters which were opened and perused at the 15 will and pleasure of this arbitrary Man.—From "A Modest and 16 Impartial Narrative of several Grievances and Great Oppressions," etc. (1690), reprinted in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 682. The "post," as used in the colonial records, was synonymous with the later so called "post-riding."
- 17 Leisler issues warrants for the arrest of Col. Nicholas Bayard, Stephanus van Cortlandt, Anthony Brockholst, Peter Jacobse Marius, William Nicolls, and Robert Reed, charging them with "high Misdemeanors" against his Maties Authority . . . by writing Execrable<sup>rs</sup> & pernicious falsehoods.—Doc. Hist. N. Y.
 (4to ed.), II: 35.
- 18 Leisler issues a commission to any five of a list of named inhabitants, of whom Peter Delaney, the "Judge of o Court of Oyer & Terminer & Geo<sup>ll</sup> Goall delivery," shall be one, to hold a court on Jan. 22 and "hear, try and determine" any cases of crimes and offences committed against the laws and customs of the province and England.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 36.
- 21 An anonymous pamphlet of protest, bearing date "in New York 21, Jan<sup>y</sup> A. D. 1690," made its appearance some time this year, having the title: A Modest and Impartial Narrative of Several Grievances and Great Oppressions That the Peaceable and most Considerable Inhabitants of Their Majesties Province of New-York in America Lye Under, By the Extravagant and Arbitrary Proceedings of Jacob Leisler and his Accomplices. Printed at New-York, and Re-printed at London, 1690. Inasmuch as the first printing-press in New York was set up by Bradford in 1693 (q. v.), the date of the printing of this pamphlet in New York prior to that year is obviously an error. It is likely it was printed originally by William Bradford at Philadelphia (see Evans, Am. Bibliog., No. 570), and when reprinted in London was attributed erroneously to New York because the subject matter related to this city. A photostat copy (from which the above title is transcribed) is in the N. Y. Pub.
 Library, made from the printed original in the British Museum, which Brodhead reprinted in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 665-84. The pamphlet reviews, with evident accuracy, from the standpoint of the regularly constituted authorities of the city and province, the official transactions and the rebellious transgressions that have occurred during the last year. The violations of the "Laws and Liberties of the English Nation" on the part of Leisler are all critically described in this narrative, which states it as Leisler's maxim that "The Sword must rule and not the Laws."
- Various arrests and imprisonments, without due process of law, are described. Finally, on Jan. 20, 1690, by Leisler's command, William Churchill and several soldiers, assisted by certain inhabitants, went to the house of Colonel Bayard, and broke open doors to seize Bayard; they followed him to a neighbour's house, laid hold of him, and dragged him to the fort and imprisoned him. They likewise broke open the house of Stephanus van Cortlandt, late mayor of the city, but he escaped. William Nicolls was taken at the ferry-house on Long Island, and carried to the fort. This followed the refusal of several of the inhabitants to pay customs and excise to Leisler. The pamphlet closes with an arraignment of the "principal authors" of the "miseries" suffered by the inhabitants. These are:
 "Jacob Leisler, Jacob Milborne, Samuel Edsall, Dr<sup>o</sup> Geo Beckman of
 authors of the pamphlet declare their intention to prosecute these men as soon as a fair opportunity offers to do so legally.—Ibid.
- 24 Col. Bayard, who is sick and kept in chains in the jail, petitions Leisler for mercy and pardon, and asks for release on bail.—*Doc.
 Hist. N. Y.* (4to ed.), II: 37-39.
- 31 Instructions are given, by the king's command at Whitehall, to Col. Henry Slaughter, governour of New York.—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.* (4to ed.), III: 685-91. With these he is to receive his commission. This commission, as recorded in the "Book of Commissions" in the secretary of state's office, Albany, bears date of Jan. 4, 1690.—Ibid., III: 623-29. New York Province is reduced to its former boundaries.—Osgood, The Am. Colonies (1907), III: 464.
 See further, regarding these instructions, March 19, 1691.
- Feb. Leonard Beckwith, city surveyor of New York (see March 17, 1688) is commissioned as surveyor-general.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 193.
- 15 Leisler issues a warrant to "y<sup>e</sup> Civill & Military Officers & Sher-ife for the Queens County upon Long Island, . . . to Secure y<sup>e</sup> Body of Colonel Thomas Dongan with a Safeguard with in his owne house & to apprehend Coloued Thomas Willet Capt<sup>o</sup> Thomas Hicks Daniell Whitehead & Edward Antill." These, he alleges, have done all in their power to advance the interests of James II, contrary to their duty to King William.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 41. On Feb. 21, a similar warrant is issued regarding Dongan, Van Cortlandt, Brockholst, and Plowman.—Ibid., II: 42-43. As to how Dongan escaped arrest, see April 24.
- A warrant is issued to Leonard Beckett, surveyor, to determine the division line between the lands lying in the bounds of Harlem and the lands of Theunis Ytesen (Ides).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 194; Black, Municipal Ownership of Land, 50.
- Leisler issues a writ calling for the election of representatives who shall meet in New York "to consult debate & conclude" all such matters as are necessary "for y<sup>e</sup> supply of this Governm<sup>t</sup> in this present conjuncture."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 42.
- Leisler writes to the "Governor of Boston" for "a Catalogue of all the bookes & papers in your custody relating to the province of New York."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 103. The request was made again on April 7.—Ibid., II: 128. Regarding the return of the New York records, see April 17, 1690; May 8, 1691; Sept.
 3, 1691.
- Leisler and his council issue a commission to Joannes de Bruyn, Joannes Provoost, and Jacob Milborne to command all the forces raised in New York and adjacent counties, and to proceed to Albany and take control of affairs there, to treat with the Indians, take possession of Fort Orange there, etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 100. This was due to the massacre at Schenectady and the burning of that place by the French and Indians, in February.—
Ibid., I: 192-95.
- It is ordered by the common council that the alderman of the North Ward appoint two fit persons to see that Church Street is paved "By Every  $\frac{1}{2}$  soos before there doors as it [is] done by other Inhabitants."—M. C. C., Appendix, VIII: 143.
- In a letter written at "fort william" to the commissioners from New England (see Feb. 20), Leisler suggests a house out of town for their meeting, on account of the small-pox in New York. The house referred to he describes as "two milles of the town a good & nett [neat] house by Capt. Arian Cornelis where no small pox is."
Doc. Hist. of N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 106. See April 23, 1688. The house was kept by John Clapp in 1697 (q. v.).
- Robert Livingston, who, prior to the Leisler revolution, had been town clerk at Albany (see Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., III: 43-35), writing from Hartford to Andros, informs him that Leisler's faction seeks to have the mayor and other magistrates at New York take commissions from Leisler as lieutenant-governour, but they refuse to do so until Leisler can produce better power from King William to confer commissions. Van Cortlandt has fled.
 Col. Bayard, Mr. Goer, William Nicolls, and several others are kept in dark prisons. Leisler causes Bayard to be carried triumphantly through the fort in a chair, in chains.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 708-9.
- Robert Livingston makes reference to British soldiers as "Red Coats."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 708; IV: 875. For an earlier reference of the same sort, see Aug. 29/Sept. 8, 1664. The Militia Law of the province did not prescribe the "Scarlet Coat" until July 24, 1724; however, even at this early date (1690), British law and custom evidently prevailed here.
- Robert Livingston, writing from Hartford to Maj. John Winthrop, declares that to relate "y<sup>e</sup> hardships & troubles we have mett withall Since this Revolution would require a whole Volume." He calls Leisler a "usurper" who tyrannizes "over there Maj<sup>ty</sup> Subjects without any Coller [color] of order or Commission from y<sup>e</sup> King."—Winthrop Papers, op. cit., XIV: 154.
- The committee of trade and plantations at Whitehall agrees to "move" (request) the king that orders may be issued to remove the records of New York from Boston and deliver them to Col.
 Slaughter. At a court at Kensington on April 26, an order was issued that a sloop, built in New England at public charge when the colonies of New York and New England were united, might be delivered to Slaughter; that the great guns brought from Pemaquid by the people of Boston might also be delivered to him; and that the records of New York, now in Boston, might be restored. Another order, dated April 30, was directed to the colony of Massachusetts to deliver the sloop, the great guns, and the records to Slaughter, for use of the king's service in New York Province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 710-12.

- 1690 Judge Samuel Sewall starts from Boston for New York, his Apr. entry in his diary reading: "Mr. Stoughton and I set forward for 21 New York, Tho. Mosely waited on Him; Joseph Cowell on me; Mr. Cooper and others in Company."—Diary of Samuel Sewall, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (Boston, 1878), 5th ser., V: 317. Judge Sewall and William Stoughton were commissioners on the part of Massachusetts to attend the meeting of commissioners from the northern colonies to concert measures for the common safety. See further, May 1.
- 24 In the first "assembly" under Leisler, held at the house of Robert Walters in New York, beginning this day, only one act is passed. This contains two provisions, as follows: "to rise [raise] throughout the whole Government three pence in every pound reall and personall, to be paid the first of June;" and "that all townes and places should have equal freedom to boult and bake and to transport where they please directly to what place or Country they think it fit, anything their places afford, and that the one place should have no more privileges, than the other."—From Van Cortlandt's letter to Andros, dated May 19, 1690, in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 717, which is the only source cited in Col. Laws N. Y., I: 218. By an act passed in the next session, on Oct. 2, another tax levy of the same amount was imposed, to be collected in January and March following.—From Leisler's letter to Shrewsbury, dated Oct. 20, in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 753, and Col. Laws N. Y., I: 219.
- See A. Col. Thomas Dongan, former governor, in a letter to Maj. Gen. Wiothrop at Boston, says: "Capt Leisler has been soe unkind to me notwithstanding I offering him Security for my good behavior, issued out his warrant last february to Sieze me under pretence to have King James his Commission from me it being my only thing I have to Justify my former proceedings during my being Governor of New Yorke, Soe I was forced to Skulke from hole to hole in east Jersey and an owe com'd soe far as Majr Smithes, and doe instead towards yo<sup>r</sup> parts oer weeke for I doe not doubt to have the favour of yo<sup>r</sup> protection wth the rest of the gentlemen there, yo<sup>r</sup> broth<sup>r</sup> is very well and sayes he will be downe that way Soon."—Wiothrop Papers, XII: 135, in Mass. Hist. Soc.
- May 1 An intercolonial congress meets in New York, and adopts measures "for the Strengthening of Albany;" and for "Subduing y<sup>e</sup> french & Indian Enemies Continuing in hostility agst their Magties." New York, Massachusetts, Plymouth, and Connecticut are represented by commissioners. Each of these colonies, as well as Maryland, agrees to send a quota of men and provisions at its own expense. Articles of war are agreed to.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 134-35. The report of this commission, dated May 1, 1690, apportioning forces to be raised by the colonies of New York, Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, was signed by Jacob Leisler, William Stoughton, Samuel Sewall, P. Delanoy, Joan Walley, Nathan Gold, and William Pitkin.—Mass. Archives, XXXVI: f. 45; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 751. See A.
- 4 Judge Samuel Sewall of Massachusetts, having completed his work as commissioner from Massachusetts, remains over Sunday in New York, before starting for home. He records the manner in which he spent the day: "Went to the Dutch Church in the morn. Sung the 69th Ps. ad. Pause from the 24th V to the end which Capt. Lodowick taught me the evening before. . . . At my Lodging Mr. Mariotto sang the 25th Psalm . . . a Psalm extraordinarily fitted for me in my present distresses."—Diary of Samuel Sewall, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (Boston, 1878), 5th ser., V: 318.
- 15 An order in council is made "to Secure all porke w<sup>thin</sup> this City to be Brought to his Maties Store howse for his Maties service." Leisler issues a search-warrant accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 137. Only 180 barrels are found.—Ibid., II: 143.
- 19 Thirty-six leading merchants and other inhabitants of New York, in an "Address to the King and Queen," report the several acts of oppression and defiance of law by Leisler, and ask for relief.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 748-49. Among the petitioners are Rip van Dam, Stephen de Lancey, Jacobus van Cortlandt, Col. Abraham de Peyster, Nicholas Wm. Stuyvesant, Balthazar Bayard, Isaac de Forest, and others. For an authoritative sketch of the life of Rip van Dam, at this time one of the most prominent merchants of New York, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 720 et seq.
- " William Masson (Masson) and other captains of privateers are commissioned by Leisler to sail for Quebec and war upon French vessels.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 141. See also 1689; N. Y.
- Col. Docs.*, III: 751-52; IV: 307, 385-86, 444, 606; and N. Y. Col. Docs., Index, titles "Masson," "Coats," and "Red Sea."
- Van Cortlandt, writing from "New England" to Andros, tells who are imprisoned by Leisler, and what they have done. Most of the Albany women are at New York (evidently because of the war waged in the vicinity of Albany by the French and Indians). "The remainder of the money that was gathered for the redemption of Leisler and the other slaves in Turkey which your Excell: gave to build a new Church in New York, our church-warden had it laid out in Amsterdam and got Osenbridge linnen [Osnaubrugh lincen] for it, all which Osenbridge Leisler hath taken and sent to Albany with Milborne.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 715-19.
- See A. Slaughter is given a seal by the king, for the use of the "Province of New Yorke and the Territories depending thereon." It is thus described: "Engraven on the one side with our Royal Effegies, and Two Indians Koeling & offering presents unto Us, with our Royal Titles round the circumference of the said Seal, and on the other side with our royal Armes, with the Garter, Crowe, Supporters and Motto, and this Inscription round the circumference. Sigillum Provinciar Nostrar Novi Eboraci in America." He is authorized to use this seal on all patents, public grants of lands, and public acts and instruments made in the king's name.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 726; Doc. Hist. N. Y., IV: 2, with illustration (plate 4).
- June 6 Leisler, writing on June 23 from "Fort William" in New York to the Earl of Shrewsbury, states, among other things, that, on June 6, he was assaulted on the streets by "a Rout of Thirty odd persons," one of whom struck at him "with an Adz."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 731-33. On June 7, he issued a proclamation reciting the events of the day before, commanding that certain inhabitants be seized, and that all persons keep the peace. He also called on all inhabitants to come into the fort and renew their declaration in favour of King William.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 148. On June 27, writing to "Col. Cood in Maryland," he again described the assault upon him on June 6.—Ibid., II: 151.
- 12 The justices, Delanoy, John Sprat, and another, issue an order to the high sheriff, high constable, and petty constables to take care that "Vagabonds, thieves, Robbers and Strangers abiding in s<sup>d</sup> City and County without knowledge of s<sup>d</sup> authority may be secured examioed & proceeded [against] according to Law." The inhabitants, also, are to give an account of persons who disturb the peace.—From the original order in metal file labeled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.
- 24 Leisler had sent Maj. Milbourne to Albany to settle the "great distractions amongst the Forces Raised for the Canada Expedition." Now, instead of sending him to England to give a report of the affairs of the province to the lords of trade, he sends his report to England by Capt. Blagge, one of his council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 733. This report, dated June 23, is addressed to the Earl of Shrewsbury; it concerns the war against the French and Indians, and the riot of June 6 in New York.—Ibid., III: 731-33.
- Capt. Blagge writes a petition to the king on behalf of Leisler and his council, soon after his arrival in England, beginning:—"That the Inhabitants of the said Province uppon the first notice they received of the late Happy Revolution in England; the more effectually to secure y<sup>e</sup> said Province and Government for your Maties service Did think themselves obliged to remove the late Lieut Govern<sup>r</sup> Nicholson." The purpose of this petition was to ask the king's "approbation" for what Leisler and his council had done, and to ask for guns and ammunition.—Ibid., III: 737.
- This petition was accompanied by "A Memorial of what has occurred in their Matys Province of New York," etc. Both of these documents are without date. The memorial explains the circumstances of the removal of Nicholson and the appointment of Leisler and a committee, by the people's choice, "to take into their Hands the care and charge of the Government until their Maties Pleasure should be further knowne." It reviews the events attending the proclaiming of the king and queen at New York; then the suspending of the mayor and aldermen; then the arrival of the letter from the king-in-council, directed to Nicholson, "and in his absence to such as for the time being do take care for the preservation of their Matys Peace," which, as Leisler and his followers contended, empowered Leisler to receive and act upon its instructions. The memorial describes the factional differences that have arisen; the imprisonment of some of the leading opponents of Leisler's government; the calling in of commissions which were issued by Dongao and Andros, and the issuing of others in the name of the present king and queen;

1690 and it closes by stating that the enemies of the Leisler party "have endeavoured all they can to misrepresent us and load us with reproach by terming our aforesaid proceedings a Dutch Ploott because in deed three quarter Parts of the Inhabitants are descended from the Dutch and speak that language, and they also threaten our Ruine if ever the Government come into there hand again." It is the effort of Leisler and his followers to avoid such a calamity, to "reap the benefits and blessings in this most happy Revolution, and not be made a prey to most implacable and Insulting Enemies within us, as well as Malicious & Inveterate Enemies on our Borders who are ready to enter and devour us."—Ibid., III, 738-39. The memorial is accompanied by numerous affidavits respecting the riot in New York of June 6.—Ibid., III, 740-48. This memorial was answered by Bayard and Nicolls on April 27, 1691.—See May 7, 1691, when Sloughter sent the answer to England.

July 23 Leisler commissions certain ship captains to cruise along the Sound and endeavour to capture French ships "which are committing outrages," and which "have already taken two vessels belonging to this port & several others, . . . so that no vessels can budge."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 154. On July 24, other vessels were ordered to do like service "to this Coast" (ibid., II: 166); and again on Oct. 30 (ibid., II: 174-75).

Sept. 31 John Winthrop is commissioned by Leisler to be commander of the forces against the French.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 157. William and Mary give a commission to Maj. Richard Ingoldesby, which is signed by Nottingham at a court at Kensington, to be captain of a company of foot-soldiers, recently raised for service in New York Colony.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 300.

18 The assembly passes "A Bill Confirming to the Inhabitants of this Province the Full Privilege and Benefits of his Maj<sup>ties</sup> Laws within this Province." Imprisonment shall be by warrant. Persons who have fled from the province are required to return to their homes within three weeks, or be deemed "disobedient to the Govern<sup>mt</sup>."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 200.

"A court of admiralty is held at the city hall, several French vessels having been brought into the harbour. Jacob Milbourne acts as attorney-general. A vessel, "the borne friggott formerly the L'Esperance," is condemned to be sold as a prize.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 164-65. Regarding the disposition of other ships, see ibid., II: 166-68, 172, 176; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 344.

25 The first issue of Public Occurrences appears, in Boston.—See A. William Bradford and others lease 20 acres on the banks of Wissinickon Creek (near Germantown), where they establish the first paper-mill in America.—Weeks, Hist. of Paper Manufacturing, 2-4.

Oct. 4 Leisler's "assembly" passes an act imposing a fine on persons refusing to serve in civil or military positions under commissions issued by him. The original is in the office of the secretary of state, and is published in Col. Laws N. Y., I: 219-20.

17 After considering Leisler's letter to Shrewsbury of June 23 (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 731), with the petition and memorial of Capt. Benj. Blagge (see June 24, 1690), and also the address of the merchants of May 19, the lords of the council at Whitehall send all these papers to Sloughter, and direct him, on his arrival at New York, to examine into the allegations and give a strictly impartial account for the information of their majesties.—Ibid., III: 750. Sloughter replied on May 7, 1691 (q. v.).

Nov. 7 In behalf of "the freholders of the Towne of Hamsted, Jamaica, Flushing and Newtown," John Clapp writes to the secretary of state (London) describing their condition and the tyranny of Leisler. He states that he has just cause to believe that "these monsters of men . . . will inevitably betray there Maj<sup>ties</sup> City, Fort and province of New York to the French."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 754.

29 By a prenuptial indenture deed of this date, "Fredrick Flypse" (Phillippe) agrees to transfer to Jacobus van Cortlandt and to Eva, adopted daughter of "Flypse," as a gift upon their marriage, "his house and ground Situate lying and being on the East side of the Dock or Mould of this City fronting to the house that M<sup>r</sup> William Merritt now lives in."—From the original indenture signed and sealed by "fredrick flypse," filed with the "Jay Papers," in wrappers of "Miscellaneous Pieces," in N. Y. Hist. Soc. archives. See also July 15, Nov. 25, Dec. 28, 1692.

Dec. 11 The first issue of paper money in Massachusetts is made.—See A. Winsor, op. cit., V: 170.

During this year, a report was made of the quantity of guns, powder, ball, etc., in the fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 202.

In this year, Maryland became a royal colony, with Sir Lionel Copley as governor.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 552-53.

Leisler authorizes Maj. De Bruyn to convene a council of officers to take suitable measures for the better disciplining of the militia.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 181.

The ship "Beaver" with one company of foot soldiers, under command of Maj. Richard Ingoldesby, and the "John" and "James" with stores, arrive from England. They came up to New York on the 29th. Four days later, the ship "Canterbury" arrived with another company of foot-soldiers. Chidley Brooke of the "Beaver" informed Sir Robert Southwell, by letter of April 5 following, that when the first ships came up to the city, Ingoldesby sent him (Brooke) to request Leisler to admit the stores and forces into the fort. Leisler was willing to receive the stores but not the soldiers. He seemed very angry, and his insolent behaviour put Brooke on his guard. His taste of power had infuriated the "puny usurper." Such was the belief of Brooke, who said they found "the best and greatest number of the people languishing under his oppressions and now overjoyed at the hopes of a deliverer. . . . We durst not venture to land our men till we had prepared some well affected persons of y<sup>e</sup> City to stand in our defence in case he should offer any violence agst us upon landing."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757. See, further, Feb. 6. The officers and soldiers "were forced to lodge in the Towne Hall of this City and to keep the stores on board for two months past, and suffer many reproaches and reflections from the said Leisler and his complices, who daily insinuated by writing and discourse to the people especially of the Dutch nation that they were come from the late King James and forged their communications and were enemies to King William and Queen Mary."

After various threats and warlike preparations by those in the fort, about 500 of the train-bands from the country came into town, armed, and the gentlemen of the council gave Leisler written notice that "they intended nothing but their own and the Citys security from violence."—Ibid., III: 759-62.

Leisler issues a protest against Maj. Ingoldesby, and forbids him "to commit any hostile act against his Majesties fort City or ports of the said Province."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 181-82. He also issues a proclamation calling out the militia.—Ibid., II: 182.

Ingoldesby, on board the ship "Beaver," answers Leisler's protest of Jan. 31, saying his men were fired upon "last night when they were coming on board," and that he has come "to protect his Majesties Subjects & preserve the peace."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 182-83. The next day Leisler answered that he would make amends.—Ibid., II: 183.

Letters are preserved of this date written by Robert Livingston (see April 14, 1690) from Fairfield, Connecticut, to Maj. Gen. John Winthrop and Goderidus Dellius (Dutch minister at Albany, who had gone for safety to Newport, R. I.). The first is written in English, the second in Dutch; the contents of the two are similar. News is given of Gov. Sloughter's appointment and expected arrival in New York. He tells Winthrop "there is a man of warr of 50 gunsms at y<sup>e</sup> hook he [has] above 100 Red Coats aboard y<sup>e</sup> Gov<sup>r</sup> is in a Ship of 55 guns, there is a gen<sup>l</sup> for y<sup>e</sup> Canida Expedition Sent by y<sup>e</sup> king & arrived 500 Red Coats in y<sup>e</sup> fleet, . . . y<sup>e</sup> Council are C<sup>t</sup> Dudley fer Phillips Stephan Cortand, Coru<sup>t</sup> Bayard W<sup>m</sup> Nicolls Cap<sup>t</sup> Minvielle, y<sup>e</sup> major [Ingoldesby], were not come ashore but had sent for all y<sup>e</sup> towne Cap<sup>tns</sup> & discharged y<sup>m</sup> to act by Leyslers Commission; y<sup>e</sup> fort is kept close by Leysler but good guards y<sup>e</sup> Rogue doe not Escape, Leyslers faction hang there ears Prodiously."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 155.

Notice having been received that Col. Sloughter has been appointed governor, and that the fort, etc., are to be surrendered to him, and he being expected daily to arrive, Leisler issues an order that the troops under command of Maj. Ingoldesby, which are for service in this colony and "cannot be otherwise accommodated

Feb 3 —Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 183. But see Feb. 4.

4 Maj. Ingoldesby having demanded possession of the fort, "without showing the least order from their Majties King William & Queen Mary or his excellency Col Slaughter for the same," Leisler refuses to surrender it to him and his troops. He nevertheless renews the proclamation of Feb. 3, that the Major and his troops shall be housed and supplied with provisions, etc., until the arrival of Col. Slaughter; but adds another prohibition against persons outside the province following Ingoldesby's commands.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 184.

5 At this time, Joseph Dudley writes from Boston to Blathwayt in England that he has arrived in port, and that "the fleet and frigate" are daily expected at New York, where he will meet them to assume his duties. He adds that the whole country is in a very bad state in every way; and that the King's delay in settling matters would make the colonies long a prey to their enemies and to each other.—Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 386.

6 At a meeting of the mayor, common council, and militia officers, it is requested by Maj. Ingoldesby that his soldiers may be accommodated in the city hall "until better entertainment is provided." Consent is given, provided there be no interruption of the "Court of Judicature."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 185.

Under command of Maj. Ingoldesby, the soldiers are brought ashore, "with as much caution [as Chidley Brooke stated in his letter of April 5 to Southwell] as if we had made a descent into an Enemies' Country." Continuing, Brooke explains: "We lodged our men in y<sup>e</sup> Town House and another House opposite thereto and now reports are industriously spread that we are Papists and disaffected persons fled from England, his [Leisler's] soldiers are encouraged to affront and threaten his Majties Forces." Leisler fires a warning gun twice or three times a week "to amuse," and gives no reason for doing so but "sic volo."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757.

14 Leisler refuses to comply with a request from Ingoldesby to release the prisoners in the fort. He gives as his reason the desire to avoid "a second hazard," peace having hitherto been secured without bloodshed.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 303.

Mar. 1 Leisler writes to Ingoldesby: "Last night your men took upon them to go the rounds of this City under Character of y<sup>e</sup> City Hall rounds sundry times passing by this fort which is a province that neither you nor any under your direction ought to tread in." He forbids a repetition of this. Nevertheless, on March 5, he is obliged to write a similar complaint.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 304-5.

4 A commission is issued to Maj. Ingoldesby (presumably from the privy council of England) to command the troops at New York.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 201. This states that the object is to put "their Majties good subjects in a posture of Defence against the deprivations oppressions frequent alarms and Threats of Jacob Leisler and his accomplices and for the securing the peace of this province. . . . Till such time as his excellency Col<sup>l</sup> Hen: Slaughter shall arrive," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 192.

10 In a declaration of protest against Ingoldesby, Leisler explains, more directly perhaps than in his other public documents (all of which are extremely faulty in English diction), the underlying motives for his seizure of the government. He begins:

"Whereas almighty God through his wonderful mercy hath raised up their Majties King William and Queen Mary to be y<sup>e</sup> glorious instruments of delivering their Kingdoms & dominions both Church & State from y<sup>e</sup> imposition of y<sup>e</sup> romish religion and illegal and arbitrary power exercis[ed] under y<sup>e</sup> unhappy reign of y<sup>e</sup> late King James. . . . Such abuse of power, he says, was manifested, especially under Gov. Dongan, who was a professed Papist, and who, with seven "counsellors," had power under his "letters patent from y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> King" to make laws, levy taxes, and "transport y<sup>e</sup> inhabitants out of this province without having any regard to advice or consent of y<sup>e</sup> representatives of y<sup>e</sup> people;" and this power was continued and augmented "by Commission from y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> King James appointing S<sup>t</sup> Edmund Andros Governor of this province as well as New England. . . .

"Whereupon many of y<sup>e</sup> good inhabitants of this province (Zealous for the protestant religion and rejoicing at so glorious an accession [to the throne as that of William and Mary]) . . . did secure his majestys fort displace and disenable y<sup>e</sup> lieutenant Governor [Nicholson] & his Council and Militia settled by the authority of said King James. . . . and to preserve in their loyalty did Elect representatives for each county in the province who assisted forthwith to proclaim their Majties William and Mary. . . ."

His narrative proceeds with the statement that he retained possession of the fort "until their Royall pleasure should be known concerning us" and this was made known on Dec. 8, 1689 (q. n.), by letter from the king dated July 30, 1689 (q. n.), "directed to Francis Nicholson, Esq., & in his absence to such [as] for y<sup>e</sup> time being take care for preserving y<sup>e</sup> peace and administering y<sup>e</sup> laws in this province to take upon them y<sup>e</sup> Gov<sup>t</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Province . . . until farther order from us." Inasmuch as this letter arrived when Leisler was in control of the government, he construed it as directed to himself and acted accordingly.

He is now expecting the arrival of the new governor, Slaughter; and, meanwhile, Ingoldesby has arrived, and, as Leisler puts it, "Hath presumed to raise men and levy forces within this province whereby hostilities and irregularities are Committed to y<sup>e</sup> indignity of their majties supremacy. . . . without discovering or publishing any authority from his majty or his Excell<sup>ty</sup> Colo Slaughter for so doing."

Leisler asserts his readiness and that of his followers to defend "their pres<sup>t</sup> Majties right and supreme authority in and over this province in opp<sup>n</sup> to y<sup>e</sup> former power & government." The Papists and French, he asserts, are ready to take revenge on those who have "prevented their mischievous actions & enterprises."

Leisler further states that he particularly protests against "a certain manifest & open declaration made at y<sup>e</sup> City Hall by Sir Esq<sup>s</sup> of y<sup>e</sup> Council and two Capt<sup>s</sup> commanding his Majties forces wherein is comprehended divers falsehoods and supposed matters which cannot be made out with truth to render y<sup>e</sup> Lieu<sup>t</sup> Gov<sup>r</sup> Leisler criminal and odious amongst the inhabitants of this City & Province which in due season will appear to y<sup>e</sup> contrary not doubting but to approve both his Loyalty and integrity for their Majties service and interest and y<sup>e</sup> preservation & security of this province," etc. He commands that the forces opposed to him be disbanded and keep the peace.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 306-9.

Leisler calls his "rabble" into the fort from all parts of the province as well as from New Jersey, the king's troops meanwhile expecting Col. Slaughter daily and "suffered patiently all his [Leisler's] abuses." "Canon are brought to bear upon the Town the Block Houses filled with armed men and the Cannon that faced towards y<sup>e</sup> River are turned inwards towards us," writes Chidley Brooke. Leisler "commands his arm<sup>d</sup> mob to stop the King's Soldiers in going y<sup>e</sup> rounds both at the Fort and the Block-houses and one night imprisoned four soldiers and a serjeant."—From Chidley Brooke's letter to Southwell, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757-58.

Leisler writes from Fort William to Slaughter at Bermuda concerning the present disorders, stating that they cannot continue long without bloodshed, and expressing the prayerful wish that Slaughter may arrive soon.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 309. The tone of this letter from Leisler is noticeably different from that written on April 5 by Chidley Brooke, which records events of this day.—See N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757.

Leisler and his party issue a long declaration against Ingoldesby and his council, pronouncing them "enemies to God, their present Majesties & the peace & welfare of this people and Province;" forbidding them "to continue in hostility," etc., and commanding them to "forthwith discharge & disband all the said forces which have been raised within this Province or elsewhere," or take the consequences.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 193-96. Leisler causes this to be read on the evening of the 16th and then orders his men into the fort.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758.

Leisler sends a letter to Maj. Ingoldesby, with one of the proclamations of the 16th enclosed, the substance of the letter being that, if the king's forces and all that appear in their defence do not immediately disband and return to their abodes, he will pursue and destroy them. This letter gives Ingoldesby two hours to comply.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758. Ingoldesby's council answers: "That the Several Articles of Accusation both ag<sup>t</sup>s<sup>t</sup> themselves and the Said Major Ingoldesby in the Said letter contained are altogether mistaken or false aspersion and Calumnies. . . . That the S<sup>d</sup> Gentlemen Officers and Soldiers are Immediately Commissionated by King William," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 193-96.

1691 Brooke, in his narrative of April 5 regarding these events, which Mar. he sent to Southwell, explained the situation as follows:—"Within 17 the limited time we answer'd this paper in y<sup>e</sup> most peaceable stile we could contrive, but in vain, we must all submit to be his slaves or by him be destroyed." Before Leisler had broken the seal of the answer, he said, in the presence of the messenger,—"Come, we'll go on!" In about a quarter of an hour "he fired a great shott at y<sup>e</sup> king's Forces as they stood in their parade and made several shotts at the house where they lodged and kept guard in hope to batter it down about their ears. These great shott were accompanied with Vollies of small shott." Those "of his rable" in the blockhouse failed to respond to his order to fire, coincidently with the firing from the fort, many of them being unwilling to engage in so rash an undertaking. Several inhabitants, as well as soldiers, were wounded and two were killed in the action which lasted until night, during which time Leisler was "safe immuned wthin the Fort." By nightfall, this band had surrendered, having heard of a designed attack both by land and water. This so discouraged those in the fort that there was no shooting during the night.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758.

Slaughter, writing to Lord Nottingham on March 26 about the occurrences of March 17, stated that "Leisler from the Fort discharged a great shot at the guards, and was answered from the Blockhouse at the other end of the City that held with him, and immediately many more great and small shott, some of which passed through the stone walls of the house where the guards were kept, wounded one of the King's soldiers and about seven other of the inhabitants, and one was slayn. During which time the guards nor the Train Bands stirred from their posts, but the Blockhouse soon failed them, submitted and laid down their arms and went to their houses."—Ibid., III: 760. See also Bayard's account, ibid., III: 763; and the affidavit of Daniel de Klerck and others, Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 230-33.

18 The few shots fired the next day did no harm. The king's forces, realizing their inability to storm the fort with their "handful of men," merely "stood still in a defensive posture every minute expecting when he would sally or batter y<sup>e</sup> Town down, but it pleased God to prevent his bloody desigine in a great measure by y<sup>e</sup> happy arrival of Our Governour on the 19th who found all his friends with white ty'd about their left arms for a badge of distinction and their lives in eminent danger."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758.

19 Gov. Slaughter having set sail from the Isle of Wight on Dec. 1, 1690, arrives in New York. In reports to the Earl of Nottingham, dated March 27 and May 6, 1691, he explained that his vessel, the "Arch Angel," which started with several ships in convoy, containing soldiers and stores, made for the Bermudas, where she lost 50 feet of her outer keel on the rocks; so that it took 16 weeks, after a rough passage, to complete the voyage. The other ships arrived two months earlier.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 756, 759. See also Slaughter's report on May 7 to the lords of trade.—Ibid., III: 766-67.

Writing on March 26 to Nottingham of his arrival on March 19, Slaughter stated: "I . . . was visited by the Gentlemen of the Council on board, and the winds not allowing the King's ship, I came instantly to towne in the pinnace, and at the Towne Hall in the presence of the people, published their M<sup>tyes</sup> letters patents for the Governour, took the oaths, and administered them to the gentlemen of the Council except Coll: Bayard and M<sup>r</sup> Nicolls who were detained prisoners . . . and sent immediately to demand entrance into the Fort, that those said Gentlemen of the Council should be dismissed, and that Leisler should render himselfe to give an account of the late troubles."—Ibid., III: 760; Cal. Coun. Min., 62; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 202; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 193.

In his report on May 7 to the lords of trade, Slaughter stated that on March 19 "Coll Dudley and some others came in a Brigantene on board us, I purposed not to goe to the Town before the Mann of War, but understanding the distress the inhabitants labour under, I went up in the Shipp's Pinnace, where I found all in Armes, neere four hundred men came out of the Countrey for to defend the City & their Majesties Stores and Forces against Leisler."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 767.

In the afternoon Slaughter three times demanded the fort but was refused. About eight o'clock, Leisler sent Jacob Milbourne, acting secretary of the province, and Peter Delany ("the two principal instruments of misery to this Province") to the governour to capitulate. The governour "thought fit to secure" them, and by that means "broke neck" of Leisler's project, "for Milbourne was his oracle and Delaney his great minister of State so that he being really a rash blundering fellow became a perfect drone his sting gone and unable to do more mischief." Yet, he would not deliver up the fort that night.—From Brooke's letter to Southwell, ibid., III: 758-59; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: Chap.

 XXVIII.

By Slaughter's commission (see Nov. 14, 1689, and Jan. 31, 1690), the right of the people to a representative assembly, etc., was formally acknowledged in these words: "And we do hereby give & grant unto you full power and authority with the advice & consent of our said Council from time to time as need shall require, to summon & call general Assemblies of the Inhabitants being Freeholders within your Governour, according to the usage of our other Plantations in America.

"And our will and Pleasure is, that the persons thereupon duly elected by the Major part of the Freeholders of the respective Countys and places and so returned and having before their sitting taken the oaths appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy and the Test [see Eccles. Rec., II: 1012], which you shall commisionate fit persons under our seal of New York to administer, and without taking which, none shall be capable of sitting though elected, shall be called and held the Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly of that our Province and the Territories thereunto belonging.

"And that you the said Henry Slaughter by & with the consent of our said Council and Assembly or the major part of them, respectively have full power and authority to make constitute and ordaine Laws Statutes & ordinances for y<sup>e</sup> publique Peace, welfare and good Governour of our said Province and of the people & Inhabitants thereof and such others as shall resort thereto & for the benefit of us our Heirs & Successors.

"Which said Laws Statutes & Ordinances are to be (as near as may be) agreeable unto the Lawes & Statutes of this our kingdome of England." Within three months after their passage such laws are to be sent to England for approval by the king. If disapproved, they shall be void. The governour is also given "a negative voice" (or veto power), and power to adjourn or dissolve the assembly.—
Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xxv-xxvi.

Although O'Callaghan refers (ibid., I: xxvi) to three branches which constituted the government (namely, governour, legislative council, and assembly), the word "legislature," as we use it to-day, to signify the two inter-acting legislative branches of the government, was not used at that early date in the journals of the council and assembly, or in the provincial statutes. It appears to have been first introduced in New York's provincial records on Feb. 6, 1736 (q. v.).

Joseph Dudley, Fred. Philipps, Stephanus van Cortlandt, 20 Gabriel Minevielle, Chidley Brooke, Thos. Willett, and Wm. Pin-borne are sworn in as members of the council.—Cal. Coun. Min., 62.
 Regarding Dudley's presence, see Feb. 5, and March 19.

Gov. Slaughter issues the order to Maj. Ingoldesby "to march your Company of Foote before the fort of this City and againe demand y<sup>e</sup> delivery thereof instantly and when you are in Possession, if Capt<sup>n</sup> Leisler and the persons call'd his Council do not render themselves arrest them in their Majties names and send them forthwith before me in Council."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 310.

Col. Bayard and William Nicolls are also "sworne of the Council" and take their places "at the board." At this session of the governour and council, Leisler and 11 others are brought before them as prisoners, and they are "Committed to the Guards." The "King's letter Directed unto francis Nicholson" is taken from Leisler.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 202, citing Coun. Min.
 The place of imprisonment is in the fort.—Ibid., II: 203-4.

John Lawrence is commissioned and sworn in as mayor.—Cal. Coun. Min., 62.

An account of this date shows the amount of ammunition and guns delivered to Capt. Kidd, Col. Willet, and others, by Mr.
 De Peyster, by order of the council before the arrival of Col.
 Slaughter.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 202.

The council appoints a committee to examine Leisler and the 23 other prisoners before sending them "to the Common prison of this City—from the Guard where hitherto they have been held."— Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 204. See A.

The council, meeting "at fort William Henry," orders that "a 24

1691 Court of Oyer & Terminer" he held "For the Triall of the Persons Mar. imprisoned accused of Rebellion and Murder," the reference being 24 to Leisler and his associates.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 204.
See also Brooke's letter to Southwell, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758-59; Slaughter's report to Nottingham (p. 760); his report to the lords of trade (p. 767), and his letter to Sec. Blatworthy (p. 789). The Council Minutes record the arrest of Milbourne and Delaney, who were then "Committed to the Guards."—Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceedings (1849), 107; and Dolstone's affidavit in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 317.

The fort, named Fort William during the Leisler régime, is hereafter called Fort William Henry.—See June 16, 1689. See also Aug. 29/Sept. 8, 1664; Aug. 7/17, 1673; Oct. 31/Nov. 10, 1674; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944.

The following record occupies a single page (352) of Volume I of the original minute-book of the Minutes of the Common Council:

FROM HENCE BEGINS WHAT IS ACTED IN GOVERNOR'S SLOUGHTERS TIME
MARCH—1691:

Nowhere else in the original text is an entry spread upon the minutes in such large letters. The page seems to express exultation at turning over a new leaf in the city's affairs. The first entry to follow (page 353 of the original text) is under date of March 24, 1691. It records the transactions of the new common council. John Lawrence is mayor, and William Pinhorne recorder. The names of those chosen aldermen, common councilmen, and constables are recorded, after their "publication." See also M. C. C., I: 213-15. For a brief sketch of the life of John Lawrence, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 383.

Capt. William Kidd complains to the governor and council against Capt. Jasper Hicks, commander of "their Mätyses hired Ship the Archangel," for impressing one of his men. The council ordered: "Upon the Consideraçon of the Good Service performed by the Said Captain Kidd not only to their Mätyses forces but Others their Majestyes good Subjects," that Capt. Hicks deliver to Capt. Kidd the man so detained.—Council Minutes (Albany).

Ehmerar Willson is elected treasurer of the city by the common council, which orders that he take the oath accordingly.—M. C. C., I: 215. He held this office until Sept. 29, 1698 (q. v.). On Sept. 29, 1707 (q. v.), he was appointed mayor.—M. C. C., II: 28.

A warrant is issued by the two justices of the peace for Leisler's commitment to prison.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 205.

Slaughter writes from "Fort William Henry" to Lord Nottingham an account of what has transpired since the arrival of the king's soldiers in January, covering the incidents already told by Childley Brooke (see 1690-1). He plans to send one of the council soon to Boston "to demand the records of this Province, the man of warr sloop, and the guns brought from Pemaquid." He states that "The whole country from Pemaquid to Delaware is extremely hurt by the late ill managed and fruitless expedition to Canada, which hath contracted forty thousand pounds debt and about a thousand men lost by sickness and shipwreck and no blow struck for want of courage and conduct in the Officers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759-62.

In his report to the lords of trade on May 7, Slaughter wrote that on March 26, by advice of the council, he issued "a Commission of Oyer & Terminer for the Try all of Leisler and his Council." Ten of these were indicted for murder and treason and six pleaded and were found guilty. Leisler and Milbourne refused to plead, but received sentence of death.—Ibid., III: 767. Regarding the circumstances attending the seizure of Leisler and the signing of his death warrant, see Eccles. Rec., II: 1254-55.

At a court of lieutenantancy held in New York, it is "Ordered that in time of alarm the severall Companies do take Their Posts as foloweth

At this time, also, the court of lieutenantancy adopts "Orders to be observed on the Military wach of the City New York." These orders provide, among other things, that "the waths [watch] be sett every Evening by beat of the drum and Continue till the beate of the revejle in the morning;" and "That the gates of the City be lockt Every night at the beate of the Taptoo and opened in the morning at the beate of the ravalje."—Court of Lieutenantancy, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 403-6. For locations here referred to, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, Vol. III, and Addenda, Vol. V.

Col. Nicholas Bayard, Stephen van Cortlandt, and William Pinhorne are appointed by the council a committee to prepare the evidence against the prisoners (Leisler, etc.), and James Emmott is appointed king's counsel in the case.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 205. The prisoners were arraigned "before Joseph Dudley S<sup>r</sup>, Robert Robinson, Thomas Johnson, and several others who sat as Judges."—*N. Y. Hist. Soc. By order of the governor's council, tramps are to be arrested.—Cal. Coun. Min., 63.

The common council resolves "that there be but one Butchers Shamble within this Cityt and that it be still dayly kept at the Green before the fort until further Order; and all Butchers meate to be brought to the Said Shambles for Sayle and no other place."—M. C. C., I: 215-16.

Leisler and Milbourne having been indicted for High Treason have refused to plead it is supposed the Governor will keep them for His Maj<sup>ty</sup> disposal of them.—Brooke's letter to Southwell, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759. See, however, Slaughter's report to the lords of trade on May 7.—Ibid., III: 767. A graphic account in Dutch, written by one of the accused regarding the treatment he received at the trial, explains the character of the pleadings. The statement is printed in full (translated) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 311-13. Mayor Van Cortlandt acted as interpreter at this hearing. It appears likely that the one who wrote this statement was either Leisler or Milbourne; and, judging from their dying speeches on the day of their execution, it seems more likely to have been Milbourne.

Regarding Leisler's arraignment, we have Dolstone's affidavit of Feb. 19, 1692, and De Wildt's affidavit of Feb. 23, 1692, indicating that his case was not given proper consideration by the court. Leisler and Milbourne both entered an appeal to the king from the judgment of the court, but this was overruled.—Ibid., 317, 323.

The trial was later said to have been "ordered by the Gov<sup>t</sup> & managed by the Bench Contrary to all the Rules of Justice & Humanity, . . . Gov<sup>r</sup> Slaughter too by Lodging In Nicholas Bayards house was the more pressed, & sooner prevailed on by Bayards Importunity to sign the Warrant of Execution. And as an Infalible token of the share he had in that Council, there was a flag hung out of a Window of his House for two days together, before the day of Execu<sup>tion</sup>, as a Trophy & Signal of the Point gained by him on y<sup>e</sup> said Gov<sup>r</sup>, & of the Victory over the Lives, not only of Innocent, but most deserving men."—Governour's affidavit of May 15, 1699, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 413.

The first session of the assembly under Slaughter begins.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 223. Thenceforth, until 1716, the assembly was elected biennially by the people.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 552-54.

The judges of the "Court of Oyer and Terminer" ask the governor and council whether the king's letter of July 13, 1689 (error for July 30, 1689—see under July 29, 1689), directed to Nicholson, "as in his absence to such as for the time being take Care for Preserving of the peace," etc., can be understood or interpreted to have given power or direction to Leisler "to take the Government of the Province upon himselfe or that the administracion thereupon be to be holden good in Law." The governor and council give their opinion that the letter contained no "power or direction for the Government to the said Cap<sup>t</sup> Leisler."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 207. In 1695, when the attainder of Leisler and others was reversed, the contrary view of this circumstance was taken by parliament. It was there specifically held that the letter referred to ("dated the thirtieth day of July") confirmed Leisler as rightful commander-in-chief, and that Ingoldesby demanded the fort "without producing any legal authority," the 1691 letter containing such authority being already in Leisler's hands.—

Ap. 13 Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 249. See May 3, 1695.

16 Gov. Slaughter writes to the governor of Massachusetts, requesting the restoration of the New York records and sloop, and in relation to furnishing aid in defence of Albany against the French and Indians.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 203.

17 The general assembly passes resolutions of protest against the conduct of Leisler, and they vote that these shall be presented to the governor and council with an address, pledging their lives and fortunes in support of the present government.—Assemb. Jour., I: 5-6; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 207-8.

" An act of assembly establishes the course of an appeal in court as follows: From the court of the mayor and aldermen, and from the courts of common pleas, to the supreme court, for any judgment above the value of £50; from the supreme court at New York to the court of appeals, consisting of the governor and council, for any judgment above £100.—Assemb. Jour., I: 5. From the judgment of this court of appeals, an appeal may be made to the king and queen in council in any case involving more than £300.—Street, The Council of Revision (1859), 9-34, where the further development of the jurisdiction of the courts is explained.

18 A committee having been appointed on April 1 to regulate the carmen, their report is approved by the common council. Carmen are to be licensed. No carman is "to ride about the Streets in his Cart." They shall take turns weekly carrying away the dirt of the streets, the inhabitants being obliged to load the carts unless the carman is "forced" to do so, in which case he is entitled to three-pence. The carmen are to be under two captains, who shall keep the constant number of 24 carmen, vacancies being filled by the mayor. The number was formerly 20.—See under Nov. 9, 1683, and M. C. C., I: 111. They shall separate each day, half to tend at the water-side and the other half in the city. No boys or negroes are to drive carts, and the carmen are not to let out their carts but to drive them themselves. All carmen shall be obliged to carry loads to the fort, but to leave "all Impleys to attend the Riding up of Wheate or flower or any other Merchandize Subject to Damage."—Ibid., I: 218-19, 245.

" A bill is introduced in the assembly providing for the erection of a bridge at "Spiting Devil."—Assemb. Jour., I: 7. In 1693, arrangements were made for Frederick Phillipe to build such a bridge, the first one to connect the island with the main land.—See Jan. 7, 1680; Jan. 5, 1693.

" Conradus Vanderbeeck, a city "carman," is appointed to the position of "inviter to funerals," which he petitioned for on April 1.—M. C. C., I: 216-17. On April 22, Richard Chappman was also appointed to this position on the recommendation of the governor. Both are to be licensed by the mayor, paying the city nine shillings besides fees, and the license is to be renewed annually. Vanderbeeck and Chappman are to receive equal profits, and are obliged to attend the burial of the poor without charge.—Ibid., I: 221.

On Nov. 18, 1731 (q.v.), their fees were regulated by ordinance.

" Gabriel Monville Esqr [also spelled "Minville"—see Col. Coun. Min., 64] and Thomas Willett Esqr are appointed to attend the house of Representatives and assist them of the many good services done to this Province by Capt William Kidd in his attendance here with his vessel during his Excellencies absence and that it would be very acceptable to His Excellency and this board that they consider of some suitable reward to him for his services."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 3. On May 14, the assembly voted £150 to Capt. Kidd, "as a suitable Reward for the many good Services done to this Province."—Assemb. Jour., I: 13.

" The common council adopts new market regulations (cf. March 15, 1684; and the Dongan Charter, April 27, 1686). These provide, first, "That there be two Marketts for flesh kept the one in the broad way our against the fort the other under the trees by the Slipp [the 'Old Slip Market'—De Voe, Market Book, 85] and that the Butchers Shall be obliged to keep flesh in both places and that the Country People Shall bring flesh to Either of the two places Sueting there best Convenience and that no butchers meat be killed within the City gates. [See July 8, 1703; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 959].

"Secondly That Eggs Butter and Poultry bee brought to said places for Sayle

"Thirdly That fish be brought unto the Dock ouer against the City hall or the house that Long Mary formerly liued in [see 1671] Likewise hearbs fruite Rootes &c." A market-house was erected here some time after July 9, 1691 (q.v.) and prior to Feb. 18, 1692. (See also Burgis View of that year, Pl. 25, Vol. I, where reference No. 8 appears to be to this fish market.) It is referred to in the Lyne Survey of 1730, Pl. 27, Vol. I, as the "Fish Market."

The ordinance of April 18 also provides that "the Market for flesh" shall be kept on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. In case "by tydes weather or any other accident," "flesh, fish, poultry, eggs, butter, cheese, herbs, fruit, roots, or "other Provisions vendible," should come to the city on other than market days, they may "be Sould in the Said Market place" under the same regulations as on market days. Among the other brief provisions of the ordinance is one that the clerk of the market is to receive a shilling a head for "all Cattle killed for the Market," three-pence for "Euery hogge or Shoate brought or cut out for Sayle in the Market house," and twopence for every sheep, calf, or lamb. The country people are to pay nothing for what they bring "Ready Killed."—M. C. C., I: 217-18.

The common council further requires that "all Wood brought for a Market or Exposed to Sayle in this City Shall be Corderd."—Ibid., I: 218.

" Among various bills sent by the assembly to the attorney-general to be drawn up is one "to appoint a Schoolmaster, for the Educating and Instructing of Children and Youth, to read and write English, in every Town in the Province."—Assemb. Jour., I: 7. The bill had its first reading on May 1st.—Ibid., I: 10. No further action was taken at this time. The interest in anything like popular education, on the part of the English municipal or provincial government, was slight as compared with that of Stuyvesant and the West India Co. during the Dutch régime (see July 30, 1665). Another bill providing for a "Free-School" was rejected by the provincial legislature in 1695 (Mar. 26, q.v.).

Judge Sewall of Massachusetts expresses regret that, as commissioner of that province, his trip to New York did little good.—Diary of Samuel Sewall, op. cit., V: 343-44.

" The common council requires the recorder "to make Inquiry about the Weigh house and to give his Report next meeting."—M. C. C., I: 220. On the following day, he was required to "draw an Address to his Excellency to Represent their Right to the Weigh house," and a committee was appointed to accompany him in presenting it to the governor.—Ibid., I: 221. On April 24, the common council approved of the draft of the "Petition to his Excellency for obtaining the Weigh house unto the use of the City."—Ibid., I: 222. No further action was recorded until Sept. 17, when another committee was appointed to apply to the governor and council "for a returne to their petition formerly given In relating to the Weigh house."—Ibid., I: 233.

" This petition recited that in the time of Governours Kieft and Stuyvesant the city had "the benefit of the Weigh house;" that in Gov. Nicolls's time, according to the articles of surrender, the former privileges of the city were confirmed, "and the Weigh-house granted a Perquisite thereto belonging;" that from 1673 to November, 1674, it "remained in the possession of the City and all profits arising there from accounted to the City the better to Enable them to maintain their Fortifications;" and that the Dongan Charter of April 27, 1686, confirmed unto the city "all the priviledges and franchises that any of their Predecessors at any time within the Space of Twenty years last past had tooke or Enjoyed or ought to have had by reason or under pretence of any former Charter Grant Prescription or any other right Custome or Usage although they have bin at any time Since disused or be not particularly menconed therein." The petition further stated that for several years past the city had not had the benefit of the weigh-house or received any of the profits from it; and the governor is asked to order that the "Said Weighhouse with the Revenue and profits thereof for time to come To be and remaine, as of custome and right belong, to the Mayor Aldermen and Comfionalty of this City."—Ibid., I: 239-40.

The governor and council, on March 31, 1692, granted to the city the revenue of the weigh-house, "for one year to Commence from the 25th of the Said month," to be used for materials and labour in repairing the fortifications; and on April 2, the common council expressed their thanks to the governor.—Ibid., I: 269. On April 4, Augustus Grassett, the last weighmaster, agreed with the city, in consideration of the city's enforcing the former rates of the weigh-house, to pay a rental of £240 for it. The former rates, rules, and orders were put into effect accordingly.—Ibid., I: 270-71. Col. Bayard accepted "the management of the Weigh-

- 1691 money & materials for the repairing the fortifications.—Ibid., Apr. 29
 I: 272.
- Ordinances more stringent than before (see Jan. 20, 1676) are enacted by the common council concerning strangers in the city. Shipmasters must report to the mayor the names of any strangers "within Twenty four hours after there Arrival upon foortie of forty Skillings." Even a private citizen is liable to the same penalty if he entertains "any Strangers for Longer time then the Space of Seven Dayes without giving Information to the Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 220. See also March 15, 1684.
- A common council ordinance provides that the clerk "make enquiry after and Receive in the Bookes and papers Relating to the Publique business and records of this City to Draw an Inventory of them and to bee charged with them by Indenture Signed with the Mayor of this City and Duplicat Signed by the clerk."—M. C. C., I: 221. The same ordinance was renewed Oct. 15, 1691.—Ibid., I: 246. The clerk is more rigidly obligated than before; cf. commission to John West, Nov. 8, 1680 (q. v.). For earliest inventory of records, see Jan. 14, 1680.
- It is ordered by the common council "That the Marks of Weights and Measures be fixed as formerly NY Withth addition of a Crown."—M. C. C., I: 222. This evidently means that, as heretofore, goods which came up to the prescribed standard as to weight and bulk were to be so marked. The mark mentioned is here for the first time described in the Minutes, although English weights and measures were prescribed in Andros's time.—See Oct. 6-13, 1675.
- An ordinance relating to the admission of freemen is adopted by the common council, stated in simpler terms than those contained in the charter on this subject,—indeed, in language almost identical with that of the ordinance of March 15, 1684 (q. v.).—M. C. C., I: 222; compare with Ibid., I: 137 and 302-3.
- The common council provides "That the Mayor Recieve for his fees six Shillings for Every Great Seale and three Shillings for a Small Seale."—M. C. C., I: 222, 238, 246.
- It is ordered "that the Necessary house be removed and placed further down upon the Dock," and a committee is appointed for that purpose.—M. C. C., I: 223. Again, on Oct. 20, 1691, it was ordered "that Ebenezer Willson & Peter King do forthwith build a Necessary house for the Use of the Publick upon Wharfe before the City hall."—Ibid., I: 253.
- Papers relating to Leisler's troubles are read in the council meeting.—Cal. Coun. Min., 64. These papers are probably the ones referred to on May 7 (q. v.). See also Cal. Hist. MSS. Eng., 204.
- The common council's order of June 14, 1688 (q. v.)—that every inhabitant should complete his wharf, fit for use, before Oct. 1 of that year,—not having been observed, and "the warfe" still being unfinished, it is now ordered that the owners of the lots "lying next the Water Side betwixt the State house and the Bridge" shall finish "The said Warfe," and shall fill up and level "all Vacant holes and Spaces" before Oct. 1 next, under penalty of £10 for each lot not filled up. A committee is appointed to enforce the order.—M. C. C., I: 225-26. "The said Warfe" to be completed "next the Water Side, betwixt the State house and the Bridge," was between Coenties Slip and the bridge into the dock, just where the present Moore St. is, which street was opened between 1730 and 1735.—Cf. Pls. 27, 27-A, and 30, Vol. I. This "warfe" became the present Water St. See Pl. 23-A (1695), Vol. I, and notice the bridge, running out from Pearl St., in the line of the present Moore St. Moore Street is referred to in 1731 and elsewhere as Weighhouse Street.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 102.
- The order of April 29 further requires that "Every Male Negro in the City, with Wheel barrows and Spades," shall do a day's work about these lots, under penalty of one shilling sixpence, payable to the city by the owner of the negro neglecting to work. The inhabitants "by the Water Side from the City hall to the Slipp" are required to assemble at 7 a. m. the following Saturday, "att Bell Ringing," to settle a time for building the wharf that is to extend in front of their lots.—Ibid., I: 225-26. This wharf (the present Water St.), which was to be built "by the Water Side from the City hall to the Slipp," was therefore to extend from Coenties Slip to Hanover Sq. (then called "the Slipp").—See Pl. 23, Vol. I.
- The inhabitants having met, it was resolved that the owners of the lots "upon the Water Side betwixt the State house and the Slipp" should finish the wharf before Nov. 30 next, under penalty of £10 for failure.—M. C. C., I: 227.
- On July 7, the committee was enlarged for finishing the wharf "upon the Water Side betwixt the Stadthouse and the Bridge." This committee was also appointed "for the placing and filling up a frame for what lands belong to the City betwixt the Stadthouse and the Slipp."—Ibid., I: 230. The location "betwixt the Stadthouse and the Bridge" (as already stated) was from Coenties Slip to Moore St.; and "betwixt the Stadthouse and the Slipp" was northward as far as Hanover Sq.
- A new committee on inspection was appointed Oct. 16; and another, to complete the wharf, was appointed Oct. 20.—Ibid., I: 250, 252. On the latter date, it was ordered that the treasurer pay the last-named committee such money as it "shall be in disburse to accomplish the Same."—Ibid., I: 253.
- For a pictorial representation of the development of Water St. and this water front, see the Burgis View, Pl. 25, Vol. I, in the description of which it is stated (p. 243): "The Burgis View depicts the water front along the East River from the turn in State Street west of Whitehall to a point a little north of Catherine Street. The shore line, which, in 1679, corresponded to the north side of Pearl Street, had at the time of this picture [c. 1716-8] been extended a full block into the river, so that the street or wharf on which the houses in the foreground of our view are aligned is the present Water Street, which, in 1679, was the Low-water line." See also Nov. 26, and Dec. 5, 1691; May 6, and Aug. 9, 1692.
- Gov. Slaughter, writing from "Fort William Henry," relates to Lord Inchiquin the condition of affairs as he found them on his arrival, and as they have been adjusted since. He states that he is not willing to execute the sentence of death against Leisler "until his Majesty shall have advice & his pleasure known therein."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 211.
- Bayard submits to the council an account for repairs to the fort, ordered by Leisler, and it is referred to a committee.—Cal. Coun. Min., 64-65.
- It is ordered by the common council "that there be Sworne Surveyors appointed for this City by whose advice and Direction the Ground within the City shall bee built," and "That a Regular Order and Uniformity may be kept and observed in the Streets and Buildings And that none pave before there houses but in such manner as appointed by the Said Surveyors." . . . Peter King and Adolph Peters are appointed Surveyors.—M. C. C., I: 226; see also Ibid., I: 137.
- It is ordered by the common council "that the Owners of the Seuerall Lots of Land Lyeing upon the Water Side betwixt the State house [Coenties Slip] and the Slipp [Old Slip] doe finish and Compleat[e] the Wharfe that is to be built before the said Lots betwixt this and the Last day of Nouember ceamt Ensueing."—M. C. C., I: 227. This was Dock St., and later became part of Pearl St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007). On Sept. 21, 1691, time was extended "till Midsummer day Next" to complete this wharf.—Ibid., 235. The Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-A, Vol. I) shows the wharf completed.
- The first act of the legislature ("Chapter I") to be passed on the restoration of peace is entitled "An Act for the Quieting and Settling the Disorders that have lately happened within this Province and for the Establishing and Securing their Majesties present Government against the like Disorders for the Future." This act refers to "the late hasty and inconsiderate Violacion" of a "true faith and Allegiance" to the crown. It complains that this "hath vitiated and debauched the Minds of many people &c. and hath also brought great waste, trouble and Destruction upon the good people of this province." It recognizes only the crown as the source of authority in the government; and that no one ought or can exercise any power over the subjects of the province, "upon any pretence whatsoever," except by authority derived from the king and queen (William and Mary) "under their Broad seale of The Realme of England." Any one who shall endeavour "by force of arms" to disturb the peace good and quiet of this their Majesties Government" shall be deemed "Rebells and Traitors" and "incur the pains penalties and forfeitures as the Laws of England for such Offences made and provided."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 223-24.
- The legislature passes "An Act for the Establishing Courts of Judicature for the Ease and benefit of each respective City Town County within this Province."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 226; Laws of Acts, Bradford ed. (Groslier Club reprint, 1894), cv, note. The act expired in two years (April, 1693).—Ibid. Meanwhile, on Nov. 11, 1692, a similar act was passed, to run for two years more.—Ibid., I: 303.

1691 The first comprehensive and extended act "for setting the May Militia" is passed. For earlier ones, see Oct. 27, 1684, and Oct. 4, 6 1690. This act recites that "the present State and Condition of this Province Doth of necessity require that the Inhabitants thereof Should be well armed and Trained up in Art military as well for the honour and service of Their Most Excellent Majesties as well as the preservation of their own lives and fortunes." It therefore provides that "noe person whatsoever from fifteen to Sixty years of Age remaine unlisted by themselves or masters mistresses or employers under the Captains in the respective places of their abode in foot or horse the space of one Calendar month after their arrivall or Coming to reside or sojourn in any place within this Province," on penalty of paying 20 shillings monthly while so remaining unlisted. Every foot-soldier is to "be provided with a well fixed muskett or fuzee (or if the Officer See appoint with a good pike or Sword or Lance and pistol|)] Each musketter Six charges of powder and one Cartouch box and so shall appear when and where appointed," under certain penalties for failure. Every soldier "belonging To the horse" shall appear "provided with a good Serviceable horse of his Own Covered with a good Saddle with holsters breast plate and crupper and a Case of good pistols hanger Sword or rapier and halfe pound of powder with twelve Serviceable bullets," under penalties for failure. Every foot-soldier shall have at his habitation "one pound of good powder and three pounds of Sizable bullets." Every trooper shall have at his usual place of abode "a well fixed Carabine with belt and Swivel and two pounds of fine powder with Six pounds of Sizable bullets," under certain penalties for each default. The troops of horse of New York and Albany and County of Ulster shall consist of 50 men each. Each person listed in the New York City regiment, except a commissioned officer or sergeant, may furnish an approved substitute to act "in the nightly guard and watch in this city."

Within one year after the publication of this act, all captains of foot companies and troops of horse shall provide their respective commands with "Drumms and Collours Trumpetts Trumpeters and Banners at the proper Charge of the respective Officers Troops and Companies." Obedience to the laws and articles of war is enjoined. The wounded are to be cared for at public expense. Punishments are provided for various infractions of this law, at the discretion of a court-martial to be appointed by the captain-general or commander-in-chief. The fines and forfeitures imposed upon any person under the degree of captain go to the captains, "to defray the charge of their Companies or Troops." They are to be levied "before the next Exercising day By distresse and Sale of the Offenders goods the Captains warrant to the Sergeant or Corporall And if no distresse be found the punishment to be by riding the wooden horse or being tyed neck and heels not exceeding an hour . . ."

No one is allowed "to fire any small arms after Eight of the Clock at night unless in case of any alarm Insurrection or any other lawfull Occation." In such cases, the firing of four muskets or small arms, or (where there are great guns) the firing of one great gun and two muskets or small arms, distinctly in each case, and the beating of a drum, "shall be taken for an alarm." In case of such alarm, "every Souldier is immediately to repair armed to his Colours or Court of Guard," under penalties for failure. Persons, including shipmasters, giving false alarms are to be punished and fined; but this does not apply to any captain or officer of ships of war when "firing at setting of the watch." Trumpeters and drummers are to receive annual salaries, the former of 40 shillings and the latter of 20 shillings each. All members of the provincial council, justices of the peace, sheriffs, coroners, officers of courts, ministers, schoolmasters, physicians, and "Cheirurgeons," are exempt from military service.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 231-36. See also note referring to this act in Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), six-cxi.

This act, and an additional one of Oct. 18, 1701 (Col. Laws N. Y., I: 454), were repealed by an act of Nov. 27, 1702 (q. v.), which, however, re-enacted many of its provisions.

Under this law, Ingoldesby's grenadiers and fusiliers are said to have been organized.—See article by Chas. S. Clark in The Eve- Post, Feb. 26, 1916.

Slaughter recommends to the Earl of Nottingham (principal secretary of state) that "if his Matye Shall please to grant his pardon for all except Jacob Leisler and Jacob Millbourne it will be a favour, and all care shall be taken of their estates to be at his Matys disposal, tho' some of them are scarce worth anything."—May

N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 762.

Slaughter replies to the lords of the privy council regarding the petitions, memorials, and affidavits, for and against Leisler, which they sent him, on Oct. 17, 1690 (q. v.), to investigate. He says: "I have examined and inquired into the Allegations contained in the address [of May 19, 1690, in which Leisler is referred to as an 'Insolent Alien'] from the Merchants Traders and Principall Inhabitants of New York to their Majesties [see N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 748], and do find them severally true." He sends, with this reply, a copy of the memorial which Blagge (Leisler's delegate to England) had written to the king (see ibid., III: 738). This memorial Slaughter had received among the documents he was required to investigate; and he returns it with an answer prepared by Bayard and Nicolls.

This answer of Bayard's, which Slaughter evidently intended as an expression of his own opinion also, reviews the facts and circumstances as seen by the opponents of Leisler, showing many alleged errors, falsehoods, and illegal proceedings which he is said to have been guilty of. Among the many allegations are the following:
 That Leisler "made to himselfe a Broad Seale w<sup>ch</sup> he called y<sup>e</sup> Seale of y<sup>e</sup> Province, with y<sup>e</sup> usuall arms of Kings of England, and affixed the same to unlawfull graunts of land within this Province;"
 that he commissioned, under this seal, justices of the peace, "in whose hartes were mischeife;" that he constituted "Courts of Oyer and Terminer," and tried several subjects for alleged treason, murder, and other crimes; that he taxed and levied money upon the king's subjects "to their grievous oppression and great impoverishm<sup>t</sup>;" that he "forcibly robbed and spoiled, broke open doores and loc<sup>k</sup>," when he wanted more money, and carried away money and goods to the value of thousands of pounds,— "and all this ag<sup>t</sup> the best Protestant subjects in the Province;" that he "imprisoned whom he feared . . . ; some of them after a tedious confign<sup>t</sup> without colour of law he whipt and branded, and some he kept in duresse so long as he held y<sup>e</sup> fort."

Referring to more recent events, the answer recites that Leisler
 "gave orders to y<sup>e</sup> blockhouse (a fortification at y<sup>e</sup> opposite corner of y<sup>e</sup> City where he had a strong garrison commanded under him, by one of his L<sup>ds</sup> Brazier) to suffer no soldiers nor others to appear armed before y<sup>e</sup> same, and if otherwise to fire at them; said he would do y<sup>e</sup> same from y<sup>e</sup> Fort, and at length contrived to sally out upon y<sup>e</sup> towne and kill all y<sup>e</sup> should be found in the streets or elsewhere in armes, and accordingly orders and a sign was given to y<sup>e</sup> Blockhouse. He shot a karmen throw the shoulder being in sight of y<sup>e</sup> Fort with his kart loaded, and refusing to carry his load thither, and kill'd the karmans horse; fired great guns through several houses of the City, particularly thro the house where he understood their Maj<sup>ties</sup> souldiers and ammunicion was lodjed; kill'd one Josiah Browne an old souldier, one negro and wounded a great many subjects in y<sup>e</sup> streets." Closing, Bayard asserts that "if some example be not made of such criminals, to future generations, especially they having committed bare faced and open rebellion against their Maj<sup>ties</sup> authority here published . . . their governm<sup>t</sup> can never be safe in these Collonyes."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 762-66.

Slaughter writes to the lords of trade, reviewing the incidents that have happened since his arrival. He acknowledges receipt of their order to appoint Mr. Graham recorder of the city and attorney-general; but he states that, before Mr. Graham's arrival, Mr.
 Pinhorne, one of the council, desired the place of recorder and was appointed on the request of the rest of the council. Also, one Newton was nominated attorney, "the affaires calling for a speedy settlement of Officers in order to the quieting the people." Slaughter adds that, "if it bee their Lordships pleasure they shall be readily obeyed."

Regarding Leisler, Slaughter states: "I am much solicited to execute the condemned but am resolved first to know their Mat<sup>ies</sup> Pleasure if by any other means I can keep the people quiet."

He also states: "I have written to my Lord President agreeable to the address to pray that the next Provinces of Connecticut and the Jerseys may be added to this Government for the better defence and support of each other."

It appears from the same letter that the public post is now in operation between New York and Virginia, for he states: "The hasty passage of the Post to Virginia will now allow us to transcribe the Acts of Assembly."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 766-68. This is the

- 1691 first reference in these Documents to this postal service. It indicates My7 the necessarily roundabout way of transmitting mail to England.
 8 Gov. Bradstreet of Massachusetts writes to the Earl of Nottingham that he has received "His Majestie's commands of the 30th of April 1690, forwarded about eight dayes since by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Henry Slaughter Esq<sup>r</sup> Govern<sup>r</sup> in Chiefe of Their Majesties Province of New Yorke, for delivering unto the s<sup>d</sup> Governo<sup>r</sup> Slaughter or such as should be appointed by him to receive the same, the Records of that Province, the great guns belonging to Pemauquit Fort that were brought to Boston and one of the sloops. . . . In observance whereof we have caused the Records to be delivered and given order according to his desire that the great guns be in a readynesse to be disposed of as he shall advise." As to the sloop, however, he explains that His Majesty has been misinformed, and that there is not any such available.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 769. Bradstreet writes the substance of this letter to Slaughter also.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 206. See also May 12, 1698.
- 9 The common council orders "that Mr Schuyler and Mr Coker be appointed to Enquire of Mr Cortland what Security was given by Mr De La Noy at his Entry into the Treasurers office."—M. C. C., I: 227. Peter Delano had been appointed city treasurer by the common council Oct. 19, 1685, and was specifically named as such in the Doogan Charter. He continued to be treasurer even after he was elected assistant alderman in 1687, and as one of the Leisler faction became mayor in 1689. "With Leisler's fall it was a completely altered municipal government that began to 'Inspect the Revenues' in 1691, and try 'particularly' to learn about Delano's accounts, apparently with little satisfaction. After his death, his widow claimed £170, 'by him disbursed for the publick Benefit.' A search for accounts to audit was again made by four different committees, apparently without avail. Very likely it was the widow Delano, rather than the city, that suffered because the treasurer's office was guarded by no rules."—See Petersen & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 30-31, citing M. C. C., II: 83, 99, 113, 139; III: 52.
- It was not until 1710 that the treasurer was obliged to give bond, after a committee had reported that the "disorder of the City Affairs and Acc<sup>ts</sup> hath Cost the Corporation in Law suits &c: (besides all Other Grievous Charges damages and Losses) upwards of £200."—M. C. C., II: 401-2. Also see May 13, 1710.
- 11 The council orders that arms taken from citizens of New York during the late troubles are to be returned.—Cal. Coun. Min., 65.
- " The first entry in Ledger No. 1 of the chamberlain's office bears this date (see Pl. 20, Vol. IV). The original volume is now on deposit in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and its text was published in the society's Collections, in 1909.
- 13 The legislature passes "An Act declaring what are the Rights and Privileges of their Majesties Subjects inhabiting within their Province of New York." It refers, primarily, to the legislative power. The assembly is to meet once a year. Every freeholder in the province and freeman in any corporation shall have a vote in electing representatives. New York City and County are allowed four representatives. The act also defines the character of the laws that shall not be passed, and thereby defines the rights of individuals.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 244. See also note in Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grollier Club reprint, 1894), p. cxi. This act was the Charter of Liberties of 1683, with modifications relative to churches. It met the same fate as before. The king vetoed it in 1697. The real reason for this was that this bill of rights vested supreme power and authority, under the king, in the governor, council, and the people by their representatives.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 193.
- " The legislature passes an act to defray the charges for maintaining the poor and preventing vagabonds.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 237; Laws and Acts, Bradford ed. (Grollier Club reprint, 1894), p. cviii, note. It was revised Oct. 18, 1701.—Ibid., I: 456.
- 14 The council advises that it is necessary that the sentence against Leisler, etc., be carried out.—Cal. Coun. Min., 65. This was "Att A Council held at fort William Henry," at which were present Gov. Slaughter, Frederick Phillips, Nicholas Bayard, Stephen van Cortlandt, William Nicolls, and Gabriel Monville. They resolve unanimously "that the sentence pronounced against the principal Offenders Leisler and Milbourne be forthwith put in Execution." This is deemed "as well for the satisfaccoon of the Indians as the asserting of the Government & authority residing in his Excellency] & preventing insurreccions & disorders for the future."
- Doc. Hist. N. Y.* (4to ed.), II: 212. The following day, the governor sent "the Minute of Council," thus passed, to the assembly. On the 16th, the assembly returned it, with the statement written under it that they "doe approve of what his Excell<sup>ty</sup> & Council have Doe."—Ibid., II: 212; Assemb. Jour., I: 14.
- Slaughter, however, had signed the death-warrant, it appears, on May 14, without waiting for the concurrence of the assembly, much less that of the king.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1256; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 648; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 553. It was said "that a very short time before their Execution they had assurance given to them by the Governour that not a hair of their head should be touched, but the Bayard party having invited him at a wedding entertainment of one of their family they made him drunk & then prevailed on him to sign the death warrant."—From statement obtained by Du Simitière from a Mrs. Latham, recorded by him in 1769, and pub. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 425; Eccles. Rec., II: 254-55.
- Domine Selvyn conveyed the fatal tidings to the condemned men the same evening in "a very strange way." While they were taking supper, "He said that he had come to bring them good news; that they were not all to die. But said he, addressing Commander Leisler and Secretary Milbourne, both of you are to die on Saturday next, the 16th of May, and you will prepare yourselves accordingly."—Ibid.
- Leisler and Milbourne and their "distrressed Relacions" sent another petition to Slaughter for a reprieve "until his Maties pleasure may be knowne." This petition, while undated, must have been sent immediately after they were notified, possibly on the following day, May 15, for they stated in the preamble that they had received "notice from Yo<sup>r</sup> Excellency that Saturday next [May 16] will be yo<sup>r</sup> Execucoon of s<sup>d</sup> Sentence."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 213.
- Joseph Dudley is appointed chief-justice.—Cal. Coun. Min., 65. He was the first to occupy this office in the province of New York. (His name is not listed among chief-justices in the index of the Cal. Coun. Min., 690; but see Ibid., 617.) For a sketch of his life, see Judge C. P. Daly's Historical Sketch of the Judicial Tribunals of New York, from 1623 to 1846.
- Leisler and Milbourne are executed. Gov. Slaughter later mentioned May 17, which was Sunday, as the day when the execution occurred; but the weight of authority indicates that this was an error, and that it took place on the 16th, as directed in the death-warrant of the 14th. Slaughter's statement is in a letter which he intended to send to Sec. Blathway of the privy council of England. He said: "The Council and Assembly did represent to me the great damage it would be to the King's Service and discouragement to future loyalty if the law was not executed upon the principal Actors which I was constrained to do and on the 17th of May Leisler and Milbourne were accordingly executed having respited all the sentence saving the hanging and separating their heads from their bodies."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 789. Slaughter died suddenly on July 23, and this letter, unfinished, which was found among his effects, was referred by the governor's council, on July 29, to a committee of that body, with an order to "Correct and amend the same at their own Discretion."—Ibid., citing "Council Minutes," VII: 41. They did not amend the date "17th of May" which Slaughter had mentioned, and this letter, signed by the commander-in-chief, Ingoldesby, and his council, Aug. 6, was sent to Blathway.—Ibid., III: 794.
- Ingoldesby, however, in the first communication of which he sent to the lords of trade, on July 29, on assuming control of the government, mentioned May 16, as the date of execution.—Ibid., III: 792. The dying speeches of Leisler and Milbourne were recorded as of this date.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 213-15. A memorandum made by Du Simitière in 1769, from interviews with those who knew from personal observation or family record, gave the date as May 16.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 426. This seems conclusive.
- Moreover, in the long account of the Leisler rebellion written by members of the Dutch Church to the "Classis of Amsterdam," Oct. 21, 1693, in which the date of the death-warrant is given (May 14), no mention is made of any change of date from that ordered for the execution.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1256-57. This interesting document describes how Domine Selvyn outdid the other Dutch ministers, Varick and Dellius, in favouring the purpose of Bayard and the others opposed to Leisler. Domine Daille, a fourth minister, was "accustomed to go to Commander Leisler, and exhort him to moderation;" and, "after he was in prison and under sentence of condemnation, he exerted his good office with Governor Slaughter, to prevent the execution." The letter states that if Selyns, Varick, and DeLius "had done their duty in a similar manner, who does not understand that this murder would have been avoided." Selyns had "declared that unless this thing had been done neither peace nor unity among the people could be hoped for."—Ibid., II: 1256-57. The gallows was constructed "of those same pieces of wood, which they had got ready on the walls of the Fort, wherewith to resist a storming enemy."—Ibid., II: 1257.

The dying speeches of Leisler and Milbourne have been preserved in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 213-15, having been printed from a copy of the original paper in the possession of Leisler's granddaughter, Mrs. Farmer, who was the daughter of the widow Milbourne and Abram Gouverneur. These speeches are deeply affecting and are full of expressions of Christian piety and devotion to the king of England.

One Thomas Jeffers made affidavit on Feb. 19, 1692, that he "did see the said Capt<sup>m</sup> Leisler & M<sup>r</sup> Milborne put to death being first hanged and then their heads cut off; and at the place of Execution this depon<sup>t</sup> did hear the s<sup>d</sup> Capt. Leisler declare his innocency and that he died a martyr for King William."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 321; see also the petition of Leisler, 2nd, in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 241. It was stated by members of the Dutch Church (Eccles. Rec., II: 1257) that a detailed account of the execution was given fully "by certain women a short time after its occurrence, who went hence to Amsterdam," but who they were or where their account was recorded is not stated. Another woman wrote a letter from New York to Amsterdam on Aug. 6, 1691, describing the distress which the followers of Leisler were suffering, and expressing the loyalty of all to the king and queen. Her letter was published by Dawson in The Historical Mag. (3d ser., 1872-3), I: 18-20. A third woman, one Mrs. Latham, made a statement which was reported to Du Simière, who recorded it in 1769, describing details of the execution, at which she helped to lay out the body of Leisler. See also May 14.

This woman stated, among other things, that Leisler and Milbourne "were buried in a ground belonging to Leisler to the east of the Commons of the city near the corner of a street call'd George Street in the new Plan of the city."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 425. "George Street is the present Spruce Street. The exact burial spot is thought to have been near the corner of Park Row and Spruce Street, or between Spruce and Frankfort Streets, back of the Tribune building of to-day. Frankfort Street, it is believed, was named at a later time for Leisler's place of birth."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 558; see also map by David Grim showing location of Leisler's grave, in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), opp. p. 426; ibid. (1860), 543; and ibid. (1866), 594-97.

It is interesting to observe here that both Brodhead's Hist. State of N. Y. (1871), and Van Rensselaer's Hist. City of N. Y. (1909) terminate with the death of Leisler. Both authors give summaries respecting his character and the effect of his revolution upon the later history of the province and city of New York.

One circumstantial detail of Leisler's execution,—namely, the storm which occurred on that day, is a fitting symbol of the factional strife which disturbed the peace of the city for many years.—See the reference to this storm in Milbourne's dying speech, Doc. Hist. of N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 215; and in the Assemb. Jour., I: 14. It is a curious fact also that, on Oct. 20, 1698 (q. v.), when the bodies were removed from the place where they were buried near the gallows, to be placed under the Dutch Church in Garden St., and the factional feud broke out again (as it did also in 1695, on the reversal of the attainder of Leisler and Milbourne), the ceremony was conducted "during a very great Snow Storm."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 426. Gov. Bellomont stated that "it blew a rank storm for two or three days together."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 401.

Leisler and Milbourne were the only persons ever executed for treason in the province or state of New York.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 560.

The legislature passes "An Act for the pardoning of such as have been active in the late disorders." Leisler, Milbourne, Beekman, Gouverneur, and several others are specifically excepted from the provisions of the act.—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 255; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), p. cxviii, note.

The legislature passes "An Act for the Establishing a Revenue for the Defraying the Publick Charges of the Province." It establishes customs duties, and excise by a detailed tariff schedule; regulates the entering of vessels and merchandise, and provides especially for entry of wines and liquors.—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 248; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), p. cxviii.

Col. Joseph Dudley, the chief-justice and a member of the council, is requested by the council to go to the New England colonies and ask for assistance against the French.—Cal. Coun. Min., 65. Dudley was president of the court which tried Leisler.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 215. In 1692, he removed from New York to reside in Boston (ibid., III: 847-48), and William Smith was appointed by Fletcher in his place as chief-justice (ibid., IV: 25, 442, 535-769, 821). See May 15.

Col. Bayard, Col. Smith, Major Ingoldesby, Capts. Cortlandt, Wm. Merritt, Schuyler, de Key, Wilson and Gore" are appointed a committee to inspect the fortifications of New York City.—Cal. Coun. Min., 65. See also Feb. 4, 1692.

It is ordered by the court of lieutenantancy "that the Rounds Shall go about the City Every hour of the night after the Beat of the Tapne & so to Continue till the Beat of the Revejle in the morning." It is also ordered that a search (or inventory) be made for "all the City Powder that belongs to the Town;" and "that the alarm Post of Cap<sup>t</sup> Schuyler Shall Extend from the City Hall Exclusive that Point to The Spur behinde Robert darkins which is to be Inclusive & Cap<sup>t</sup> Gore his Post to Extend from the Said Spurr to The Land gate the block house Inclusive."—Court of Lieutenantancy, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 406.

Augustine Graham is appointed surveyor-general in place of Alex. Boyle, deceased.—Cal. Coun. Min., 66. Graham was employed on a survey in New York City in 1693.—M. C. C., I: 322. He was surveyor-general in 1710.—Cal. Land Papers, 94.

Under the authority of the act passed on March 15, 1684 (q. v.), the common council orders that "the Sherriffe sieze all Flower or bread that Shall come to this City which have been Boaled or bakt without [outside] the Libertyes of the Same."—M. C. C., I: 230.

The city surveyors are required by the common council to attend the committee appointed "for the laying out the heere graft Street to the Water Side."—M. C. C., I: 231. The order was renewed on Oct. 15.—Ibid., I: 249. This was Broad St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1002.

The common council appoints a committee "to build a Markett house at the End of the Heeregraft Street [Broad St.] for all Butchers Meate."—M. C. C., I: 231. On Feb. 18, 1692, "The New Market house at y<sup>e</sup> Eoad of Broad Street" was allowed "for Shambles."—Ibid., I: 265. De Voe calls this the "Broad Street Markett."—See Market Book, 77. In 1714, it was repaired (M. C. C., III: 63), and again in 1719 (ibid., III: 218). It was taken down, according to De Voe, about 1746.—Market Book, 77-85. On its site, in 1752-5 (q. v.), the "New Exchange" was built. Secalso "Broad Street (Exchange) Market" in Landmark Map (Pl. 27, III: 958. De Voe points out that, in the Lyne Survey (Ref. 27, Vol. I), a building at the foot of Broad St. was called "Exchange;" but that the city ordinances, in 1730, called it the "Market by the Long Bridge."—Market Book, 84. See also July 24, 1738.

A memorandum is entered in the council records: "To write to the earl of Scarborough, for a license for Heury Lecatone, of New York, to manufacture gunpowder."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 213. Whether it was necessary to obtain this license from England because gunpowder was one of the supplies of war, or because the manufacture in America of all or certain specified articles was forbidden by English law, does not appear. In early Dutch times (1630), manufactures in New Netherland were forbidden.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 557. But they began to flourish in the province before 1700, and Lord Cornbury's ad Caleb Heathcote's reports of 1708 show that even linen, woolen, and other goods were made, which they thought would be a great prejudice to England in a few years.—Ibid., V: 59, 63. For further references to the trade and manufactures of the province, see Doongan's report of Feb. 22, 1687 (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 389-415); also the collection of papers on the subject reprinted in Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 441 et seq., 452-57, covering the period from 1705 to 1768; and Gov. Tryon's report reprinted in ibid. (1851), 371 et seq.

- 1691 in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 791. On the day he died, the council, taking charge of the government until the arrival of Ingoldeby on the 26th, appointed Doctors Thorehill, Karylby, Brett, Gaudineau, Tienhoven, and Lockhart to hold a post-mortem examination to determine the cause of death. It was the first one held in the city of New York of which we have any record. They made a report on July 30.—Ibid., III: 794; Cal. Coun. Min., 66, 67. This report is not published with the documents. There is, however, a record that a letter was sent to Mr. Blathwayte, conveying the intelligence of the death of Gov. Slaughter, and the report of the surgeons as to its cause.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 213. Historians agree that he died from natural causes, probably from pneumonia.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 563; Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y., 210. Regarding his burial-place, see 19th Ann. Rep., Am. Sen. & Hist. Pres. Sec. (1913), 211-13.
- 24 Col. Bayard, Judge Johnson, and Mr. Lyndale are named "to make arrangements for the governor's burial in Stuyvesant's vault."—Cal. Coun. Min., 66.
- 27 Maj. Richard Ingoldeby is sworn into office as commander-in-chief (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 791), and proclamation is made to that effect.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 213. The council administered the government from July 23, when Slaughter died, to July 27.
- Aug. 6 In an address by Gov. Ingoldeby and the council to the king, the English provinces are described to show the territory drawn upon for revenue. Of this city they state: "New York is the Metropolis, is situate upon a barren island bounded by Hudson's River and the East River that runs into the Sound, and hath nothing to support it but trade, which chiefly flows from flower and bread they make of the corns the west end of Long Island and Zopus producteth; which is sent to the west Indies, and there is brought in returne from thence amongst other things a liquer called Rumm, the duty whereof considerably increaseth Your Majesties revenue."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 796-800.
- 13 Ingoldeby commissions John Ashton to be store-keeper of Fort William Henry.—From the original document, sold by Henkels, Phila. (item No. 392), Oct. 22, 1919. This appears to be the only record of this appointment, the first mention of Ashton in the council minutes being on March 17, 1692.—See Cal. Coun. Min., 70. The office of store-keeper, however, was a recognized part of the military establishment of the province.—See Blathwayt's Jour. (manuscript, Lib. of Cong.), I: 503, under date of May 4, 1688.
- 17 The council decides that a prize taken by Capt. Kidd ought not to pay customs duties, because the ship and goods are already "paying the Kings tenths and the Governours fifteenths."—Council Minutes (Albany).
- Sept. 3 There is a record of this date of an audited account of Thomas Newton, for expenses for bringing the New York records from Boston.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 215.
- 17 It is ordered "that the lots belonging to the City from Burgers path to the foot of the hill by MF Beekmans be Exposed to Sale."—M. C. C., I: 233; and see Dec. 3, 1686. The annual election was approaching and no steps were taken, but a month later when a new mayor and common council "perused" former resolutions "in order to a further proceeding in the business of this City," they confirmed this same order.—Ibid., I: 243, 249. "In Order to the Sale of the Said Lots" they were ordered to be surveyed on Nov. 26.—Ibid., I: 257.
- " The common council orders that a lease be drawn to Robert Stapleton for "a certaine p<sup>s</sup> of land lying beyond the Smiths fly at the foot of the hill bounded Southwest by the Land of MF Beekman." It is 40 ft. in front and 22 ft. "Backward into the hill." Stapleton is to pay six shillings a year, and leave "a Convenient Road betwix his house and high water marke." The term of the lease is to be during the life-time of himself and wife, at the expiration of which title is to revert to the city.—M. C. C., I: 233. Stapleton's land was probably between Beekman and Ferry Sts. Its relation to Beekman's house is indicated; but recent researches have failed to locate definitely Beekman's house (the old house and brew-house of Thomas Hall). The "Convenient Road" seems to have been Queen (Pearl) St., as Water St. was not yet opened.—See Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.
- " The common council orders that £36:15 be paid by the treasurer "for Stockadoes and works for the Wharfe."—M. C. C., I: 233. On Sept. 21, it was ordered "that the Stockadoes bee brought into the City yard and Secured for the City Use."—Ibid., I: 235.
- 19 The buyers of the land bounded by Dock St. are given an extension of time until "Midsummer day" to finish the wharf, under penalty of £10 for failure to do so.—M. C. C., I: 234.
- Sept. 19 A bill is introduced in the assembly for regulating the buildings, streets, lanes, wharves, docks, and alleys of the city of New York.—Assemb. Jour., I: 16. The bill was assented to, on Sept. 26, by the legislative council, with the amendment that the regulation "be, of future surveys and Grants of Lands now belonging to the said City."—Jour. Leg. Coun., 12. On Oct. 1 the bill was passed.—Ibid., 13; Law of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 18.
- 25 The merchants of New York petition that the "Imposition at the Weigh-house may be applied towards the fortifying and repairing the Works about this City."—Assemb. Jour., I: 17.
- 28 "Upon Reading the Address of the house of Representatives setting forth their sense of the Displeasure of Almighty God for their manifold sins by the blasting of their corne," the council orders "that the first wednesday in every month untill the month of June following be Observed and kept a fast day and that Proclamacion be issued through the Government to Enjoyne the strict Observa<sup>o</sup>n thereof and that all persons be inhibited any servile labour on the said days."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 12. Proclamation was issued on Sept. 30 to this effect.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 217; Eccles. Res., II: 1035-27.
- 29 The city is assessed £300 by an act of the legislature, as its quota toward raising and paying 150 men intended to defend and reinforce Albany for six months.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 258; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grioler Club reprint, 1894), p. cxx, note.
- 30 The legislature passes "An act for regulating the Damages done in the time of the late disorders and for the uniting of the minds of their Majesties Subjects that have lately absented themselves from their habitations and the usual places of their abode." Commissioners are appointed for the various cities and counties to receive in writing within 40 days the claims and demands of persons injured by Leidel and his adherents, to hear the answers of the persons complained against, take testimony, and assess damages. The commissioners appointed for the city and county of New York are Capt. Jacobus van Cortlandt, Peter Jacobs Marius, Lawrence Reed, Thomas Codrington, and Adolph Phillips. The act states that the absence of many persons from the province on account of their fears of disorder has lessened trade and weakened the strength of the province, besides injuring their families; also that it is necessary that the minds of the people should be "heartily united," as it is "a time of war and great danger."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 262; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grioler Club reprint, 1894), p. cxviii. It was repealed May 16, 1699.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 386.
- Oct. 1 An act is passed to divide the province of New York into 12 counties, each county being bounded and described. "The city and county of New York, to contain all the Island commonly called Manhattan's-Island, Manning's-Island, the two Barn Islands, and the three Oyster-Islands; Manhattan's-Island, to be called the City of New-York, and the Rest of the Islands, the County."—Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), 6-7. See also April 20, 1696, Addenda.
- 7 The common council orders "a Ducking Stool to be built forthwith upon the Wharfe before the Town house."—M. C. C., I: 228. This was evidently not immediately built, for on Oct. 20 another order was issued "that the Sherriffe Immediately cause a Ducking Stool to be built upon the Wharfe before the City hall and to give to the treasurer for his pay" (Ibid., I: 253); and, again, on Feb. 4, 1692, an order required "that there be a Pillory Cage Ducking Stool forthwith built" (Ibid., I: 267). The governor's council issued the same order on March 3, 1692 (q. v.). The city records reveal very few instances of the actual use of the pillory, and no instance appears of an offender being caged or condemned to the stocks or ducking-stool. The whipping-post was used several times.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 195-96, 307-8; but cf. Oct. 12, 1695.
- " Of the original "Mayflower" company, only two were living at this time. These were John Cooke, of Dartmouth, who died in 1695, and Mary (Allerton) Cushman, of Plymouth, who died in 1699. A younger generation, accustomed to the leadership of Massachusetts Bay, accepted, as a natural and fitting step, the union, in this year, of the colony of New Plymouth with its larger neighbour. This took place on Oct. 7, when Increase Mather, and Ashurst, the resident agent in England of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, obtained from William and Mary a provincial charter, including in its jurisdiction the territory of New Plymouth and the greater part of the region lying east of the present state of New Hampshire,

 7 verno, lieutenant-governour, and secretary were appointed by the crown. Toleration was given to all sects but Papists. The right of suffrage was given to all possessors of a freehold of forty shillings, or personal property of forty pounds.—Machold, Select Charters, 205-12.

14 Sir William Phipps was appointed governour. As explained by Winsor (Nar. & Crit. Hist., III: 282-83; V: 87 et seq.), "the new monarchs followed James's policy of consolidation, and Plymouth found herself fated to be included either in the charter of New York or in that of Massachusetts. Better a known than an unknown evil; and accordingly the London agent of Plymouth was authorized to express a preference for union with Boston . . ." Sir William Phipps arrived at Boston, and entered upon his duties as governour on May 14, 1692.

14 Abraham de Peyster is appointed mayor, and sworn in.—
M. C. C., I: 238. He was continued in office until Oct. 15, 1694.—
Ibid., I: 370-71. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun.
 (1853), 392; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 53; and inscription on pedestal of his statue in Bowling Green.

15 The ordinance prohibiting the slaughtering of animals within the city limits (see June 7, 1676) is repealed, for some inexplicable reason.—M. C. C., I: 244, 249. One is prepared to hear subsequently (June 23, 1696) that "Slaughter houses in Queen Street Near y<sup>e</sup> Gate Arc become A Great Nussance to the Inhabitants Adjacent by the Noisome Smell of y<sup>e</sup> filth thereof;" butchering was stopped.—Ibid., I: 408.

" Merchants, traders, or shopkeepers are required by the common council, when made freemen, to pay £5, the maximum charge allowed by the charter, instead of £3:12 and fees, as previously charged.—M. C. C., I: 246.

" The violent factional differences which developed after the execution of Leisler and Milbourne now become focused upon the question of pardon for those who had been condemned with them.
 The documentary sources for this information are voluminous.
 The following references present the main lines of inquiry. A memorial is sent to the king and queen from Holland on Oct. 15, by relatives and agents of those imprisoned in New York, asking that the latter may be provisionally liberated on bail, until they can inform their majesties regarding their connection with the Leisler rebellion.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 809-12.

Jacob Leisler, 2d, also petitions the king, reviewing the events in which his father and his brother-in-law, Milbourne, figured, and asking "for the preservation of the Six condemned persons & the relief of Your Petitioner & other Poor Sufferers, as also for the preservation & future good Establishment of the said Province." He mentions Ingoldesby, now the commander-in-chief of the province, who "doth continue to exercise great Violence and barbarity against your Mat<sup>ys</sup> loyal Subjects there."—Ibid., III: 825-26. Vide infra.

Leisler's widow, destitute of any means of support for herself and family "for the approaching Winter," petitioned Ingoldesby, about November of this year, for the release of certain property belonging to her late husband's estate.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 224.

On Jan. 7, 1692, "Att the Court at White Hall," London, the petition from Jacob Leisler, 2d, was read, complaining that his father and Milbourne were unjustly put to death, six others being condemned but reprieved, and all their estates confiscated. On his plea for relief, the king referred the petition to the lords of the committee for trade and foreign plantations, "to examine the whole matter & report y<sup>e</sup> same to his maj<sup>ty</sup> at this board and then his maj<sup>ty</sup> will declare his further pleasure."—N. Y. Hist. Soc.
Collections (1868), 331-32.

Several affidavits from Feb. 19 to March 7, 1692, were made by mariners and merchants of New York, intended evidently to be used in laying claims for damages and losses in the Leisler rebellion, and showing many circumstances favourable to Leisler.
 The deposition of George Dolstone is especially noteworthy.—
Ibid., 314-15.

On March 11, 1692, the queen-in-council, on hearing the report of the committee for trade and plantations which had examined the petition of Leisler's son (referred to this committee on Jan. 7), decided that Leisler and Milbourne "were condemned and have suffered according to Law," but she declared that, "upon the Humble application of the relations" of Leisler and Milbourne, she "will order the estates" of Leisler and "Milburn" "restored to their Families as objects of her Majestys mercy."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 827. The date here given, March 11, may have been misread by the copyist, as it is given elsewhere as March 17.—See A Letter from a Gentleman, etc. (pub. by Bradford in 1698), 23.

On May 13, 1692, by the advice of a committee of the lords of trade, the queen ordered that the recognizances taken from those condemned with Leisler be vacated and set aside by Gov. Fletcher.
 —N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 333-34.

On Sept. 1, 1692, four adherents of Leisler, who were in prison under sentence of death for treason, petitioned the governour and council for pardon and the restoration of their estates. They were Gerardus Beeckman, Johanes Vermilye, Thomas Brasher, and Abraham Gouverneur.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 227; N. Y. Hist.
Soc. Collections (1868), 333. Fletcher decreed that they were "set at liberty by virtue of Her Majesties Order in Council dated y<sup>e</sup> 13th May last."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 5. He wrote to Nottingham on Sept. 10, that the king's service in the province was suffering on account of suits for damages brought by those who suffered on both sides of the Leisler rebellion; and added that, "unless a pardon will come over," the province would become a prey to the enemy (the French and Indians).—Ibid., III: 847.

In writing to Blathwart (sec. of board of trade), on Oct. 5, 1693, Fletcher gave a different version of the petition for pardon. It was his advice that they apply for pardon, and offered to assist them procure it, but they continued "positive not owiog their liberty [to] a favour" and did not alter their "Justification of their Crimes." Some of them were even elected to the assembly, an event which Fletcher opposed, and which led them to say that he was "setting up the Arbitrary Power." They "will not own [that they committed] a crime but persist," Fletcher stated, "that what they did was for King William and Queen Mary." He "desires they may be pardoned or Executed."—Ibid., IV: 54-55. This letter was read at the meeting of the committee of trade and plantations at Whitehall on March 12, 1694. The lords agreed "to lay this whole matter before his Maj<sup>ty</sup> in Council," and to move that, for the quieting of these differences in New York, the king should "order a Pardon for the said Persons." This the king granted on March 15.
 —Ibid., IV: 83.

A new struggle, on the part of Leisler's widow and son, and of the six who were pardoned, now began, to secure a reversal of the attainder whereby their estates had been forfeited and their blood "corrupted." Many affidavits, petitions, and pleas were made, containing statements of fact and arguments for this purpose.— See the printed papers in the N. Y. Pub. Library entitled Captain Leisler's Case; Reasons for the Reversal of Leisler's Attainder; Reasons . . . against the Passing the Bill for the reversing the Attain- der; and An Answer to the Reasons against Leisler's Bill. See also the documents in the case printed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 334-65. For a brief account of the personal history of Leisler's widow, see Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 594.

On Feb. 28, 1695, the petitioners were permitted by the king to apply to parliament for reversal of the attainder. Leisler (2d) and Gouverneur then addressed themselves to the house of lords (ibid., 337-38, 339-40); and on May 3, 1695 (q. v.), the attainder was reversed by parliament. In 1696 (q. v.), however, Leisler's followers were kept out of all employment in the government service, and his son was kept out of part of his estate. In 1698 (q. v.), Bellomont took a bold stand in upholding the rights of Leisler's heirs and adherents, his predecessor, Fletcher, having refused to obey the act of parliament respecting them. As late as 1714, Leisler (2d) had not been fully paid.—See summary, under May 15, 1699.

A committee of the common council is appointed to inspect and determine whether the former order (see M. C. C., I: 196, 225, 234, 235, 249) has been complied with "for the Compleating and finishing the Wharfe and filling up and Levying [levelling] all vacant holes Spaces between the City hall and bridge."—Ibid., I: 250. On Oct. 20, this committee reported "that the Wharfe before the severall Lotts follow[ing] are not Completed," the list being given.
 Time was extended to Nov. 20, and a committee appointed for completing the work.—Ibid., I: 251-52.

An offer of £100 yearly for seven years for the ferry privilege to Long Island is rejected by the common council as not being "the yearly Value of the Same."—M. C. C., I: 252. On Nov. 6, John Arientse offered £147 yearly for seven years "att Publick Out Cry" and became the ferry-man.—Ibid., I: 253. See June 13,

- 1691 1692. The income from this source was the largest item in the city's annual credit column at this period. In 1728, the rental was £258. This rental always included the "victualling" privilege at the ferry-house on the Brooklyn side.—Ibid., III: 430. See 1735.
- " The common council orders that the treasurer pay the committee appointed for finishing "the Wharfe from the City Hall to the Bridge" whatever sum the committee has disbursed for this object.
- It also orders "that the Sheriff Immediately cause a Ducking Stool to be built upon the Wharfe before the City hall and goe to the Treasurer for his pay." See Oct. 7.
- It further orders that two of the assistant aldermen, Willson and Kiog, "do forthwith build a Necessary house for the Use of the Publick upon the Wharfe before the City hall where they think most Convenient;" and that the treasurer pay the committee for this disbursement.—M. C. C., I: 253.
- Nov. The ferry is "firmed that at a Publick Out Cry" to John Arentsen for seven years.—M. C. C., I: 253. See Oct. 20.
- 23 A Quaker minister, Thomas Wilson, arrives in New York by ship from abroad. He records in his journal: "We . . . had a meeting there, and from thence went to Long Island, where we had several good meetings with friends." Wilson visited New York again in 1714, noting this event as follows: "From Shrewsbury we travelled to Woodbridge and New-York, and thence to Long-Island, where we staid the yearly-meeting, which was a large and blessed meeting; from whence we went by water to Rhode-Island, and was at their yearly-meeting in the fourth month . . . From Long-Island, we went to New-York, where we had a large and blessed meeting; the people who were not friends, confessed to the truth."—From A Brief Journal of the Life, Travels and Labours of Love, in the work of the Ministry, of that Eminent and Faithful Servant of Jesus Christ, Thomas Wilson, who departed this Life, at his own habitation near Edenderry, in Ireland, 20th of the third month, 1725. London, 1784 (in the John Carter Brown Library, Providence; not in Evans's Am. Bibl.). This very scarce work appears to supply a missing record in Quaker annals, for Thomas Wilson is not indexed in the Eccles. Recs., State of N. Y.
- 25 The common council orders "that Every house in Towne that hath three fire places provide two Leather Bucketts and Every house of fewer fire places have one Leather Buckett." The ordinance also requires that every brewer shall have six and every baker three of these fire-buckets "ready in their houses."—M. C. C., I: 255.
- 26 It is ordered by the common council "that Twenty foot further into the Dock att the End next the Bridge and Twenty five foot att ye End of ye wharfe be Lotted to Sale . . . the price Sett of Said Land before each mans Lott is one Shilling p<sup>r</sup> foot & the purchaser to make a good and Substantiall Street att the front of their Lotts of Twenty five foot broad att the direction of ye Surveyor." It is also provided "that no buildings be built in the front towards ye Waterside from the Dock to ye State house but what Shall be two whole storeys high and the Gallrell end to be of brick or Stone upon the penalty of Such buildings being pulled downe."—M. C. C., I: 256.
- Dec. The common council appoints overseers of the poor for the next three months. They were "Impowred to releave Such persons as they Shall deeme Objects of Charity and to draw bills upon the Treasurer for Such moneys as they Shall disburse for Such Ends."—M. C. C., I: 258. This represents a change of policy in the care of the city's poor. The new officers assume the burden that had fallen previously on the alderman and assistant of each ward.—See Oct. 19, 1687; Oct. 20, 1695.
- " A committee of the common council is appointed "to Cause the land before Mr. van Brooken & to be Surveyed and laid out into Convenient Streets and high ways and to divide the Same into convenient Lotts and make a reporte thereof to the Comon Council and the Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 258. On Feb. 1, 1693, complaint was made that a fence was being set up "in the Highway and Street . . . before the door of Mr Broughan." A committee of aldermen was ordered to stop "any Such trespass," and another committee "to inquire of ye Ancient Inhabitants of this City how long ye Said ground [the present Hanover Square] hath been Vacant & high ways belonging to ye Same and by what right or pretence any person lays Claim to it."—Ibid., I: 308-9. On March 30, 1693, the latter committee reported testimony from various persons, including Mr. and Mrs. Van Broughan, "that for at least 30 years 'till hath always been Vacant and High ways for the use of the City," and "there hath been no fence or any thing in that nature about the Said Ground."—Ibid., I: 319. On March 31, "Upon the Petition of the Heires of Govern Lockerman deceased Concerning the Ground Opposite Mr Van Broughans door," a committee was appointed "to View the Ground in Controversee ad to Continue the Streets to the former breadth of forty foot."—Ibid., I: 320. Regarding purchase and survey of adjoining land, see Jan. 18, 1694.
- 5 The common council orders that buyers of land between the bridge and the dock (between the present Moore St. and Whitehall Slip), who are obliged to make the street (the present Water St.) under the direction of the surveyors, shall do so in the following manner: They shall build a good and substantial stone wall, 3½ ft. broad at the bottom "to batter one foote inwards on the Outside." They shall protect it from "the rubbing of boates" by driving "Spoiles or Stockadoes" every 5 ft., and these shall be 7 in. in diameter, bound together at the top by a plate. When finished this wall shall be kept in good repair by the owners of the lots fronting the street or wharf, who, nevertheless, is not to claim any property or interest in the street or wharf, which, instead, is "to remaine to the use of the City." The owners of the wall, to fill up their respective lots, are obliged to use "the Dock Mudd Twenty foot into the Dock before their owne houses." The street or wharf is to be completed in 12 months. The city agrees that no building shall be built in front of these lots.
- " The common council also orders that the land between Burger's Path and the blockhouse shall be laid out into 15 lots, the first being next to the slip (at Burger's Path), 50 ft. wide, and the remaining 12 lots to be each 42 ft. wide. A condition upon which the lots shall be "So Exposed to Sale" is "that they [each buyer of a lot] Shall fill up ye front of the Said Land with one intire house w<sup>ch</sup> Shall be Two full Storeys high above the ground and the front to the Street to be Either brick or Stooe." The same form of building shall be built "in the Street next the Seaward;" if any other sort of buildings are erected fronting either street they shall be pulled down.—M. C. C., I: 259-60. See also May 6 and Aug. 10, 1692.
- 8 A petition from "the Minister Elders Deacons and Congrega<sup>o</sup>n of the Dutch reformed Church" in New York City is read in the common council, "desiring that a certaine vacant p<sup>s</sup> of ground Scituate to the Northward of the dwelling house of Cornelius Pluvier might be granted unto them to build and Erect thereon a Church for the publick Worship of Almighty God." It is ordered that a grant be given accordingly, and the entire common council, or the major part of them, are made a committee to execute the order, it being provided that all of them who are in town shall be summoned for the surveying and laying out of the land, and shall have power to grant the patent to the church.—M. C. C., I: 260.
- " In Persuance of an Order of Comon Counc. bearing date the Eight of December 1691," this committee, whose duty was "to Survey lay out and Sell a certaine Tract of Land lying in Garden Street," reported, on Dec. 17, that they found the land measured 175 ft. English measure on the north side, and 180 ft. more or less on the south side. This land was accordingly "Ordered for the Dutch Church." The consideration is stated to be "one hundred and Eighty Currant p<sup>s</sup> of Eight Six Shillings p<sup>r</sup> p<sup>s</sup> to be paid upon Sealing the Pattents." Aldermen Johannes Kipp and Brandt Schuyler accepted the proposal on behalf of the Dutch Church.—Ibid., I: 261.
- An abstract of the records of the Dutch Church, dated Dec. 22, 1691, shows that the church resolved to buy this ground for a new church, and to hasten its erection by appointing building masters and persons to prepare a plan. The church in the fort was decaying, and no longer fit for public service. The consistory and great consistory chose the site in Garden St., between the lots of Jan Bruyns and Jan Siphens. The plot was 80 ft. long, and belonged to the city, by deed from Josa Lawrence and Sara, his wife. The price was £54, to be paid out of the "Troughshob and the Deacons' treasury." The building masters appointed were John Kip, Brandt Schuyler, and Tunis de Key, whose duty was to procure materials and urge on the work. The committee on plan, consisting of Frederic Philippen, Stephen van Cortlandt, Nicolas Bayard, and Adolph Pietersen, were given full power.—Eccles. Recs., II: 1030. The following year the land was conveyed to the church.—See Feb. 19, 1692. The South Reformed Dutch Church, in Garden St., was built here.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 936.
- " Mention is made (vide supra) of a piece of ground situated northward of the dwelling-house of Cornelius Pluvier. At this 1691 period, Cornelis Pluvier lived on the south side of Exchange Pl., Dec. 100 ft. west of William St.—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 112 (New York);

— In this year, the Chevalier d'Aux, an emissary of Frontenac to the Iroquois, drew a plan of New York and its surroundings, as far north as the Collect Pond. This drawing, which is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 22-a, is particularly interesting as giving a good idea of the fortifications existing at this period, and of the road system outside of the walls of the city.

— M. Lamothe-Cadillac described Manhattan Island, in memoirs of this time, as follows (translated):

"Manatte, so called when in the possession of the Dutch, is properly speaking an island, three leagues long and one wide. The fort is situate on a triangular point of land, and on the banks of two rivers, one called the South River and the other the North River. It has four Bastions, and is faced with stone and terraced on three sides; on the North, South and East. Some barracks and the gate are on the west side; the ditch is but a miserable affair, and is almost filled up on the East and North. There is a very fine armory which is in good order; good muskets, fuzils, pistols, halberets, pikes, swords, cuirasses. There are 27 pieces of iron cannon around the fort, and four small brass pieces at its gate. It is surrounded by houses on all sides except the South. The roadstead cannot be cannonaded without razing and throwing down almost one entire street. The same is the case on the side of the town which is built of brick and stands on the banks of the two rivers. It is not inclosed either by walls or palisades. There is one wooden wharf but smaller than that at Boston. The Vessels enter the port and are aground at low water. There may be in the town five hundred men capable of bearing arms, but they could [muster] 3,000 men in a short time. Here it must be remarked that there are a great many Quakers or Tremblers who are non-combatants. The Dutch church is in the fort. The garrison consists of 60 men. The population is composed of Calvinists, Lutherans, Anabaptists, Jews, Quakers, Abadiens, French Protestants and some Catholics. Each sect has its Church and freedom of religion. Their trade is made up of beaver and peltries which they buy from the Iroquois; whale oil, pork, staves, horses and tobacco. The people are almost all Dutch; there are about forty English families, and a great many French. This Island is almost entirely cleared. They have Negroes as in Boston. East Northeast, within 120 rods of the fort, lies an Island, on which cannon can be planted to batter the fort or the town. It is clear of wood, and easy of access. This town is much richer in money than Boston. Its principal currency consists of Spanish coin. They have considerable merchandise there also."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IX: 548-49.

— In this year, William and Mary College, at Williamsburg, Va., was chartered.

— In this year, persecution for witchcraft culminated at Danvers, Mass., in the judicial murder of several persons of blameless lives. Sir William Phipps, governor of Massachusetts Bay, organized, by the advice of his council, a special court for the trial of the accused. By the organization of the superior court, the special one for "witch" trials was suspended. The general court having by an act made witchcraft a capital offence, the king vetoed it, but convictions did not end, under the prevailing force of public opinion, in the face of efforts by the Mathers and other ministers to sustain the frenzy, until more than twenty persons had been executed.

— In this year, William Kidd, captain of the Antigua packet ship, trading between New York and London, married Sarah, widow of John Oort, a sea captain in regular trade. Immediately after, he resided in Hanover Sq., then one of the best portions of the town. "The domestic furniture of the house occupied by Captain Oort had been purchased in bulk from the representatives of the estate of William Cox, one of the leading flour merchants of the city; and upon the marriage of the widow Oort with Captain Kidd, the style assumed by the happy couple could favorably compare with that of any household establishment in the city." For inventory of the furniture, see Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 515.

— To this year, George Keith, in Philadelphia, having charged the Friends with a departure from their pacific principles by aiding in the capture of a privateer, a contest arose in which William Bradford, who supported his doctrines and had printed his pamphlets, became involved. His press and materials were seized, and he, with McComb, his associate, was imprisoned, but released after a trial. In the next year, after Bradford came to New York (see April 10, 1693), he published, without revealing the author, an account of the trial, which took place in December, 1692. This was entitled New-England's Spirit of Persecution Transmitted To Pennsylvania. See copy of this scarce work in N. Y. Pub. Library. From it we learn that "on the soil of Pennsylvania, the father of our press asserted, in 1692, with a precision not since surpassed, a principle in the law of libel hardly then conceived anywhere, but which now protects every publication in much of our Union . . . ."—From Hildeburn's chapter in Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 576; and see his Sketches of Printers and Printing in Colonial N. Y. (1895).

A letter from Ingoldesby and the council to Lord Nottingham refers to the arrival of "the Albany Post."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 813. Another letter of this date refers to "the Land Post from Albany."—Ibid., III: 814. These letters indicate that a post-rider was in regular operation between Albany and New York.

Although the old water gate was reported to be "all down" in 1688 (N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 170, 173), it is still referred to as a familiar landmark in official records. For example, inhabitants of the city "from the Widow Lewis house to the Water Gate" are required by the common council to prove the validity of their patents to "their ground before their doors unto Low Water Marke."—M. C. C., I: 262. The location of the water gate is shown in the Labadie View (Pl. 17).—See outline key, Vol. I, opp. p. 133, and description, p. 225 (Landmark No. 71). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

The custom-house is out of repair; on Feb. 22, the council ordered that it be repaired.—Cal. Coun. Min., 69-70.

The committee of the governor's council appointed to inspect the city's fortifications endeavours to secure the co-operation of the common council in necessary repairs. The latter appoints a committee which, in conjunction with Col. Bayard and some captains of militia, reports that the charges "may amount to the Sume of Two hundred pounds besides great Guns powder and Ball." A proposal that the common council contribute "Twenty or Thirty pounds towards the repairing Said fortifications" is rejected, but they are ready "to give their Labour as heretofore."—M. C. C., I: 265, 267, 268. The governor's council decided (March 19) to appropriate the revenue of the weigh-house to this purpose.—Cal. Coun. Min., 70, 71; M. C. C., I: 269-71. By an order of the common council, on April 4, all inhabitants from 15 years upward "not listed in the trane bands," also all servants and negroes, are required to appear, upon notice from the captain of each ward, "att the time and place appointed by the Military officers and afford their labour with Shoveles pick ax Wheel barrow and other needful Instruments towards the repairing and mending of the fortifications of this City or finde another man in his Room to be approved of by the Captain on the penalty of three Shillings," etc.—M. C. C., I: 271-72. A committee of the council is to view the fort on Aug. 31 regarding the repairs.—Cal. Coun. Min., 75. The "Accounts of Several Disbursements to the fortifications of the City New York," from March 29 to Oct. 3, 1692, signed by N. Bayard, show the expenditure of £209:11:11 for stockades, stone, iron, etc. (See April 3, 1693). These original accounts are preserved in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room. On Nov. 12, the account of Henry Ford, for carpenter work in the fort was ordered paid.—Cal. Coun. Min., 78. On Dec. 15, Nicholas Bayard was paid for gun-carriage wheels.—Ibid., 79.

A petition of Arian Cornelison, regarding land "lyeing nigh the Borce containing about five or Six Acres," is referred to a committee.—M. C. C., I: 264. The Borce or Boree was a part of the Bowery Road.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 476. See also Sept. 16.

The common council orders (cf. Oct. 7, 1691) "that there be a Pillory Cage Ducking Stool forthwith built," and it appoints a committee with the sheriff "for finishing the Same," with power to draw upon the treasurer for the charges.—M. C. C., I: 267. See, further, March 3.

On examining "Daniell Ven Vos his Patent," the common council is of the opinion "that all the land without the Wall belongs to the City."—M. C. C., I: 264.

Royal letters patent are granted to establish post-offices.—See Addenda.

The old and new market-houses are to be let.—See Addenda.

At "the late fire in the flly" several buckets were lost. An order of the common council is issued for the town crier to give notice that buckets be restored to the owners through the mayor, on pain of prosecution for neglect.—M. C. C., I: 266-67.

1692 Steps are taken for building a Dutch church in Garden St. "In Feb. Persuance to a former Order of Conno Council bearing date 19 the 17th December 1691" (see Dec. 8, 1691), Mayor Abraham de Peyster signs a deed conveying to Samuel Bayard, who represents the congregation of the Dutch Church, "a certain Lott or Toft of Ground in Garden Street for Erecting of a Church for the Service of Almighty God." Bayard's bond is taken for £100, binding himself and heirs to use the lot only for building a church or houses for pious and charitable uses, not to assign it to any other person or persons, excepting "on the Tennyour" that it shall be so used.—M. C. C., I: 266. The date of the conveyance to Bayard is elsewhere mentioned as Feb. 4.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1032. Bayard conveyed the land to the church-masters on Feb. 27, at a nominal yearly rental, to be held in trust by them for the church. This conveyance describes the lot as 84 ft. deep, north of the orchard of Elizabeth Driusius, widow, and bounded on the west by the lot of John Henry Bruyn, and on the east by the lots of John Syphens and David Hendriks.—Ibid., II: 1032-33. The location was on the north side of Garden St. (now Exchange Pl.), about midway between the present Broad and William Sts.—Man. Com. Coun.
 (1866), 545; see also Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.

There is no record of the date of laying the corner-stone. On March 9, it was resolved by the church authorities that the moneys of the consistory, of the deacons, and of collections made at any church meeting "shall be brought into one and the same purse or chest; and that the Deacons be recommended to take out as much money as practicable, without injury to the poor, for the building of a New Church, to be erected when required."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1034-35.

The Dutch ministers, Selyns, Varick, and Dellius, writing to the "Classis of Amsterdam" on Oct. 12, 1692, stated that, "during this year of troubles, a new church edifice of stone is in course of erection, outside the fort and larger than the old one."—Ibid., II: 1043. On Dec. 30, "Rev. Selyns" wrote of the "newly erected church," which he thinks of "consecrating the next day."—Ibid., II: 1046. The "towers" (or tower) had not been built, however, as late as Nov. 14, 1694 (q. v.), nor even begun until after the congregation was incorporated in 1696.—See June 5, 1695, and May 11, 1696. In the Revolution it was used for a time by the British as a hospital; and on Dec. 7, 1783, was reopened for public worship, and used until 1807, when a new church was erected on the same site. The last church was destroyed in the great fire of Dec., 1835.—See Chron. under the foregoing dates; also Hist. Sketch of the South Church (1887); and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 936.

24 There was a blockhouse "upon Smiths Valley" when Leisler was in control (see March 13, 1691), which was referred to in an affidavit of this date.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 231. On May 6, 1692, it was evidently still in existence, as it was referred to in an order of the common council that lands at Smith's Fly be sold, "from the Blockhouse unto the hill next Mr Beekmans."—M. C. C., I: 273.
 The "Fly blockhouse & half moon" appear as landmark No. 10 on the Miller Plan of 1695, Pl. 23-a; see also description on p. 235, Vol. I.

27 William Blathwayt recommends to the king that £1,911:6
 (the equivalent in England of £2,484:8:3 in New York) be paid to Robert Livingston or his order, in England, to satisfy a mortgage held by him against Col. Dongan. In a petition for relief, Dongan stated "That he hath Mortgaged all his Estate for Debts contracted & Money Expended in the Service of the Crown of England against the French which Estate will be forfeited in May next unless in the mean time redem'd, his person being likewise in daily hazard of being arrested on the same] Acc't." The entire amount expended by Dongan or his order "for the Support of the Government of that Province & in the Warr against the french and Indians of Canada which was successfully carried on by him" was £10,374: 10:33; the amount of the previously mentioned mortgage having been spent by Livingston for provisions for the forces. Dongan claims that, in all, £10,374:10:33 are due him, but the step now recommended merely covers release from the mortgage.—Blath-wayt Jour. (transcript), I: 644-46; cf. Gov. Nicolls's expenditures, April 7, 1666.

28 By order of the governor's council, the carmen are to do duty at the fort on the work of repairs.—Cal. Coun. Min., 70. In 1693, they petitioned to be relieved from the burden, imposed on them by Col. Dongan, of carrying 104 loads for nothing.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 217.

Mar. It is recommended to the committee of trade and plantations 3 that James Graham be paid a salary of £120 for services as collector of revenue in New York for the year 1687, when, according to the report of Gov. Slaughter, the revenue was improved "during the Peticion's Management."—Blathwayt Jour., op. cit., I: 615-16.

The governor's council orders that a ducking-stool and a pillory for women be provided.—Cal. Coun. Min., 70. The common council of the city had repeatedly ordered that they be erected, the last order being on Feb. 4, 1692 (q. v.). See also Oct. 7, 1691. On March 26, the treasurer paid £205:6 for "A Cage & ducking Stoll."—Ledger No. 1, Chamberlain's Office (MS.), deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and published in its Collections (1909).

7 Rev. John Miller, M. A., is commissioned chaplain of the two companies of grenadiers in the colony of New York. He arrived in New York in the summer of this year.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 182;
Eccles. Rec., II: 1097; see Feb. 12, 1694, June, 1695.

18 A commission is signed at Westminster appointing Benjamin Fletcher, Esq., to be governor of New York. Instructions, signed at Kensington on March 7, accompany the commission.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 818-24, 827-33. For an estimate of Fletcher's general character and characteristics, see Winsor's Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 193.

22 This day is made one of thanksgiving throughout the province to celebrate the success of English arms in America, Ireland, and Turkey, and especially "for the preservation of our frontier at Albany against the French and unbelievers."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1033.

Apr. Thomas Neale, having obtained in England a patent to establish 4 post-offices throughout the American colonies, appoints Gov. Andrew Hamilton, of New Jersey, his deputy for all the plantations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 200, footnote by O'Callaghan, citing New York Commissions, II: 33, 40. Hamilton brought the subject before Gov. Fletcher and the New York legislature in the following October (see Oct. 29, and Nov. 11, 1692), and they immediately passed an act "for encouraging a Post Office."—Ibid., citing Council Minutes, VI: 52, 66. O'Callaghan states that "The credit of devising this scheme for the establishment of post offices in the Colonies belongs, therefore, to Governor Hamilton, and not to his son John, as some suppose."—Ibid. For the history of the method of postal regulations during the Dutch régime, see Aug. 6, 1652. The first post-office in New Netherland was inaugurated at the office of the provincial secretary in New Amsterdam. For details see Aug.
 6, 1652. Lovelace, in 1672-3 (q. v.), revived the system; as did also Dongan on Aug. 27, 1684 (q. v.), and March 2, 1685. Hamilton was still deputy postmaster in 1699, in Bellomont's time (N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 510); and "Col. Hamilton" in 1717 (Boston News-Letter, Sept. 23-30, 1717).

May A report from Blathwayt to the committee of trade and planta-1 tions indicates the ignorance in England regarding the revenue of the province during the Leislerian revolution. In June, 1689 (see June 20, 1689), "Capt. Leister [Leisler] having turn'd out the Lieut.
 Governor of New York and Seiz'd the Government into his own hands the Peticion [Peter Delanoy] was appointed by the said Leister to receive the Publick Money there without any Legal authority since which time no Accounts or other Papers relating to the Revenue of New York have been transmitted hither . . .
 that Province remaining in great disorder since the Revolution."— Blathwayt Jour. (transcript), I: 614-15.

6 The dock being damaged by a recent storm, Jarvis Marshall, the lessee (known as the dock-master), is unable to repair it; the common council undertakes to repair one side and Marshall the other. A committee is appointed "to repayre the East Side of the Dock" and "the breach in the halfe Moone p<sup>r</sup> y<sup>e</sup> Cage."—M. C. C., I: 274. The cage stood with the pillory and ducking-stool on the wharf in front of the city hall.—Ibid., I: 253, 267. Regarding the city's experience with Marshall and other dock-masters, and the docking situation in general, see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 111-23.

" The common council orders "that all of the Land in Front of the fly from the Blockhouse unto the hill next Mr Beekmans be exposed to Sale;" and it is "Voted that from the Blockhouse to the Green [Maiden] Lane be valued at five and Twenty shillings p<sup>r</sup> foot And from the Green lane to Mr<sup>s</sup> van Clyffs [John St.] be valued at Eighteen Shillings p<sup>r</sup> foot And from Mr<sup>s</sup> van Clyffs to Mr Batemans be valued at fifteen Shillings p<sup>r</sup> foot."—M. C. C., I: 273. A committee is appointed "to Sell the Several Lots of Land betwixt the Blockhouse and Mr Beekmans fronting to the Waterside;" it being also ordered "that the former Streets of King [Pine] Street Green Lane and Mr van Clyffs be left open to the Low water mark," and "that the Surveyors of the City attend the di-1692 rections of the Committee for the Laying out of the Lotts att the May Smiths ffly."—Ibid., I, 274. For report of the committee on sale of 6 the lots between the blockhouse and Beekman's, see Aug. 9.

Pioce, Cedar, and neighbouring streets, were thus eventually laid out through the old Damen Farm, which was bounded on the north by the present Maiden Lane and on the south by Wall St.—Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y., 212; Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I, 402.
 Crown St. (later called Liberty St.) is one of these. The present John St., between William and Pearl Sts., is another; it was formerly a lane leading to the residence of Mrs. Van Clyff from the high road (Pearl St.), and was called Golden Hill.—Man. Com. Coun.
 (1850), 447-48. See Dec. 17, 1685.

"A tablet, erected Nov. 25, 1911, by the Am. Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, on the north side of Maiden Lane, near Broadway, recites that this street was "Laid out as a Street in 1691." There appears to be no supporting authority for this statement.
 The lane is referred to as 'Maagde Paatje' as early as Nov.
 25, 1658 (q. v.), and appears to be shown on the Duke's Plan of 1661 (Pl. 10, Vol. I), and the Nicolls Survey of c. 1665 (Pl. 10-a). The name Maiden Lane first appeared on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl.
 23-a). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005; and an article by Albert Ulman in N. Y. Tribune, July 9, 1911, also his address at the dedication of the tablet, in the Report of the Am. Scenic & Hist.
Pres. Soc. (1912).

11 "Att a Court Marshall held att the house of Major W<sup>m</sup> Merritt In New York," it is ordered "that the Guard house in the Mount Holandia be made a Prison for the Misdemeanours of the Lieutenancy of this City;" also "that Lt: Col<sup>o</sup> Monville & Cap<sup>t</sup> Thomas Clarke see that the Guard house in the Mount above-said be Completed and fitted a Prison as aforesaid."—Records of the Court of Lieutenancy, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 410.

12 The council resolves that the commander-in-chief, Col. Richard Ingoldesby, shall go to Albany with "some handsome retinue" to meet the Five Nations. On May 14, Col. Thomas Willett was directed to detach a company of New York militia as escort, but later reported that he could not furnish it. The council, or five of its members, are to administer the government in Ingoldesby's absence.—Cal. Coun. Min., 72. He returned on June 16, Ibid., 73.

20 Charles Lodwick gives an account of New York in a letter to his uncle, Francis Lodwick, and one Mr Hooker, members of the Royal Society of Great Britain. It was read before that society Nov. 26, 1713. For his failure to write sooner ("it is now full 4 years since I rec<sup>d</sup> ye Comands to give you what Act I was capable of ye Constitution of this Country"), he pleads "ye Confusion & Disturbance here among our selves," which "wholly impeded even our Common Affairs, that for Almost 3 years, we had enough to do to exercise all our brains to secure our persons & that little we had from ye Cruelty & Tyranny of an ungovernable Mobb [the Leisler Rebellion —see May 31, 1689]: which by ye peculiar Mercy of God, & ye extended Favour of our Prince, we are in part released from." As for the information he sends, he writes: "I have endeavour'd to collect ye Opinions of our gravest Sages here, where my young experience would not lett me Conclude . . . M<sup>r</sup>s [masters] of Ships are ye chiefest Mathematicians & ye Natives Geographers."

Regarding the city of New York, he says: ". . . this Island of New York was formerly call'd by ye Natives Manhattens, is abt 5 leagues in extent, & is an Island by a runn of water fordable at Low water between the 2 forementioned rivers [Hudson River and East River], before ye Tow is an excellent Harbour Land-Lokt on all sides, ye Country woody but very pleasant. Our chiefest unhappiness here is too great a mixture of Nations, & English ye leastpart, ye French protestants have in ye Late Kings reign resorted hither in great numbers proportionably to ye other Nations inhabitants, ye Dutch are generally ye most frugall & Laborious, & Consequently ye richest, whereas most of ye English are ye contrary especially ye trading part: as to Religion, we run so high into all Opinions, that here is (I fear,) but little real . . . We are ye chief Grainary to most of ye West Indian Islands: . . ." His further account relates to the cultivated products of the country,— horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, and goats; fruits and flowers; and the native products,—elk, deer, bear, beaver, otter, fox, racoon, mink, etc.; birds; fish; trees and herbs; iron, marbles, etc.; the weather, tides, etc.

"The Country is generally healthy tho' 2 years ago ye small Pox which was very mortall especially to grown people, a sort of pleurisy (not cured but increasing by bleedings) & violent fevers took away a great many . . . a hott summer sometimes caused ye want of our usual sea breezes causes violent fevers, yet oot generally mortall . . . ye Ague has been lately rife amongst us, tho' with much less cold than in Europe, & ye most Common every day.

"The Natives were very numerous att the Christians first sitting down here tho' since, their number is much decreased, by report from one hundred to one: ye small pox took many of them away lately, & they yet daily decrease, some think by their taking to drink Rum, (a Liqueur we have from Barbadoes distilled off their Sugar Caues) wh<sup>ch</sup> they exceedingly covet & will not be satisfied till they are very drunk with it . . ." The customs of the Indians are given extended treatment in the rest of the letter.—From Sloane MS. 1339, ff. 93-98, British Museum, printed in N. Y.
Hist. Soc. Collections, 3d ser. (1849), II: 241-50.

In a letter to Fletcher, who was appointed March 18, the proprietors of West Jersey congratulate him upon his "accession to" the "honorable employ" of governor of New York, adding that they account themselves happy in having so good a neighbour, whose prudence and integrity will, they believe, secure them "from apprehension of those mean artifices [that] have been employed by preceding Governors or their ministers" to encroach upon their legal privileges. They offer to cooperate with him for the common defence and the administration of justice.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 838-39.

"The houses and bars at the ferry (on the Brooklyn side), and "the little house on this Side," are let to John Arentsen at £9 per annum.—M. C. C., I: 275. The ferry itself had been let to him previously (see Oct. 20, 1691) for £147 annually, an agreement which he later called "Rash & unadvised."—Ibid., I: 325.

Evidently for the encouragement of the ferry enterprise, the common council orders "that no person besides the ferryman shall bring any passengers or Corne or any other produce of the Island from any place between the red hook and the Wall about." The

- There is a record in the City Grants, Liber A, 93-142, showing the conveyance of nine lots, one to each of nine grantees, extending from Smith's Fly (or from the present Pearl St. between Fulton and Wall St.) to low-water mark, with the obligation that each of the grantees shall make a wharf or street (Water St.) 30 ft. in width across the outward end of his lot. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 530.

His letters patent are read in the council chamber and in the city hall, "with the like Ceremony of Acclamations and firing."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 846. The council records show that all officers, civil and military, were continued in Office.—Cal. Coun. Min., 75.

His opinion is that "those who bear no part therein should eat no share of our bread." He purposes making Mr. Smith (of the council) judge, if Mr. Dudley of Boston will not reside here. He also states: "The Sloops of war sent by Mr Slaughter are much Embelzed, . . . The Fort decaying, the house out of Repair Scarcely habitable."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 847-48.

Since the place was settled, to have y<sup>e</sup> privilege of bolting, baking & packing." The sole bolting privilege "hath been by Several Governours, of this Province, while it was in the hands of his Royal Highness the Duke of York affirmed and Strengthened by their Several Proclamations." That thereupon the City hath been much increased with Inhabitants, by the Manufacturers of y<sup>e</sup> Said flour, bread and Cask &c. They apprehend that "y<sup>e</sup> Reputation of y<sup>e</sup> trade" will be "Again hazarded" (as it was in 1679-80), unless the government regulates and restricts the industry.—M. C. C., I: 318-19. The government began to take such action in 1696, after the "Bolting Act" had been passed in 1694, producing a scarcity of bread in New York City.—See March 24, 1694, and June 10-11, 1696.
- "Domines Selyas, Varick, and Dellius, in a letter to the classis of Amsterdam, say "that the two French churches (New York and New Paltz) have been united, and that Domine Perrot [see Dec. 10, 1702] will generally preach here in the city, while Domine Daillé will generally preach in the country. (The Votes and Proceedings of the General Assembly, from Sept. 11 to Nov. 7, 1692, inclusive, are missing.—See Assemb. Jour., I: 26.) The bill was submitted to the governeur and council for their assent, Nov. 8. It was read a second time on Nov. 10, when it was amended so as to exempt the country post-master "from Excise and publick services, and the Post Master in New York City from publick services only;" and so as to provide

- 1692 "that noe Letters going to or from Loog Island be Obleiged to Come

- 10 At a joint meeting of two committees, one from the council and one from the house, the subject of the continuance of the revenue "Established upon their Maties" is considered. This was formerly allowed for a five-years' period; it is now proposed to limit it to two. The speaker of the assembly, John Butler, asserts that, while not wanting in duty to the king and queen, the province is in danger of sinking under its already heavy burdens and great poverty.
"Consider the Circumstances of Our neighbours on both sides who are without Governement, free of all taxes, duties, services, and have got both Our trade and Inhabitants." (This evidently means that such conditions have been brought about by the heavy duties charged upon New York merchants, while imports and exports are free in neighbouring colonies.) One hope has been felt in the prospect of possibly annexing Connecticut, the Jerseys, Pennsylvania, and New Castle to New York Province. The trade of this province would then be eased by distributing its burdens.
- Col. Smith, representing the council as chairman of their committee, considers the trade between New York and Boston. "They draw away Our staple Commoditye of flour, which they have transported to the Westindies, to the great injury of the trade and navigation of this Province." To stop this, he proposes laying an export duty of one shilling on every 100-lbs. of flour. He further proposes an import duty of five per cent. on all European goods coming here from neighbouring plantations, which is 5 per cent. less than formerly charged.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 31-32. In 1703, trade was still languishing.—See May 27, 1703.
- 11 William Smith is sworn in as chief-justice.—Cal. Coun. Min., 78. See also Sept. 10, 1692; March, 1693.
- "An Act for the Encouraging A Post Office" is passed. It recites Neal's patent of 1691, Hamilton's appointment as deputy, and the latter's application to the governour and council and to the assembly for the establishment of a scale of postal rates. See also April 4 and Oct. 29, 1692. It provides "That there be from henceforth, A generall Letter office erected and established in Some Convenient places within this City of New York, from whence all Letter's and Packquet's whatsoever may be with Speed and Expedition Sent into any part of our Neighbouring Colony's and plantations on the main Land and Continent of America or to any other of their Majesties Kingdom's and Dominions beyond the Sea's at which Said office all returns and answers may be Likewise received, and that one Master of the Said generall Letter office shall from time to time be appointed by the said Andrew Hamilton," etc. The law prescribes postal rates and regulations and is to be in force for three years.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 295-96; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Groslier Club reprint, 1894), p. ccxxv, note.
- "The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Settling of faires and Marquets in each respective City and County throughout the Province." This is for the encouragement of trade and commerce, as well as for the convenience of the inhabitants. The act provides "that there be kept yearly . . . two fairs at the City of New-York, the first fair annually to commence the last Tuesday of April," and to last four days; "the second to commence the first Tuesday of November in every year," and last four days.
The governour or ruler of the fairs shall "appoint and Limit out a certain and special open place within the respective Towns aforesaid where the said Respective fairs are to be held and kept where horses, Mairs, geldings Colts and other Cattle, may be sold."— Col. Laws N. Y., I: 296; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Groslier Club reprint, 1894), p. ccxxv, note.
- "The provincial legislature, "as a token of their most Loyal and sincere affection unto their Majesties and their Governement Established here," pass an act allowing to Fletcher, "for his care of the Province," one penny per pound upon all the real and personal estates in the province.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 308.
- 22 The court of mayor and aldermen orders Aldermen Merritt and Schuyler to "finde out A Convenient place for the Lodging y<sup>e</sup> Powder that is now in the Custom-house."—M. C. M. (MS),
- Nov. 22, 1692. King William's war was on, and a safer spot for powder than the water's edge was desirable. No record appears, however, to show a new location, until Aug. 3, 1696 (q. v.).
- Jasper Nissappat, in a petition to Gov. Fletcher, sets forth "that there was a certain Windmill in the Common between the Town and the freshwater, wch in the tyme of the Dutch Governm<sup>t</sup> is said to be erected and built & holding of the Fort for the service of grind-charge in Maintaining, repairing thereof.

- "That the number of Water mills increasing in the Countrey and being more Commodious, the said Mill for severall years hath become a charge and burthen to your petitioner for want of employment.
- "That about Three years since the said Windmill was distroyed by Thunder and Lightning
- "That upon Govern<sup>t</sup> Sloghters arrivall your petitioner being represented to him as one of Leisler's favourites suffered many threats and through feare was induced to sign Indentures to build the said Mill and performe the Services for wch he did enter into a Bond with surity in Five hundred pounds.
- "That it will not only ruine your petitioner to expend so much money but there being no prospect of Employment for the said Mill it will be a Lasting charge to no purpose other the service of the fort.
- "Your petitioner humbly prays y<sup>e</sup> Excell<sup>y</sup> to take his case into consideration and relieve him with his surity from the said Bond and to grant unto y<sup>e</sup> Petitioner the said Mill and ground by patent under the seal of the Province and such moderate quit rent as to
quoted by O'Callaghan in Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc.
The bond was cancelled on condition that Nissappat enter into new covenants and rebuild the mill by the end of two years from May 1, 1693; in the meantime to grind, at his own mill, for the garrison. On the completion of the mill a patent was promised him.—O'Callaghan, Notes on Windmills (MS.). See also Cal. Coun. Min., 78. This was the mill in the Commons, erected after Nov. 2, 1662 (q. v.). Another order was issued April 2, 1695—
Ibid., 104. See also Jan. 16, 1700.
- An indenture of antenuptial agreement between "Fredryck Flypse" (Philipse) and Catharine van Cortlandt, signed and sealed by both, is executed, regarding the title to the Philipse "Mansion House or domicillium" at "the South West Corner of the Stone Street in the City of New Yorke Fronting to the Forte, and a Chamber of the back part of the House joining to it, with the pruelege and use of the Alley Lying to the South of the Said House."—From the original indenture in the "Jay Papers" (in wrappers of miscellaneous pieces), in the N. Y. Hist. Society.
Catherine was the daughter of Olaf Stenvesen van Cortlandt, and was the widow of John Darvall. Her brother, two years before, married the adopted daughter of Philipse. The two powerful families of Van Cortlandt and Philipse were thus doubly united.
- A petition by Gerrit Jansen Roose to the council, for land of his which has been fenced in and added to the governour's garden, is referred to a committee. On Dec. 8, they reported that he had been wrongfully deprived of his land; it was therefore ordered to be restored.—Cal. Coun. Min., 79. For location of the governour's garden, see description of "The Duke's Plan," Pl. 10, I: 209.
- "Att a Court of Lieutenancy held at the house of Major William Merritt," there are adopted "Orders to be observed on the Military Guard of the City of New Yorke." These provide, among other things, "That a Drum doe beat round the City every night by equal turns presently after Sun Setts;" also "That the Guard be mounted presently after the beat of drum before its dark and to Continue their till the beat [of the] of the Revealye in the morning;"
and "That each respective Soldier, upon due notice given shall be att the Parade immediately after the beat of the Drum to mount the Guard well arm'd, and Ammunition as the Law directs."—Records of the Court of Lieutenancy, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880),

- Jan. 5 Gov. Fletcher, having proposed "y<sup>e</sup> building of A Bridge att Spikendevil," and having given "to this City y<sup>e</sup> preference thereof, for the better accommodation & advantage, which may Accrue thereby to y<sup>e</sup> Said City," the common council votes to accept the offer.—M. C. C., I: 290. On Jan. 12, they presented an address to the governour, thanking him, and stating "that itt cannot be well Accomplished without A great Charge, unto this City, which att present they are not Soe Capable to Defray," and asking that Frederick Phillips be granted a permit to build in one year "A good and Convenient draw bridg for the passage of all Travellere, Drovers of Cattell, & passage of Carts & Waggones," for certain specified tolls.—Ibid., I: 206-7; and see April 18, 1691. In a petition for a confirmatory patent for the Manor of Philipsborough, Phillips, on Jan. 6, had asked power to build such a bridge (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 231); and the patent to this manor, which was granted by William and Mary on June 12, 1693, conveyed also to Phillips "a certain neck or island of land called Papparimeno adjoining to the land aforesaid, with the salt meadows therunto belonging, together with power and authority to erect a bridge over the water or river commonly called Spiten devil ferry or Papparimeno, and soe receive toll from all passengers and droves of cattle that shall pass thereon according to rates hereinafter mentioned." The patent further recites Phillips's willingness to build the bridge at his own expense (it being also referred to as "a dam bridge"); and the schedule of tolls is given in detail.—From the manor grant published in Scharf, Hist. of Westchester Co., 160 e. See also Kingsbridge in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 926. An original survey of Papparimeno drawn by Wells is in the author's collection.
- " The Dongan Charter of the city of New York, granted in 1686, is entered in full on this date in the Min. Coun. Ann., I: 290-306.
- 7 In letters to Mr. Blathwayt and Mr. Dudley, Fletcher expresses hostility to Leisler's followers.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 2, 3.

- Feb. 4 It is ordered by the common council "that y<sup>e</sup> Recorder draw up an Address to his Excellency to desire their Majesties grant of Confirmation of the Charter of this City, together with y<sup>e</sup> Ancient priviledges; That y<sup>e</sup> Mayor for y<sup>e</sup> time being may be Clerk of y<sup>e</sup> Markets, Water Bayly and Coroner, & that Boutling of flower, & haking of bread for transportation, may be Confined to the City only as formerly."—M. C. C., I: 309. Application for confirmation of the charter was first made Feb. 24, 1687.—Ibid., I: 187. The common council was ready to present the new address to Fletcher on Feb. 8, and sent him word that they were at the city hall and waited "his Excellency's leisure" for that purpose.—Ibid., I: 310. The next day, the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and assistants went from the city hall to the fort and presented it to him, and it was entered in full in the Minutes.—Ibid., I: 311-13. Dunlap has called attention to the suppliant and slavish style of this address.—Hist. of the New Neth. (1840), II: Appendix, cxli. A committee of the governour's council was appointed the same day (Feb. 9) to consider it. Their report, if any was made, does not appear of record. Over 30 years later, another petition for a confirmation of the charter was inaugurated by the common council when Montgomerie was governour.—See March 23, 1730.
- 8 The common council orders that "no beef or pork be Shipped out of this port, but what Shall be repacked, by the Sworn Packers of this City." They shall "put their mark" to good and wholesome meat only.—M. C. C., I: 310. See Jan. 14, 1680. The regulation remained for decades the law of the city in the packing industry. See an order of Sept. 20, 1706.—M. C. C., IV: 344.
- 9 During the year 1693, considerable work of repairing was done at the fort, as appears by the records of payments in the transactions of the governour's council.—
- Feb. 9—To Henry Ford for carpenter work and to Dirck van der Burgh for work before Fletcher's arrival; to another for work after his arrival.

- 11 An ordinance for paving the streets is published at the city hall, "after y<sup>e</sup> Ringing of three bells." It recites the fact that former orders for this purpose "bath of late been much neglected, whereby the Cittizens & Soejourners within the City are much Anoyed, and y<sup>e</sup> Intercourse of trade amongst the Inhabitants, thereby much Lessened." All the freeholders and inhabitants living in the city, in the respective streets, laes, and alleys named in the ordinance, shall, before August 1, cause as much of these streets, etc. to be paved as are in front of their respective buildings and lots, according to specified "Dimemssions, quantity & Proportion," using "good & Sufficient pebble Stones," and at their own expense. The streets to be thus paved are: The street commonly called "y<sup>e</sup> bridge Street beginning at the Corner house, of Lukas Kiersie unto the house of Peter D Lanoy, ten foot english measure from y<sup>e</sup> Front of each house into the Street. The whole Street from Peter D Lanoy's, to the middle of the broad Street, by Farmers, from Mf Cortlandts Corner house, to the City Hall ten foot, from the City Hall to Martin Clocks ten foot; from Ditto Corner to the Mayors Inclusive ten foot, from M<sup>rs</sup> Lewise's down to the City Gate, and Soe up to the Corner of the broad Street, and Soe down to the Corner of Albert Rings ten foot, the whole Church Street, the west Side of the broad Street from Jacob Mounseys up to Ben Devalls ten foot, that y<sup>e</sup> broad way be paved on both Sides ten foot, down to Mf Smiths on one Side, and to Lukas Kiersie's on the other, and that y<sup>e</sup> beaver Street be put in good repair ten foot on both Sides, that the Street going down to the Mayors to Walkingtoos be wholly paved. That the Street going down to the french Church be wholly pav'd, that Pearl Street be put in good repair; and Soe pav'd down to white Hall ten foot, that the Street that Hull lives in be wholly pav'd. And that Eight Jans, in the broad Street pave wholly before her door, And that all y<sup>e</sup> pav'd Streets, of this City be put in good and Sufficient repair." An alderman and an assistant in each ward are to supervise the work.—M. C. C., I: 314-16; and see April 9, 1700. See also the law of Nov. 18, 1731.—Ibid., IV: 104-5.
- The Bridge Street mentioned in this ordinance was formerly called Brugh Straat; it was called Bridge Street as early as 1680 (Liber Patents, V: 9, Albany), and Hall Street on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a, Vol. I). It was continued from Whitehall to State St. in 1808-9.—M. C. C. (M.S.), XVIII: 348; ibid., XX: 178-79. See also May 2 and 8, 1808; June 26, 1809. Beaver Street is for the first time mentioned in this ordinance; it was the Beaver or Beaver's Gracht (graft) of earlier references.—See Liber Deeds, A: 126 (New York); M. C. C., I: 58-59, 61, 112-13, 151.
- The common council orders "that y<sup>e</sup> Recorder draw up an Adress to their Majesties, Representing the Steps, His Excellency has made, for the quiet of this Government, Since his Arrival."—M. C. C., I: 314.
- 13 The city regiment volunteers to accompany Gov. Fletcher on his expedition to the frontiers, and 150 of the fittest men are selected. The next day they embark on eight sloops near the fort, and set sail for Albany. The governour returned to New York on March 2.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 14-16.
- 14 The common council presents to Fletcher an address to the king, asking that it be forwarded as soon as convenient. It expresses gratitude to the king for the appointment of Col. Fletcher ("A Gen'l of pious life" when governour), and it praises the governour for restoring order. It reports that, more recently, "Coals of Dissection" have been "blown up by St William Phipps." The object of the address is to assure the king of the city's loyalty in spite of attempts to provoke rebellion.—M. C. C., I: 317-18.
- Mar. — A commission is issued to William Smith (see Nov. 11, 1692) to be chief-justice; to William Pinhorne to be second justice; and to Stephen van Cortland, Chidley Brooke, and John Lawrence to be justices of the supreme court.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 231.

1693 William Sharpas petitions to be appointed for life as city clerk.
 Me.20 Granted.—Coun. Min., VI: 180 (Albany). See Oct. 14, 1692.

22 In an address before a joint session of the council and the house, Fletcher says in part: "Their Maties have a Weighhouse in the city of New York which from time to time hath paid a rent unto their Maties. I would have it settled upon the Maties by Act of Assembly." He also states that the king and queen "have ordered a man of war to attend your Coasts; sent over 20 ps of Ordnance, small arms and considerable stores of warr, & maintain the two Companies of Granadoers, at the expense of their Coffers in England."
Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 35.

23 Inducements are offered for a printer to come to New York. The text of this resolution is as follows: "It is resolved in Council that if a printer will come & settle in the City of New York for the printing of Our Acts of Assembly & publick papers he shall be allowed the same of fourty pounds Curr<sup>t</sup> money of New York  $\frac{2}{3}$  annum for his salary & have the benefit of his printing besides what serve the publick."
Coun. Min. (M.S.), VI: 182 (Albany). William Bradford, a printer and book-seller of Philadelphia, was appointed.—See April 10, 1693.

30 Complaints were made to the common council, on Feb. 1, that two inhabitants "were digging of Holes, and Setting up A Peace in the High way and Street of this City before the door of M<sup>r</sup> Van Broughn," and a committee was then appointed "to Inquire of y<sup>e</sup> Ancient Inhabitants of this City how long y<sup>e</sup> Said ground hath been Vacant & [deemed] Highways belonging to y<sup>e</sup> Same and by what right or pretence any person lays Claim to itt."
M. C. C., I: 308-9. They now make their report; Col. Nicholas Bayard, Col. Van Cortlandt, and others declaring that for as many as 56 years the ground has been vacant and a highway for the use of the city.—Ibid., I: 319. "Mr. Van Broughn" was Johannes Pietersen van Brugh, whose house occupied the centre of the ground now covered by the Cotton Exchange building. The highway referred to was therefore Hanover Square.—See Castello Plan, II: 330; Jan. 18, 1694.

31 The common council orders that James Everts be city surveyor with Adolph Peterson, in place of Peter King.—M. C. C., I: 320.

" Payment is made for work done in the "Guard Room of this City."
M. C. C., I: 321, 351. This is possibly a room used by the night-watch (ibid., I: 367), or the room in the fort in which Leisler was confined before being transferred to the "Common prison."
See Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 204. Reference has also been made to a guard-house in "Mount Holandia."
See under May 11, 1692. During Van Twiller's administration (1693-8), the "guardhouse with lattice work and a roof" was built in Fort Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16. When New Amsterdam became a municipality, the burgher prisoners were evidently kept at the city hall, and the military prisoners or provincial government criminals in the prison within the fort.

It is also ordered "that an Address be drawn up to his Excellency y<sup>e</sup> Governour Representing the Conveniency of Repairing y<sup>e</sup> Fortifications round this City, And y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> Income of the Weighhouse of y<sup>e</sup> said City may be Appropriated towards Defraying y<sup>e</sup> Charge therefore as formerly; and that Coll. D. Peyster take Care y<sup>e</sup> sd Address be According Drawn."
From Records of the Court of Lieutenancy, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 419.

" Bayard's account of "Disbursements towards the Repairing the Fortifications about the City N. York" shows a total expense of "£21420:11," dating from Oct. 3, 1692, when an earlier account was rendered (see Feb. 4, 1692), to March 15, 1693.—From the original report in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

had introduced the proposal to make this change, in his message to the "House of Representatives" on March 22, giving as his purpose that the king's name "May live forever amongst you."

" A warrant (dated Oct. 12, 1693, q. v.) for William Bradford's salary as public printer for six months recites that it was "due on the 10th preceding."
Council Min., VII: 27 (Albany). See March 23.

" Although his term of employment, or rather his salary, began on April 10, the facts at present available do not indicate the exact time when he took up his work in New York. The period between Aug. 25, 1692, when he was arrested in Philadelphia for publishing George Keith's Appeal from the Twenty-eight Judges to the Spirit of Truth and True Judgment in all Faithful Friends called Quakers that meet at this yearly meeting at Burlington, 7 mo. 1692, a controversial work, without a license, and April 28, 1693, when Gov. Fletcher finally ordered his release, he spent his time in the custody and house of the Philadelphia sheriff, John White, who, however, seems to have permitted him a considerable amount of freedom, at one time replying to an order to produce his prisoner in court that he was absent from town for a week on leave. Although some of Bradford's "tools" and "letters" had been seized at the time of his arrest, we know that his press continued operation during this period.

The fact that Bradford's salary began on April 10 has been held by most authorities to prove that he took up his work in New York as government printer on this date. On the other hand, it has been argued that he could hardly have assumed his new office in New York before his legal release in Pennsylvania, an argument which is strengthened by the fact that his name does not appear in "A List of all the Officers employed in Civil Offices in the Province of New-York in America the 20th of April 1693 [q. v.], and of their Salaries" (Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., I: 199-200), which list, however, contains the item: "Allowed to a printer p<sup>t</sup> ann<sup>m</sup>—£40.

Gov. Fletcher undoubtedly instigated the passage of the resolution of March 23, 1693 (q. v.) by the New York executive council, with the knowledge that Bradford had cancelled his contract with the Quakers and that he intended to depart for England as soon as he was released.

For a further discussion of the facts relating to Bradford's first year's work, and the order of his known imprints, see Addenda.

" A provincial act is passed for raising £6,000 to pay 300 volunteers and their officers to be employed "in the Reinforcement of the frontiers of this Province At Albany," from May 1, 1693 to May 1, 1694. The amount to be raised by assessment in the city and county of New York is £1,450. The collectors in the various cities and counties of the province are to pay the amounts collected "unto their Majesties Collector and Receiver generally . . . at their Majesties Custome house in the City of New York," one half (£3,000) on or before Sept. 29, 1693 (the feast day of "St. Michael the Archangell"), and the other half on or before March 25, 1694 (the feast day of "the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary").
Col. Laws N. Y., I: 315-21.

" The provincial legislature passes an act requiring that all goods that shall be imported into or exported from this city "shall be first brought unto their Majesties Beam at the Weigh House." It establishes rates and duties upon such goods.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 322; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grosler Club reprint, 1894), p. cxviii, note.

" A List of all the Officers employed in Civil Offices in the Province of New York" is prepared, showing the salaries of a few. Regarding the city and county of New York, Abraham Depeyster is "Mayor & Clerk of the Mercaite;" James Graham, the attorney-general, is recorder; Standley Hancock is high sheriff; and William Sharpas, town clerk. The aldermen, collectors, assessors, constables, and surveyors of highways are elective officers. The organization of the courts is shown. The mayor's court has the power of a court of common pleas. "In each County there is a Court of Comon Pleas whereof the first in the Commission of the Peace is Judge, and is to be assisted with any two of the three next in the commission of the Peace: The Mayor and Aldermen are Justices of the Peace and have power to hold Quarter Sessions in the City of N. York & Albany." The militia of the city and county of New York and Orange, commanded by Col. Abraham Depeyster, consists of 1693 eight companies of foot-soldiers and one troop of horse, numbering Ap.20 477 men.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 25-29.

22 Sarah Burger, widow of John Shakerly (see Oct. 28, 1684), having petitioned the provincial council for land in the possession of the city, and the council having ordered "that the City doe agree with her for her land or that she Enter into possession of her own land to her own use" (see Col. MSS., XXXIX: 147, Albany), the common council acts upon this order. It concerns "y<sup>e</sup> Ground leading to the Fortification Commonly Called Oyster Pasty, facing in y<sup>e</sup> North River and Fronting to y<sup>e</sup> Broadway of this City." A committee is appointed "to Enquire what Ground will be proper to be reserved for a Passage or Lane for the use of the City."—M. C. C., I: 321. This "Passage or Lane" became known as the Oyster Pasty Lane or Alley, and was the present Exchange Alley.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007.

" The common council orders the city surveyors, Evetts and Peterson, to lay out the lots bought from the city by the inhabitants of Dock St.—M. C. C., I: 321. On Aug. 11, the owners, in a petition, expressed surprise at finding that their lots were not to front their houses as agreed.—Ibid., I: 329. On Sept. 29, it was ordered that the surveyors lay out the lots "According to their Respective Purchases Granted to them by this City."—Ibid., I: 333-34. On April 18, 1694, the committee of aldermen to whom the matter had been referred reported that this had been done.—Ibid., I: 353.

" "Upon Reading y<sup>e</sup> Patent of George Heathcoat for A Lott of Ground near the Slaughter house and Another on the East Side of Kings Street in this City, and Whereas his Patent extends but one hundred and forty four foot each Lott in length: It is Agreed that y<sup>e</sup> Said George Heathcoat Shall have the Rest of y<sup>e</sup> Land between the Said Lotts and Low water Marke, to Range even with y<sup>e</sup> Streets as they Shall be Laid out by the Surveyors, and that y<sup>e</sup> Said George Heathcoat is to finish y<sup>e</sup> Street or Wharfe No<sup>r</sup> next, under y<sup>e</sup> like Penalties of the rest of y<sup>e</sup> Purchasers in y<sup>e</sup> Smiths Fly and with them to have equal Privilege."—M. C. C., I: 322. Heathcoat's patent was a grant from the mayor, et al., dated Sept. 7, 1692, for land bounded east by Kings (Pine) Street and south by the river at low-water.—Liber City Grants, A: 138-41. By this instrument, Heathcoat agreed to make a street 30 feet wide, fronting the river. This is "y<sup>e</sup> street or wharfe" mentioned in the Minutes. It was part of the present Water Street.

May Gov. Fletcher is commissioned by the king to be commander-in-chief of the forces of Connecticut, with power to transfer them to the province of New York. Sir William Phipps is relieved of the command.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 29-31. This commission reached Fletcher on Oct. 1.—Ibid., IV: 55.

June Warner Wessells and Antie Christians ("Antje Christiaens") 8 join in a petition to Fletcher, stating that the son of the former and the husband of the latter, both sailors, have been "taken Slaues unto Salley [Salee, Morocco] by y<sup>e</sup> Infidels," and that Fletcher has granted these petitioners a "Brieffe" (permit) "to collect and Receive y<sup>e</sup> free & bountifull Charity of all good Christians within this Province for y<sup>e</sup> Redemption of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> miserable Persons;" but, as they are not competent to take up this collection, they have prevailed upon the church-wardens and ministers of this city to do so, and they now ask Fletcher for a new "Brieffe" for this purpose, in form similar to one (which they annex to their petition) which was used in 1678, when a vessel was taken by the Turks. The sum required to redeem these captives is £100, as was the case in 1678; and the petitioners propose that if there is any surplus it be delivered as Fletcher shall see fit, and employed for "y<sup>e</sup> like pious uses." By the advice of his council, Fletcher grants the license (or "Brieffe") desired. It is announced in a proclamation printed by Bradford in the form of a broadside (one of the earliest dated examples of printing done in the state and city of New York), and addressed "To all Officers and Ministers Ecclesiastical and Civil throughout the Provinces and Territories under my Government." It requires that it be read and affixed to the doors of churches or meeting-houses, announcing that at the next meeting the collection will be received for this object. Accounts are to be kept, which are to be transmitted, with the money collected, to Stephen Cortland, Peter Jacobs Marius, John Kerbyll, and John Kipp, who shall "transmit the said Money, or so much as shall be requisite for the Redemption of the said Captives from Slavery, by the best and most convenient means and way," and account to Fletcher for the surplus. Fletcher gives the same license in behalf of three other captives sailors, taken in the same vessel.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., June (4to ed.) III: 252-53. 8

A memorandum of receipts from the collection to ransom these "slaves in Salee" has been published, without citation, in Eccles. Rec., II: 1063-64. New York City gave £245:13:11; Stuyvesant's Bouwerie, £213:14:3; and New Harlem, £26:3. Fred. "Philipzen" alone gave £12:10. Towns around New York contributed various amounts. The total was £374:12, subscribed by 4,302 persons. Regarding the use of the surplus, see Sept. 6, and Dec. 2, 1697.

The council directs William Nicolls to oversee the sodwork in the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 85. He was paid for this service on Aug. 17.—Ibid., 90. 10

Fletcher sends Lieut. Col. Lodwick to England to describe to the lords of trade the condition of the province of New York. Lodwick is to explain, among other things, "That our neighbour governments are wholly exempted from any impositions or customs as are paid at New York; which greatly discourages the trade of this Province and apparently lessens the revenue for the support of their Maj<sup>ties</sup> interest here; our merchants and traders removing thither."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 31-33. See also Fletcher's report to the lords of trade on Oct. 9.—Ibid., IV: 55. Lodwick was the first agent of New York Province in England.—See "Colonial Agencies in England," by E. P. Tanner, in Polit. Sci. Quar., March, 1901. 12

In a royal grant or patent to Frederick Phillipse, the mayor of Phillipsburgh is incorporated, and Phillipse is given authority "to erect and Build a Draw-Bridge upon the Ferry, then commonly called Spiten-Divell Ferry, and thenceforward to be called Kings-Bridge."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 782. Rates are fixed, differing slightly from those recommended by the common council (see M. C. C., I: 306-7), together with a second schedule for passage after sunset.—"Manor Grants of Phillipsborough," in Scharf's Hist. of Westchester County, I: 160. See, further, July 1, 1713. 14

A committee of the common council is appointed "to View y<sup>e</sup> Cripple bush [swamp] adjoining to M<sup>r</sup> Jacobus Cortland's Land."—M. C. C., I: 323. 8

The common council orders that "y<sup>e</sup> Recorder draw up an Address to Congratulate his Excellencies Safe return from Albany, and to Acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> great Care y<sup>e</sup> he hath lately taken for y<sup>e</sup> Security of the Whole Province whereby this City hath noe Small benefit & y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> Mayor doe Provide A Cup of Gold to y<sup>e</sup> Value of one hundred pounds to be presented unto his Excellency on y<sup>e</sup> behalf of this City as A token of their Gratitude for Soe Great favours As their Majesties has been pleased to bestow by Appointing his Excellency, A person of soe great Vigilence Prowess & Conduct in Ruling of us."—M. C. C., I: 325. The recorder submitted the address to the board at their next meeting (July 20); it was approved and entered in full in the Minutes. The mayor reported that he had bought 20 ounces of gold of Peter Jacobs Marius to be delivered to Cornelius Vanderburgh to be made into a cup; and he and "Some other Gentlemen" gave their bonds for the purchase price,—£106. He asked that the board order that a fund be raised for the payment, and it was ordered that the revenue of the ferry be converted to that purpose, to be paid quarterly.—Ibid., I: 326-28. The date of the presentation of the address and the cup does not appear in the Minutes. The address was printed and sold by Bradford as a broadside, a copy of which, in the archives of the public record-office, London, is endorsed in a contemporary hand "Rec'd 26 Sept. 1693 from Coll. Fletcher."—From Miss A. R. Hasse's "Materials for a Bibliography," in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), VII: 53. 17

Commissioners from all the English colonies are invited to come to New York and concert measures for the defence of the frontiers. The collection of taxes is urged. The question is raised as to the necessity of a court of exchequer.—Cal. Coun. Min., 86. On July 27, it was decided that no such court was needed.—Ibid. 17

Gov. Fletcher suggests to the council the "danger of the falling of their Maties Chappell in the fort" (built by Kieft in 1642, q. v.), and the council decides that it "ought to be pulled down and that it be recomended to the next assembly to provide for building another Chappell."—Ex. Coun. Min., VI: 216-18 (Albany). On 27

1693 Aug. 3, at a council meeting at the fort, a committee was appointed July to "consider of the [dimen]sions for a new Chappell in this fiort of 27 the Charge thereof [and who are] to be Overseers of the building thereof."—Ibid., VIII, 3. (The words supplied are presumably those used in the original MS., which was partially destroyed in the Capitol fire). The old chapel was demolished prior to Sept. 12 (q.v.).

Aug. The court of mayor and aldermen instructs two aldermen to 15 "View the Highways between this City and Kings bridge And y<sup>e</sup> they summons the Inhabitants of the Out Ward To Repair the Said Highways and make them fit for Travellers Waggon &c."—Cal. Coun. Min. (MS.), Aug. 15, 1693.

18 Reports are received from Boston of the fear of attack from a French squadron. The council directs that the militia of New York be in readiness for a march to Boston, and that ten of the greatest guns be mounted at "Sandypoint" (Sandy Hook).—Cal. Coun. Min., 90.

19 A proclamation is issued forbidding the exportation of provisions until further orders, because they may be needed for the troops summoned to defend New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90. On Aug. 30, permission was granted to Samuel Burgesse to export flour.—Ibid.

21 The common council gives Ebenezer Wilson the preference in the sale of the waste or spare ground "Ranging with the Gate Going into the Smith Fly."—M. C. C., I: 330.

" The common council orders that "all Persons & all Indian & Negro Slaves" not listed among the militia of the city "Shall either Worke themselves or Appoint Some Others in their Place for y<sup>e</sup> Repairing the fortifications round the City."—M. C. C., I: 329-30.
It is also ordered that £100 be raised to supply the militia and to repair the fortifications, until another fund may be raised by act of assembly or otherwise.—Ibid., I: 329-30. On Aug. 25, the assembly agreed to raise such a fund.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90. On Sept. 13, the common council ordered that the recorder draw up a petition to the assembly asking that the assembly allow "a Gen.
Fund of y<sup>e</sup> whole Province," inasmuch as the fortifications around the city are for the security of the whole Province. They estimated that there were needed about £250.—M. C. C., I: 330.

25 Gov. Fletcher issues a proclamation requiring the erection of fire beacons to give warning of invasion by the French. The proclamation is printed as a broadside by William Bradford.—Bulletin, N. Y.
Pub. Library (1903), 53, citing Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 587; Moore, Introd. of Printing into N. Y.; Wallace, Bradford, Sept. 1 The governor's council considers the erection of a "new battery" in New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90. See Sept. 12, 1693; Jan. 22, March 3, and March 21, 1694.

12 In an address to the provincial legislature, on the subject of "the settlement of their Mat<sup>s</sup> Revenue in this Province," Fletcher pleads, among other things, that this may be, not for two years only, but for "their Maties for lives," adding: "lett not opportunity be given to any person to asperse you with that new coined name of Jacobites . . ."

Continuing, he says: "I have designed a platforme on which I purpose to mount a battery for the defence of this City which is indeed the safety of the Province. I suppose you have all heard how we have bin lately alarm'd with the noise of a squadron of french ships designed to attack this place. I have view'd the river and sounded in severall parts, in order to raise some fortifications to impede their access to the City, but at length concluded a good battery upon this platforme would answer the end, I have by their Maties favour unto you gunns for one teere; I have wrote for more . . ."

"There is likewise the Kings Chappell in the fiort [see July 27] which being ready to fall down to the danger of many lives, I thought it convenient to pull it down, and if you will give something towards the rebuilding of it we will all joyne in soe good a work. If his Maty were not engaged in an expensive warr I should not doubt to have orders to rebuild it at his own charge . . ."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 42. Evidently nothing was done toward rebuilding the chapel before Oct. 20, 1694 (q.v.).

On Sept. 15, the general assembly appointed a committee to inquire into the necessary fortifications recommended by the governour, the expense, etc., and make a report with all convenient speed.—Assem. Jour., I: 33. Writing to the committee of trade (London) on Oct. 9, Fletcher said: "Our rivers are broad I have sounded in sev<sup>l</sup> places between the Fort at New York and Sandy hook, and design to make a Platforme on the Out most Rocks under the Fort and Erect a battery thereon, it is so designed that by the swiftness of the tyde no ship can ride before the Town, but must have her Stemm or Stern towards it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 57. See Oct. 10, 1693; Jan. 22, 1694.

The common council appoints a committee "to Supervise & take Care that y<sup>e</sup> Custom house Bridge be plank'd on each Side and fitted [filled] up with Dirt Rubish &c; between thirty & forty foot."—M. C. C., I: 330-31. On Sept. 23, it was "Order'd y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> filliog up of
they being the markes even with the end of the street."—Ibid., I: 331-32.

Warrants are issued by order of the governour's council to pay 14 Miles Forster for locks, and Peter de Rimier for glass, for the fort.—
Cal. Coun. Min., 91.

Col. Andrew Hamilton, the postmaster-general, in a memorial to 15 the governour and council, explains "the great charge he is at in maintaining the Office being four times soe much as the profits arising thereby." He asks that, in view of its convenience to trade and correspondence, it may be supported the first three years by a salary of £100 a year, which request is recommended by the council to the assembly for consideration.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 43. The assembly referred it to a committee composed of one member from each county.—Assem. Jour., I: 33. Hamilton received a salary payment on Nov. 29, 1694 (q.v.); see also March 7, 1695. "The first establishment of regular post routes, between New York and . . . Philadelphia, appears to have been about the year 1693."

British North Am.* (Cambridge, 1920), 9.

The general assembly passes the "Ministry Act." This is "An 22 Act for Settling a Ministry & Raising a Maintenance for them in the City of New York County of Richmond Westchester and Queens County." It states that "Prophaneness and Licentiousness hath of late over spread this Province for want of a settled Ministry." It provides that in certain cities and counties "there Shall be called inducted and established a good sufficient Protestant Minister to officiate and have the care of souls." One of these is to be in the city of New York. For his maintenance the city and county are to provide £100 annually. The freeholders shall be summoned annually by the justices of each county to select two vestrymen (see Nov.
29, 1745) and two church-wardens. The vestrymen in conjunction with the justices are empowered "to lay a Reasonable Tax . . . for the Maintenance of the Minister and Poor of there respective Places," said tax to be levied by the constable. The appointment of ministers in the future will be a responsibility of vestrymen and church-wardens.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 328-31. See also Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 48; Assem. Jour., I: 34; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 57. For election of first vestry, see Jan. 9, 1694. On Feb. 5, 1694, the vestry at New York voted that £100 be levied upon the inhabitants in accordance with this act.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1095. The "Ministry Act" was explained and reinforced by an act passed Aug. 4, 1705 (q.v.), and remained in force until after the Revolution.—See Jan. 27, 1770. See also Laws & Acts (Groslier Club reprint, 1894), pp. ccxix et seq.; and Addenda.

In an order to the common council, Gov. Fletcher informs them 10 that "there is Actual War between our Sovereign Lord & Lady the King & Queen and y<sup>e</sup> French King;" and that he is "Informed of a Squadron of Ships and Land Forces Intended from France to Invade this City and Province." He finds it an "Absolute necessity to Make A Platform upon the Outmost Point of Rocks under the Fort," on which "to build A Battery to Command both Rivers."
He therefore requires the common council that they pass an order "that y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> Outward of y<sup>e</sup> City of New Yorke & Manning & Barnes Islands doe Cutt Down Eighty Six Cord of Stockadoes of twelve foot in length and to have them in readiness att y<sup>e</sup> water Side att y<sup>e</sup> Most Convenient place to be Conveyed to New Yorke att the Charge of the City & County of New Yorke." The governour closes the order with the warning: "you are not to Faile upon your Perill."—M. C. C., I: 335. On Oct. 28, the mayor, having called the recorder and aldermen together, issued a warrant, by order of the court of special sessions, directing Aldermen Merritt and Dow to see that the governour's order was executed. These aldermen were thereby ordered to call together the inhabitants of the Out Ward and of Manning and Barnes Islands, and require them to cut the 86 cords of stockades "within the City & County Aforsaid," and have them carried to some convenient place for transportation to this city, on or before the first of March, 1694. They were to agree with the inhabitants on the price, and report to the mayor, that he "may take effectual Care to have y<sup>e</sup> Same truly Assessed Levied & paid by A County Rate."—Ibid., I: 336. The two aldermen reported on Oct. 30 that they had agreed with the people of Harlem, whose names and the number of cords each was to furnish were stated, to cut the "Stockadoes" at 13 shillings a cord, and that they were to give them notes in payment.—Ibid., I: 336-37; but see Dec. 2, 1693.

Gov. Fletcher writes to the lords of trade and plantations that the capture of "John Reaux," captain of a French privateer, has delayed his visit to Albany and Connecticut. This man, who was naturalized 18 months before, had sunk a vessel of which he was master and run away with £6,000 or £7,000. Captured and imprisoned, he had escaped to Canada, and finally reached France. He is now back, claiming to have a commission from the French king. Having taken two boats on the way back, he is held prisoner till the king's will is known.—Cal. State Papers, America and W. Indies (1693-6), 176-77. In the following December, being fearful of death, "John La Roux" made confession to a French Protestant minister: "When I was in France in February last Monsieur Gabaret, the lieutenant-general of the French forces by sea, asked me if there were any easy method of attacking New York with the squadron of ten men-of-war and six fire ships commanded by Mons. de Pales. Having received the offer of conducting the squadron thither I pointed out the difficulties of the enterprise, the strength of the fort, the number of inhabitants in the adjacent country, and the danger of navigation at the entrance to New York; . . . The project was given up. Le Roux concluded his confession by begging the governor and council to have compassion on his family.—Ibid., 177. On Feb. 27, 1694, this petition was referred to the mayor and aldermen, with directions to "Supply the Necessities of ye Prisoners wife and children." In compliance with this order, the common council ordered that the "Overseers of the Poor doe put out the children of the Said Petitioner in Some Good Reputable Families for their Subsistence during his Imprisonment."—M. C. C., I: 348. On Aug. 8, 1695, the governor reported that John Le Roux had been tried and acquitted.—Cal. State Papers (op. cit.), 559. See Sept. 8, 1704.

A warrant is issued to William Bradford for salary.—Cal. Coun. Min., 92. The text of the warrant shows that this payment was for salary for the "six months ended on the 10th preceding."—Introduction by Miss A. R. Hassé to the facsimile reproduction of A Narrative of an Attempt Made by the French of Canada, etc. (N. Y., 1903), vi.

A majority vote in the common council favours the opinion "that they have not power to raise A Tax for the Payment of the Said Stockadoes," for which a committee gave notes in payment on Oct. 30.—M. C. C., I: 337. At a meeting of the governor and his council, held at Fort William Henry on Dec. 14, an order was passed requiring the mayor and common council to attend them the following day, "to be resolved of Some Scruples or Objects made by Some of them" against furnishing the number of stockades "Assigned to the Said City towards the Platform designed for to build A Battery upon for Defence of the City & Province ag<sup>t</sup> forraign invasion." The common council "waited upon" the governor and council on Dec. 18, and gave reasons "why they had not power to raise Money for fortification." That is, they stated their opinion "that the Cutting & paying for y<sup>e</sup> Stockadoes for y<sup>e</sup> building of a Platform on y<sup>e</sup> Point of Rocks for y<sup>e</sup> Defence of this City is not A County Charge." They were nevertheless of the opinion that it was "A Necessary works," and on Dec. 18, the common council resolved that, "as A Free & Voluntary Act," they would give the stockades "att y<sup>e</sup> Charge of y<sup>e</sup> City."—Ibid., I: 338-39; Cal. Coun. Min., 93. But the matter did not rest here.—See Jan. 8, 1694.

The common council allows the charges which the sheriff "Shall be att in y<sup>e</sup> Necessary Repair of y<sup>e</sup> goal of this City."—M. C. C., I: 337.

Bradford continues the publication of a series of almanacs which he began in Philadelphia in 1686. The first New York issue bears the date 1694, although, if he pursued his usual practice, it was issued the year before. It is entitled An Almanac For the Year of Christian Account 1694. . . . Printed, and Sold by William Bradford at the Bible in New-York, 1694. In this he advertised the forthcoming laws of the province thus: "The Laws of the Province of New York will shortly be printed, whereto every one may have recourse to know the exact Time of Markets, Fairs, Courts, Excise, Rates and Imports upon Goods, &c. and therefore may omit them here." He also advertises Keith's Truth Advanced in the Correction of Many Gross & hurtful Errors, which later made its appearance bearing the date 1694. The almanac is described in the Catalogue (1907) of the library of E. D. Church, IV: 1625-28, as a small 8vo volume of 12 unnumbered pages. The title-page is reproduced in ibid., IV: 1627. Only two copies of this almanac are known, one in the Huntington collection, and one in the Hist. Soc. of Penn. See also April 10, 1693.

Bradford printed and published this year the first collection of the provincial laws of New York (see April 10, 1693), with the following title: The Laws & Acts of the General Assembly Their Majesties Province of New-York. As they were Enacted in divers Sessions, the first of which began April, the 9th, Annoq; Domini, 1691. At New-York, Printed and Sold by William Bradford, Printer to their Majesties, King William & Queen Mary, 1694. It is the most valuable publication from his press. An account of the seven copies of this edition known to be in existence 200 years later is given in Facsimile of the Laws and Acts (Groler Club ed., 1894), "Explanatory Note," I: v. The Groler Club's reprint is a limited facsimile edition of this work, having an historical introduction, notes on the laws, and appendices, by Robert Ludlow Fowler. See Pl. 22, Vol. IV, for reproduction of title-page of original Laws & Acts.

The Dongan Charter (see April 27, 1686) was printed this year by Bradford, on ten pages, folio. On Jan. 16, 1695, he submitted an account for £10 to the common council "for Printing of the City Laws the City Charter &c.," and a warrant for payment was ordered.—M. C. C., I: 374; and see Oct. 25, 1694. A copy of this printed edition of the charter was sent by Bellomont to the lords of trade on Nov. 29, 1700, and it is still on file in the Public Record Office, London. A photostat of one of the two copies now known, that owned by Henry E. Huntington, Esq., is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is without title-page or date (only the half-title appearing). For reproduction (made from plate in Church Cat., No. 751), see Pl. 22, Vol. IV. As to the first printed collection of laws and ordinances of the city of New York, issued this year by William Bradford (vide supra), no copy is known to be extant; but see Oct. 25 for their titles.

There were 40 ships, 62 boats, and 62 sloops whose owners resided in the city of New York this year.—Chalmers Papers relating to the city, in N. Y. Pub. Library, I: 5.

A new street at this time was about to be opened on the water-side, where the breast-work and platform had been erected.—From petition of Jacob Lockermans and others, Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 242. This alludes to the beginning of Water St.—See also June 16, 1696.

From this date until 1727, John Wendover, silversmith, was working in New York. For incidents of his life, and description of a cream jug made by him, see Met. Museum Catalogue of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xxi-xxxii, 62.

The city's power to raise money by taxation is questioned. The common council orders that "A Committee of y<sup>e</sup> whole Bench be Appointed to Enquire into Such lawful ways & Methods as is Practiced by the Corporations in England for the raising of Money to Defray what they Shall think needful in their Respective Corporations."—M. C. C., I: 339. The "Committee of the Whole house," having considered the requirement of the governor and council regarding the city's "Quota & Proportion of Stockadoes and Other Services for y<sup>e</sup> Building the Battery that is Projected by his Excell to be made att the Point of Rocks under y<sup>e</sup> Fort," made their report on Jan. 12. They found that "the Easiest, Speediest and best way for Accomplishing the Same will be by raising A Tax upon the Respective Inhabitants of this City;" and this they were willing to do, "Provided his Excellency and Council doe declare in writing that the common Council of this City is Soe Enabled to doe by the Powers Contained in their Charter." After this report had been read three times, the common council ordered that the recorder draw up an address to the governor and council, expressing "their readiness to Assist their Majesties in the Security & Defense of this Province & City with their lives & fortunes," and asking them to give their interpretation of the city's charter powers regarding raising money by taxation.—Ibid., I: 340. Such address was presented to the governor and council on Jan. 15, and entered in full 1694 in the Minutes of that day.—Ibid., I: 341-42. Answer was given Jan. 8 at a council meeting in the fort on Jan. 18, stating that "it is A Power Natural to Every body Politic y<sup>e</sup> very Act of Incorporation to do all those reasonable Acts y<sup>e</sup> Are Necessary for the Continuance of that being & Accordingly to Impose A Tax or Other Ley on y<sup>e</sup> Respective Members of Such A body for the Caring on & Effecting all Such matters the Representatives of A Corporation Judge Necessary for the Good & Advantage of the body Politic he it for its Civil Defense or Other y<sup>e</sup> like And that its Lawfull for any Private Corporation to raise Money upon its Respective Members According to the Proportion of their Interest in the Same for its Military Defence whenever the Government it has its being under is Pleas'd to Give leave."—Ibid., I: 343. See Jan. 22.

9 The first election under the Ministry Act of Sept. 22, 1693
(q. v.), is held, and the first city vestry is chosen as follows: churchwardens, Nicholas Bayard and John Kerbyll; vestrymen, Robert Dakin, Robert Walters, William Jackson, Jeremiah Tothill, John Crooke, John Spratt, Isaac van Flack, Matthew Clarkson, Isaac de Riemer, John de Peyster. Only Tothill, Crooke, & Clarkson were Episcopalians. The wardens and vestrymen were at first a civil body, in accordance with the "State-Church ideas."—Ecles.
Rec., II: 1092.

18 Jacob Teller and Leonard Hoygon, in a petition to the common council, state that they have bought from the heirs of Govert Loockerman a piece of ground "fronting to the Kings High way Opposite the house of Johannes Van Brugher Adjoining to the Slip Commonly Called Burgers Path;" that they plan to build here and fence the grounds, but they do not know the exact line without a survey. They ask that "the Surveyors of this City doe lay out the Said Street."—M. C. C., I: 344. A committee, appointed on Feb.
27 to investigate (ibid., I: 348), reported on March 15 that the petitioners "doe Desire that the streets on each Side of the Same Ground which are laid out forty foot wide may be each narrowed ten foot," or else "that the Upper Street running Along by the house of the Said Van Brughan may be Narrowed ten feet, which if Granted that they will make no further pretense to the Lower Street but are Satisfied y<sup>t</sup> it Continue a Street or Highway as Already laide out Provided they may Peaceably enjoy the remaining parte of the Land."—Ibid., I: 349. On March 20, the common council granted the petition,—that the land might be laid out
"fronting thirty foot Distance to the houses of MF Van Broughan and MF Jacob D: Hart; & that it may goe down towards the water Side ten foot more than formerly laid out by the Surveyor General, Provided they release all other Pretences of Claims they have to the Remainder of the Said Land."—Ibid., I: 351. Cf.
March 30, 1693.

" Roger Baker petitions for the payment of £4, expended by him
"for the use of this City which Sometime past was Allowed him but as yett not paid."—M. C. C., I: 344. Baker was a tavernkeeper at the south-west corner of Pearl Street and Maiden Lane.
In 1701, his house was the place of meeting of conference committees of the legislature and was called the "King's Head."—Assemb.
Jour., I: 120. Baker may have moved the sign to Smith (William)
St. in 1702.—See July 23, 1702.

22 Fletcher informs the committee of trade that he has "projected the building a platform whereon to raise a battery for the defence of New York from attempts by sea being the Key and Centre of the English Plantations on this main, the Inhabitants are now at work to gett Stockades to fill up the water, it will take some time to finish."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 75. See also Sept. 1, Sept. 12, and Oct. 10, 1693; March 3, and 21, 1694.

" On Jan. 22, the common council resolves that a tax be levied upon every freeholder, inhabitant, and sojourner within the city,
"of three pence  $\frac{3}{4}$  POUND upon all their Real and Personall Estates within the Said City," etc.—Ibid., I: 344-45. The ordinance was passed on Jan. 25, the fund so raised "to be Employed for the Building the Battery and platform to be Erected in the Said City &c." The return of the assessment was to be made before Feb. 10.
Half of the amount levied was to be paid on or before March 25, and the other half before July 25, 1694. The governour and council, the same day, on reading the city's ordinance, unanimously resolved that the platform and battery "Ought without delay to be built," and confirmed the ordinance accordingly.—Ibid., I: 345-48. See Bulletin, N. Y. Pub. Library (1903), VII: 54. For subsequent history of this battery, see "Whitehall" in Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 946.

The governour's council orders that the well before the fort be repaired and a pump put in.—Cal. Coun. Min., 94.

25 During the year 1694, the following items of expense for work in the fort appear in the transactions of the governour's council:
Jan. 25—To Henry Ford for carpenter work, and to Nicholas

Bayard for gun-carriges.
March 8— " Henry Ford for carpenter work.
July 5— " Nicholas Bayard for gun-carriges.
" 12— " John Cooley for blacksmith work.
Aug. 3— " James Spencer for work.
" 24— " John Abel for work on guns and the fort.
Nov. 1— " John Crooke for coopering.
Dec. 15— " James Spencer for carpenter work.
—Cal. Coun. Min., 94-102 passim. See also Feb. 9, 1693.

The city vestry (see Jan. 9) votes that a tax of £100 shall be "assessed, levied, collected and paid by all and every one of the Inhabitants and Residents within this City and County for ye maintenance of a good, sufficient Protestant Minister, according to the directions of said Act."—Ecles. Rec., II: 1095.

12 The governour and council consider the question as to "what Perswasion" the minister shall be, and who shall be called in accordance with the act of Sept. 22, 1693. It is decided that he shall be "a dissenting Minister." The governour now presents the name of Rev. John Miller, his chaplain.—Ecles. Rec., II: 1096-97; see also March 7, 1692. On Feb. 15, Miller demanded, by virtue of his license from the Bishop of London, an introduction into the living established in September, 1693, for the maintenance of a Protestant minister in the city of New York. The council decided that Miller was not thereby entitled to this living.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 182.

15 A warrant is issued to William Bradford for printing "sundry public papers" and the book entitled Seasonable considerations offered to the good people of Connecticut.—Cal. Coun. Min., 95.

27 The governour's council directs Surveyor Graham to make a "plan of the proposed fortifications and of New York city."—Cal.
Coun. Min., 95. Unfortunately, no further reference to these plans appears of record.

Mar. 3 Fletcher recommends to the council that they take the fort into consideration, it being much out of repair; and provide for rebuilding the chapel, which has been pulled down to prevent its falling.
They should also think of repairing the fortifications, and making a platform and battery, which he has projected to defend this city, which is "the key of the Province," from attempts by water.— Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 50. See March 21.

" The Governour's council orders that a proclamation be issued for a day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer.—Cal. Coun. Min., 95.

5 A rule is adopted in the assembly "That whosoever of this House, do not appear at this House, within half an Hour after the Ringing of the Bell, shall forfeit half a Piece of Eight."—Assemb.
Jour., I: 36.

9 The provincial legislature passes "An Act for settling Pylotage for all Vessels that shall come within sandy Hook." The act states that "by the late Easterly storm there was severall sand banks thrown off at the south of the harbour at sandy hook whereby the Entry is rendered very difficult and dangerous to all vessels bound for this port." It provides "that there shall be four men appointed and commissioned by his Excellency the Governour who shall constantly attend at some convenient place near the Hook with a boat to give aid and assistance to all Vessels bound for this Port which they are obliged to pilot up as far as the narrows." Fees for this service are prescribed.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 324. It became necessary in 1718, 1726, and 1731 again to pass acts to establish pilotage at Sandy Hook.—Ibid., I: 1001; II: 302, 700, 949.

15 The common council orders that the mayor and Alderman Merrett "provide Such things as will be needfull for Making the Carriages Mountings of y<sup>e</sup> Gunns & repairing of y<sup>e</sup> Fortifications."
The treasurer is required to keep account of disbursements for this purpose. The mayor's committee is to draw upon him also to pay what is due "for the last years Reparation of y<sup>e</sup> S<sup>d</sup> Fortifications."
—M. C. C., I: 350.

" The committee of the common council appointed on Feb. 27 to "lett all the Publick Storehouses of this City to the best Advantage Reserving a Sufficient place for the Sheltering Merchants Goods in Case of Raine or ill weather" reports that it has "lett the Markett house or storehouse at the Bridg foot with all the Apartments thereunto belonging unto John Ellison," and that it has given

- 1694 him liberty to build a lean-to the length of the store-house on the Mar. south side, and to erect a chimney at the west end of it. He is to 15 reingle and repair the market-house, and is permitted to use the ground at the west end to put timber on.—M. C. C., I: 348-50.
- 21 On considering that part of a recent speech of the governor relating to building a platform at New York, the opinion is stated, —Assemb. Jour., I: 39. See Jan. 22.
- 24 The monopoly which this city has enjoyed since Jan. 7, 1780 (q. v.), of bolting flour, is annulled by "An Act against unlawful by laws and Unreasonable forfeitures," which is signed this day by Gov. Fletcher.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 55. It is known as the "Bolting Act."—M. C. C., II: 1. The bill was first introduced into the assembly on March 13 by Capt. Thomas Garton, of Ulster and Dutchess Counties.—Assemb. Jour., I: 37. It was published on March 26.—Ibid., I: 41. Any "restraint of Bolting of flower baking of bread or Importing of flower or bread to New York" is removed.
—For full text of the act, see Col. Laws N. Y., I: 326-28.
- The passing of this act was ascribed by Livingston and Smith to 1693, and by Cornbury, in a report to the lords of trade on July 1, 1708 (q. v.), to "the year 1693." It was confirmed by the king on May 11, 1697.—Order in council, in Fowler's Facsimile of Bradford's ed. of the Laws & Acts (1694), pub. by the Grolier Club, 1894.
- Four years later, Gov. Bellomont charged that Fletcher had contracted, for £400, to pass this act.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 332;
Cal. Coun. Min., 132.
- Commercial disaster and want of bread were the consequences of the Bolting Act in New York City. The flour, bread, and biscuit produced at New York had been of high grade and high price; it became inferior and cheap. The price of New York flour, for example, at Barbados and the Sugar Islands, to which it was exported, fell "five shillings in the hundred below the price of Pennsylvania and other flour."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 461. See,

- Apr. In April or May of this year, William Bradford published George — Keith's Truth Advanced in the Correction of many Gross & hurtful Errors, a quarto volume of about 225 pages, and the first real book from his press, all preceding publications having been broadsides or pamphlets, none containing as many as a hundred pages. The work of Keith was also the first printing done in New York in which Hebrew characters occurred. See also Hilde-burn's "Bibliographical Note" in the Grolier Club ed. (1894) of Bradford's Laws & Acts, cliv.
- 1 Although the rates paid foot companies in New York and England are the same, the difference in the rate of exchange between the two places is such that the amount paid four foot companies here represents an excess of £2,040, an amount sufficient to pay for a chaplain, surgeon, store-keeper, armourer, master gunner, and matrosses, and then leave a considerable amount to be used for contingent expenses and fortifications. All other establishments
"relating to Our Forces in New York" are to cease from this time.

1694.
- May A new method of raising revenue is employed for the first time
— by the municipal government,—namely, mortgaging the ferry.— 11 M. C. C., I: 354-55. The sum of £200 was needed "for the Defence and Security of the City."—Ibid., I: 352. The engrossed ferry lease for seven years had a face value of about £1,000, and this served as a security similar to a deed of land. To obtain ready money, the city had to find some individual of means willing to advance the needed amount, holding the lease as security. In this case, the minutes tell us that the interest on the £200 for two years was £33 5.—Ibid., I: 355. This reveals a rate of something over eight per cent. If the ferry-man lived up to his contract, enough money would be received in ferry tolls to pay principal and interest (£233 5) in the two years.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 128.
- 12 Animosities resulting from the execution of Leisler and Milbourne break out in an affray in the house of Edward Buckmaster, "Inholder." Jarvis Marshall, the dock-master, in an affidavit, describing this incident, wherein one John Windover declared that "Leisler and Milbourne were murdered," and that "their should be others hanged in a short time to Balance the said Leisler & Milbourne."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 237-38.
- The "Sand Hills" are mentioned in a deed which conveys from June 1 Wolffert Webber and wife to Gerard Dowd, one-third part of 30 acres of land lying in the Out Ward, "betwene the Bowry & the Base Bowry," near the Saad Hills.—From the original deed filed with the De Peyster Papers, Vol. XIV (W-Y), 1691-1851, in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967.
"Sand Hill" is shown on Pl. 41, Vol. I, west of Broadway, between Stuyvesant's Estate and the Monument Lane. "The Sand Hills were a range extending from Richmond Hill in a semi-circular course toward the Bowery road. In the Dutch veracuall, the locality was known as the 'Zantberg,' and is so named on some of the early maps. Along the westerly base of this range ran a brook called Minetta water, which took its rise at a point in the present Fifth avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second street, and ran a little east of that avenue as far as Eighteenth street, when it turned westward, crossed Washington square, and emptied into the North river out far north of the old Richmond Hill. The road over the Zantberg was also sometimes called the 'Obelisk road,' sometimes the 'Monument road' [see June 16, 1707; Feb. 11, 1768], from the circumstance that [after 1764, q. v.] it led past the obituary memorial erected in honor of General Wolfe, the hero of Quebec."—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 618-39. "The Sand Hill Road" was Greenwich Lane.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1001.

- A committee of the governor's council is appointed to view the governour's house in the fort regarding necessary repairs.—*Cal.
Coun. Min.*, 97.
- A court-martial is held at the city hall to try several cases of alleged mutiny against the command of Maj. Merritt. Most of the complaints are dismissed.—See the record of the trial in the "Court of Lieutenantcy" papers, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 423-28.
- The provincial council orders that a warrant be issued to pay 26 John Perry £216:8, "being an arrearage of salary due before his Excell arrivall for carrying of letters."—Coun. Min. (Albany), VII: 76.
- " The council orders that the barracks in the fort be inspected.— Cal. Coun. Min., 98. On Aug. 2, it was decided that they were to be taken down and rebuilt.—Ibid., 99. Fletcher explained in a message of Oct. 6 that "The soldiers barracks in this fort were ready to fall down & kill them; the timber rotten and the walls cracky" and he stated that they were "now rebuilding."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 58.
Regarding the expense for this, the assembly expressed the opinion, on Oct. 10, that the "building of the barracks in the Fort and mounting the great Guns" should be paid for "out of the Revenue, as being Part of the necessary Charge of the Government."— Assemb. Jour., I: 42. The governor, however, on Oct. 11, while acknowledging that these operations were to be done at the "charge of their maties [Majesties'] revenue in this Province," stated that the present revenue was needed to meet many charges incident to the war, and it was thought that the charges for this work, "for the safety & preservation of the countrey," might be assumed by the city.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 59. Daniel Honan was made overseer of the fort workmen on Oct. 10; on the same day, a warrant was issued to pay James Spencer for materials to repair the barracks.— Cal. Coun. Min., 101. A warrant to pay Honan for materials for the barracks was issued on Feb. 28, 1695.—Ibid., 103. Spencer was paid for carpenter work on the barracks on May 2, and for materials, etc. on June 27, 1695.—Ibid., 105-6.
- Aug. The governors of Maryland and Virginia are ordered each to — furnish upon application a quota of men for New York, not exceeding 160, "for y<sup>e</sup> defence and Security of Our said Province of New York."—Blathway's Jour., I: 696-98.
- 3 Daniel Honan, clerk of the market, in a petition (to whom is not stated, but probably to the governor's council), complains of the inconvenience of the site of the market-place, and asks that the city market be fixed at the plain before the fort, which is the ancient market-place.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 242. The council orders the market be so moved.—Cal. Coun. Min., 99. The locations of the meat markets at that time were "in the Broadway over against the fort," and "under the trees by the Slipp" (Old Slip).—M. C. C., I: 217. There was also a miscellaneous market at the end of Broad St.—Ibid., I: 265.
- 15 Commissioners meet at Albany to frame a treaty with the Five Nations, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey being represented. It was one of the practical efforts to consolidate

- 1694 power for the common defence pertains to the end of the seventeenth century.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am. V: 611. For a detailed report of the proceedings, see An Account of the Treaty between His Excellency Benjamin Fletcher Captain General and Governour in Chief of the Province of New-York &c. and the Indians of the Five Nations . . . at Albany, beginning the 15th of August, 1694. Printed & Sold by William Bradford, Printer to Their Majesties, King William and Queen Mary, at the Sign of the Bible in New-York, 1694. There is a photostat copy of this rare work in the N. Y. Pub. Library, made from the printed original in the British Museum. Besides Gov. Fletcher, of New York, and Col. Andrew Hamilton, Governour of East and West Jersey, the personnel of the commission was as follows: "Of Their Majesties Council for the Province of New-York,"—Col. Stephen Cortland, Col. Nicholas Bayard, Col. William Smith, Chidley Brooke, and Mayr Peter Schuyler, from Massachusetts Bay,—Col. John Pincheon, Samuel Sewall, and Maj. Penn Townesend; from Connecticut Colony,—Col. John Allyn and Capt. Caleb Stanley.
- 20 Fletcher's commission as governour of Pennsylvania is revoked, assurances being given by William Penn that he will take care of the government there.—N. Y. Col. Docs. IV: 110. Fletcher, nevertheless, is allowed a certain proportion of the militia of Pennsylvania to aid him whenever necessary for service in the province of New York.—Ibid. IV: 111. See Oct. 21, 1692.
- 23 The council orders that the forts at New York, Albany, and Schenectady be inspected.—Cal. Coun. Min., 100.
- 27 Mayor De Peyster proposes "the Selling of the Vacant Lotts beginning at the West Side of the Wall Street, and running to the Extent of Castor Luersons Ground" for the payment of the city debt, and the common council votes in favour of so doing.—M. C. C., I: 357.
- 28 The common council orders that the dock be "Lett to farme" (leased) for three years, on Sept. 20, at the house of Edward Buckmaster (inkeeper). The former regulation of the affairs of the dock is to be continued (see action on March 22, 1684), with the additional covenant that all boats that go "into any of the Slips in the Smiths Fly" shall pay the same dockage rates as if they came into the city dock, and these fees shall be for the benefit of the "farmer" (lessee).—M. C. C., I: 358. The date for leasing was later changed to Sept. 28 (q. v.).—Ibid., I: 361.
- Sept. The city's right to sell certain ground from high to low-water mark having been called into question by Daniel Veenovs and Thomas Lamberts, who claimed it under their patents and who appealed by petition, on Sept. 8, to the governour and council, the latter ordered on that day that the city refrain from selling until the parties could be heard before them on Sept. 13. The common council now directs the recorder to appear in the city's behalf on that day.—M. C. C., I: 361; and see ibid., I: 262. On the 13th, the city put in a claim to all the ground between high and low-water mark.—Cal. Coun. Min., 100. This claim appears to have been sustained (doubtless under the terms of the Dongan Charter); for, on Sept. 25, the common council agreed to allow Veenovs the ground fronting his house for £60, "According to the Quantity Contained in his former Patent and Sole to Low water Marke."—M. C. C., I: 364. Later (June 26, 1696), it became necessary to warn Mrs. Veenovs, his widow, against laying timber, etc., or erecting buildings "on the City Land fronting her Now Dwelling house" (ibid., I: 410), and to comply with the agreement made by the city with her late husband (ibid., I: 417). Her title to the land fronting her house in Queen St. extended "no further than the Wall Mentioned therein"; the city, however, offered her "the Rest of y<sup>e</sup> Ground to Low water mark" for £40.—Ibid., I: 420.
- 20 Capt. John Evans, commander of the royal frigate "Richmond," receives a patent for "All that Certain Swamp and fresh Pond Called the fresh water and Adjacent to our said farm Commonly Called the Dukes farm on the Island of Manhattan, beginning at a Stake sett in ye Ground on ye south syde of the said Pond and at the northeast corner of the Land Belonging to William Merritt; thence it Rangeth alongst the south syde of the sd Swamp, and Pond by the upland to the Beach on the East side of Hudson's River; so along the Beach to the Upland thence Crossing a Small Grot of said Swamp to the land on the east syde thereof; thence by ye sd Land as itt runs to the east syde of the Tann Yards and thence to the Place where begunn. Containing in all 70 Acres." Liber Patents, VI: 458 (Albany). This was a prior grant of what was afterward known as Rutgers's Swamp.—See Dec., 1730; April 6, 1733. The extensive patent to Evans was apparently never occupied by him, and was later revoked, like many of Fletcher's patents, as "extravagant."—See May 16, 1699.
- The common council orders that "the Markett house or Shed in the Broadway [see Aug. 3] be Lett to farme unto Henry Crosby of this City Butcher for the Terme of Seven Years at one pound  $\frac{3}{4}$  Annuy . . ."—M. C. C., I: 362-63. City Clerk Sharpas was paid on April 5, 1695 for engraving this lease.—Ibid., I: 376. On Oct. 28, 1707 (q. v.), the board ordered its demolition.
- The conditions for leasing the dock are elaborated. The term is extended to seven years, beginning Nov. 1, 1694. The lessee is required to give security for faithful performance. The covenant regarding the rates of dockage for "the slips in the Smiths Fly" (see Aug. 28) is included. New orders for "Dock Money" (dockage) are also adopted, including the provision that, hereafter, all vessels belonging to "Other parts of this Governm't," and to East Jersey and Connecticut (as far as the east end of Fisher's Island), shall pay yearly, like vessels belonging to this port. The dock is "demised" to Thomas Clarke, who bids £40 per annum rental.—M. C. C., I: 364-65. For summary of transactions relating to the "farming" of the dock, see Oct. 19, 1695.
- Col. Charles Lodwyck is appointed mayor of New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 101. He was sworn in on Oct. 15.—M. C. C., I: 371. For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 393; Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 53.
- The common council approves the accounts of several inhabitants of Harlem who furnished stockades for the use of the city; and orders that the committee "for finishing the Slips in the Smiths Fly" draw upon the treasurer to pay for this.—M. C. C., I: 367.
- The common council grants to Robt. Sinclair, John Theobald, and Peter Adolph the ground fronting their houses, at 24 shillings per foot, on condition that they build a wharf 12 ft. wide, at their own expense, extending from Wall St. to the Ground Accepted to be bought by the Abovenamed John Theobald, and that they shall make a slip, both wharf and slip to be between high and low-water mark.—M. C. C., I: 368.
- In a message to the coucil, Gov. Fletcher states that "Their Maties have sent us over ammunition and stores with twenty great guns; it is our duty when the kieg is so gracious to send us them for our own defence, not to lett them ly in the dirt; the least we can doe is to mount them; it will require money."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 58.
- It is ordered by the common council that "the Street reachig from Burgers Path to the further end of the Smith fly by Alderman Beeckmans be Called Queen Street," as suggested by the governour.—M. C. C., I: 370. Queen St. was regulated from Alderman Benson's malthouse to Fresh Water, 1751 (ibid., V: 323); carried forward through Cowfoot Hill, 1761 (ibid., VI: 258); and regulated 1764 (ibid., VI: 400). It was called Pearl St., Feb. 24, 1794.—M. C. C. (MS.), XI: 106.
- Mettye Cornelis is allowed "the Sum of Eight pounds two Shillings and Six pence itt being of Entertaing his Excell the Governour in his Return from Connecticut."—M. C. C., I: 369. Mettye Cornelis was the widow of Cornelis Jansen who established the famous Half Way House at Harlem.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 438-39, 592. See Apr. 30, 1684.
- The provincial council, having received commands from "their Maties" regarding the ruined chapel in the fort (see July 27, and Sept. 12, 1693), recommends to the assembly that they "provide for the rebuilding the Chappell."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 65. The assembly votes on the same day that the chapel be built by free contributions from the various counties.—Assemb. Jour., I: 45. On the 22d, the council replied that "the message sent on Saturday last with his Maties Letter was not to entreat the advice of the Assembly . . . but to know of the Assembly what they will contribute."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 65. The assembly thereupon voted (Oct. 22) £450 for the rebuilding of the chapel.—Assemb. Jour., I: 45. On the following day a law was passed "for Continuing the additional Duty for One Year longer, for the raising Six Hundred Pounds towards the Rebuilding the Chappell, and mounting of sixteen Great Guns &c."—Laws of New York (Gaine ed.), Chap. 42.
- The chapel must have been well under way early the following year (1695); for on Feb. 28 a warrant was issued to pay Dirck van der Burgh for bricklayer's work on the building, and on March 14 he petitioned for his pay of about £950 for "erecting a chapel and other buildings in and about Fort William Henry."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 246-47; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244. See also Cal.

- 1694 Coun. Min., 104 (March 14 and 21); and 113 (March 19, 1696). It was not finished, however, on April 7, 1696, when Gov. Fletcher urged the new assembly to "forward and finish it."—Assemb. Jour., I: 65; and see Cal. Coun. Min., 113. Again, on April 20, 1696, a committee of the assembly refused to "treat of finishing the Chapel having no directions from their house to meddle any further than the accounts of the Government."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 93. It is probable the building was completed in 1696, a warrant being issued on May 14 to pay for mason work.—Cal. Coun. Min., 114. On Sept. 30, 1696, Domine Selyns, writing to the classis at Amsterdam, referred to it as constructed of stone and a neat edifice.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1172. Warrants to pay for interior work were issued on June 24, Nov. 25, and Dec. 20, 1697 (q.v.).—Cal. Coun. Min., 124, 128. As late as Oct. 14, 1698, Peter Melet was paid "for ironwork in the Chapel."—Ibid., 134. This is the last record found of work on the chapel during this period. That Fletcher's coat-of-arms was placed on the building appears in a petition for its removal, dated May 15, 1699 (q.v.). The chapel is shown on Pls. 21-a, 23-b, 25, 26, 27-a, and 31, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- 23 By an act of the legislature, a former act "for the satisfying of the debts of the Government" is continued; the revenue thereby raised is "to be employed for the Rebuilding of their Majesties Chappel in the Fort the mouting of 16 Great Guns and defraying the Debts of the Government."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 342. See Oct. 20.
- 25 A committee was appointed on March 15 to have the city laws "fairly drawn out in writings," with a view to having them published and printed (M. C. C., I: 350). These laws were read in the common council on April 18, and a committee was appointed to determine what amendments and repeals were necessary (ibid., I: 353-54). They are now approved and published with the usual ceremony; and the common council orders that they be printed. Only the titles of these laws are entered in the Minutes. They are—
- 1 for the Due Observation of the Lords day.
  - 2 Concerning Strangers
  - 3 Concerning Freeman
  - 4 for Regulateng & Keeping the Streets Cleane
  - 5 None to Retail Liquors without Licenses
  - 6 Surveyors of the City
  - 7 To Prevent Fire
  - 8 None to lay hay &c: within ten foot of A Chimney
  - 9 Concerning hookes Ladders and Bucketts
  - 10 Penalty on Chimneys on Fire
  - 11 Negroes Several Orders Concerning them
  - 12 Penalty on Engrossers & Forestallers of y<sup>e</sup> Market
  - 13 Hucksters not to Engross
  - 14 No unwholesome or Stale Victuals to be Sold
  - 15 No blown meat or leprous Swine to be Sold
  - 16 Concerning Assize of bread
  - 17 Orders and Regulations Concerning Carmen
  - 18 No Timber, Stone, Bricks, Lumber &c: to lye in y<sup>e</sup> Streets
  - 19 No Swine to be in the Streets
  - 20 Officers to be Observant in y<sup>e</sup> Execution of these Laws."
- M. C. C.*, I: 371-72. These were the earliest printed ordinances of the city. Bradford was the printer. No copy of the text of this first issue of the city laws is known.—See 1694, and Jan. 16, 1695.
- Nov. Capt. Thomas Tew, well known to be a pirate, comes to New York and is received by Col. Fletcher upon terms of intimate companionship. He was "invited to his table—rode abroad with him in a coach drawn by six horses (a very unusual display in those primitive times)—gave elegant presents of jewels to the gouverneur and his family, and departed in return a gold watch, upon his promise to discharge his cargo in this port."—"The Red Sea in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 463. Peter Delany, in a letter of Men," June 13, 1695, relating to Gov. Fletcher's conduct, wrote among other things: "one Capt. Twoo who is gone to the Red Sea upon the same errand was before his departure highly caressed by his Excellency in his coach and six horses and presented with a gold watch to engage him to make New York his port at his return. Twoo retaliated the kindness with a present of jewels . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 223. Bellomont, writing to the lords of trade on May 8, 1698, regarding Fletcher's protecting pirates, said: ". . . I find that those Pyrates that have given the greatest disturbance in the East Indies and Red Sea, have been either fitted from New-York or Rhode Island, and mann'd from New-York. The ships commanded by Mason, Tew, Glover and Hore, had their commissions from the Gov<sup>t</sup> of New-York . . ."—Ibid., IV: 306-7. See 1680; April 27, 1689.
- This is King William III's birthday. On Nov. 3, "His Excell<sup>ty</sup> did acquaint the Council that to-morrow being [the] Kings birth day and falling upon a Sunday [he] desires their opinion concerning the Observation of it." It was "Resolved the day must be observed by firing of Great guns benefices & illuminations that the City Regiment be under arms and that there be wine given them to drink the Kings health but that the solemnity begin after evening service."—Coun. Min. (MS.), VII: 101 (Albany). This is the earliest reference in the English annals of this province to the celebration of the birthday of a king. For later references, see M. C. C., Index, Vol. VIII: titles "Bonfire and Wine," "William III," "Anne," "George I," "George II," and "George III." Cf. Nov. 2, 1700; March 17, 1702; Feb. 6, 1703.
- The council prepares an address to the lords of trade in behalf of Col. Ingoldbys receiving the pay of lieutenant-gouverneur.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102. There is no evidence that he was granted such pay; and he was not made lieutenant-gouverneur until March 24, 1704 (q.v.). In the interim he apparently continued as commander-in-chief.—See July 27, 1691.
- Rev. Henry Selyns writes to the classis of Amsterdam: "Our new church [in Garden St.] is finished up to the towers. On Sundays it is too small; on Wednesdays, too large. Our city of New York, with its suburbs, is constantly growing. But this growth is chiefly in houses and people and business, but not in piety and the conversion of sinners."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1108.—Cf. Chaplain John Sharpe's statement, March 11, 1713.
- Fletcher informs the lords of trade that he called the assembly's attention to the ruinous condition of the fort and the soldiers' quarters, but that they would take no notice of it. He states also that he sent the King's letter about rebuilding the chapel to the assembly; and desired that they would "consider of a good fund for the mouting the great guus his Majes<sup>ty</sup>s lately sent." They passed a bill for £450 for the chapel, and £150 for the guus. The Jerseys, he informs the lords, "are now making warr upon us in point of Trade having prohibited by Act of their Assembly, the transportation of Pipe staves, shingles, or Plank to New York, by which they will draw the Shipping thither and Establish a free port to the great prejudice of this place and sink the Trade of it, they pay no duty to the King and all will flock to it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 113-14.
- The common council orders that John Denieur "be one of the Surveyors of this City In the place of Adolph Pieters lately Deceased."—M. C. C., I: 372.
- Fletcher, in a letter to Capt. Stuyvesant, asks the loan of the bell in the Bowery church for the use of the garrison, the one in the fort being cracked.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243.
- It is ordered by the gouverneur's council that Col. Nicholas Bayard have the flag mount, etc., paved.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102. A warrant for part payment was issued March 27, 1695.—Ibid., 104.
- A warrant is issued by the gouverneur and council to pay Andrew Hamilton his salary as postmaster-general.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102.
- The plantation of Lewis Morris at Harlem is erected into a manor.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102. The original entry of record, dated Dec. 6, is as follows: "The peticon of Lewis Morris Gent praying to have his Plantation at Harlem erected into a manour was read and granted and ordered Warrants issue for the Patent accordingly the quitrate to be six shillings Ordered."—Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 109 (Albany). In explanation of this reference to "Harlem," it should be noted that the "manour" referred to was the Manor of Morrisania, and was across the Harlem River, not on Manhattan Island. It included "Bronckslan" and a good deal more. The original grant was to the first Lewis Morris, by Andros, in 1676.—Liber Patents, IV: 99 (Albany). Scharf says (Hist. of Westchester Co., I: 779) that Fletcher confirmed to Lewis Morris, younger, nephew to the first Lewis Morris, the grant made by Andros, "and also erected the lands into a lordship or manor by the name and title of the Lordship or Manor of Morrisania," on May 6, 1697. Queen Mary dies.
- A contract is made with John Cockburn "to lay the floors of the bastion of the fort with hewn stone."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243. On Aug. 15, 1695, he petitioned for his pay (ibid., 246), and a warrant was issued (Cal. Coun. Min., 108); another was issued on Nov. 21, 1695 (ibid., 111).

The city, as it was in this year, is shown and described in a plan and manuscript journal prepared, probably in 1696, by the Rev. John Miller, chaplain to the King's forces in New York. See Vol. I, Pls. 27-a and 27-b. The plan is the first to show the lay-out of the city beyond the wall; the latter plate shows in detail, with references, the lay-out and contents of the fort. Little Queen Street (Cedar Street) was laid out prior to this date, as it is shown on the general plan. See July 9, 1755; April 21, 1794. Marketfield Street is shown as "Petticoat Lane." See also July 6, 1698. Exchange Place is "Church Street;" and Beaver Street, east of Broad St., is "Princes Street."

The population of New York City was then about 5,000. This estimate is based on John Miller's statement in N. Y. Considered and Improved, 54, that the number of families in the city was about 855.—Channing, Hist. of the U. S., II: 222.

"The year 1695 was memorable in New York for the marvelous leap forward in the price of real estate. The city had been growing rapidly in population for two or three years, and the best lots in the new streets through the old Damen farm were in the market. There was just then more money in circulation than had ever before been known in New York."—Mrs. Lamb, in Mag. Am. Hist. (1839), XXII: 185-86.

"It is certain that the Jews had a synagogue as early as 1695 and may have [had] it in 1691, for La Matthe Cadillac, in his account of New York in 1691 [see 1692], enumerates the Jews as one of the sects and then says that each sect had its church and freedom of religion."—From The Settlement of the Jews in No. Am. (1893), by Daly and Kohler, 26, citing N. Y. Col. Docs., IX: 549. The synagogue referred to is supposed by these authors to have been the first on the continent of North America. Its existence and location are indicated by Rev. John Miller's description of New York City in 1695 (see June, 1695), as on the south side of the present Beaver Street, in the middle of the block, between Broadway and Broad St.—Ibid., 27. The location assigned by Miller, who wrote from memory, is questioned, however, by Dyer, in "Points in the First Church of New York Jewish History," printed in Publications of the Am. Jewish Hist. Society, No. 3 (1895), 46-60. Dyer calls attention to the deed, dated Oct. 30, 1700 (Liber Deeds, XXIII: 230), conveying property adjoining the house and ground of John Harpending, "now commonly known by the name of the Jews' Synagogue."—See also Key to Castello Plan, II: 300. In an interesting and important review of the records, Dyer concludes that this, the first synagogue in North America, "was situated on the lot now known [1895] as No. 8 South William street."—Ibid., 60. This early synagogue, it is observed, was a private house, so used. Regarding the first synagogue building erected, see 1729-30. The records of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co. as studied by Miss Jennie F. McCarthy, the company's historical expert, indicate the location to be the present No. 16 So. William St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929; Pl. 174.

In this year, Mayor Abraham de Peyster built a fine house on the Smith's Valley road (Queen, now Pearl St.), between Pine and Cedar Sts., fronting to the west. It was 59 by 80 feet and three storeys high, the grounds occupying the whole block to the river's edge, with coach-house and stable in the rear. At the time of Washington's inauguration (1789), it was the residence of Gov. George Clinton.—Mag. Am. Hist., XXII: 185. For more detailed description, see Mrs. Lamb's Hist. City of N. Y., I: 419. It is thus described by Valenot: "The dwelling of the eldest son of Col. de Peyster (the Abraham de Peyster who [in 1721] succeeded him as Treasurer), erected by him in 1695, stood in Queen, now Pearl street, nearly opposite Cedar. At the time of its demolition, in 1856, it was believed to be the oldest building in the city. It was subsequently the residence of Governor George Clinton, and General Washington occupied it as his head-quarters after he had assumed the command of the army in New York . . . [see view in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), opp. p. 446]. It was afterwards known as the Redmond Hotel. . . ."

"The main building was 59 feet front, and the principal rooms facing upon the present Pearl street, extended back 40 feet. The whole depth was nearly if not 80 feet, and the edifice, by a rear building, extended nearly through to the present Water street with which it was connected by a carriage-way. The stable and coach-house were in the centre of the block on the north side of the Yard.

The main building was three stories high, had a wide entrance, with a double door, opening in the centre, according to the fashion of the day, and projecting over it was a capacious balcony with a double arched window. From this balcony, on many a fine day, the military reviews were held by the Colonial Governors.

"The contracts and plans are still [1861] in existence in the hands of one of his lineal descendants . . . [A painting based on these documents was made some years ago, and was reproduced (1899) by D. Appleton & Co. in a portfolio entitled Pictures of Old New York.]

"It may be interesting to state that, as the property which extended from Water street, directly in the rear of the mansion of Abraham de Peyster, . . . to the East river, belonged to him, he laid out a street from the easterly side of Water street to the river, now known as De Peyster street. The cart-way leading at present from Water street to the rear of the noble marble front stores, standing on the ground formerly fronting on Pearl street, covered by the Mansion House, and recently erected by one of our enterprising and successful merchants Joseph Sampson, Esq., is shown on the ancient map of this property, to have been the original carriage-way which led to the stables in the rear of the house adjacent to the grounds, then open country, which on that side extended to, and were bounded by, the river."—Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 565-67.

A list of physicians and surgeons practicing in New York between 1695 and 1770, a list of schoolmasters between 1695 and 1774, and a list of attorneys between 1697 and 1769, inclusive, are given by Valentine in his Hist. City of N. Y. (1853), 394-98.

The council orders that Col. Cortlandt furnish fire-buckets for the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 103.

The second city vestry is chosen. Gov. Fletcher threatened to prosecute them if they any longer refused to carry out his wishes regarding the settling of the ministry.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1112. See Jan. 26, 1695.

The common council orders that the treasurer reimburse the mayor for his disbursement of £6:9:9 for "fire wood Cartage Pitch Barrells & Cash paid to the Soldiers for making A Boeifire as Also for Glass lead & Workmanship for the Mending the Windows in the City Hall."—M. C. C., I: 374. The bonfire may have been on the occasion of the king's birthday.—See Nov. 4, 1694.

The first ordinance in the English city of New York concerning apprentices is passed by the common council. By this, four years is the minimum length of service; every apprentice must be "bound by Indentures" before the mayor, recorder, or one of the aldermen, and must be registered in the clerk's office. At the end of his term, the apprentice "Shall be made Free of the Said City by his Said Master if he have well and truly Served him."—M. C. C., I: 373-74. On Oct. 30, 1711, seven years was made the minimum length of service.—Ibid., II: 454-55. Appeals to the mayor's court for the breaking of a contract were generally fruitless; "a rigid adherence to them was the rule."—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 69-74. For indentures of apprentices from 1694 to 1707, see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1885), 565; and from 1718 to 1727, see ibid. (1909), 113.

Bradford presents his account, amounting to £10:10, "for Printing of the City Laws the City Charter &c" which, on Oct. 25, 1694 (q. v.), the common council ordered to be printed. An order is now given that the mayor sign a warrant to the treasurer to pay the account.—M. C. C., I: 374. No copy of this first published issue of the city ordinances is now known to be extant, the earliest known issue in existence being the second, which was printed by Bradford in 1707.—See March 28, 1707; and Bibliography, Vol. IV.

The Two Brothers Islands near Hell Gate are granted to James Graham.—Cal. Coun. Min., 103.

The cellar under the custom-house is let to Michael Howdon.—Cal. Coun. Min., 103. Howdon's occupations were varied; it appears, for on July 11, 1695, the governor's council had an account of his under consideration "for entertaining Capt. Paxton's pinace crew and for going express to Albany."—Ibid., 107. In 1702 and 1703, he rented his house (evidently a tavern) for the sittings of the assembly.—Ibid., 177, 186. In the latter year, he was made justice of the peace.—Ibid., 190. His tenancy of the cellar or other part of the custom-house appears to have continued during these years and later.—Ibid., 143; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 346.

- 24 —The council orders that the accounts for work in the fort be audited.—Cal. Coun. Min., 103.
- 26 In accordance with the "Ministry Act" of 1693 (Sept. 22), the church-wardens and vestrymen (comprising the city vestry) meet and invite William Vesey to officiate as minister at New York.—Ecdes. Rev., II, 1112. The vestry renewed this invitation on Nov. 2, 1696 (q. v.). See also Dec. 25, 1697.
- Feb. 7 Mayor Charles Lodwick petitions (presumably the governour's council) for the payment of innkeepers on whom soldiers have been quartered.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243.
- Mar. 7 Pinhorn's account for shingles for the fort is referred to a committee by the governour's council.—Cal. Coun. Min., 103.
 " Col. Andrew Hamilton having presented to the governour and council a memorial for an increased allowance for the post-office, it is referred to the "full board."—Cal. Coun. Min., 103. See July 1, and Sept. 15, 1693.
- 12 Ten assessors are sworn by the court of mayor and aldermen to make the necessary assessments in city and county, "Persuuant to the Directions of two Acts of the Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly."—M. C. C. M. (MS.), March 12, 1695. One of these acts called for "the raising and paying one hundred and Seventy men for the Securing the frontiers of this Province." These men were to serve for one year commencing May 1, 1695. The quota prescribed for the city and county of New York was "forty three effective men" and £1,051. The second and later act called for "the raising and paying one Hundred Men . . . for the Re-inforcing the Frontiers of this Province" for four months, and the quota for the city and county of New York was prescribed as "Twenty five effective Men," and £197.10.—Cal. Laws N. Y., I, 334-38, 339-42.
- 14 "Derex Van Burg," who has been employed in building "his Majesty C[h]apell with several other buildings in and aboute his Majesty[s] Fort William Henry in N York," petitions the governour and council for payment of "Nisee Hundred and Odd pounds" due him for labour and materials.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 246-47; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244 (March 5). See also Aug. 8.
- 23 The common council grants permission to Rip van Dam "to build A vessell upon the Citys Land in the Rear of the Burial place of this City or thereabouts fronting to Hudsons River."—M. C. C., I, 375-380.
- 26 Capt. Filkin introduces a bill in the assembly for "the Settling a Free-School, within the City of New York."—Assem. Jour., I, 48. On April 2, this bill was read the second time and rejected.—Ibid., I, 49. Thus, a second time, an effort toward popular education through the provincial legislature fails.—See also April 18, 1691. It was not until 1702 that such a measure was sanctioned by the governour and council.—See Nov. 27, 1702. See also July 27, 1696.
- Apr. 2 "The petition of Jasper Nesselpat for the Confirmation of a Wind-milne in the Coniour of the city of New York" (cf. Nov. 24, 1692), is read and granted "provided he be obliged to grinde for the governours family not exceeding four bushells weekly, and pay five shillings annual quitrent." A warrant is ordered "for the Patent accordingly."—N. Y. Col. MSS., VII: 124 (Albany), quoted by O'Callaghan in Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For its more detailed history, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962.
- Isaac Pledlow (Bedlow) brings suit for trespass against several inhabitants for "pulling Down A Certaine Fence that was run Cross the Street or Highway Leading to the Fortification Called Oyster Pasty." The common council decides to defend the action.—M. C. C., I, 376. Although this land was claimed by the city as a public street, the city lost the suit; for, on March 10, 1696, the common council agreed to pay £15:8:4, and the incidental expense of execution, two of the defendants, imprisoned for the trespass, being discharged.—Ibid., I, 399. The inhabitants of the street, some of whom had been impleaded, complained on March 12, in a petition to the common council, that the street was again to be fenced, and that this would "obstruct them from going to their habitations." They asked the city to "take Some Care that they may have A Passage to their houses for the Reliefe of their families."—Ibid., I, 400. No action appears to have been taken on this petition.
- The common council orders that the city clerk, William Sharpas (see Oct. 14, 1692), be reimbursed for "Cash paid for the booke of Records N<sup>o</sup> 21 as Appears by his Account."—M. C. C., I, 376. This entry in the Minutes is significant in its revelation that at least 20 books of record had been necessary to record the proceedings of the city magistrates before this date. (The municipality was not yet 50 years old.) During the subsequent 35 years the minutes recorded the purchase of 28 additional record-books, costing from £2:10 to £3:10 each. Six of them were specified as for the mayor's court.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 28, citing M. C. C., Vols. II and III.
- "Att a Meeting of y<sup>e</sup> Officers of the Regiment of Militia foot belonging to the said City at y<sup>e</sup> City Hall," a letter from the governour addressed to Col. Abraham De Peyster is read, requiring "that the Coll [Colonel] should forthwith upon Receipt thereof Cause to be drawn out of the Regiment of militia foot of New York twenty five men with arms and ammunition be [sic] the Quota of one hundred to be ready forthwith at New York in order to their Transportation to Albany for the Defence and security of the frontiers of this Province."—Records of the Court of Lieutenancy, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 432.
- "Att a Warrant is issued to Peter de Rimir "for glass windows in the fort."—Cal. Coun. Min., 105. See summary under Jan. 17, supra.
- A feud ensues at election time, when members of assembly are to be elected. It arises between the governour's party and the Leisler followers, particularly because the governour has not accounted for £1,500, said to be remaining in his hands, and because of fear of being impressed into service on the frontiers. The night before election, several "Freedoms" were seen at the mayor's house, made out to the purser, gunner, boatswain, and others of the king's ship. Soldiers and sailors appeared in the field with clubs. Seamea were ordered ashore by masters of ships to vote.
- Among the witnesses examined at the board of trade inquiry on Aug. 28 and Sept. 14, was Philip French of New York, who said he heard it said before the election that Fletcher had threatened to "pistolany man that should chuse Peter De La Noy" for assemblyman. Capt. William Kidd, master of the brigantine "Anteoga," testified that the sheriff of New York "spoke to him to get his people from on board his vessell they being inhabitants of New York to vote at the Election," but Kidd could not say this was by order of the governour. The same testimony was given by other masters, one of whom added that he was in the field at the time of the election, but did not see any of the men, or others belonging to the men-of-war, except the captain, "But he saw the soldiers come into the field and they went into the Millyard, which is an enclosure not far from the place of Election where they remained till the election was over," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 127-28, 129-30, 143-45. For other election coasters, see Sept. 29, 1701; Nov. 4, 1702; Sept. 12, 1737.
- The royal assent is given to an act of parliament reversing the attainder of Leisler, Milbourne, and Gouverneur, which had passed on its third reading the day before.—Cal. of State Papers, 1693-6, preserved in the Public Record Office (pub. in 1903), 471, citing the London Gazette of May 2 to 6. The text of the act is printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 249-50. It is cited "6-7 Will. III." It was previously printed by Hugh Galus in 1764, as an appendix to the Jour. of the Votes and Proceedings of the General Assembly, Vol. I, after p. 840, but was there ascribed to a parliament which

- 1695 ended Nov. 12, 1694. This act completely reverses the view concerning the guilt of these men, as expressed in the opinion of Gov. Slaughter and his council (see under April 13, 1691), on the strength of which Leisler and Milbourne were executed. It states specifically the circumstances regarding Leisler's seizure of the government, and vindicates his conduct. In a footnote in the Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 250, O'Callaghan quotes Chalmers, who states, with reference to the act of reversal: "One agent of Massachusetts framed the Bill [in England], while the other sat as chairman of the Committee which reported it." See also N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 348; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 240.
- 6 John Vandespiegel having proposed to the common council to supervise the cleaning of the streets from May 1, 1695, for the period of one year, for the sum of £30, he is authorized to do so.—M. C. C., I: 377. This represents a radical change of policy in street cleaning.—See Nov. 29, 1670; also Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 99-101.
- 13 There is an unofficial report of the death of the queen, and an order from the governor and council is issued in consequence.—Cal. Coun. Min., 105. On May 20, the report was confirmed, and the council ordered that an address of condolence be sent by the governor and council to the king.—Ibid. This was signed and sent to Sec. Blathwayte on May 30.—Ibid., 106.
- June — The Rev. John Miller leaves New York.—See March 7, 1692. In July, he was taken prisoner by a French privateer, and was impelled to throw all his papers overboard to prevent the information they contained, particularly the drawings of the fortifications of this city, from falling into the enemy's hands. While imprisoned in France, he prepared from memory and sent to the Bishop of London, a description of the province and city of New York with plans of the city and of several forts as they existed in 1695. His manuscript and drawings were published in 1843, 1862, and 1903.—See Bibliography. The issue of 1903 bears the original title: New York Considered and Improved, 1695, by John Miller, and is published from the original MS. in the British Museum, With Introduction and Notes by Victor Hugo Paltsits (see Bibliography). The following extracts, describing the city, are taken from this edition (pp. 35-37), the introduction to which contains an account of Miller's life, and a description of the various issues of the work.
- "The City of New Yorke more largely taken is the whole Island so called & is in length 16 miles in breadth 6 & in circumference 42 but more strictly considered & as a place of strength is only the part thereof within the fortifications & so is not in length or breadth above two furlongs & in circumference a mile. The form of it is triangular having for y<sup>e</sup> sides thereof the west & north lines & the East & South for its Arched basis the chief place of strength it boasts of is its fort situated on the southwest Angle which is reasonably strong & well provided with Ammunition having in it about 38 Guns mounted, on the Basis likewise in convenient places are three Batteries of Great Guns one of 15 call'd Whitehall Batterie, one of 5 by the Stadthouse & the third of 10 by the Burghers path. On the North-east Angle is a strong blockhouse and half moon wherein are 6 or 7 Guns this part butts upon the River & is all along fortified with a sufficient bank of Earth. On the North side are two large stone Points & therein about 8 Guns some mounted & some unmounted. On the Northwest Angle is a Blockhouse & on the West side 2 Horneworks which are furnished with some Guns 6 or 7 in number, this side butts upon Hudsons River, has a bank in some places 20 fadom high from the water by reason whereof & a stockade strengthened with a banke of Earth on the Inside (which last is also on the North side to the landward) it is not Easily Assailable."
- The work as a whole consists of an account of the physical, religious, social, and political features of the province. The author gives his view of the Leisler troubles; a summary of the number of churches, ministers, and church members of all denominations in the different counties; he notes the need of "a Bishop to the Province of New York," and what his qualifications, status, and work should be; and the need of "forces & warlike provisions;" he also outlines the orders and instructions which might advantageously be given to the bishop and to the governor, and the plans which might well be adopted for "the Resettlement of this Province." Miller's plan of the city of New York, and of the fort, are reproduced on Pl. 23-a and b, with descriptions on pp. 23-4-36, Vol. I, where various important landmarks of the city, as listed by Miller, are mentioned. One of the most interesting of these, nowhere else mentioned in the annals of the city, is (No. 30) the ground within one of the bastions of the wall, which Miller conceives to be "ground proper for y<sup>e</sup> building an E[nglish] Church."
- 5 The final accounts of the builders of the Dutch Church in Garden St. are presented. The building of the tower is deferred until after the church is incorporated.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1123. The church officers petitioned for incorporation on June 19 (q.v.), and it was granted the following year.
- 6 Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford "at the Bible in the City of New York," stating: "Whereas I am informed that there are French Privateers coming upon this Coast, I have ordered His Majesty's ship, The Richmond, to Cruise, for the Defence of this Province."—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 55.
- 13 The council orders that the carpenters' accounts for work done at the fort be examined.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106.
- " Peter Delaney, writing to England in relation to Gov. Fletcher's conduct, states that when Fletcher arrived here "he insinuated into the inhabitants the great interest and credit he had at Whitehall, w<sup>ch</sup> would baffle any complaints that could be made against his administration and this back'd with the grandeur of a Coach and six horses (a pomp this place had never seen in any former Govern<sup>t</sup> no more than himself been us'd to it in his own Country,) struck such a terr<sup>r</sup> into the people, as easily prepar'd 'em for the pack-saddles he has laid upon 'em. To recount all his arts of squeezing money both out of the publick and private purses would make a volume instead of a letter." Delaney further states:
- "He ordered two of the principall gates of the City where the Indians used to enter, to be shut up, cautiously alleging the danger of keeping open so many gates during the war; several poor traders who had built their houses near those gates purposely for the Indian trade would have been ruin'd if these gates had continued shut, and therefore rais'd a contribution of fifty or sixty of their best furs which they p<sup>r</sup>esented to his Excellency & thereby removed his Excellency's apprehensions of the danger those gates exposed the City to; for at the request of the Mayor & Aldermen the gates were opened again & the City as safe as when they were shut."
- Delaney also explains Fletcher's encouragement of pirates, who operate in the Red Sea to bring their Arabian gold to New York; he describes his irregular methods in the May election (q.v.); his affected or ostentatious piety, etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 221-24. Regarding Fletcher's answers to charges against him, see ibid., IV: 178-80.
- 18 Col. Ingoldesby reports that the French are marching towards Albany; it is also reported from Maryland that a French fleet is coming to attack New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106.
- 19 The reformed Dutch Church petitions Fletcher for incorporation as "The Ministers, Elders and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New York."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1127-28. The petition was granted on Jan. 9, 1696.—Cal. Coun. Min., 111. See May 11, 1696. For reproduction of charter, see Pl. 24, Vol. IV.
- 28 The council orders that an addition be made to the governor's lodgings in the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 107. On July 11, the committee relative to this addition made its report.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 246.
- July 1 At the request of the postmaster-general, it is moved in the assembly that the "Act for the encouraging a Post-Office" be continued for three years longer. This is approved by both assembly and council, and the bill is published on July 4.—Assembl. Jour., I: 57, 58; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 79.
- 3 The public buildings of the city being much out of repair, the poor in great distress, and the streets "so Mirey and foul that they are Noyesome to the Inhabitants," the general assembly passes an act to enable the city to raise funds annually by taxation to defray the necessary public charges to relieve these conditions. It provides for the appointment of overseers of the poor and public works and buildings; also the appointment of a "A scavenger Raker or other officer to be Employed in cleansing the streets, Lanes, Alley's and other places . . . and at Least once in every week shall carry or cause to be carryed the Ashes, dirt filth and Soyle of the said Street's . . . unto such Place or Places where they shall think convenient."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 348.
- " The House of Representatives, now convened in General Assembly," in an address to the governor and council, asks that Bradford, the printer, be given an addition of £20 to his salary.—Assemb. Jour., I: 58. This is allowed.—Cal. Coun. Min., 107.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Encouraging of Seamen." It provides that any tavern-keeper, alehouse-keeper, or victualler of New York City, who shall trust or give credit to a seaman belonging to a vessel coming into this harbour for more than six shillings shall lose it; and one who gives credit to a seaman out of service for more than twelve pence a day shall lose it. That is, no suit can be prosecuted against a seaman (except the master of a vessel) to recover more than the amounts mentioned.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 345-438.

Maria O'bia, called "the mother of the poor-house" of New York, petitions for her pay.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 245.

The earliest publication of the journal of votes of an American legislature was printed soon after this date by Bradford. It is entitled A Journal of the House of Representatives For His Majesties Province of New-York in America Begun the 20th day of June, in the seventh year of His Majesties Reign, Annoq; Dom. 1695.—From Miss A. R. Hasse's facsimile reprint, pub. by Dodd, Mead & Co., 1903. This reprint of the "Votes" includes transactions through July 4. See Addenda, April 12, 1695.

The governor having sent an order to the mayor and common council "to Summons in all the Freemen of this City who by themselves or Servants are to be Immediately Employed In the Repaire of y<sup>e</sup> Fortifications Bulwarks Flankers & Batteries thereof & that they are to See that all the Guns Mounted upon Any of y<sup>e</sup> Fortifications be ready and fit for present Service Powder Ball and Gunners proper and fit to Answer the Present Occasion for the Defence and Security of this City," the common council now expresses the opinion that the fortifications should be repaired, and that the freemen should be required to labour on them; but they "are also humbly of Opinion that they have not power to Raise Money upon the Inhabitants for the Materials that will be wanting and Needfull for the Effectual doing thereof."—M. C. C., I: 379. This view of the corporation's limited power to raise money by taxation is the same as that expressed originally by the common council when the subject came up on Oct. 30, 1693 (ibid., I: 337), but which was overruled by the governor and council on Jan. 19, 1694 (ibid., I: 343).

The governor orders that the mooney collected for redeeming the prisoners in Algiers be used for the chapel in the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 107. For an account of building the new chapel, see July 27, and Sept. 12, 1693; Oct. 20, 1694.

The common council orders "that the Severall Lotts to be Laid out in the Shoemakers Land be laid Out According to the Draft produced by the Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 380. This was part of the plantation granted to Cornelis van Tienhoven on June 14, 1644, by Gov. Kieft, extending along the east side of Broadway from the Maegde Paatje or Maiden Lane to a point about 117 ft. north of Fulton St. It became the property of an association of five shoemakers and tanners, and was commonly known as the Shoemakers' Pasture.—See description of Pl. 24-3, I: 236-38; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 532-35; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 347.

The common council orders that a warrant from the mayor be issued to the sheriff to summon 12 men to determine "what Ground Shall be Necessary to be taken from Coll Cortlandt or any Other person or persons for y<sup>e</sup> Enlarging of y<sup>e</sup> New Street Adjacent to Maiden Lane;" this is done that the persons at whose request the street is laid out, may "satisfie the Same" (i. e., doubtless, pay the assessments).—M. C. C., I: 380. The "New Street" here alluded to is Crown (the present Liberty) Street.—See Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.

The common council orders that the surveyors "lay out the Ground of Coll Stephanus V. Cortlandt fronting to the Dock," according to his grant; and he is required to "build up the wharfe in the Dock which belongs to the City," for which the city is to pay him.—M. C. C., I: 379-80.

The council directs the governor to grant commissions for holding courts of king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, according to an act of assembly.—Cal. Coun. Min., 109.

The governor (by the advice and consent of the council, as usual) appoints Maj. William Merritt to be mayor.—M. C. C., I: 382. Merritt was sworn in on Oct. 14, and presided at the meeting of the common council on Oct. 16.—ibid., I: 385. He was continued in office on Sept. 29, 1696 (ibid., I: 423), and on Sept. 29, 1697 (ibid., II: 15). For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 394; Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 53.

Articles of agreement are entered into, in London, by the Right Hon. Richard, Earl of Bellomont, of the one part, and Robert Livingston and Capt. William Kid, of the other, which, in brief, state:

"Whereas the said Capt. William Kid is desirous of obtaining a Commission as Captain of a Private Man of War in order to take Prizes from the King's Enemies, and otherways to annoy them; and whereas certain Persons did some time since depart from New-England, Rhode-Island, New-York, and other parts in America and elsewhere, with an intention to become Pirates, and to commit Spoils and Depredations, against the Laws of Nations, in the Red-Sea or elsewhere, and to return with such Goods and Riches as they should get, to certain places by them agreed upon; of which said Persons and Places, the said Capt. Kid hath notice, and is desirous to fight with and subdue the said Pirates, as also other Pirates with whom the said Capt. Kid shall meet at Sea, in case he be impowered so to do; and whereas it is agreed between the said Parties, That for the purpose aforesaid a good and sufficient Ship, to the liking of the said Capt. Kid, shall be forthwith bought, whereof the said Capt. Kid is to have the command . . ."

Here follow the terms of the agreement, whereby Bellomont undertakes 1, to procure from the king and commissioners of the admiralty one or more commissions to enable Kid to act as stated in the preamble; 2, to obtain from the king (three months after Kid departs) a grant, to "some indifferent and trusty Person," of the various things that shall be taken from the pirates by Kid and the ships under his command; 3, to pay four-fifths of the cost of the ship and its equipment, the other fifth to be paid by Livingston and Kid; 4, to advance £1,600 for this purpose before Nov. 6, 1695; 5, Livingston and Kid to advance £400, as part of their share, before that date; 6, Bellomont to pay the balance of his four-fifths to Livingston and Kid, and the latter to advance the balance of their fifth part within seven weeks of the date of this agreement; 7, Kid agreeing to take on board the ship about 100 "Mariners or Seamee," to set sail with all convenient speed, and "to sail to such parts or places where he may meet with the said Pirates, and to use his utmost Endeavours to meet with, subdue and conquer the said Pirates, or any other Pirates, and to take from them their Goods, Merchandizes and Treasure, also to take what Prizes he can from the King's Enemies, and forthwith to make the best of his way to Boston in New-England, and that without touching in any other port or harbour whatsoever, or without breaking Bulk, or dimishing any part of what he shall so take or obtain, on any pretence whatsoever, of which he shall make Oath, in case the same be desired by the said Earl of Bellomont, and there to deliver the same into the hands and possession of the said Earl;" 8, Kid further agreeing that his contract or bargain with his ship's crew shall be "No Purchase no Prizes," and that their share in the goods, etc. which he shall take as prizes or from pirates shall not exceed one-fourth but shall be less if that can reasonably and conveniently be agreed upon; 9, Livingston and Kid agreeing jointly and severally with Bellomont that, in case Kid does not meet the pirates mentioned, or does not take from other pirates or the enemies of the king such goods, etc., as, when divided, shall fully recompense Bellomont for his expenditures, they shall refund to him, before March 25, 1697, the amounts he has advanced ("the Danger of the Seas, and of the Enemies, and Mortality of the said Capt. Kid always excepted"), and in such case Livingston and Kid shall become the sole owners of the ship and its furniture; 10, the goods, etc. taken from pirates and the prizes taken from the king's enemies to be divided into four parts, one-fourth or less (as Kid shall determine) to go to the ship's crew, and the other three-fourths to be divided into five equal parts, of which Bellomont shall retain four parts, and Livingston and Kid shall receive from him one part equally divided between them; 11, and, lastly, in case Kid brings to Boston and delivers to Bellomont, goods, etc., so taken, to the value of £100,000 or more, the ship is to be given to Kid as a reward for his services.

Before the sealing and delivering of this agreement, Bellomont makes the additional covenant to Livingston and Kid that "the person to whom the Grant above-mentioned . . . shall be made by His Majesty" shall assign to them a tenth part each (after deducting the share of the ship's crew) of all the goods, etc., taken by Kid under his commission. Bellomont is the only signer of the agreement.—From a copy of the agreement, printed for J. Richardson, London, 1701, in the Lenox collection, N. Y. Pub. Library (see Pl. 23, Vol. IV). See also The Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellomont, by Frederic de Peyster (N. Y., 1879), 27, which 1695 gives an authoritative account of Kid's (or Kidd's) transactions so far as they affect the affairs of this province.

10 On Jan. 26, 1696, a commission was issued, with the sanction of the king, under the great seal of England, to "Captain William Kidd, commander of the Ship Adventure Galley."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 762; "Lord Bellomont and the Pirates" (MS. lecture), by John H. Edmonds, state archivist of Mass.

It should be noted that, while Bellomont was named to the position of governor of New York in 1695, he did not receive his commission until the summer of 1697, and did not arrive in New York until the spring of 1698. Macaulay fell into an error, in his Hist. of England, in stating that the negotiations which resulted in the fitting out of Kidd's expedition were conducted after Bellomont reached America.—De Peyster, op. cit., 27.

The crew for the "Adventure Galley" having been selected with great care by Mr. Edmund Harrison, and all other preparations having been made, Bellomont issued Kidd's sailing orders on Feb. 25, 1696. However, on March 1, after Kidd had proceeded to the Buoy in the Nore, his chosen men were pressed for the fleet. He succeeded in getting together enough sailors (seventy) to man his ship, and, on April 23, he sailed from Plymouth, England, with the intention of going to New York (where he was known) and of there obtaining a full-sized crew. On the way he captured the French fishing smack "Sita Gratia" which he brought into New York on July 4. He had her condemned as a lawful prize and received a sum of money which aided him in further fitting out the "Adventure Galley." On Sept. 5, he sailed for the Indies with an addition to his crew of 84 men and boys, who had enlisted solely with the expectation of remuneration from captures and who were to be without pay except upon such results.—Edmonds's lecture. See July 11, 1696; July 6, 1699; and Addenda. For earlier accounts of pirates on the American coast, see Esquemeling, Buccaniers of America (London, 1684, the first ed. in English), and later editions as collated by Sabin, items Nos. 23479 et seq.

12 It is ordered by the common council that John Ellison, a joiner, be paid "for Mending y<sup>e</sup> Stares at y<sup>e</sup> landing place the Ducking Stool, the little bridge, the Stares of y<sup>e</sup> City Hall & for plank Nails & Other Necessaries."—M. C. C., I: 384. Regarding the existence of a ducking-stool, see Oct. 7, 1691; March 3, 1692. Regarding the little bridge, see Dec. 10.

16 The council orders that the blockhouse (see Dec. 5) be repaired; also that buildings are not to be allowed near it.—Cal. Coun., Min., 110, 111.

20 A committee of the common council, together with "the Overseers of the Publick buildings," is appointed "to Examine what will be wanting for y<sup>e</sup> Necessary Reparation of y<sup>e</sup> City Hall."—M. C. C., I: 387. They reported on Nov. 13 that, after consulting carpenters and bricklayers, they found the building was not "Sufficient," and that £150 would be required to repair it and make "itt fitt for use for y<sup>e</sup> Terme of five or Six Years."—Ibid., I: 389. On Nov. 19, it was ordered that "the Overseers of Publick works and buildings doe Examine what Needfull Reparations is wanting for the securing the City Hall this winter and that they Employ Persons for the Doing thereof and Raise A fund for their Payment."—Ibid., I: 391. But see May 12, 1696; Oct. 5, and Nov. 13, 1697; May 25, Sept. 20, and Oct. 16, 1699.

" By a provincial act, described in M. C. C., I: 396-97, the former office of overseer of the poor is increased in scope to cover repairs of highways and public buildings, to pay the city's debts, and to raise taxes for such purposes. Such officials are here called "Overseers of the poor and Publick works &c.;" their number includes five freemen of the city who are to work with the common council. They are ordered to "Visit the severall Wards of this City and Examine what poor there is that are fitt Objects of their Charity & make an Estimate what will be Necessary to be Raised for their Reliefe."—Ibid., I: 387. For this object, £100 will be needed for one year.—Ibid., I: 389. See Dec. 4, 1691; Nov. 19, 1695.

" It is ordered by the common council "that Capt. Kip doe View what will be Needfull for y<sup>e</sup> Necessary Making or Repairing the bridge over the fresh water and make Reporte thereof this day forthnight."—M. C. C., I: 388. He reported on Nov. 19 that, in his opinion, £116 "will be Sufficient for y<sup>e</sup> Making A Bridge over the fresh water."—Ibid., I: 390. This bridge, afterwards called the "Kissing Bridge" (mentioned in Burnaby's Travels—see July, 1766), was across the Old Kill, or "Old Wreck Brook," the outlet of the Fresh Water Pond; it stood on the old Boston Post Road, now Park Row, at Roosevelt St.—See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 926, where, however, "Burnaby's Diary" is ascribed erroneously to 1740 instead of 1760 (p. v.).

22 "An Act against the Profanation of the Lord's Day, called Sunday," is passed by the provincial legislature. It provides that "there shall be no travelling, servile labouring and Working, shooting, fishing, sporting, playing, Horse-racing, hunting, or frequenting of Tippling-Houses, or the using of any other unlawful Exercises or Pastimes, by any of the Inhabitants or Sojourners within this Province, or by any of their Slaves or Servants, on the Lord's Day." Travel is limited to 20 miles, even for church-going, an exception being made in the case of the public post, a physician, or a midwife. The law does not apply to Indians not professing the Christian religion.—Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed., 1774), Chap. 52. Cf. Pintard's recollections of the Huguenots of New Rochelle, in Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 753.

" The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Raising One Thousand Pounds to be employed by an Agent for the Representation of the State of the Province." New York City and County's quota is £3891. William Nicolls, one of the governor's Council, is the agent named in the act. He is to show to the king the heavy burden that has been on the inhabitants of the province since the beginning of the war, and to ask relief.—Cal. Coun. N. Y., I: 352.

Nov. 19 The common council resolves "that the Debts of the City be paid," and it is ordered that "the Overseers of the poor & Publick works" agree upon the "most Easy and Requisite" methods "for the Raising A fund for the Payment thereof."—M. C. C., I: 390. They reported on Dec. 3 that the easiest method was "to Sell the land lying on the West side of the Custom house bridge." They thought it "Requisite his Excellency be Addressed for his Permission to Erect buildings thereon." It was ordered accordingly that the recorder draw up an address to him.—Ibid., I: 391. The recorder submitted the draft of a petition on Dec. 10, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, and that the mayor and recorder "doe wait on his Excellency to morrow morning."—Ibid., I: 392. The mayor and recorder reported on Dec. 12 that they had delivered the petition to the governor, "who Answered that he would view the Place and Advise with his Majesties Council what would be proper to be done in that matter."—Ibid., I: 393. There is no report of this proceeding in either the Jour. Leg. Coun. or the Cal. Coun. Min.

The overseers reported on Feb. 1, 1696, a plan for raising £635: 9:11, to pay the city's debts, repair the city hall, and mend the bridge (which had been carried 30 ft. farther into the dock). This was in accord with the act of 1691, "to Enable the City of New York to Defray their Publick Charges." On hearing this report, the council ordered that an assessment to the amount of £317:14: 7½ be made upon all freeholders, inhabitants, and sojourners within the city, payable on or before March 25, the assessment roll to be in the clerk's office on or before Feb. 10.—M. C. C., I: 397-98.

A warrant is issued to James Virtue "for cutting the kings 21 arms in brass."—Cal. Coun. Min., 111.

Dec. 3 Dirck Vanderburgh, a bricklayer, is appointed overseer of hearths and chimneys, with the right of calling to his assistance the constable of each ward to inspect "the Keeping of the Same Clean Sweep & Repaired." He is required to provide six ladders, two of which are "to have hooks."—M. C. C., I: 391. These hooks and ladders were not paid for until Feb. 9, 1706, after Vanderburgh had become alderman and city surveyor.—Ibid., II: 292; see, also, Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 179-80.

5 Owners of lots between low-water mark and the blockhouse by the east gate of the city, and along Queen St., petition for the removal of this blockhouse, as it obstructs the street and all improvements.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 248.

10 The common council orders that, if Johannes van Cortlandt will build at his own expense "A good and sufficient Wharf on the East side of the little bridge at the lower End of the broad Street & Keep and Maintain the same in good and Sufficient Repair for Ever," a grant of ten feet of ground be made to him at the rear of his lot near this bridge, be releasing to the city four feet in front of his lot.—M. C. C., I: 393. For fuller account of the little bridge, see Jan. 16, 1700.

13 The common council resolves "that all the Inhabitants of this City their Apprentices and Children that were here att the time

1695 the Charter was Granted be Allowed and Deemed Freemen of which Dec. City they registering their Names in the Town Clerks office for which 13 Each Person Soe Registered Shall pay Nine pence."—M. C. C., I.
394. This order was reëcted on June 28, 1698 (q. v.).

1696

— It is provided by the governour's council that Stevanus van Cortlandt, with any two additional members of the council, shall be keepers of the great seal of the province during the governour's absence at Albany. He is authorized also to take probates and grant letters of administration.—Cal. Hist. MSS. Eng., 253.

— The first hackney-coach in New York was its appearance this year. John Clapp stated in his Almanack for . . . 1697 (q. v.) that it was one year "since the first Hackney Coach was made and kept in this city by John Clapp [himself], for the accommodation of all Persons desirous to hire the same."—From The Coaches of Colonial New York, by Geo. W. W. Houghton, a paper read March 4, 1890, before the N. Y. Hist. Soc.; Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 455; ibid. (1866), 578. This will correct the misstatement in Vol. I, p. 373, that the first hackney-coach was introduced in 1786.

— Land for a meeting-house for the Society of Friends (Quakers) was bought of David Lloyd for £25. It was 40 by 80 feet, bounded on the east by Little Green St. (Liberty Pl.), south by the land of John Rodman, west by the land of Edward Burling, and north by a vacant lot. Previous to this, the congregation had met at private houses, notably at Robert Story's and Lewis Morris's (nephew of Col. Lewis Morris).—From the earliest manuscript records of the society (in care of John Cox, Jr.). See also Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. Little Green St., later named Liberty Place, extended from Crown (Liberty) St. north to Maiden Lane, about 75 ft. west of Nassau St. The ground for the meeting-house was in the rear of the present Chamber of Commerce building (65 Liberty St.). Here the first Friends' meeting-house in New York was erected about 1698 (q. v.), a date more authoritative than any of those suggested by Greenleaf (Hist. of the Churches in N. Y., 116). For further history of this church, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 928. See also May 5, 1774.

— The dwelling-house of Jacobus Kip, built on his plantation at Kip's Bay, on the East River, is destroyed. Another residence was erected on the site.—Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 472, with illustration of the second residence. This was destroyed when 35th St. was opened, in 1836.—ibid. (1857), 535.

— At this period, Nassau St. was so called as far north as Maiden Lane.—See Pl. 24-a, Vol. I. See also May 25, 1689; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006.

— The "Shoemakers Lane," a tract of 17 acres lying east of Broadway, north of Maiden Lane, and extending to a point a little north of Fulton St., was in this year partitioned into 164 building lots.—Lib. Deeds, VI: 135 (Albany). For map and description of this land, see Pl. 24-a, Vol. I.

— Captain Kidd at this time was owner, by purchase, of a lot of ground in a part of the city then just being sold off in building lots, in a street called Tienhoven St. (now Liberty St.), near Nassau St. Here he erected a mansion, expecting, doubtless, to "pass the evening of his days in the city of his adoption."—Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 515.

— In this year, the first French book printed in New York, entitled Le Treor des Consolations Divines et Humaines, was issued from the press of William Bradford, at the expense of Antoine Pintard, a Huguenot settler, great grandfather of John Pintard who founded the New York Historical Society.

— For an account of the receipts and disbursements of the province from 1690 to 1696, prepared by "Chidley Brook Collf & Receiver of His Majesty's Revenue of New York," see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 173. The chief source of income at this time was the customs.

Jan. 9 — During the year 1696, the following items of expense for work in the fort appeared in the transactions of the governour's council:

Jan. 9 — To Nicholas Bayard for freight of gun wheels.
Feb. 13 — " James Wells for carpenter work.
March 5 — " Dirck Van der Burgh for buildings; to Isaac Dechamps for ironwork; to Gerrit Duyckingh for painters work; and to Col. Cortlandt for timber.
April 23 — " Peter Melcott for blacksmith work.
May 11 — " James Wells for carpenter work.
28 — " Peter Melcott for blacksmith work; to Dirck Van der Burgh, leathers; and to John Coburn, stone cutting.

Sept. 3 — To John Cockburn for paving the magazine mount. Jan. 10 — " John Pelletreaux and James Wells for services. 9 —Cal. Coun. Min., 111-18, passim. See also Feb. 9, 1693, and Jan. 17, 1695. Two payments were recorded in 1697, one to James Wells, on May 20, for carpenter work, and one to Dirck van der Burgh, on May 27, for mason work.—ibid., 121.

16 The council grants permission to Balthazar Bayard (see Jan. 9) to build a malthouse near the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 112.

23 Eight petitioners are admitted as freemen by the common council and required to pay "the Fees of their Certificates only."—M. C. C., I.: 395. Apparently these petitioners were taking advantage of the opportunity offered by the board's resolution of the previous meeting (see Dec. 13, 1695). For the regular cost of "freedom," see Jan. 20, 1676, and March 15, 1684. The freedom went automatically to the apprentice at the expiration of his term of service, following the practice in England. While the voting privilege in colonial days and even for a period after the Revolution was limited to two classes, freholders and freemen, it was not true that all freemen could vote, for it was quite possible for a woman to become a freeman.—M. C. M. (MS.), March 29, 1715. For the corresponding burgherright in New Amsterdam, see April 11, 1657.

27 This date is found on a series of rough MS. minutes recording the first meeting of what afterwards became the Trinity vestry. Until recently, they formed part of a package indorsed "Miscellaneous Papers" preserved in the corporation's vault. The first page of these interesting records (reproduced as Pl. 23-a, Vol. IV) reveals the earliest steps leading to the erection of the first Trinity church:

See A. See also the Miller Plan (Pl. 23-a, Vol. I), showing that, in 1695, 1696 one of the north bastions of the city wall was considered "The Jan. ground proper for y<sup>e</sup> building an E[nglish] Church." The location 27 of the French and Lutheran Churches are also shown on this plan.

 Feb. One of the committees of the managers of the proposed new 3 English church (see Jan. 27) reports that the Lutheran congregation has a clear title to part of the land desired for the new church (derived from Nicholls' patent to Pluvier), but that the Lutherans have agreed to assign their interest to them for £20. The Lutherans also make a voluntary gift of an additional piece of ground in the rear of the other, near the "Locust Trees." They ask only the "Liberty of burying their Dead in the Church yard" at the regular rates to be charged by the English church.—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

17 Cornelius Quick and Isaac Anderson agree with the vestry of Trinity Church to cut and bring "Stones from Monnius Island," for the period of one month, beginning next week, at one shilling and three half-pence a load. They will continue as long as necessary "for y<sup>e</sup> building of y<sup>e</sup> Church." Mayor Merritt and Capt. Tothill are to go "to Monnius Island & Discourse Mr Blackwell Relating to the Quarry of Stones on y<sup>e</sup> Said Island." Mr. Blackwell has granted the stone without charge.—From the original loose *Trin.
 Min. (MS.)*. The island was probably Blackwell's.—See *Man.
 Com. Conn. (1855)*, 496.

Mar. "Resolved that the Dementions of y<sup>e</sup> Church propos'd to 2 be built be in manner following (that is to say) Seventy foot in Length from outside to outside & fifty foot in breadth from outside to outside.

"Coll Heathcote & M<sup>r</sup> James Everts doe Reporte that . . .
 Coll Cortlandt & Elisha Parker will furnish the said Timber at easier Rates (& more Certaine) then any others, it is therefore agreed that they forthwith Agree with the aforesaid parties upon the best Terms they Can, in Order the Said Timber may be ready 12 The inhabitants of Pearl St. petition the common council that powder be no longer kept in "the Ware house Near Whitehall;"

a committee is appointed to see if the slaughter-house formerly used for the purpose is suitable for storing powder, and if so to move the powder there.—M. C. C., I: 400. This was the slaughterhouse built in 1677-8, "without the Gate at the Smiths Fly, near, the Half Moore," which on April 6, 1684, was made a general store-house for powder.—Ibid., I: 150. On Aug. 3, 1686 (q. v.), a powder-house was provided for at "point Hollondia," and on Aug-19, payment was made "for boards Nails Iron worke & Labour for fitting the Powder house."—Ibid., I: 417. It was further repaired in 1698.—Ibid., II: 30. For a later powder-house, situated elsewhere, see March 29, 1700.

"The common council orders that a warrant be issued "for y<sup>e</sup>

16 Members of the Church of England petition Fletcher for license to purchase a small piece of Land Lying without the North gate of the said City betwixt the Kings Garden and the burying Place and to hold the same in mortmain and thereon to build the said Church," etc. Granted.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 247.

23 "Resolved that Cap<sup>t</sup> Tothill Cap<sup>t</sup> Morris & M<sup>r</sup> Lurting doe the Church building doe each finde A Negro or Labourer to be Im-ployed on the S<sup>d</sup> building for four wensdays at their own pro-Charge over & Above their Subscriptions."—From the original

 loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

25 On this day ground is to be broken, by order of the managers on March 23, for the new English church. There is no record of the laying of a corner-stone, but see under May 2, 1696. As appears by the records of subsequent events, the "first opening" of the church for service was on March 13, 1698. The Bishop of London presented a bell to the church in 1704. The steeple was not completed, however, until 1711, owing to lack of funds. In 1755, the church was enlarged. It was destroyed by fire in 1776. The second Trinity Church was completed in 1790; this was torn down in 1839, and the present edifice was consecrated in 1846.—See Jan. 1790;

 next meeting, it was ordered "that the Surveyors of this City doe lay out the Ground Desired by Coll Cortlandt in his Memorial . . . And make a Draft thereof and Return the Same to the Clerks Office with all Convenient Expedition and that the said Coll Cortlandt have Liberty to Proceed in his building till the same is perfected and that the Committee Aforesaid doe Dispose of the Shed Standing Upon the Said Ground to the best Advantage, and Make Return of y<sup>e</sup> Conditions the S<sup>d</sup> Coll Cortlandt is to performe in writing."—M. C. C., I: 401-2. It has not been possible to ascertain whether the street was ever straightened as here proposed.

- 1696 The inhabitants of Harlem are permitted by the common council to allow their hogs to run at large "within the said Precinct," and also to make their fences six rails high, so that their "Improved Land may not be Damned thereby."—M. C. C., I: 402.
- Apr. 2 A patent to Caleb Heathcote (representing the managers of the new English Church—see Jan. 27), conveys "a lot of ground situated without the stockades of the City of New York, near adjoining unto the Locust trees, which was formerly part of our [the King's] garden, containing in breadth 27 ft. and in length 50 ft." There is also a lease of this date for 41 years (the outcome of a petition of March 26) of "another part of the said garden bounded by the stockades or fence of said garden so far as said garden in the rear doth extend, and from the said fence or stockades so far into Hudson's River as low-water mark."—Patents (sec. of state's office), VII: 78. See also a "Description of a survey of a lot of land [dated Nov. 18, 1696] lying on the west side of the King's garden [and south of the locust trees], in the city of New York, laid out for Caleb Heathcote, by Aug: Graham, surveyor."—Land Papers (sec. of state's office), II: 232, as listed in Cal. Land Papers, 48. This grant to Heathcote was considered one of the extravagant grants of Gov. Fletcher.—See Jan. 9, 1699.
- " Gerryt Jansen Roos receives from the governour and council a confirmatory grant of the slaughter-house.—Cal. Coun. Min., 113.
- 6 "Cornelius Quick & Castor Liensun Junf have agreed with the Persons abovesaid [Trinity vestry] that they will Employ their Sloops or boats to fetch Stones from Little Barnes Island for y<sup>e</sup> Building the Church aforesaid at the Rate of Six pence <sup>per</sup> Load, & that they or one of them will proceed on the same on Thursday next & doe further Engage they will Employ their boats or sloops in no other Service if they finde they have a Reasonable Benefit therey.
- "Mr. Everts Reports that he has Agreed with Elisah Parker of Woodbridge in the Province of East Jersey for y<sup>e</sup> Several quantities of timber hereafter Named for the Sum of fifty pounds Curr<sup>t</sup> Money of New Yorke the Same to be all of white Oake & to be Delivered here in June or the Mide of July at the furthest. . . ."

- 10 The ground behind the wind-mill is granted to Capt. Kip.—Cal. Coun. Min., 113. This is the brief Calendar entry. In reality, the grant was made by Gov. Fletcher to Johannis Kip, Lucas Kierstedt, and William Teller, as trustees, in trust for the children and devisees of Sara Roeloff, and not in their own right.—Smith ex dem. Teller vs. G. & P. Lorillard, Johnson's Reports (Supreme Court), X: 339. The will of Cornelius van Borsum was dated June 16, 1680, making his widow, Sara, his universal heir; Sara's will was dated July 29, 1693, by which she devised her estate to her several children, by her deceased husband, Hans Kierstedt; she appointed Johannis Kip, Lucas Kierstedt, and William Teller her executors, etc.—Ibid., 339. Jacobus Kip, the eldest son of Johannis Kip, the Capt. Kip mentioned in the Cal. Coun. Min., claimed this land as his, when, in 1723 (see under Dec. 17, 1723), he prevailed upon the common council to appoint a committee to assist him in "surveying and laying out" this tract.—M. C. C., III: 335. A descendant of Teller, later on, claimed the ground. See Smith ex dem. Teller vs. Lorillard, op. cit., by which it appears that the tract was known commonly as the Negroes' Burying ground, and that in May, 1768, J. Teller "entered into possession of a house which he had built two or three years before on the Negroes' Burying-Ground and which had, previously to his entrance, been occupied by his tenant; that he had a fence enclosing the burying-ground, and claimed it as his property . . . and took payment for the use of the ground . . . ; that he continued in possession until his death in June, 1775, and his family continued in possession afterward . . . until . . . the British army took possession of the house and lot, and during the course of the war, and that while under the dominion of the British, the house and fences were destroyed."—Johnson's Rep., X: 355.
- A deed of partition of the Negroes' Burying Ground was made January 6, 1795, between Henry H. Kip, Abraham I. van Vleeck, John and Samuel Kip, of the first part, Samuel Breeze and Aaron Burr, and surviving executors and trustees of Samuel Bayard, deceased, of the second part; Theophilus Beekman and Elizabeth his wife . . . of the second part; Isaac van Vleeck, of the third part; and Daniel Denniston of the fourth part.—Liber Deeds, CCXCV: 405-20 (New York). The land was then distributed into lots and divided into shares. Although the parties to this partition deed represented the heirs of Sara Roeloff, the court did not uphold a deed by
- the above-named executors of Samuel Bayard to Peter Lorillard, as against the title of the heirs of Teller, who had been driven off by the British. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927. Just why this tract should have become a negroes' burying-ground (which it did sometime prior to 1755, for it is so shown on a map of 1755—see Pl. 34, Vol. I), and subsequently a common potter's field, and a burying-place for the dead American prisoners, as it was during the Revolutionary war, does not exactly appear. As shown by the grant to Van Borsum, Oct. 4/14, 1673 (q.v.), and the confirmatory patent by Fletcher in 1696, the heirs of Sara Roeloff should always have had a good title here by descent.
- Persons recently arrived in town are to be asked to subscribe to the building of Trinity Church.—Loose Trin. Min. (MS.), op. cit. Regarding other contributions paid by persons of all denominations, see Sept. 22, 1693, Addenda.
- The "gate of the city" is still referred to in public documents as a familiar landmark.—Jour. Leg. Coun., 90. It is the well-known "land gate" of the walled city, situated at Broadway and the present Wall St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945. There appears to be no record to show when the land gate itself was demolished; the bastions near this point were demolished in 1699, and the stone used in building the city hall on Wall St.—See May 12, 1696.
- Ord<sup>r</sup>d y<sup>e</sup> on Monday [May 4] y<sup>e</sup> foundation be p<sup>r</sup>eeded on towards erecting of w<sup>ch</sup> each member p<sup>r</sup>sent to send a Negro."—From original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).
- The common council grants to Capt. Ebenezer Willson land "from the Street to Low water Marke on y<sup>e</sup> West Side of y<sup>e</sup> house of Thomas Hooks for y<sup>e</sup> building of A Slaughter house," measuring about 24 ft. in depth and 100 ft. along the street.—M. C. C., I: 404. See Oct. 15, 1691; Nov. 9, 1698.
- The common council orders that "the Inhabitants fronting to Burgers Path" make this street "Convenient for Carts to goe to and from the water Side," in accordance with the directions of the city surveyors.—M. C. C., I: 404. See also Sept. 23. On June 11, 1697 (q.v.), another order required "the Slip at Burgers path" to be paved. Some time later the inhabitants in a petition to the board declared that they had done so, but that Capt. Clock had now "begune to stop up the Slip." They begged that "Said Slip may not be Spoyled it being the most Convenient place in all the City" to unload boats, canoes, and other vessels.—From original petition (without date) in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room. Burgers Path was paved in 1698.—See Jan. 11, 1699.
- The common council grants the petition of Alderman Cortlandt who desires "that A Slip or Inlett may be made before the City Hall" at his own expense.—M. C. C., I: 404. Apparently this was the origin of what later became known as "Coenties Slip."—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 983; and Pl. 30, Vol. I. Also see Aug. 17, 1699.
- Fletcher signs the charter of the Dutch Church (see Pl. 24, Vol. IV), giving it the corporate name of "The Minister, Elders, and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New Yorke."—Cal. Coun. Min., 114. For the full text, see Eccles. Rec., II: 113-6-65, where it is compared in parallel columns with the charter of Trinity Church (1697). The charter of the Dutch Church was the first church charter granted in the colony, and that of Trinity the second.—See Murphy's Anthology of New Netherland (1865), 124, where he states that the Dutch charter was on record (1865) in the office of the secretary of state in book of patents, VII: 25. The original is now in the church archives in New York. The charter describes five pieces of property belonging to the church. These include the church and cemetery in Garden St.; a lot on the west and north of the church lot; a lot on Beaver St.; and the manor of Fordham. Religious freedom is given to this church, and its property rights are confirmed. See Addenda.
- The common council takes under consideration the subject of building a new city hall, and it is ordered "that Alderman Cortlandt Alderman Darkins & Alderman Boelen M<sup>r</sup> De: Peyster M<sup>r</sup> Rip Van Dam & M<sup>r</sup> Eeuwate together with Capt. Clarke M<sup>r</sup> Lurting & Capt. Kip be A Committee to make A Draft of y<sup>e</sup> City Hall & the Convenience that thereunto may be Needful and Compute & Estimate what the building thereof may Cost; and likewise how Much this City Hall and Ground & the land under the Trees by Burgers path will Sell for & make Reporte thereof in fourteen days to the Clerkes office."—M. C. C., I: 405. On June 26, 1696, "By Majority of Votes it was Agreed that A City Hall be built;" and a memorandum was entered in the Minutes that 1696 "It is Proposed that y<sup>e</sup> Easiest and best way for the building A May City Hall Powder house &c: is to Mortgage the Rent of y<sup>e</sup> Ferry 12 for fifteen years; to Sell y<sup>e</sup> Present Town Hall & Ground thereunto belonging, and the Ground Concluded to be Sold in the Rear of the Dock Street at Nine pence  $\frac{7}{10}$  foot, for y<sup>e</sup> building the Same to the Value of three thousand Pounds the undertaker having y<sup>e</sup> Benefit of y<sup>e</sup> Rent for Powder and Other Conveniences all Publick Rooms and Offices Excepted and that the Said City Hall is to be built and Covered by the first day of November Come twelve Months." Whereupon it was ordered "that M<sup>r</sup> Mayor Calling to his Assistance Such of y<sup>e</sup> Aldermen and Common Council As he Shall think fitt & the Surveyors of this City & Such Carpenters and Bricklayers as may be Needfull doe take the Dimensions of the Several parts of the Said City Hall as will be Needfull to be built for the Sum aforesaid."—Ibid., I: 410. On July 2, 1696, it was ordered that a committee, including the surveyors, "make an Estimate what the building of A New City Hall will amount to & where it will be most Convenient to place the same and y<sup>e</sup> they Consider of y<sup>e</sup> Easiest and most proper Method for the Raising A Fund to build the same and that they Likewise made A Draft and Ascertain y<sup>e</sup> Dimensions thereof."—Ibid., I: 411.

A new committee was appointed for the same purpose on Nov.
 11, 1696.—Ibid., I: 428. And again, after the board had reaffirmed the necessity of building a new hall, and had resolved "that y<sup>e</sup> Lots on the West Side of y<sup>e</sup> Bridge shall not be Sold or Disposed" of for this purpose (ibid., II: 20-21), and after repairing the old city hall, which was in a dilapidated condition (ibid., II: 16, 17, 18, 20), another committee was appointed on Nov. 9, 1698, to determine where a new hall could be built most conveniently, what materials would be needed, and what the cost would be, and to "make Reporte with all Convenient Speed."—Ibid., II: 66.
 On Jan. 11, 1699, "The Committee Appointed to View the City Hall &c" reported that they had "Viewed the present City Hall And finde it insufficient and doe think the Upper end of the broad Street A proper place for y<sup>e</sup> Building A new City Hall And believe that the Sum of three Thousand pounds may be Sufficient for the building the Same According to the former draft drawn by M<sup>r</sup> James Everts which Reporte is Approved."—Ibid., II: 68. On May 25, 1699, the board "doe Unanimously Resolve (Alderman Cortlandt only dissenting) that A New City Hall be built with all Convenient Expedition And that the same be Erected And built at the upper End of the broad Street . . . and that the Mayor taking to his Assistance Such of the Aldermen Assistants and surveyors of the Said City as he Shall think Convenient doe lay out the Ground for the Building the Same."—Ibid., II: 78.

After these preliminary arrangements, it was at length ordered, on Aug. 9, 1699, that the mayor, etc., employ workmen to lay the foundation of the new hall.—Ibid., II: 79. The procuring of stone was next considered. On Aug. 18, 1699, the board decided that a petition should be presented immediately to Nanfan, the lieutenant-governor, and his council, stating that the city is "purposing with all Speed to build A New City Hall" fronting the line of fortifications on Wall St., and asking him "to Intercede with his Excellency the Capt. Gen<sup>l</sup> . . . that the Stones of y<sup>e</sup> S<sup>d</sup> Bastions with the Consent of the Owners thereof may be Appropriated to the Building the said City Hall."—Ibid., II: 82. Nanfan evidently referred the petition to the governor, for on Sept. 4, 1699, in a letter to Mayor De Peyster, Bellomont stated: "I write to my Cousin Nanfan last post To Let the City of N. york have y<sup>e</sup> Stones of the old bastions or batteries To build their Town-house."—From the original letter, in De Peyster Papers, in the archives of the N. Y.
 Hist. Soc. On Sept. 7, the governor's council ordered the demolition of two bastions.—Cal. Coun. Min., 142. Between that date and Sept. 20, we know the foundation of the new city hall was laid, for on the latter date the common council ordered the mayor to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay "the Expences which was made at the Laying y<sup>e</sup> foundation of the City Hall."—M. C. C., II: 86.
 Regarding the superstructure, see Oct. 16, 1699.

15 A board of trade is established in England by the king, under a commission of this date, for promoting the trade of Great Britain, and improving the king's plantations in America and elsewhere.
 High commissioners are appointed to meet at Whitehall to take account of the condition and development of the trade and manufactures of the provinces; to take "care of all Records, Grants and Papers remaining in the Plantation Office," to take account yearly
 "by way of Journalls of the Administration of Our Governours," etc., etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 145-48. See also Dickerson, May of Trade in its relation to the American Colonies, Political, Industrial, 19 There is published by Bradford, as a 4-page broadside, an address signed "Chid. Brooke" and "W. Nicoll," beginning: "To their Excellencies, the Lords Justices of England, the Humble Memorial of Chidley Brook and William Nicolls, Sheweth that they were sent from the Governour, Council and General Assembly of His Majesties Province of New York about the month of November last, with an humble Address of thanks to His Sacred Majesty for his Royal Care and Bounty to that Province . . ."—See 21 Fletcher issues a proclamation of thanksgiving on receiving "certain intelligence of a late horrid and detestable conspiracy, against the sacred life of Our Sovereign Lord King William."— From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 57. On the 26th a celebration was ordered.—Cal. Coun.

Min., 114, 115. He reported to Shrewsbury by letter on the 30th that he had appointed a day for this purpose.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 149. Clap's Almanac (1697, q.v.) mentions the plot. "Associations" are formed to protect the king.—See Cal. State Papers,

30 In a report to the lords of trade, Fletcher states that a band of pirates came recently into the province, shared their booty and departed. He adds: "Their Treasure was Spanish money, they enrich the Charter Governements."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 151. See also "Benjamin Fletcher and the Rise of Piracy" in Wilson, Mem.

June An alarming scarcity of bread begins to prevail.—Lamb, Hist.
 10 City of N. Y., I: 426. The common council orders an assize of bread, only the wheat loaf being permitted; also that "No Person or Persons Shall presume to Bake bread Biskett or Concocks of Any Sorte or Kinde whatsoever within this City without Entering their Names with the Mayor." All bakers "admitted by the mayor" are required "to Keep bread in their Shops that the Inhabitants may be Supplied."—M. C. C., I: 405-6, 418. On June 11, the freeholders and inhabitants of the city petitioned for an embargo on the exportation of grain, flour, and bread (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 251), and the governor and council decided that no corn should be exported.—Cal. Coun. Min., 115. On the same day, Fletcher issued a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting the exportation of "Flower, Bread, or any other Grain, until the first of August next ensuing."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 251; Miss Hasse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 57. See also July 2, and Nov. 17, 1696.

" Fletcher writes to the lords of trade that: "The town of Philadelphia in fourteen years time is become near equal to the City of New Yorke in trade and riches, the hardships that this province hath undergone in the defence of the Frontiers and the detaching of our people hath drove many of them thither to enjoy their ease, and there being no duty upon trade in that Colony it is a discouragement to the trade of this province whose inhabitants are left wholly to bear the burden of the Warr, whilst they grow by the hardships of our circumstances and derive all their protection from our forces."—
N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 158-59.

Fletcher further reports that "There are several Quakers in the City of New Yorke [who] from a pretence of tenderness of conscience and aversion to the carnall weapon will not signe the Association nor take an oath. I have given orders to release them."— Ibid., IV: 159.

He also reports: "I have transmitted to your Lord<sup>sh</sup> a list of the Roman Catholics, and reputed Papis in New Yorke who are all disarmed and obliged to give bond with surety for their good behaviour or be confined in prison."—Ibid., IV: 160. The governor and council issued an order the following day (June 11) that all Roman Catholics should be disarmed and imprisoned.—Cal. Coun.

 to Maj. William Merritt, the mayor, to give a list "of all the Roman Catholics or such as are reputed Papis within the City of New Yorke," the mayor lists ten persons.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 166.

 "Desiring the Ground laid out in the Rear of their Lotts Next the June 11, 1697, the common council ordered "that the Mayor Execute the Deeds for the land lately laid out in the Dock

On June 17, 1697, the city granted to Samuel Bayard, Andries Teller, Jacob van Cortlandt, Robert Livingston, Johannes Outman, Conraet Ten Eyck, Lawrence Wessels, and John Varick the land in each of them should make a wharf or street (Water St.) 30 ft. in width along his water front.—City Grants, Liber A: 205-30, 239-47.

19 A committee of the common council, which was appointed on May 12, on petition of the inhabitants of Broad Street, to make an estimate of the cost of building a common sewer through that street, reports "that they have taken the Dimensions of y<sup>e</sup> Said Street running into the Said Street" are 120 feet wide, and are included in the 1,150 feet above mentioned.—M. C. C., I: 405, 407. Evidently no action was taken at this time, for the subject was re-introduced June 25, 1702 (q. v.).

" The common council orders "that the Surveyors of this City doe lay out the Ground belonging to the Land from the Corner of Street, to the Dock And that they Ascertaine the Dimensions thereof and make A Draft of the Same."—M. C. C., I: 407-8. The fortification referred to was a half-moon battery, at the present Hanover Sq., east of Old Slip, and was the successor to the one built before 1679 (q. v.), on the west side of Burger's Path (Old Slip). It was placed here prior to 1695, as it appears on the Miller Plan, Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. A battery was completed here in 1704.—M. C. C., I: 266. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, 23 The common council orders that, after July 7 next, the "Slaughter houses in Queen Street Near y<sup>e</sup> Gate" having become a nuisance to the neighbourhood, be no longer used.—M. C. C., I: 408.

 Soon after this, Johannes Beckman's slaughter-house, near the present Water St., east of Beekman St., was probably erected.—

The mayor and captains of the militia have viewed "his Majes- 3 ties Fortifications About the City," by order of the governour, and found them much out of repair. They are informed that there is no money in the city treasury and no fund for repairing them. The governour has information regarding the "Designs of the Enemy upon this place," and it is "of Absolute Necessity that the same be forthwith Repaired And put in A Posture of Defence." The mayor therefore proposes, "for y<sup>e</sup> Ease of the Inhabitants att this time of Exigency," that a tax be raised for that purpose, and the common council decides unanimously to raise £500 by taxation "for the Defraying the Charge of Repairing the Carriages of the Gunns & Fortifications." This is not to establish a precedent, however, which the city shall be obliged to perform in any future case. The expense of buying materials and paying the men on the present occasion shall be paid on or before Sept. 5.—M. C. C., I: 412-13. An ordinance was passed and published on Aug. 5 to raise the £500 for the repair of the fortifications, the full text of which was recorded on that day in the Minutes.—Ibid., I: 413-16.

The consistory of the Dutch Church receives the report of a 26 committee, consisting of Stevanus van Cortlant, Nicholas Bayard, Jacobus van Cortlant, and Brant Schuyler, "concerning the mode of Thanking the Hon. Benjamin Fletcher, our Governour, for the Charter of our Church." The committee states that Fletcher
 "was very favorably disposed to our Church or the Dutch Reformed Congregation of this City, to incorporate us by patent under the great Seal, endowing us with much profit and especial privileges.
 Such is our Charter and so found in the front of this Record. The Consistory therefore resolv'd after consideration, to give thanks to his Excellency in recognition of all this, and besides, in place of the usual fee, to make him a present of Silver Plate to the value of £75 or 80, currency of this province. The Deacons are to provide this in the way of a loan, and shall be reimbursed in due time from the Manor or other Revenues of the Church. Messrs. Jacobus van them to disperse Prince assaulted him "on the face." The same penalty, except as to the number of lashes, was given two other other things, that "there are about 3000 Families in New York and says that the Rev. Increase Mather, in giving the right hand of fellowship: "Spake notably of some young men who had apostazi-zed from New England principles, contrary to the Light of their education." Among the young men thus referred to was the Rev.

 William Yeazie or Vesey, who was graduated from Harvard College in 1693, and who on one occasion "preached at the Ch. of Engl<sup>d</sup>" in Boston, where he "had many Auditors," and afterward became the first rector of Trinity Church in New York.—Sewall's Diary, the transportation of Indian corn and peas from Albany, Ulster, and Dutchess Counties to points down the Hudson, until April 1, 1697.

16 In a representation concerning the state of the province, presented to the board of trade at Whitehall by Jacob Leisler (2d) and Gouverneur, it is stated that there may be about 8,000 or 9,000 families in New York Province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 197-213. It is also stated that there are "very great feudes in the Country ever since the Revolution. Those who joynd with Governor Leisler in it are 19 to one; But now oppressed and kept out of all manner of place or employment in the Government . . . But th<sup>o</sup> the Parliament here [in England] have reversed the Attainder, both Mf Leisler and he are kept out of part of their Estates."—Ibid., IV: 198. The report was continued on Sept. 25. It was intended to point out the misgovernment of the province, and particularly to accuse Fletcher of misappropriation or misuse of public revenues, and of attempting forcibly to prevent the election of Leisler's followers to the general assembly in 1694 and 1695. Complaint was also made that the fortifications in New York City were almost out of repair, the bulwarks not regarded, one of them at the waterside disposed of to private service, great guns not erected, which were procured for the city, etc.—Ibid., IV: 212-24. Delaney's letter of June 13, 1695 (q. v.), is also presented to the board at this time. See Sept. 21, 1698.

17 Fletcher reports to the board of trade that Capt. Kidd, "Commander of the adventure Gally," sailed from New York 12 days ago with 150 men on board. He adds that "in his way heer he tooke a French Banker which was condemned here and appraised at 350*l*.

 Admiralty direct."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 199.

 Sept. See also May 11. These are the earliest mentions of a slip at the 23 termination of Burger Jorissen's path, but it can be seen by Pl. 17, was always a known landing-place. It became known as Old Slip.—

- 30 Rev. Henricus Selyns writes to the classis of Amsterdam, stating, among other things, that: "There are two English churches here.
 One is already built [rebuild] in the Fort; and the other [Trinity] is in course of erection in the City. Both are constructed of stone and are neat edifices. All this has been done since the building of our new church here [in Garden St.]. . . . Our city is extending, high houses are being erected, and the shores are being docked in. Indeed, since my last coming here [1682], the city, houses and inhabitants have increased fully two-thirds."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1172-

- Oct. The magistrates of Albany desiring Fletcher's presence there 16 during the coming winter, he seeks the concurrence of the council and assembly, and a committee from each is appointed to consider the question "at Coll Cortlandts house" ("All correspondence betwixt Yorke and Albany being shutt up by the frost for some months")—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 96. He resolved to take up his winter quarters there; he left New York at the close of the session, Nov. 3; and on his return reported on March 29, 1697, at a joint meeting of the council and house: "My passage met with some difficulties by an early winter being twice drove a shore by the ice and at last lockt up by it yet I made the journey in twelve days though with some extraordinary expense being necessitated to travell part of the way by land with a detachment of my own Company."—Ibid., I: 101.

 council] Desiring that A Carte way May be made leading out of the broad Street to the Street that Runns by the Pye Womans leading to the Commons of this City;" stating also "that the Petitioner will undertake to doe the same. Provided he may have the soyle." The petition is "To be Consider'd."—M. C. C., I: 425. It must have been favourably considered, for the cartway here described became the southern portion of Nassau St. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006; and under May 25, 1689. Regarding this
 Mrs. Lamb states, in Mag. Am. Hist., XXI: 185-86:—
 "A cartway was opened from the head of Broad in Wall street to Maiden Lane on the line of Nassau street. It is interesting to note that Broadway, then called 'the wagon way,' above the city gate, bore no such relative importance to other streets as at present; indeed, the Smith's valley road (afterwards Queen street, now Pearl) from Wall street north was built up much earlier and with a far better class of buildings."
- "The inhabitants and poor of the city are without bread. None can be bought. The bakers complain that they have no corn, and cannot get any at a reasonable price. The common council orders that the alderman and assistant of each ward inquire what quantity of flour, wheat, and bread there is in each ward."—M. C. C., I: 426.
 On Oct. 23, they appointed a committee to confer with the recorder about the proper and most effectual methods for causing corn to be brought to the city.—Ibid., I: 427. See Nov. 17.
- 24 Col. Caleb Heathcote and Mayor William Merrett present a memorial to the assembly relating to the building of a free school, a draft of which is also presented.—Assemb. Jour., I: 73.
- Nov. The church-wardens and vestrymen (comprising the city vestry) 20 again call Mr. William Vesey (24 years old) from Boston "to officiate and have the care of souls in this City of New York" (the earlier call having been on Jan. 26, 1695 q. v.). They lend him money to go to England to be ordained by the Bishop of London.
 Although they find him "Pious Sober," etc., they require him to give a bond to cover the loan of his travelling expenses. A graduate of Harvard, he was given the degree of master of arts by Oxford, on this visit to England, where he was ordained priest on Aug. 2, 1697.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1174-76, and authorities there cited. The original license to Mr. Vesey from the Right Rev. Henry Compton,

- D.D., Bishop of London, to be rector of the church (Trinity) at New York, dated Aug. 2, 1697 (q. v.), is preserved in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box of MSS. relating to churches in New York).
 This society has also facsimiles of the license, made by Bierstadt on octavo sheets. The Rev. Mr. Vesey was not inducted into office as rector until Dec. 25, 1697 (q. v.). He held the office for 49 years.
 Writing in 1745 (the last year of his rectorate) to Dr. Philip Bear-croft, secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, Dr.
 Vesey stated that in 1697, when he began his ministry, the only churches in North America from Maryland to Nova Scotia, erected for worship according to the liturgy of the Church of England, were Trinity Church and the church in the fort at New York, one church in Philadelphia (Christ Church), and one in Boston (King's Chapel).
 In 1745, most of the provinces or colonies had many Episcopal churches.—Extract from documents in the office of the Soc. for Propagating the Gospel, London, made by Rev. Francis L. Hawks, D.D., in 1836, filed with Hawks MS. in Church Mission House, N. Y. City. For reproduction of Vesey's license, see Pl. 25, Vol. IV.
 4 Nathaniel Marston (Barber), his wife Margaret, and Ann Lilley convey to Bernardus Hardenbroock, Johannes Hardenbroock, Samuel Beeckman, Albert Clock, Nicholas Blanck, Abraham Mesler, Adrian Man, and John Yeates, cordwinners, "All that . . . par-bounded southerly to the said water, westerly by the ground of the said Bernardus Hardenbroock and easterly and northerly by the 28½ feet, westerly 130 feet and southerly 310 feet, English measure, appurtenances."—Liber Deeds, IX: 402 (Albany).

- The common council orders that the alderman and assistants

- In a memorial to the British board of trade, Chidley Brooke and 13 William Nicolls recommend:

 men every day are brought in debt & the excessive price of clothes

- The committee appointed by the mayor on Oct. 17 (q. v.) 17 to investigate the scarcity of bread finds only 700 bu. of corn on hand, or enough to feed the 6,000 inhabitants of this city for a week. They report that "the true and Only Cause did Proceed from y<sup>e</sup> Liberty and Latitude that Every Planter had Lately taken of making his house or Farme A Market for his wheat or Converting the same and the Sole place for Bolting of flower has been very Much wrong'd & Injured not only to the Prejudice of Trade And the Inhabitants Travellers & Sojourners within the same to Fenury and want of bread." The common council decides to appeal to "his Most sacred Majesty," and a committee is appointed to draw up an address to the king regarding "what have been y<sup>e</sup> Rights & Priviledges of this City And what may be Needfull," etc.—M. C. C., I: 430-31; II: 1. They reported on May 29, 1697 (q. v.). The 1696 address was drawn up by the recorder, James Graham.—See — An Almanack for . . . 1697, an 8vo volume of 52 pages, by John Clapp[er], was printed this year by Bradford. Brinley's imperfect copy sold for $420.—Evans, Am. Bibliography, No. 779; N. Y. Eve. Post, Jan. 21, 1899. The only known copy is now [1921] owned by Robert Goellet, Esq., of New York. John Clapp kept a tavern in the Bowers Village, which Jacob Leisler described (see March 26, 1690) as "a good neat house, about two miles from the city."—Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 577-78. Clapp described his house in his almanac as the "baiting place where Gentlemen take leave of their friends, and where a parting glass or two of generous wine,

"If well apply'd makes their dull Horses feel
"One spur i' th' Head is worth two in the heel."

The distance from his tavern to Boston is mentioned as 274 miles; to the "Half-way House," seven miles, and thence to Kingsbridge, nine miles. The almanac closes with this notice: "At the aforesaid Clapps, about two miles without the City of New-York, at a place called the Bowry, any Gentleman Travellers that are Strangers to the City, may have very good Entertainment for themselves and Horses, where there is also a Hackny Coach and good Saddle Horses to be hired." An account of the hackney-coach is given under 1696. Clapp, who had the title of "Captain" (M. C. C., I: 263), was appointed clerk of the house of representatives by Gov. Slaughter on April 9, 1691.—Jour. of the Votes, etc. (Gaine ed. 1764), 2. He was serving in this capacity in November, 1696, but not on May 19, 1698 (ibid., 76, 85, 88). His almanac appeared, therefore, carrying the mention of his tavern, just after his retirement. On March 31, 1693, he was appointed by the common council pound-keeper of the Bowery.—M. C. C., I: 320. See June 24,

Feb. 1 The lords of trade inform Fletcher that the king has ordered them to require of the governors of all the provinces "to take due care that no Pirates or sea Robbers be anywhere sheltered or entertained under the severest penalties." They recommended it the more particularly in his case because, "in the Informations lately given upon occasion of the Tryall of severall of Every's crew, your Govern<sup>r</sup> is named as a place of protection for such like villains, and your favour in particular to Capt<sup>r</sup> Tue is given as an instance of it."

The king has ordered, agreeable to Fletcher's request (see Nov. 13), that "an Engineer" be sent to New York with 400 "light Fuses" (to be disposed of amongst the Indians), and a supply of stores, including "a Bell for the use of the Fort: 30 inch: diameter," "six Union Flags," an assortment of powder, shot, etc.

To enable each governour to inspect and report on the consumption of naval stores, the king has ordered that the commanders of ships of war sent for the defence of each respective "Plantation" shall be under the direction of the governour of that plantation during their stay there. To each governour, as a vice admiral, is given the sole power of impressing seamen, and each is required to see that these ships are furnished with the number of seamen necessary for the king's service.

Fletcher is praised for his "diligence in repairing to Albany upon advice of Mons<sup>r</sup> Frontenac's late expedition," resulting in the latter's speedy retreat. He is advised to follow the example of the French "of insinuating into the friendship and familiarity of the Indians."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 255-58. For Fletcher's answer regarding his entertaining of pirates, see ibid., IV: 274-75; but see Bellomont's exposures in ibid., IV: 304, 306, 307, 310, 317.

The court of general sessions orders that Elizabeth Moore and Mary Vincent, who have pleaded guilty to stealing "some Remnants of Serge &c: to the value of ten pence," be taken to the whipping-post and "then and there be stripped from the waste upwards and Receive on their Naked backs twenty One Lashes each with Burch Rodds." Amy Carr's penalty, four years later, for the theft of "two smocks of the value of ten pence," was the same, except that she received six lashes less.—Minutes General Sessions of the Peace (MS.), Feb. 2, 1697; Feb. 27, 1701. A penalty of this sort was not infrequently inflicted on negro criminals, men and women, but the unfortunates above mentioned were whites, apparently. At the court session of Aug. 4, 1719, two negro women, Betty and Frank, "were tied to a Cart and whipped upon the Naked back each forty lashes save one," and it was stipulated precisely how many of these lashes should be applied at each of several street corners as the cart made the circuit of the city.—Ibid., Aug. 4, 1719. For other cases of corporal punishment and the death penalty at this period, see Feb. 5, 1684; Aug. 28, 1696; April 11, 1712.

A negro, sentenced for murder, having died before execution of the sentence of death, the governour and council decide that punishment shall be inflicted upon his dead body.—Cal. Coun. Min., 119.

William Penn proposes an annual congress of all the American provinces, with power to regulate commerce.

Miles Foster, chosen collector of the East Ward, is declared by the court of mayor and aldermen to be ineligible for service because he is a Quaker.—M. C. M. (MS.), Feb. 9, 1696.

The board of trade reports to the king the objections raised by each of the English colonies against a union under either a civil or military governour, but it recommends the appointment of a governour or captain-general to serve for all or part of the colonies during the present war. Regarding New York's objection to a union with the province of Massachusetts Bay under one civil governour, it states that, "the towns of New York & Boston having been always rivals in trade, this Union would (in that respect) be very prejudicial to the former."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 259-61.

The Duke of Shrewsbury informs the lords of trade that "The King has been pleased to appoint the Earl of Bellomont to be Governour of the Provinces of New Yorke, Massachusetts Bay and New Hampshire and to be Capitaine General during the War, of all His Majesty's forces both there and in Connecticut, Rhode Island and the Jerseys" in accordance with the report made by the lords to the king on Feb. 25.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 261.

It is resolved by Trinity vestry that "his Excell[ency] the Governour be Addressed in the Name of the Managers of y<sup>e</sup> building of Trinity Church to Congratulate his Safe Return from y<sup>e</sup> Frontier at Albany & to Acknowledge his Excell[ency]s many great & Charitable gifts for the Encouraging the Carrying on so good a Work."—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

Oyster Pasty Lane is dedicated to public use.—Liber Deeds, Apr. XXI: 212. It had been opened prior to 1683.—Ibid., XIII: 10. It was the present Exchange Alley.

The lords of trade, having prepared drafts of commissions and instructions for the Earl of Bellomont, give to the king for his guidance a statement of the salaries paid to former governours, as follows: In 1686, Andros, then governour of all New England but not New York, received £1,200 sterling for one year, payable by England until the revenue in New England should be settled. In 1687, the charter of New England having been surrendered to the crown, and the settled revenue there being continued by order from England, Andros was paid £1,200 sterling out of the revenue of New England. In 1688, the government of New York being united to that of New England, and Andros governour of "both those Provinces," there was added to his salary £200 sterling out of the revenue allowed by New York for the support of their governours, and the remaining £400 of the New York allowance was appointed to be paid to the lieutenant-governour. After 1688, on the accession of William III to the crown (the two governments of New York and New England being divided), the governours of New York had their former salary of £600 sterling per annum allotted them out of the revenue of that province. The compensation of lieutenant-governours is also shown.—N. Y. Cal. Docs., IV: 263.

In a mortgage made by Gov. Dongan to Lancaster Symes, the building in which Gov. Dongan resided, formerly known as Stuyvesant's "Great House," is said to be "Commonly then Called & known by the Name of Whitehall."—Liber Deeds, XXI: 290 (New York). Thomas Dongan mortgages "The Vineyard" (see under Feb. 10, 1685), by the following description: "North side of ye said city adjoining the Commons: of ye land called ye Vineyard, for 14 years from May 1st next there at 1 Pepper corn at ye feast of St. Michael the Archangel."—Liber Deeds, XXI: 290 (New York). The "Managers of the Affaires of the Church of England in the City of New Yorke" petition Fletcher for a charter. They state, among other things, that they have "built a Church and Covered the same;" and they ask that the governour will grant the church to them "in trust for all those that now are or hereafter may be in the Communion of the Church of England as now established by law." They ask to be incorporated "by Name of the members in Communion of the Church of England Established by Law;" to enjoy the "yearly Maintenance" (evidently meaning the £100 provided in 1693 by the "Act for settling a Ministry"), and to possess such quantity of land as the council shall think fit, near or adjoining the land of the governour. The petition is granted, and it is ordered that "a warrant issue for the drawing of their Charter of incorporation the quire-ent to be one pepper corne as desirs."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1178-79; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 248-49, citing "Council Minutes"; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 257; Cal. Coun. Min., 120.

The draft of the charter was approved by Trinity vestry on May 28 (q. v.), but was revised on May 31 (q. v.); its bore date of May 6. From the Catalogue of the New-York State Library: 1856. Maps, manuscripts. . . Et. Albany, 1857, 112, we learn that the State Library then had possession of a manuscript thus described: "Charter of Trinity Church, in the City of New-Yorke, under the great seal of the Province: Benjamin Fletcher, Commander-in-Chief, May 6, 1697." This catalogue describes the "ancient MS." as "worn or eaten away at the corners." This was probably the copy recorded by David Jameson, clerk of the governour's council.—See June 23, 1697. It was burned in the fire which destroyed the State Library, March 29, 1911. The remains of this MS. which was on vellum—a shapeless mass of water-soaked pulp—were removed from the debris during the fire by the author. The original charter (Pl. 24-A, Vol. IV) is still preserved in the archives of Trinity Corporation. This has been damaged by mice, and the seal is lacking. See also Addenda.

A printed copy of this charter, published by Hugh Gainie in 1788 (now in the N. Y. Pub. Library), contains, among other provisions, the following statements: At the time the "Ministry Act of 1693" was passed "there was not erected any public Church or Building within our said City, whereunto such a good sufficient Protestant Minister might have been inducted for his orderly officiating of his Duty in the public Worship and Service of God." Fletcher is given credit for his "bountiful Donations" and "pious Example." Others, likewise, have "religiously contributed according to their respective Abilities, several Sums of Money," which have been used "for the erecting and building a Church and laying the Foundation of a steeple."

The charter refers to the petition of the church managers for a grant of the "Church and Steeple that hath been lately built . . . together with a certain Piece or Parcel of Ground thereunto adjoining, situate, lying, and being in or near to a Street without the North Gate of our said City, commonly called and known by the Name of the Broadway; containing in Breadth on the East End, as the said Street of the Broadway rangeth Northward, three Hundred and ten Feet, until you come unto the Land lately in the Tenure and Occupation of Thomas Lloyd, deceased; and from thence towards the West, in Length by the said Land, until you come into Hudson's River; and then southward along Hudson's river, three Hundred and Ninety-five Feet, all of English Measure; and from thence by the Line of our Garden Eastward, unto the Place of the said Street in the Broadway where first begun."

In view of the expense incurred by Fletcher and others in building the church, and also in "Erecting and providing a House near the said Church, for the Habitation of a Minister," the charter asserts, as the "Royal Will and Pleasure," that the church "and the Ground thereunto adjoining, inclosed and used for a Cemetry or Church Yard, shall be the Parish Church, and Church Yard of the Parish of Trinity Church."

The Right Rev. Henry Compton, D.D., Lord Bishop of London, is constituted "the first Rector thereof." See May 31. He, his successors, the rectors of the parish, and the communicants of the church are incorporated as "The Rector and Inhabitants of our said City of New-York, in Communion of our Protestant Church of England as now established by our Laws."

Many rights and privileges are stated in detail in the charter. The right to a seal is accorded. The first wardens and vestrymen are named, and their duties defined. They are required, among other things, within the next 300 [sic] days to obtain an estimate of the "Charge and finishing the said Church and Steeple, and providing a Clock and one or more Bells for the same, and other Works necessary and requisite in and about the said Church and Steeple; and of building a convenient House for the said Rector." All the "Debts, Credits and Contracts, made and to be made, with or by the Artificers and Workmen employed, or to be employed for any Work or Building" are "to be entered and registered in one or more Book or Books to be kept for that Purpose."

The charter further declares "that the said Church and Cemetry or Church Yard, . . . shall be the sole and only Parish Church and Church Yard of our said City of New-York." The charter contains many other provisions, too numerous to mention. For a more extended digest of its contents, see Eccles. Rec., II: 1136-65, where its provisions are compared, in parallel columns, with those of the charter of the Dutch Church, granted by Fletcher in 1696. An official, contemporary, MS. copy of this charter is preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. On account of imperfections in the original charter, Trinity Church was reincorporated June 27, 1794 (q. v.).

An impression of the original (1697) seal of the corporation of Trinity Church can be seen in the John Paulding collection, presented to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. in 1844. This seal is still in use.

By an order in council at Whitehall, the lords justices (privy council) confirm the "Act against unlawfull By-Laws & unreasonable forfeitures" (the Bolting Act of March 24, 1694, q. v.).—Laws and Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), cxxvii. At the same time a petition to the king to repeal the act is in preparation at New York.—See May 29.

Matthew Clarkson receives a patent for a lot in a street which leads from that part of Queen (Pearl) St. which is opposite to Maiden Lane. It measures in front by Fletcher's St., 50 ft.; in length on the north side, 85 ft.; on the south side, 83 ft.; and in the rear, 50 ft. It is bounded on the north by Capt. John de Peyster's land; south by Thomas Pearsall's; east by Fletcher's St.; and west by the street which is "by the aforesaid slip."—Liber Patents, VII: 72 (Albany). The slip here referred to was later called "The Fly Market Slip," and later still Maiden Lane.

Because of privatizers on the coast, an embargo is laid on all vessels. The governour and council also consider the bread supply.—Cal. Coun. Min., 121.

1697 The committee of the common council, appointed on Nov. 17 May 29 last (q. w.) to prepare an address to the king regarding the need of repeating the "Bolting Act of 1694," submits to the board a draft of the address. It recites the ancient privilege, and complains that the prosperous condition of the city would have continued had not the assembly passed the "Bolting Act." The committee explains that this act has given "Such A Scope and Latitude to all that has A Minde to Use that trade that Every Planter butt throughout the Province is now become A Market for wheat for wheate Flower and Biskett;" that "this Your Majesties City hath been for Many Years the Only Granary of all Your Majesties Plantations in America, . . . but Now the Cry in the Streets is the want of bread." They petition the king to "Repeale Abrogate Vacate and Annull y<sup>e</sup> Aforesaid Act," and so restore "the Liberty of the Sole Bolting of Flower And Baking of Biskett for Transportation as formerly Accustomed."—M. C. C., II: 6-8.

In the preparation of this appeal to the king, the committee made extended extracts from the records of the secretary's office relating to the privileges granted to the city of New York (ibid.);
 and in 1698, when the appeal was renewed, these extracts were entered in full in the minutes of the board.—Ibid., II: 36-54.
 While the present appeal to the king was being prepared, he confirmed the Bolting Act.—See May 11, 1697. It was probably on this account that the intercession of Bellomont in behalf of another appeal was sought and obtained the next year, for which see June 28-29, 1698.

"Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, stating that, "Whereas there is of late great Scarcity of Bread in the City of New-York," he prohibits "the Exportation of any Wheat in Grain throughout the whole Province, without limitation of time, and the Exportation of Cornel and course Meal and Bread until the first day of November next ensuing."—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 58; *Cal.
 Hist. MSS., Eng.*, 257.

June In a report to the lords of trade, Fletcher explains that he has issued commissions to pirates to make war upon the French. "One Cap<sup>t</sup> Kid lately arrived here," he continues (see Aug. 28, 1696), and has "produced a Commission under the great seal of England, for suppressing of Piracy." When he was here, "many flockt to him from all parts men of desperate fortunes and necessitous in expectation of getting vast treasure." He called "from hence" with 150 men, Fletcher says he is informed, many of them being of this province. "It is generally believed here, they will have money p<sup>r</sup> fas aut nefas [by right or wrong means], that if he misse of the design intended for which he has commission, 'twill not be in Kidd's power to govern such a bord of men under no pay." See Addenda.

Fletcher states also that he "cannot in these summer months leave this Garrison being the frontier to the sea." (He spent the previous winter in Albany—see Oct. 16, 1696.) He explains, further, that he has entertained the chief sachems of the Indian allies at his own table in New York; "some of the principal leading men of the Five Nations, came down the River to pay me a visit, whom I treated with all manner of kindness and Courtesy, I ordered them on board the greatest ships we have and the guns to be fired, the King's birth day happening in that time; . . . I caused some of them to be loaded with ball, to show how far they could carry upon the River, I caused Granada shells to be fired before them and let them see the armory. I ordered six horses to be put into my coach and my coachman to drive them round the City and into the Country to take the air, by which they were extremely obliged, and dismissed them with considerable presents, at which they did express great satisfaction."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 273-76.

Col. Stevanus Cortlandt receives a patent for (1) a parcel of land

A penalty of six shillings is decreed by the common council in case any of its members, without "Reasonable Excuse," is out in his place "after due summons halfe an hour after Ringing of y<sup>e</sup> Bell."—M. C. C., II: 11. Such action, on the part of an unsalaried board, deserves notice. See March 1, 1687; Feb. 19, 1748.

The common council appoints a committee to inquire "what Sum will be wanting to finish y<sup>e</sup> bridge & Slip & Other publick works & also what y<sup>e</sup> City is Indebted."—M. C. C., II: 9. See Dec. 10, 1696. It is ordered that £120 be raised for the bridge and £60 for the slip.—Ibid., II: 11. On June 11, it was ordered that the bridge be made "Commodious for Lading & Shipping of goods;"
 and the slip "at the end of the broad Street" be finished and made "convenient."—Ibid., II: 12. On June 14, 1698, "the Committee that were formerly appointed for the Repair of the Bridge by the Custom house" was required to finish it.—Ibid., II: 30. The bridge here alluded to was the custom-house pier or bridge at the foot of the present Moore St. On April 13, 1700, it was ordered that the same bridge be extended "over to the Wharfe Cross the Dock."
Ibid., II: 104.

The common council orders that "Capt. John Tuder late High Sheriff of this City" be paid £12 "for the Execution of A Negro Slave for y<sup>e</sup> Murder of John Boyce."—M. C. C., II: 11. Such an entry in the Minutes is very unusual.

The common council orders "that the Inhabitants fronting the Slip att Burgers path doe pave y<sup>e</sup> Said Slip" according to the directions of a committee of the board with the assistance of the surveyors.—M. C. C., II: 12. See also May 11, 1696. The paving of this slip formed the street later called Old Slip.

Col. Nicholas Bayard having petitioned the common council
 "that the Church Street might be laid out he having Ground thereby on which he designs to Erect Building," it is ordered that this be done "as may be most Convenient for the Church and the Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> Same."—M. C. C., II: 11-12. The Church Street referred to was the present Exchange Place and derived its name from the South Reformed Dutch Church which was erected here. See Pls. 23-a and 27, Vol. I.

Bellomont's commission is signed at Westminster. It provides, 18 among other things, that, when it is published (see April 2, 1698), that of Fletcher shall become void. His government embraced New York, New Jersey, and all of New England except Connecticut and Rhode Island.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 266-73. See also De Peyster,
The Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellomont (1879).

Nicholas Bayard receives a patent (Liber Patents, VII: 130, Albany) of the Smith's Hill. On the modern map this tract is between Centre St. and the Boverly, Pell and Canal Sts.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; and Pls. 174, 175, Vol. III.

- 24 In the New York almanac for this year, written by John Clapp (see 1697, supra), occurs the following curious passage: "The 24 of this month is celebrated the Feast of St. John Baptist in commemoration of which, (and to keep up a happy union and lasting friendship by the sweet harmony of good society) a feast is held by the Johns of this city, at John Clapps in the Bowry, where any Gentleman whose Christian name is John, may find a hearty well-come to joyn in consort with his namesakes."—Man. Com. Coun.
 (1853), 454-56. Madam Knight, who visited New York in 1704, speaks of the "Houses of entertainment at a place called the Bowery," one of them undoubtedly the tavern of John Clapp. This was formerly the tavern of Adriaen Cornelissen.—See April 23, 1680.

- Instructions for Bellomont are issued at Whitehall, with which (it is stated in the document) he will receive his commission (dated June 18). His council is named, whom he shall call together as soon as he arrives in New York. He shall then publish his commission, etc. Like his predecessors, he is required to "transmitt unto His Maj<sup>t</sup>y by the first opportunity a map with the exact description of the whole territory under your Govern<sup>t</sup> with the several plantaorder is a repetition of that of June 24, 1696 (q. v.). For the original

- The war between the English and French, known as King Will-iam's war, is ended by the treaty of Ryswick between William III and Louis XIV. —See A Collection of all the Treaties of Peace (London, 1772), 13-19. It restores Acadia, etc., to the French.—Winnic,

- The first city hall or "Stadt Huys," which stood at the present 71-73 Pearl St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973), is occupied for the last time. On Oct. 2, the mayor had informed the common council that on Oct. 5 "the Suprem<sup>e</sup> Courte of y<sup>e</sup> Province" would sit, and that, as "Several Criminals" were to be tried, a large number of people were expected to be present. "Insumch that it is fear<sup>d</sup> the City Hall will not be of Sufficient Strength to Containe them." Two carpenters and a bricklayer were appointed to examine the building. The bricklayer reported that the walls "are Sufficient to Sustain the Weight that may be therein," and one of the carpenters reported "that with six Studds and a Planke the Same may be Secured from Any danger of fallioge." It is ordered that the building be so secured.—M. C. C., II: 15-16, 67-68, 107.
 On Oct. 4, the mayor produced the letter from William Smith and William Fishorne, the supreme court judges, who stated that they were "Informed that your present Town house is Run soe much to Decay that No Considerable Number of People Can their Appear with safety of their lives," and they asked that "Some Other place" might be prepared "wherein his Majesties Said Courte may be more Conveniently held." It was ordered that this letter be answered by explaining to the judges "that before the Receipt of their letter this board had taken Care . . . to put Studds and 1697 Planke for y<sup>e</sup> Making of the City Hall Secure from falling."— Oct. Ibid., II: 16-17. The court met on the 5th, but "for the insufficiency 5 of the City hall it was immediately adjourned to the Dutch Church."—From records, supreme court of judicature, Apr. 4, 1693 to Apr. 1, 1701 (MSS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. archives. On Oct. 9, the court passed the following resolution:

"Whereas it appears to this Court that for divers years Last past the City Hall or Townhouse of this City has been decayed and insufficient for the holding their his Majties courts & that the Magistrates of the City have been thereof advertized by this Court & have still promised to Erect & build a new one which is not yet done & A surveigh of severall Emnent Massos & Carpenters having by order of the Cheife Justice bene thereof had who doe Certifie the Insufficiencie thereof by reason whereof His Majties Supreme Court hath been Obliged to adjourne from Place to Place and the Sheriffe of this City and County having also Complayed to us of the insufficiency of the present Goale, the Justices having maturely considered the same doe hereby order And decree that the said City for the reason aforesaid be Amerced and fined for the use of Our Sovereign Lord the King three hundred pounds unless within two years from the date hereof they fiode and Provide a sufficient town house or hall wherein his Majties Courts of Judicature may be held and kept."—Ibid. See also Nov. 13.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, stating Nov. that "many of the Souleiders of his Majesties four Compaons, appointed for the Security and Defence of this Province, have deserted His Majesties Service." The proclamation relates to their capture. —From Miss A. R. Hasse's "Bibliography," in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 58.

"The present City Hall Seeming to be Defective [see Oct. 20, 1695; May 12, 1696; Oct. 5, 1697] whereby his Majesty subjects might be Endangered Should the Courte of Judicature be longer held there it is therefore Resolved y<sup>e</sup> the Courts of this City & Common Council doe sitt att the house of George Rescarrick Adjoyning to y<sup>e</sup> City Hall untill the 13th day of October Next." Rescarrick is allowed £12 for the period beginning Oct. 1 last.—M. C. C., II: 18. As early as June, 1698, however, another one was used for the temporary city hall, that of Joseph Davis, as appears by a quarter-year's rent paid to him for the period ending Aug. 1, 1698.—See under Oct. 13, 1698. In a report to the common council by the corporation council and street commissioner on Nov. 14, 1808, reviewing the history of the first and second city halls, it was noted that "the house of George Kescarrick, adjoining the City Hall," was still standing, being "probably that owned by the late Widow Lawrence deceased."—M. C. C. (1784-1831), V: 327.

Fletcher expects the Earl of Bellomont to arrive with clothing for the soldiers.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 293.

The common council appoints a committee "to Lay out in Convenient Lotts the Ground on y<sup>e</sup> West Side of the Custom house Bridge," and have a plan of it drawn.—M. C. C., II: 19. The plan was submitted to the board on Nov. 20, showing the ground "laid out in fourteen lotts of 25 foot wide." This was approved.—Ibid., II: 20. See, further, Nov. 23. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 989, and Chronology, 1700.

About two months after the close of King William's war, the government recommended the substitution of a civil watch for the existing military one. The common council thereupon arranges that the mayor shall engage "four Sober honest men . . . to keep a Watch in this City Every Night until the 25th day of March Next & that they hourly goe through the Several Wards of this City during the Said time in Order to Prevent Irregularities fire &c."—M. C. C., II: 20. On Dec. 2, it was resolved that the bell-

- man and watch should give £500 security.—Ibid. II: 24. See also

- 23 "The Mayor having Acquainted the board of y<sup>e</sup> Insufficiency of the City Hall it is the Opinion of the whole board (oonly one dissenting) that there is a Necessity of building A New City Hall for y<sup>e</sup> publick Service.—M. C. C., II: 20. They decide that the new lots, laid out on the west side of the custom house bridge (see Nov. 17), "Shall not be Sold or Disposed for y<sup>e</sup> building of A City Hall"—Ibid., II: 20-21. See also May 12, 1696.

 School in the publick City Hall as has been formerly Granted to him by the preceding Mayor & Aldermen." Referred to the Mayor.—M. C. C., II: 21.
- " The common council having considered "the great Inconveniency that Attends this City being A trading place for want of it is ordered "that all and Every of the house Keepers within this

 Every Seventh house in the Several Wards of this City doe day of March Next Cause A Lantern & Candle to be hung out on A Pole."—Ibid., II: 23. This was the first attempt at lighting the city streets. The system continued for over 60 years.—See Nov. 23, 1761.

- Dec. 2 The petition of the church-wardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church, of Sept. 6 (p. v.), is considered by Fletcher and his council at the fort. They record in the "Council Book" that "One of the captives [in Salee, Morocco], having escaped is come home, the others are dead oonly one, named Bartholomew Rouston [Rushton] is removed up into the Country who by the report of him who is escaped from Salley cannot be redeemed; His Majties Chappell [in the fort] is almost finished and Trinity Church being a Publick structure erecting for the service of God by the Voluntary Contribution of some people, Which is a publick and plus use and much is wanted to finish it." It is agreed "that the money raised by virtue of the License bearing date the 8th day of June 1693 [p. v.], for the redemption of the said Captives in Salley [shall] be applied to the use of Trinity Church to finish the building thereof . . .
 Provided always that if it be possible to purchase the redemption of the said Bartholomew [Rushton] that . . . Trinity Church [will] be accountable for . . . the redemption." It is ordered that the trustees of the redemption fund deliver the papers, etc. relating to it to Thomas Wenham and Robert Lutting, the church-wardens.
 —Dec. Hist. N. Y., III: 254. It having been authoritatively reported on Feb. 4, 1700, from Cadix, that Rushton and another had been liberated, Amsterdam agents wrote to the trustees of the fund, on March 20, 1700, to ask how the balance in their hands should be remitted to New York.—Ibid., III: 254-55. "On April 10, 1705, Trinity Church acknowledged the receipts of certain wares from Holland, which represented the sum sent thither, for the redemption of the slaves out of Salley, and which when sold, amounted to £448."—Eccles. Rec., III: 1065, citing Berrian's Hist. of Trin. Church. The vestry received word from London on Feb. 27, 1706, also, that the Amsterdam agents had remitted from Holland £190:12:2. (originally intended to redeem the captives), and of this sum £170:2:2 had been laid out in 38 "half pecks of Stroud wares" and shipped to the church-wardens.—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- 6 "Ordered, That Mr Mayr & Mr Everts do take Care that the Scaffold of the Steeple be struck & also such other things [done] as will be necessary & Convenient for the preservation of the Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- 20 "Gov. Fletcher surrenders the plate for Kings chapel to the clerk of the council."—Cal. Coun. Min., 129. This date marks approximately the completion of the rebuilt chapel in the fort.— See July 27, 1693. The building was destroyed by fire on March 18, 1741 (p. v.), and was not rebuilt.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key,
 III: 933.
- 25 The Rev. William Vesey, the first rector of Trinity church, is inducted into office by Gov. Fletcher in the new Dutch Church in Garden St., as Trinity is not yet ready for use. The Episcopal congregation was given the use of the Dutch Church for about three months. In 1779, Trinity Church returned the courtesy by granting to the congregation of the Middle Dutch Church (at Nassau and Liberty Sts.) the use of St. George's Church (on Beekman St.), when the Dutch Church was being used as a hospital for British troops.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1218-19, and authorities there cited.—See Jan. 26, 1695.
- It is ordered by the common council that "the Mayor Direct A Warrant to the Treasurer to Purchase four Barrells of Powder for y<sup>e</sup> saluting the Earle of Bellomont on his Arrival."—M. C. C., II: 25.
- The council orders a warrant issued to Onzeel van Swieten for painting and glass in the chapel (in the fort).—Cal. Coun. Min., 128.

 (London, 1698), 76-81.
- The colony of New York this year has one church with one minister in the fort, one church and one minister in the city (both organizations being of the Church of England), two Dutch churches with two ministers, and one French church with one minister. The colony also has one library.—From Apostolick Charity, a discourse by Rev. Thomas Bray, D.D., delivered at St. Paul's, London, Dec.
 19, 1697, and published in 1698 with a list of the churches, ministers, and libraries in America. There was already a small library in Rensselaerswyck (Albany) as early as 1642.—O'Callaghan, *Hist.
 N. Neth.*, I: 454.
- The library here mentioned was the first in New York. The manuscript catalogue of it is still in the possession of "Dr. Bray's Associates," of London, who were the trustees organized by Dr.
 Bray in 1723. This catalogue includes 157 titles, numbering 220 volumes, under the heading "A Register of y<sup>e</sup> Books Sent Towards Laying y<sup>e</sup> Foundation of a Provincial Library in New York."—Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Soc. Library, 12-13. A set of rules for the use of these books, written in 1697, is still in the collection of manuscripts left by Dr. Bray to Sion College, London. This list shows that the books were intended "for y<sup>e</sup> Use of y<sup>e</sup> Church of England Ministers belonging to y<sup>e</sup> Fort, & City of New York, & for y<sup>e</sup> Chaplains of his Majties Ships during their Residence in y<sup>e</sup> Port." It also states that it was "desir'd y<sup>e</sup> Books may be fixt in some publick Roor in y<sup>e</sup> Fort, or in y<sup>e</sup> Vestry of y<sup>e</sup> Church in New York."—Ibid., 16.
 It appears by the vestry minutes of Trinity Church, under date of June 8, 1698, that Gov. Bellomont delivered the books to the Rev.
 Mr. Vesey, and that they were "sent over by y<sup>e</sup> right Reverend Henry [Compton], Lord Bishop of London for y<sup>e</sup> Use of Trinity Church." The vestry ordered that the books "be Clerke in the custody of Mr Vesey untill further order and that y<sup>e</sup> Clerk do register the Catalogue of the books in the vestry book."—Ibid., 17. Probably it is this library which Oldmixon (in The British Empire in America, [1808], I: 128) states was "erected" in 1700. See Addenda.
- Dr. Keep (cited above, 118-20) presents a summary of the early efforts to establish a public library in New York. The Trinity Parish Library (1698), which was increased later, was almost entirely destroyed in the fire of 1776. The books that survived are now in the library of the General Theological Seminary, except the Clarendon history, which is in the Society Library.
- The second library was the Sharpe Collection, given in 1713-15 by Chaplain John Sharpe (see March 11, 1713) for a "Publick Library." This remained in private hands until (probably) it was united with the Corporation Library in 1730. Most of its 238 volumes survived the Revolution and are now in the Society Library.
- The third library was the Corporation Library (1730). This was the City's first real public circulating library. It was originally the private collection of the Rev. Dr. John Millington, an English clergyman, who bequeathed it to the Society for Propagating the

- 1698 Gospel, which gave it (1642 volumes) to New York. These books also were scattered by the British in 1776.
- The fourth library, the New York Society Library, was founded in 1754, and was incorporated in 1772 as a public subscription circulating library. "Practically exterminated by the atrocious vandalism of the British troops." Dr. Keep states, "scarcely a volume of its pre-Revolutionary collection is known to have survived save the Sharpe books, which, as part of the Corporation Library, were formerly in its care."
- The fifth library was that of King's College, the bequest in 1757 of the private library of Joseph Murray, Esq. It was removed in 1776 to the city hall, and there destroyed.
- The sixth and last library mentioned by Keep as having been founded before the Revolution was that of the Union Library Society of New York, organized in 1771, and given space in the city hall in 1774. It did not survive the Revolution.—See Index of Keep's book for further details; see also June 27, 1729; April 22, 1730; April 8, 1754; March 11, 1733; and Feb. 22, 1776.
- A census of the province, "taken by the High Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace in each respective County," by order of the governor, shows that the city and county of New York have a population of 1,019 men, 1,057 women, 2,161 children, 700 negroes (total, 4,937). The population of the province is 18,067.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 420.
- About this year, the first Friends' Meeting House or Quaker place of worship (see 1696) was erected in New York, at what is now Liberty Pl., near Liberty St.—Liber Deeds, XXIII: 34 (New York). The congregation rebuilt and removed from this site to Liberty St., west of Liberty Pl. prior to 1755 (Liber Deeds, XXXI: 5; New York; Liber Deeds, XXI: 171, Albany; cf. Pl. 34, Vol. I, on which the new site is shown). They continued here until 1802. See 1755, 1790, 1802. See Pls. 26, 27, 27-A-3, 30, and 32, Vol. I.
- The ship "Fortune," commanded by Thomas Moston, returned to New York in the Summer of 1698, laden with booty which had been transferred to her at Madagascar from the pirate ship of one John Hoare. "By hasty and secret efforts, in the night, the cargo of the Fortune was gotten on shore, and stowed in the house of one Van Sweeten, a merchant who was interested in the enterprise. Finding which, Bellomont commanded the civil officers to make seizure of the goods; the officers having the instructions made a formal seizure, and were about to take them from the premises for legal forfeiture, when nearly the whole body of merchants interposed, and proceeding to violence, they locked up the officers in the house, where, after being confined for three hours, they were only released by the approach of the Lieutenant Governor, with three files of men, who broke open the doors and set the officers at liberty. The ship Fortune was forfeited."—From "The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 464. For the official reports from New York regarding this episode, and the character of the vessel "Fortune," see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 303, 304, 323, 354, 355; 377, 388, 397, 446, 460, 523.
- Frederick Philipse, about this time, expected a ship from Madagascar carrying contraband goods, and to avoid forfeiture sent his son Adolphus in a vessel, ostensibly bound for Virginia. This vessel met the expected ship, took from her great quantities of East India goods, and sailed to the Delaware, leaving the Madagascar ship to enter the port of New York with only negroes on board. The East India goods were afterwards sent to Hamburg, where, however, the vessel was seized and the crew brought to trial.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 464-65.
- The defensive position taken by the merchants of New York against the charges in which they were implicated—of supporting piracy—is explained by various concrete examples in ibid., 465-69. Formidable opposition developed against Bellomont's administration throughout the mercantile classes. It was asserted that his rigorous policy had prevented £100,000 from being brought into the city since his arrival.—Ibid., 469. See Chronology, passim.
- See A. Jan. 8 Bellomont writes to the lords of trade from Barbadoes, where his ship has been driven by storms, that he expects to start for New York by Feb. 7.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 296.
- 17 "Ordered, That the Church Wardens & M<sup>r</sup> James Everts do with all Convenient expedition purchase plank & boards suitable for the making of Doors for the Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- 31 "His Excellency Benjamin Fletcher Cap. General & Govern<sup>r</sup> in Chief of this Province being the founder & Chief promoter of Trinity Church & being desirous at his charge to Erect a private Pew for the use of his family &c. This Board having a due Sense of all his Excell<sup>y</sup>'s favours have ordered that M<sup>r</sup> James Everts do lay out the ground for the same in the east part of the Church next to the Chancel, to remain for ever to the aforesaid use, or the use of others as his Excel<sup>l</sup> shall think to direct."—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- "Ordered, That Trinity Church be cleared to morrow [Tuesday], Divine Service being to be read therein the next Sunday" (Feb. 6).—Ibid.
- "Ordered, That M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Wenham & M<sup>r</sup> Robert Lurting Church Wardens & May<sup>r</sup> William Merrct, Capt William Morris & Capt Thomas Clark be a Coffee for the procuring of glass & other materials for the finishing of the Windows of Trinity Church & also for the making of the Doors thereof & that they performe the same with all Convenient Expedition."—Ibid.
- Although divine service was to be read in Trinity Church on this Sunday (see Jan. 31), such service was either not held on this day, or, if held, was not treated as the first formal opening of the church.—See March 13. Berrian failed to observe that Old Style was used in the dates of record, when he stated: "The new Rector first performed divine service in Trinity Church on the 6th of February, 1697."—See An Hist. Sketch of Trin. Church (1847), 23.
- "Ordered, That M<sup>r</sup> James Everts & M<sup>r</sup> Jeremiah Tothill do take care to Level the ground in the Church & to provide such materials as will be necessary for the setting up of the Pulpit."—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- The governor's council orders that a gallery for the governor and council be built in Trinity Church at the expense of the provincial government.—Cal. Coun. Min., 129. See March 26.
- Fletcher issues two proclamations, printed by Bradford, one giving notice of the cessation of hostilities between the British and French, and the other appointing March 10 a day of thanksgiving for New York, Orange, Kings, Queens, Westchester, and Richmond Counties, and March 24, for Albany, Ulster, Dutchess, and Suffolk Counties.—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 59.
- The conflict of factions is opened anew by the appearance of an anonymous tract, dated Dec. 31, 1697, entitled A Letter From A Gentleman of the City of New York To Another. Concerning the Troubles which hapened in that Province in the time of the late Happy Revolution. This tract, having been "found at the printer's," is laid before the governor's council on March 4, 1698. They are "unanimously of opinion that it contains nothing but truth, and that it ought to be printed and published with the other papers mentioned therein."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 315, footnote, citing Coun. Min., Albany. It was printed by Bradford (1698), and reprinted in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo ed.), II: 425-35 (and ibid., 4to ed., II: 243-49). This Letter, which is one of the most radical of the anti-Leislerian statements, gives a detailed summary of events into which the province was plunged by the Leisler rebellion, as viewed by one of his opponents. The tract contains, in addition: (a) The King's Letter to Nicholson, of July 30, 1689 (see under July 29, 1689); (b) The Resolves of the House of Representatives, of April 17, 1693; (c) An Address to his Excellency Colonel Slaughter, of April 17, 1693; and (d) the Queen's Order of March 17 (March 11 in N. Y. Col. Docs.), 1692 (see Oct. 15, 1691), that the estates of Leisler and Milboure be restored to their families "as objects of her Majestys mercy,"—for which see Chronology under these dates.
- Another tract, answering this, was soon published in Boston, entitled Loyalty Vindicated; being an Answer to a Late False, Seditious and Scandalous Pamphlet entitled, "A Letter from a Gent., Etc." Published for the Sake of Truth and Justice, by a Hearty Lover of King William and the Protestant Religion. This tract was reprinted in 1868 in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 365-94. Regarding the consequences of this conflict of factions, see May 25 and June 14, 1698.
- "Ordered, That Capt. Tho: Clarke, M<sup>r</sup> W<sup>m</sup> Huddleston & M<sup>r</sup> John Crooke do take care that the Church be Cleered & put into the best posture they can in order that Divine Service & the Communion be there Administred the next Sabbath day" (March 13).—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- The ceremonies of the "first opening" of Trinity Church are held. A "Letter of Induction," written by Fletcher, dated March 25, certifies that, after the reading of the morning and evening service, the Rev. William Vesey declared "his unfeigned assent and

- 1698 consent" to the prayer-book, rites, and ceremonies of the Church of England, and also read a certificate from the Bishop of London that he "had subscribed the acknowledgement and Declaration according to the act of Uniformity."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1219.
- 14 "Ordered, That Mr Thomas Wenham do draw a note on Chidley Brooke Esq<sup>r</sup> to pay to John Ellison Joyner the Sum of Thirty pounds Current money of New York it being part payment for the making of the Pulpit &c the same being money Subscribed by y<sup>e</sup> said Chidley Brooke for the better carrying on of the building of y<sup>e</sup> said Church.
- "Resolved, That the Pulpit of Trinity Church be removed according to a draft this night produced and ordered that Capt. Thomas Clarke & Capt. Jeremiah Tothill do take care the same be forthwith effected."—Trin. Min. (MS).
- 26 "Ordered, That the Gallery design'd to be built on y<sup>e</sup> South side of Trinity Church at y<sup>e</sup> Charge of y<sup>e</sup> Govern<sup>r</sup> for y<sup>e</sup> Use of y<sup>e</sup> Gov<sup>r</sup> & Council of this province [see Feb. 10] have a part added to it at y<sup>e</sup> charge of this Corporation to run towards y<sup>e</sup> West end of y<sup>e</sup> Church & those persons that will have pews therein do in proportion pay y<sup>e</sup> Charge thereof."—Trin. Min. (MS).
- Apr. 2 Bellomont arrives at New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 302. He is received "magnificently,"—Diary of Samuel Sewall, op. cit., I: 476. On the same day, his commission and that of Lieut.-Gov. John Nanfan are published at the city hall, "after y<sup>e</sup> Ringing of three Bells; the seals are delivered to Bellomont, and the oaths administered to him and Nanfan; the council is sworn in; and the governour publishes a proclamation to continue all officers in their places until further order."—M. C. C., II: 26; Cal. Coun. Min., 130.
- " Bellomont issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting cursing, swearing, immoderate drinking, Sabbath breaking, and all sorts of lewdness and profane behaviour in word or action.—From the original broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library. See reproduction on Pl. 25, Vol. IV.
- 4 An address, reciting the allegiance of "the Mayor Recorder Aldermen and Assistants" to the crown and the new governour, is read and approved by the common council, which orders that it be engrossed and recorded.—M. C. C., II: 26-27.
- See A. 6 Bellomont issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, commanding that sheriffs, etc., "take effectual Care that there be a Free and Fair Election of Members for the ensuing Assembly."—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography," N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 59.
- 11 "The common council resolves "that Dinner be prepared" at the city's expense for the entertainment of the Earl of Bellomont, and a committee is appointed "to make A Bill of Fare," calling to their assistance "Such Cooks as they Shall thinke Necessary to Advise them."—M. C. C., II: 28. On July 7, a warrant was issued to pay £4:17:6 to Joseph Davis, "for Several Charges made at his houses by the Mayor Aldermen and Common Council on Several Publick Occasions & particularly on my Lord Bellomonts Arrival."—Ibid., II: 35-36.
- 12 News reaches Boston of Bellomont's arrival at New York. Three days later the council there received a communication from him. He remained in New York for a year or more, sending instructions to Stoughton, who as lieutenant-governour directed the actions of the council there. Bellomont arrived in Boston on May 26, 1699.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 98, citing John Marshall's diary, printed in the Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceedings (1884), 153.
- 18 A committee of Trinity vestry, waiting upon Gov. Bellomont "with a draft of the Church in order for his Lord<sup>sh</sup> to assign a place for y<sup>e</sup> building of a Pew, for himself & Family," is informed that he desires "a place on y<sup>e</sup> South side of y<sup>e</sup> Church fronting the pulpit for y<sup>e</sup> setting of his pew wh<sup>ch</sup> is assign'd to him accordingly."—Trin. Min. (MS). See also April 26.
- 26 Fletcher, having been recalled, makes a gift of his pew at the east end of Trinity Church to Col. Nicholas Bayard, Col. Caleb Heathcote, and such other members of the council "as are not Otherwise seated and Provided with pews in the said Church & to such Persons of Quality & Gen<sup>l</sup> Travelling to the said City," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 249. Will Sharpe, one of the witnesses to the deed of gift, made attestation on Oct. 25, 1711, that he saw Fletcher seal and deliver the deed as his voluntary act.—Ibid., III: 249-50; *Cal. Hist. - May 8 Bellomont, in his first report to the lords of trade, says: "I hope methods will be found for the quieting and uniting the minds of the people, who have been divided with great heats for these several years, occasioned at first by the execution of those men who were most forward in the happy Revolution." He complains that the council has not yet informed him of the state of the province or offered to assist him in the government, although they know he comes as a stranger. He says that "constant Cabels and clubbs of them are held daily at Colonel Fletcher's lodgings (from whence I have a great reason to believe) false reports and rumors are spread about the City and province, whereby mens minds are disturbed, and an odium cast upon the Govern<sup>r</sup>, and thus these Gentlemen of the Council by their drawing back endeavour to make this Govern<sup>r</sup> uneasy to me." He mentions the ill administration of the late government; the corruption of the officers of the revenue, which has been great for years, although trade has increased and the city has been enlarged and enriched; the decrease in the revenue arising from the customs to one-half of what it was ten years ago; and the unwillingness of the collector, Chidley Brooke, to seize an "unfree" ship, laden with rich East India goods (partly obtained as a pirate ship).
- Bellomont promises to do his best to obtain observance of the "Acts of Trade," but as most of the council are illicit traders he expects little help from them. He expects to suspend several of them and try to find fitter persons for their places. "This city hath likewise been a nest of Pirates," he states, "and I already find that several of their ships have been (and now are) out, have their owners and were fitted from this Port, and have Commissions to act as privateers, from the late Gov<sup>r</sup> here." . . . He explains that "the cry of the people, is so great that Coll: Fletcher hath imbezeld and converted to his own use, great sums of their publick moneys," etc. He describes the methods of the pirates. No naval officer was appointed by Fletcher to be a check on the collector, but both offices were filled by Brooke himself. No care was taken for any register for ships in New York, but Bellomont states that he has appointed "a distinct Naval Officer and a Register according to the authority and intent of the act of Parliament." His reasons for this are given, and the method of remedying the situation. He has given orders for the numbering of the inhabitants of the province and of the Five Nations of Indians.
- He also has given orders to Col. Romar, the king's chief engineer, to survey all the fortifications of the province. He found the soldiers "in a miserable condition, not half the number [called for] by the establishment, and almost starved, and many complaints of hardships done them." He sends to the lords of trade "a printed collection of all the Laws of New York together with print<sup>d</sup> procl<sup>ms</sup> for suppressing of vice and to prevent corruptions in the Elections and returns of Representatives for the ensuing Assembly, a practice much complained of."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 302-6.
- An extraordinary meeting of the governour's council is held; an oath of secrecy is administered to the lieutenant-governour, also to Edward Randolph and Thomas Weaver who are not members of the council, and an investigation is made into Gov. Fletcher's and William Nicolls' connection with pirates. Nicolls is suspended from the council, and Capt. Evans is put under bail.—Cal. Coun. Min., 130-31. See also June 7 and 22, 1698. Bellomont's own account of this meeting may be thus summarized: Having summoned the council, he communicates to them his instructions regarding pirates and the evidence in relation to Fletcher and Nicolls. The council, expressing "abhorrence of these practices," agrees with Bellomont "that the whole evidence should have the seal of the province affixed, and be transmitted home to His Majesty, with Coll: Fletcher a prisoner." The council thinks Nicolls "ought to answer for this offence here where he committed it," because his estate and his ties by marriage are here; but Bellomont thinks he should be sent with Fletcher to answer to the king in England. Bellomont is prevailed upon to accept security for Nicolls' appearance, and dismisses him from the council until the king's pleasure is known.
- The council joins with Bellomont in issuing a proclamation against pirates. Regarding Fletcher, Bellomont informs the lords of trade that he has "presumed not to deal harshly with one who hath been honoured with His Maj<sup>ty</sup>s Commission," and simply sends them the proofs against him which they may offer to the king.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 309.
- In a second letter of this date to the lords of trade, Bellomont explains in detail the encouragement and protection given by Fletcher to pirates. His disclosures involve Col. Bayard, Emott,

- 1698 Weeks, and William Nicolls. In a postscript to this letter, dated May 18, he states: "I have just now found the records of the 8 Commissions to the Pyrates and made discovery of the bonds the Pyrates entered into to Coll. Fletcher when he granted them Commissions, and they appear so fraudulent that it is a manifestation that he was made acquainted with their design of Piracy." He describes these documents.—Ibid., IV: 306-9. See also May 25, arrest of pirates and the suppression of piracy.—Cal. Hist. MSS.,

- "Ordered, That either of the Church Warden's and M<sup>r</sup>. Everts do take care, that y<sup>e</sup> Doore at y<sup>e</sup> West End of the Church be forthwith put up."—Trin. Min. (MS.).
- 12 In the postscript to a letter of this date, to Lord Summers, Lord Bellomont writes from New York: "Sr Edm<sup>d</sup> Andros had removed part of y<sup>e</sup> Records from hence to Boston, so y<sup>t</sup> I could not find y<sup>e</sup> commission of Coll. Nicholson for Lt<sup>t</sup> Gov<sup>t</sup> of this province end<sup>d</sup> here, therefore sent to M<sup>r</sup> Addington secretary of y<sup>e</sup> coun-cell at Boston, who found it there, and that's y<sup>e</sup> reason of its being attested by him."—From Clarendon MSS., 102, folio 20b, in Bodleian Library (transcript in Library of Congress). See May 8, 1691.
- 18 In a message to the provincial legislature, Bellomont says: "I cannot but observe to you what a legacy my predecessor has left me and what difficulties to struggle with a divided people, an empty Treasury, a few miserable naked halfe starv'd soldiers not halfe the number the King allowed pay for, the fortifications and even the Governours house very much out of repair and, in a word, Gentlemen, the whole government out of frame; . . . It has been represented to the government in England that this Province hath been a noted receptacle of Pyrates and the trade of it under no restriction but the Acts of Trade violated by the neglect and connivance of those whose duty it was to have prevented it. . . ."
Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 111-12.
- "Bellomont suspects that one of the king's ships, the "Richmond," is to be used by her commander as a pirate ship. In a letter to the lords of the admiralty, he recommends that another vessel (a swift sailer with a brisk commander) be sent to the assistance of the ships of war already here, "which would discourage and destroy these vermine who have hitherto made New York their nest of safety."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 311-13.
- 23 The common council orders that "for y<sup>e</sup> time to Come No Freemen be admitted into this City but what Shall be See Allowed by the Mayor and three Aldermen pursuant to the directions of the Charter."—M. C. C., II: 29. See April 27, 1686. This order may be understood readily when it is noted that the charter provisions gave the making of freemen virtually into the hands of the mayor's court (where the assistant aldermen had no voice). "Freedoms" are regularly recorded, therefore, in the Mayor's Court Minutes (see March 29, 1715), not in the Common Council Minutes. The common council, however, had, on Jan. 23, 1696 (q. v.), assumed such authority, and on at least one other occasion (see Dec. 13, 1695) had gone far in the same direction. It is such irregularity that the board appears now to recognize. In a subsequent order, of June 28 (q. v.), registration of freemen "in the presence of the Mayor and Aldermen" is specifically required. For a later irregularity, see Oct. 23, 1703. For the oath of a freeman, see Sept. 1, 1726.
- 25 In the postscript of a letter to Sec. Popple, Bellomont advises:
 "the sure way of conveying letters to me is by the way of Boston, whence the post comes every week to this place."
 He adds: "I desire you will send to the pay office to prevent Coll: Fletcher's receiving any part, for I shall prove great sums of money upon him which he has defrauded the Officers and Soldiers of here."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 317.
- "Bellomont writes to the lords of the treasury about the corrupt and negligent character of the revenue officers, stating that "there have been the greatest abuses committed in relation to Trade." The trade is double what it was ten years ago, and "the City grown vastly rich and populous and increased to double the number of houses; and yet," he says, "by comparing the accounts of the customers I find them greatly decreased, and on enquiry I am informed there hath been a most lyncensic Trade with Pyrats" etc. (See also May 8). "There was no Naval Officer distinct from the Collector, nor any register appointed by the late Gov<sup>t</sup> whereby inconveniences will arise to ships belonging to this Port." He has appointed Thomas Palmer naval officer and register of the province. May He further reports that he has "refused to permit Proclamations to be printed in this City by the Gov<sup>t</sup> of the Jerseys publishing that Perth Amboy and Burlington are free ports."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 317-18.
- "Bellomont writes to the lords of trade regarding "the great pains Coll: Fletcher took to divide the people here and to foment the few between Leisler's party and the opposite party." He states that Fletcher "went so far in it as to publish a book (and took the advice of Council in doing it) to revive the old story of Leisler."—
N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 315, citing Common Minutes. See also March 4, - 27 Bellomont writes to the commissioners of the customs, as he has done to the lords of trade and the lords of the treasury, regarding the decrease of customs revenues. He has already put a check upon illicit trade and on purchased protection; but, he says, "the observance of the laws of trade was so great a Novelty that it gave as great discontent as if it had been an infringement of their charter."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 319.
- June A brick powder magazine was built this month by Col. Romer over the entrance gateway to the fort. The cost was £800.—N. Y.
Col. Docs., IV: 967, 969. The workmanship was condemned by Romer himself in a letter to Bellomont on Oct. 12 (q. v.), and by Cornbury in a report to the lords of trade in 1702.—Ibid. But see ibid., IV: 682. Regarding Romer's activities in the province generally, see Oct. 12.
- 6 Bellomont, learning that East India goods, not legally imported, were at one Mr. Van Sweeten's house, sends the collector and searcher of the customs to seize them. They do so, but the merchants cause the officers to be locked up there, and Bellomont, hearing this and believing them in danger of being murdered, sends the lieutenant-governour and three files of men with his own servants, who break open Van Sweeten's house, release the officers and assist them to take the goods to the custom-house. The next day, when Bellomont proposed making another seizure, Mr. Monsey, one of the two commissioners whom Bellomont had appointed in Brooke's place, and who had been chief searcher for six years, resigned without giving his reason. Bellomont thus missed making a seizure of £1,000 worth of goods for lack of a proper officer.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., IV: 323-24.
- 7 William Pinthorne is suspended from the council; Chidley Brooke, likewise, from the offices of receiver-general, collector of customs, and judge, and from the council. Edward Randolph, the surveyor-general, signs the governour's order suspending Brooke as judge.—Cal. Coun. Min., 131. See also June 22.

 the fort made by Fletcher be finished; also that the gate-house be Publick house of Office on y<sup>e</sup> Dock" be cleaned and repaired, and someone appointed to keep it clean.—M. C. C., II: 30. On

- "A bill passes the provincial legislature for the reconciliation of the factions in the province. This became necessary because an act of parliament, passed on May 11, 1697, for the same purpose, had failed to produce the desired effect. The new bill provides that no supposed wrongful act done from April 18, 1689, to Aug.
 30, 1692 (the period of the Leisler régime), "shall at any time hereafter be brought in Question or dispute but that y<sup>e</sup> same be forgiven, remitted, indulted, Released and put in utter oblivion." All judgments in suits at law, already obtained in court on such account, are discharged and annulled by this bill, except debts due under voluntary contract. The bill further declares that no one "shall disdainfully upbraid any person or persons with y<sup>e</sup> name of Leislerite or the murdering or Killiing of Leisler or any other opprobrious words or terms by which the peace of y<sup>e</sup> government may in any measure be disturbed." The punishment imposed for violation of this law is to be a fine, or, in the absence of payment

1698 the offender "shall be ordered to sit two hours of y<sup>e</sup> forenoon in June the Stocks in the Towne . . . with an Inscription on his forehead reciting y<sup>e</sup> words by him disdainfully uttered."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 394-97.

" Bellomont had expected the assembly would raise money to correct various evils in the province, such as the empty treasury, the lack of food and clothing for the soldiers, and the need of repairs to the fortifications, governor's house, etc. Their failure is condemned in his address to them on this date: "You have now sat a whole month . . . and have done nothing, either for the service of his Majesty or the good of y<sup>e</sup> country. . . . Your proceedings have been so unwarrantable, wholly tending to strife and division, and indeed disloyal to his Majesty and his laws, and destructive to the rights and liberties of the people, that I do think fit to dissolve this present assembly, and it is dissolved accordingly."—Assemb. Jour., I: 91. As he told the council, "the heats and animosities in the Assembly were so great they did altogether obstruct the Kings service."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 115. See also March 4 and May 25, 1698; and Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 195.

22 Bellomont informs the lords of trade that Fletcher "managed the Council here by gratifications of grants of lands, connivance at their unlawful trade," etc. He says that since removing Nicolls ("chief Broker in the matter of protecting Pirates") from the council (see May 8) he has evidence of his making a bargain for passing an act of assembly to the prejudice of the city of New York, that the act passed with Fletcher's consent, and part of the agreed price was paid to Nicolls, etc. William Pinthorne has been suspended from the council (see June 7) "for speaking most scandalous & reproachful words of his Majesty's person;" and Bellomont explains Pinthorne's previous character and misconduct. Bellomont has also suspended Chidley Brooke (see June 7) "from the Council and from his Offices of Collector of the Customs and Receiver Gen<sup>l</sup> of New York," after consulting with Mr. Randolph, the surveyor-general of customs here.

He states that Fletcher's chief instruments have been Papists and Jacobites; also that those whom Fletcher appointed sheriffs of the counties have been "the scum of the people, Taylors, and other scandalous persons," who, notwithstanding Bellomont's proclamations strictly commanding all fairness at elections, made false returns at the last election for assembly, and great confusion resulted on the seating of members. Bellomont has dissolved the assembly "who have sat near a month and have done nothing but villanous tricks, to justify the falseness and unfairness of the Sheriffs returns." He intends to appoint better men sheriffs, and call another assembly. He mentions the miserable condition the king's forces are in; that Fletcher used them "so barbarously that they deserted," cheated them out of their pay, and sent home false muster-rolls. Bellomont, by advice of the council, nominates Thomas Weaver to be agent of the province, that, according to the directions of the lords of trade, the state of the province may from time to time be represented to them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 320-26.

25 Henry Beekman is examined by the governor and council regarding his connection with the "Act against Unlawful By-laws" (the Bolting Act of 1694), for the signing of which Fletcher is reported to have received £400.—Cal. Coun. Min., 132; and see July 1.

27 Bellomont sends Mr. Weaver to England as agent of the province, carrying "evidences and vouchers" regarding all of Bellomont's transactions since he came. He says in his letter of introduction of Weaver to Sec. Poppel that the "Merchants in this town" have "raised such Clamour" about his inspection into the methods and condition of trade, that he will be impatient to receive the support of the ministers. In a postscript to this letter, dated July 7, he desires the secretary to urge two things upon the lords of trade. One is that he may "have a power to vacate all Fletcher's grants, which are so extravagant that the province can never be peopled." Some of these grants he describes. "He has granted away and sold all the conveniences of a Gov<sup>t</sup> here (viz: a) a Farm call'd the King's Farme, he has given to the Church here," etc. Part of this farm, "which is meadow ground and a scarce thing here," Fletcher sold to Capt. Evans, commander of the frigate "Richmond." Part of the king's garden, too, he has "granted and sold to one Heathcote a Merch<sup>t</sup>." Consequently Bellomont is deprived of "a place where to keep a horse or a cow for the use of my Family." He adds: "I shall think Fletcher has the best luck with his insolence and corruption that ever any Gov<sup>t</sup> had." Also: "I have given all the discountenance to Piracy that I am capable of doing, and that is one article which raises their clamour against me in this town; they say I have ruined the Town by hindering the Privateers (for so they call pirates) from bringing in a £1,000,000 since my coming."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 326-28.

The common council reverts to its order of Dec. 13, 1695, in allowing "all the Inhabitants of this City their Apprentices and Children that were here the time the Charter was Granted" (see April 27, 1686) to be freemen. As then, they are required to register in the town clerk's office, and pay nineship; but the former order is modified in that no one shall be registered under the age of 21 years, and a provision is added that "the said Register be taken before the Mayor and two Aldermen who are to Sit every Tuesday morning at y<sup>e</sup> City Hall . . . till the Same be perfected." The oath of a freeman is to be administered to all who come to be registered.—M. C. C., II: 31.

The common council again takes under consideration "the Grievance of being Deprived of the Sole Bolting of flower & Baking of Biskett for Transportation from this Province." They pass an order for the recorder to prepare an address to Bellomont, to obtain his assistance in restoring the sole privilege to this city.—M. C. C., II: 31. The recorder's draft of such address was approved by the board the next day. It states, among other things that the "Bolting Act," in the four years since its passage, has "taken away the livelyhood of two thirds of the Inhabitants of this City . . . And Given the Same to About thirty persons in the Rest of the Government. And this City which was Accustomed to be the Granary of all these parts in America and Never had less in Store then forty or fifty thousand Bushells of wheat for the Accommodation of his Majesties Subjects is now Reduced to See great want and Extremity that itt Cannot procure Corne Enough in Store to Supply its Inhabitants with their daily Necessities of bread and what [is] in Town [is] at Such Extravagant Rates that itt is become Very Oppressive to the poor." Furthermore, "all the Trade on flower and Biskett Sent to the West Indies hath Since the passing of the Said Act fallen under Such Disreputation that itt will Not Yield soe much by four of [or] five Shillings  $\text{p}$  hundred as that which Comes from Other parts And soe subject to Corruption for want of due Inspection which Cannot be Effected whilst there is Soe great A Latitude Given for the Bolting that in Probability the whole Trade will fall in A few Years to the total Ruin of his Majesties Revenue And Decay of this City." They ask the governor, therefore, "to lay our Complaint before his Most Sacred Majesty," etc.; and they decide to raise £50 to be used by an agent in England "for y<sup>e</sup> representing the State of this City Unto his Majesty and the Lords Commissioners of Trade And Plantations in Order to the having the Said Act Repealed."—Ibid., II: 32-34. This address was presented to Bellomont immediately, and he reported it to the lords of trade on July 1 (q. v.), with a recommendation.

The common council appoints a committee "to Agree with Carpenters for the Building A Pew in Trinity Church for the use of y<sup>e</sup> Mayor Recorder Aldermen and Assistants of this City and for their Successors."—M. C. C., II: 34. See also Oct. 28, 1707.

Atty-Gen. James Graham gives reason to Bellomont why New York City, rather than Amboy, should be the principal port of entry on the Hudson, as London is on the Thames. Prefacing his observations with an historical review of the subject, he points out that the government of the province cannot continue to be largely supported by the customs revenues if Amboy is made a free port, as it was before the revolution (the accession of Wm. and Mary); that trade would be diverted from New York to Amboy because Amboy is nearer Sandy Hook.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 382-84; see also ibid., IV: 521. On July 22, New Jersey asserted her right to a free port at Amboy, and the governor's council ordered that New York customs officers go to Amboy and watch conditions.—Cal. Coun. Min., 132.

The city of New York having addressed Bellomont "in relation to an Act of Assembly passed by Coll: Fletcher [the Bolting Act] which destroys their rights," Bellomont informs the lords of trade that the council desires that he refer the subject to the lords through their agent, Mr. Weaver. He explains that "the said Act was not fairly obtained, there being a contract with M<sup>r</sup> Nicolls one of the Council for four hundred pounds for the passing of it." He advises that if the act is "to the injury of the Province," and "a reward was given for it," it may be worth the consideration of parlia-

1698 ment "to frustrate what hath passed here by such clandestine July 1 practices to so great a publick prejudice."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 132-36.

Bellomont also informs the lords regarding Fletcher's extravagant grants of land, adding: "His Majesty's Fort at New York being the house of the Gov<sup>rs</sup>, had a large garden for pleasure, fruit and herbage, and might be called the King's domain, Coll: Fletcher hath granted away by patents great part of the said garden, the pleasant part being next the sea, and expressed its name in the Patent (part of our Garden) and the remaining part being a Garden planted with herbs and Fruit trees, he permitted the Fences and Trees to be wholly destroyed by Cattle, after his knowledge of my being appointed a Gov<sup>r</sup>, which 14 years time will hardly repair. A small Farm, called the King's Farm, which usually supplied the Governours with bread, come, some few months before my arrivall, he made a lease of to the Church, and a small Island called nutten Island for the grasing of a few coachhouses and Cows for the Governours family he would likewise have leased out to one formerly his footman but the Council were ashamed to consent to it, so that is only left undisposed of for the pleasure or convenience of the King's Gov<sup>rs</sup>."—Ibid.

In a postscript, dated July 6, Bellomont states that he has suspended the sheriff of New York from office and gives the cause.—Ibid. See Jan. 9, 1699.

7 What may be looked upon to-day as an historical survey of the beginnings of New York's commercial prosperity is comprised in several papers, transmitted by the mayor to the common council, as the report of the committee, appointed June 29, to convey reasons why the "Bolting Act of 1694" should be repealed. These are approved by the board, and it is ordered that "the Same be Remitted into England by the Recorder" (James Graham).—M. C. C., II: 35.

These papers include transcripts of some of the most important records of the province (the articles of surrender of 1664, Nicoll's commission to the mayor and aldermen of 1665, and Andros's proclamation of 1674). They are entered in full in the Minutes under this date, followed by a list of all the papers relating to the privilege of bolting, with page references to the "old Common Council books," and to the "New Common Council Booke."—Ibid., II: 36-54.

One of these papers, entitled "The Case of New York," is an historical summary. Some of the facts presented are as follows: When the city enjoyed the bolting monopoly several advantages accrued to this city and province. In 1678, when the bolting began, there were only 343 houses in New York. By 1696, 594 new buildings had been added. This increase is to be attributed to the bolting. The revenue in the years 1678, '79, and '80 did not exceed £2,000; but after that it increased annually until it amounted in 1687 to £5,000 (and if duly inspected would have amounted to £7,000 or £8,000). After 1694 (the year the sole bolting privilege was removed from the city), the revenue decreased. In 1678, there were three ships, eight sloops and seven boats belonging to this port; in 1694, there were 60 ships, 62 sloops, and 40 boats. Since 1694, navigation has decreased. In 1678, not over 400 beeves were killed; in 1694, nearly 4,000. Lands were low-priced during those years; since then they have advanced to ten times their value. Of the 983 houses in New York, 600 depend upon bolting. In the country, there are only three counties where bolting is done, Kings, Queens, and Ulster, and not over 30 bolters bolt all the wheat of those counties; so that to feed these 30, 600 families must perish at New York if the Bolting Act continues in force. In those three counties there are not over 500 families; in New York there are over 8,000 souls.—Ibid., II: 37-38.

Another document, in support of the appeal to the king and lords of trade for the repeal of the Bolting Act, is entitled "Reasons Humbly Offered in Defence of y<sup>e</sup> Rights & Priviledges of his Majesties City of New York in America." It is the principal argument in favour of this city's securing the sole bolting privilege. It traces the early grants of special privileges to this city, which has been "always the Metropolis Staple Porte and the Only publick Mercate [market] of the whole Province."—Ibid., II: 43. The beginnings of New York's commercial prosperity are thus traced:

"Graine is become the Stable Commodity of the Province and the Citizens of the Said City No Sooner perceived that there were greater quantities of wheat Raised than Could be Consumed within the Said Province but they Coitruived and Invented the Act for process] of Bolting by which they Converted the Wheat into flower And made it A Manufacture not only profitable to all the Inhabitants of the Province by the Incouragement of Tillage and Navigation but likewise beneficial And Commodious to all his Majesties Plantations, and the Improvem<sup>t</sup> thereof in this City is the true and only Cause of the Growth Strength and Encrease of buildings within the Same and of the Riches Plenty of Money and the rise of the Value of Lands in the Other parts of the Province but the livelyhood of all the Inhabitants of this City doe Chiefly Depend thereon."

The governments which have had "to Rule y<sup>e</sup> Said Plantation" have made "the Said City the Only porte Prohibiting from time to time the Transportation of wheat and Appointing that No flower Should be Bolted or Biskett baked for Transportation but at this City . . . Now the Reason why this City was Soc Incorporated & had Granted to them the aforesaid Rights and Priviledges is because the first founders of the Same were not Suffered by the then Government to Extend themselves into particular Settlements Untill first there should be Gathered together A Sufficient Number of People at this place that Might be of A Reasonable force for their Common Security & defence Whereupon they began to fortifie and finding this place of their situation to be Very Barren and unfit by their Industry to make them Any Return for their Substance itt was therefore Projected that all such as would fix themselves at this place Should only Adict themselves to trade for the Accommodation of those that Should goe Settle in the Country y<sup>t</sup> they might be plentifully Supplied with such things as was Necessary for Cultivation."—Ibid., II: 44.

"this City did Encrease in People Strength and Riches to such A Degree that itt become the Envy of the Crown of England which thereupon fitted out A fleet Under the Command of Gen<sup>l</sup> Nicolls who in the year 1664 did Reduce the Said City and Province Unto the Allegiance of his Majesties Said Crown of England And those Steps that were made by the Dutch Government for y<sup>e</sup> Encouragem<sup>t</sup> of Trade & this City were Soc Reasonable that the English Governours have successively as Aforesaid Confirmed the same . . .

"while this Province was under the Dutch Government they were Soc Jealous of the Trade of this City that they would not permit any Settlement to be made in Any place within their Jurisdiction but under Such Restrictions as they thought Convenient for y<sup>e</sup> Security of their Trade And particularly did Restraine the Inhabitants of Hudsons River and Long Island that they Should not Plant nor Manage any parte of Husbandry without paying the tenth parte of what they Raised unto the Government and besides did Oblige the Planters that they Should not Apply themselves to Any Trade but Only to husbandry. And that the Inhabitants of Albany Should Only Apply themselves Unto the India Trade."—Ibid., II: 45.

"Nevertheless Soc great was the Clemency of the English Governm<sup>t</sup> that they Removed from the husbandman that Grievous yoke And placed in lieu thereof the bare Acknowledgm<sup>t</sup> of A Small quit Rent Since which time by the Providence of the Citizens of the Said City in finding out foreign Marketts, . . . the husband men are grown Rich and not only forgett thereby the former tasks and Obligations they lay under but Also the Advantages they have and doe daily reape by the Provisional Care and Industry of the Merchants of New York."—Ibid., II: 46.

There was "A Necessity that the bolting of flower for Transportation to be Confined Unto one Certaine place that it might be Strictly Viewed and Examined that there might be no Mixture or Corruption therein."—Ibid.

"itt is no Imposition nor Any Violence to property or Right of the Subject for his Majesty to Confine the Bolting of flower And Baking Biskett for Transportation to this City Only the Advantages Aforesaid being to the Common wealth and the Same Justly warranted by Reason Experience and the Laws of England which has Confined the making and sale of many Manufactures to One place only."—Ibid.

"Albeit itt be the least and most barren Spott of Ground in the whole Province Yett by the Intercourse of Trade itt payeth Annually within A Small matter one third parte of all the Taxes of the Province besides the whole Revenue."—Ibid., II: 47.

"if it were not for Trade No Man would be Encouraged to Improve more than What he has Occasion for . . . ; . . . before that Invention of Bolting flower the Husband men were Very low And Mean in their Stock buildings and Apparell & feeding . . .

1698 Whereas Since that time they began to Bolt at New Yorke for Sept.

much Eased of his labour by the help of Slaves And A Considerable Increase of the Stock of Cattle and Sould att double y<sup>e</sup> Price of what they were formerly and for Instance about fourteen Years Agoe there was not above four hundred Neat Cattle Killed for the Service of the Inhabitants of this City and Now Near three thousand head besides Sheep and Other Small Cattle which fully demonstrates that as y<sup>e</sup> Trade of the Province was Regulated and Confined to the City all the Inhabitants thereof doe thereby Receive Constant Benefit Whereas if Otherwise the Inhabitants of this Province would be like their Neighbours in Plymouth & Connecticutt Colonies Virginia and Maryland who for want of A Publick Mart like unto this City have Very little Shipping belonging to them And their people Meany Cloathed and ill Supplied with Other things Necessary for Comfortable living."—Ibid., II: 48.

"All which Reasons may be Sufficient to Convince Any man of Business that by the City holding and Enjoying all their former Rights And Priviledges and ESpecially y<sup>e</sup> Right of the Sole Bolting of Flower and Baking of Biskett for Traosportation the King will have A Certaine Benefit by the Encrease of his Revenue the hus-and the Province in Gen<sup>l</sup> A great Advantage by Encouraging the City whereby it may Grow in Strength and Navigation."—Ibid.,

13 Lord Bellomont sends private instructions to Thomas Weaver, the agent in London for the province of New York. One of these, numbered 14, is as follows: "You are to solicit y<sup>e</sup> getting a New Great Seale for this province, the present one having y<sup>e</sup> effigies of her late Majty<sup>y</sup> as well as of his present Majty<sup>y</sup>."—From transcript, Library of Congress, box 63, from the original with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A, 272, fo. 26) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

15 Slave traffic at this time was a regular branch of the foreign trade of this port. John Cruger, then a young man (who became mayor of New York 40 years later) started on this day on a voyage to buy negroes, as agent of New York merchants, and kept a journal of his adventures until his return in May, 1700. The journal is printed in full in Man. Conn. Coun. (1853), 406. See also "Slavery in New York," in ibid. (1861), 700; "Slaves and Slavery in New Amsterdam," in ibid. (1858), 506; and "Slaves and Slave Trade in New Netherland," in ibid. (1863), 581.

24 "Ordered, That Bills be put [up] to give notice that y<sup>e</sup> Kings Farme is to be Lett, & that y<sup>e</sup> Church Wardens be a Committee to Farme the same, & report to this Board, what they doe herein y<sup>e</sup> first Convenience."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Gov. Cornbury, writing to the lords of trade on June 30, 1704, stated that Fletcher had leased the King's Farm to "the Church" for seven years (see Aug. 19, 1697), "under the rent of sixty Bushels of wheat," and that Bellomont "granted the same farm to a Dutchman under the same rent."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1112.

"Ordered, That y<sup>e</sup> pews of y<sup>e</sup> North side of y<sup>e</sup> Church be built with white Pine, if Wainescott cannot be gott, & that y<sup>e</sup> Front of y<sup>e</sup> pews, next y<sup>e</sup> Isle the Rales be Wainescott."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Aug. 5 Benjamin Fletcher, in a letter from London to some person not named, says: "I find my selfe Prosecuted by the Earle of Bellomont my Successor with that implacable inveteracy and observe the greate Credite his Lorpp has with Persons in the chief Stations and trust heer That I am confounded at the designe and meaning of it especially Looking backe att the five and Thirty years That I have born Commission under the Crowne of England without the Least reproach or impeachm<sup>t</sup> of my reputation and after nine years Service in the warr of Ireland and America to become A castaway in the Reare of my Dayes is noe Smale mortification to mee his Majesties favor to mee is moore valuable Then Life and I am ready to Submit to the most infamous death if the Things Alleged against mee bee true."—From transcript, Library of Congress, of the original letter in the British Museum, cited "Additional MSS. 9747, f. 6."

20 The transactions of Bellomont and his council with the Indians, in the conferences held in the fort at New York, up to this date, are published by Bradford (1698) in a tract entitled Propositions made by the Five Nations of Indians. This tract, now extremely scarce, has for its main topic the proposals which the Indians advanced in Albany on July 20.—From Brintley Catalogue, item No. 3400.

In a letter to the board of trade, Bellomont states that he sees no reason why the Leisler party "should be any longer excluded from a share in the government." He adds that "they are reputed to be two thirds of the people of this Province, and why they should be crushed and oppressed so long as they are obedient to the laws and government of England, I see no reason in the world, and that they are a more sober and virtuous people and better affected to His Majesty's government than the other party, I aver it for a truth which I am able to justify."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 379-80.

Bellomont suspends Col. Bayard, Col. Minvielle, Col. Willet, Col. Townley, and Mr. Lawrence from the council. He explained, in his report to the lords of trade, on Oct. 21, that he found it "absolutely necessary for His Majesty's service so to do; for tho' they were such sycophants as to comply with Colonel Fletcher in all the parts of his corrupt Administration, they were always testy and perverse in every thing that I proposed for the King's service in Council; and when they were out of Council they were always caballing and contriving to make the government uneasy for me
. . . . He put in the places of those suspended Col. Abraham de Peyster, Robert Livingston, Dr. Samuel Staats, and Robert Walters.

He also displaces David Jamison "from being Clerk of the Council and Deputy Secretary: he is a Scotchman by birth and was commended to be hanged in Scotland for blasphemy and burning the bible, but in mitigation of the sentence he was transported to this Province & sold a servant . . . He has enriched himself by extortion in his office . . . , but chiefly 'tis said by the grants of land sold by Colonel Fletcher, he having had a share for brokerage
. . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 398-99. See also Oct. 19 and Nov. 10, 1698.

The governor appoints Capt. Johannes de Peyster mayor.—
M. C. C., II: 57. De Peyster was sworn in on Oct. 14, and first presided over the common council, Oct. 17.—Ibid., II: 61, 62. For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Conn. Coun. (1853), 395; Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 54.

David Provost is elected "Chamberlain & Treasurer" by the common council.—M. C. C., II: 57. This is the first appearance of the term "Chamberlain" in the Minutes. When Provost was named as mayor on Sept. 29, 1699 (q. v.), Isaac de Riemer was appointed treasurer.

The common council orders "that A Well be built att y<sup>e</sup> upper End of the New Street by the Inhabitants thereof According to their desire & that y<sup>e</sup> Aldermen and Assistant of y<sup>e</sup> Ward doe take Care the Same be placed in Such manner that it may Not Stop up the Street or be A Nuisance to any of the Inhabitants thereunto adjacent."
—M. C. C., II: 57. The locations of the many wells throughout the city during the English colonial period can best be ascertained by consulting the Index of the M. C. C., under the titles
"Well" and "Wells." See also "Old Wells and Water Courses," by Hill and Waring, in Historic New York (1897), 227. The "New Street" mentioned here is the New Street of to-day, which was opened in 1679 (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 78).

Regarding the building of new fortifications at the frontiers, Col. Romer writes to Bellomont that "When the Arches under the Walls are to be made, it will be necessary to employ persons more skillfull than those that made the House over the Gate of New York Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 682. See also ibid., IV: 967, 969.
Valentine thus describes Romer's activities in this province:
"Romer, Wolfgang William, a British Colooel of Engineers, was dispatched to America towards the close of the seventeenth century, to superintend the engineering affairs of the government. He was engaged, in and about New York, and on the frontiers, in his professional pursuits, and also as a member of the New York Council until 1703, when he left the Province, and, it is believed, returned to England about 1705 [see under date of Feb. 4, 1706]. Among the other labors of Colooel Romer was a survey of the harbor of New York [see infra, 1700], executed in 1700-1. The shoals called
"Romer Shoals" received their name from this survey."—*Man. Conn.
Coun.* (1864), 609. See also Cal. Conn. Min., 134, 135, 137, 150, 155, 157, 168, 169, 187; and see an order of the lords justices in council at Whitehall (regarding Romer's stay for repairing and building fortifications on the frontier until Christmas, 1699), a transcript of which is in Library of Congress, box 63, from the original order, with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A-272, fo. 30) in the Bodleian Lib., Oxford.

It is ordered by the common council that "the Mayor Issue his Warrant to y<sup>e</sup> Treasurer to pay to Joseph Davis the Sum of three 13

1698 pounds Currant Money of New York it being for One Quarters Oct.
 Rent for the Present City Hall due & ending the first of August 19 last.—M. C. C., II: 60. Davis was an innkeeper.—Ibid., II: 35.
 The board continued to use his house as a temporary city hall; for,
 on April 22, 1699, Davis was paid £11 "for three Quarters of A Year's Rent for the Courte Room due the first of May Next Ensueing and for firewood Expended for y<sup>e</sup> use of the City" (ibid., II: 76-77), and on Oct. 16, 1699, an order was issued to pay his widow £9: "for Candles and Expenses with M<sup>r</sup> Rodman about the Sale of the Old City Hall and A half years Rent for the Courte Room due and Ending the first day of November Next."—Ibid., II: 93-217. For an account of Davis's tavern, see July 31, 1700.

14 This is the day each year appointed by the city charter for swearing in the newly appointed and elected city officials. The mayor, attended by the mayor elect, the recorder, aldermen, high sheriff, assistants, constables, and others, wait upon the governour in council at the fort. The oaths appointed, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, are administered to the mayor and high sheriff elect. They subscribe the "Test and Association," are sworn to the due execution of their respective offices, and receive their commissions. This year, for the first time, following these ceremonies, the mayor, together with the other newly installed officials, attended Trinity Church, where the rector, the Rev. William Vesey, preached a sermon suited to the occasion. The "Corporation sermon" thereafter was a regular feature of the day's events. After this service, all returned to the city hall "where after the Ringing of the Bell the Mayors & Sheriffs Commissions were published upon Which the New Mayor Resumed the Chaire & Caused the Oaths Appointed as Aforesaid to be Administered to the Respective Aldermen and Assistants who Subscribed the Test and Association and Were Sworne to the due Execution of their Respective Offices & Accordingly took their places."—M. C. C., II: 61.

" Theunis de Key, Johannes Kip, and Braendt Schuyler make the following statement in writing (Dutch) concerning the removal of the bodies of Leisler and Millbourne to their church: "We the churchwardens having been requested by Isaac de Riemer in the name of Mr. Jacob Leisler to bury the corpse of his father and Millborne, in our Nether—Dutch Church—give for answer, because we are pressed by both parties in the Congregation and very much desire to preserve peace and quiet in our Church, that we cannot consent thereto, but also that we shall not hinder it."—*N. Y. Hist.
 Soc. Collections* (1868), 397-98. See Oct. 20.

17 The common council appoints another committee (see June 14)
 "to Examine into the State of the ferry." Besides agreeing upon the best terms for "farming" it, they are required to "take to their Assistance A Bricklayer and A Carpenter and Examine What will be Convenient for the Rebuilding or Repairing of the ferry house."
 —M. C. C., II: 63. They reported Nov. 2, that the ferry-house was "Soe far gone to decay that itt is not worth Repairing."—Ibid., II: 64. This evidently refers to the ferry-house on the Brooklyn side.—See Feb. 2, 1699.

" The common council again orders (see Nov. 20, 1697) that the mayor hire four night watchmen. Their duties are defined on this occasion as follows: They are to be "honest Inhabitants householders of this City." They are to "Watch in the Night time from y<sup>e</sup> hour of Nine of y<sup>e</sup> Clock at Night till break of day Each Morning Untill y<sup>e</sup> 25th day of March Next Ensueing And to go round the City Each hour in the Night with A Bell and there to proclaim the season of the weather and the hour of the Night and if they Meet in their Rounds Any people disturbing the peace or lurking about Any persons house or Committing any theft they take the most prudent way they Can to Secure y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Persons Untill the Next Morning," etc.—M. C. C., II: 62. The mayor reported on Nov. 2 that he had hired the four "Bellmen."—Ibid., II: 64. See also Dec. 1, 1702. The duty of the watchman to carry a bell, and ring it at the most public corners and places of the streets, and also give notice of the time of night, became thereafter a settled custom.—See (1750) ibid., V: 319.

19 In a report to "the Lords Justices" on the affairs of the province of New York (including Fletcher's encouragement of pirates and his extravagant grants of lands) the lords of trade commend Bellomont, and propose the removal of Nicolas Bayard and Frederick Philips from their places in the council and all other places of trust in the government. They recommend that pirates be prosecuted, and that the exorbitant grants of land be annulled; also that no future grants be made except under certain conditions.—N. Y. Col.

Docs., IV: 385-95. An order in council confirmed this report at Whitehall on Oct. 25, and instructions were issued to Bellomont accordingly.—Ibid., IV: 411-15. See also Sept. 28 and Nov. 10.

20 The remains of Leisler and Millbourne are exhumed, and "interred again with great pomp under our Dutch Church." This was eight years and five months after their execution and burial. Members of the Dutch Church (of the Leisler party) inform the classis of Amsterdam: "Their weapons and armorial ensigns of honor were there hung up, and thus, as far as possible, their honor was restored to them. Special permission to do this had been given by his Honor's son, Jacob Leisler, from his Majesty. This gave unutterable joy to their families and to those people who, under him, had taken up arms for our blessed King William. With this circumstance we trust that the dissensions which have so long harassed us, will also be buried. To this end our Right Honorable Governour, my lord the Earl of Bellomont, . . . is exerting his good offices."
 —Eccles. Rec., II: 1261; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 411.
 "There was a great concourse of people at the funeral (1200 'tis said) and would 'tis thought have been as many more, but that it blew a rank storm for two or three days together, that hindered people from coming down or crossing the rivers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 401.

21 In a report to the lords of trade, Bellomont states that, about three weeks before this date (about Oct. 1), "the relations of M<sup>r</sup> Leisler and M<sup>r</sup> Millbourne desired leave to take up the bodies that had been buried near the gallows and give them Christian burial in the Dutch Church." He deemed the request so reasonable that he gave consent, "partly out of a principall of compassion, but chiefly out of a respect to the Act of Parliament for reversing the attainder of those two men; which Act does also legitimate Captain Leisler's assuming the government of this Province and puts a censure upon the illegality of his execution." See also May 3, 1695. Bellomont adds a third reason for consenting: that Fletcher's refusal to obey this act of parliament brought the law here into contempt. "My design," he states, "is chiefly to give the people here a just idea of English laws, that they bear the stamp of the highest authority of the King and Nation of England, and ought to be respected as sacred."
 —N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 400-1, 523. See also Oct. 14 and 20.

" Bellomont sends to the lords of trade "a certificate under the hand of the Surveyor General of this Province of several most extravagant grants of land by Colonel Fletcher;" also, by one Lieut. Hunt, who goes to England in the man-of-war "Deptford" from Boston, he sends "a new Map of this Province" ("it being too bulky to make up in this packet") made by the said Surveyor General the exactest, I believe, that has yet been made, wherein he has described the several large tracts of land granted, with the grantees names; so that your Lordships will see that this whole Province is given away to about thirty persons in effect, to the great prejudice of the Crown, because at that rate this province, which by its situation is the most considerable of all the Provinces on the Continent (and ought to be under the best regulation) can never be well peopled, for men will not care to become base tenants to proprietors of land in this Province, when they can buy the fee-simple of lands in the Jerseys for five pounds p<sup>r</sup> hundred acres, and I believe as cheaply in Pennsylvania." See Oct. 22.

Contiuing, Bellomont asserts: "I do not find that Coloeel Fletcher had any power by his Commission to sell the lands in this Province, and yet 'tis certain he took money for all the grants he made, except that of the Mohacks land, which I cannot yet find out." He recommends the "voiding these extravagant grants and limiting all Governours to a certain number of acres in their grants, obliging them to reserve a Quit Rent of half a Crown on every hundred Acres, to the Crown, and restraining them from selling the lands to the person they grant them to. I should think a thousand acres were a sufficient quantity of land to grant to any man, for the clearing of land from wood costs £4-10<sup>s</sup> p<sup>r</sup> acre all this country over, so that it would require a good purse to man[age] and overcome a thousand acres, this country being all under great woods, and yet M<sup>r</sup> Dellius the Minister at Albany, besides his share in the Mohacks land, has in another grant which your Lordships will see by the Mapp at least seven hundred thousand acres of land."
 —N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 397-98.

22 The provincial council issues an order for the payment of £20 to Augustine Graham (the surveyor-general) for making the map of the province.—Cal. of State Papers, Am. & W. Indies (1697-1698), 498. The original map is now preserved in the

- 1698 Colonial Office Library, London, and has been reproduced in the Oct. Crown Collection of photographs of American maps, 2d series, Nos.
 22 247-50. It is entitled "A Map of the Province of New York in America and the Territorys Adjacent. By Augustin Graham, Survey. General." It is drawn on a scale of 10 miles to 1 inch, and measures 18 by 28 inches. See Oct. 21.
- 25 An additional instruction to Bellomont makes it clear that he is to have his salary so long as he remains in the colonies over which he has jurisdiction; but during absence from all of these provinces it is to be paid to the lieutenant-governour.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 415.
- 27 Bellomont writes to Mr. Popple explaining the rebellious character of the people. He had proclaimed the previous Wednesday as a day for a fast and humiliation. Few people came to church "and out one of the ringleaders, neither Bayard, Nicolls, Wilson, nor several others." On this day, the master of a ship refuses to carry the king's packet, and Bellomont sends a warrant to force him to receive it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 415-17.
- Nov. 8 Bellomont, reporting to the lords of trade regarding the accounts of the province, having already reported on Nov. 7 concerning the present state of the revenue, says, among other things: "Because Colonel Fletcher pretended to have applied the 30th p<sup>er</sup> Cent, which was stopped out of the pay of the four Companies here, to the building and repairs of the Fortifications, I send your Lordships the King's Establishment directing how the 30th p<sup>er</sup> Cent. should be applied . . . and my order to Colonel Cortlandt and Colonel Bayard at my first arrival to take a survey of the buildings and fortifications in and about this his Majesty's fort, with their report upon my said order both in the same paper, and (Nov 7) by which Report of theirs your Lordships will see that the Governour's house and the fortifications were much out of repair at the time Colonel Fletcher was superseded." (The report here mentioned is not published with the letter.)
- " . . . There has been the strangest management in the buildings within this Fort that ever was known, the addition to the Governour's house which is very little, the chappell, and the barracks for the soldiers cost before Colonel Fletchers being superseded £3701 17s 5d, as appears by a particular account made up by Colonel Cortlandt of all materials and money paid to workmen, which I send by this conveyance to M<sup>r</sup> Weaver the Agent . . .
 I find in the general account of the buildings which I now send home to the Agent, a prodigious quantity of lime and bricks, enough (as one would think) to build a little town, and I am told there is a great deal of fraud used in the multiplying those materials, and some I have detected myself; for instance, I find the bricks are charged all along at 30th p<sup>er</sup> thousand, and they were and are still bought at 25th p<sup>er</sup> thousand, which is the current price.
 Another thing is, I dare undertake to build in London the same quantity of building for less than six hundred pounds at most, so far as Colonel Fletcher left it built. 'Tis true by what inquiry I made, building is dearer here one third part than 'tis there. Upon a strict audit of these accounts and a survey of the buildings, I doubt not but Colonel Fletcher will be found to be indebted to the King a great many thousand pounds: I am apt to believe his debt will more than build the two forts at Albany and Schenectady, but I will not pretend to say what the debt is, till your Lordships order an exact audit of the accounts.
- "There is besides what I have already mentioned as chargeable on Colonel Fletcher another article which is the money taken by him for the Kings lands (that he passed away in grant) which he had no sort of power to sell by his Majesty's commission or instructions
 . . . " Bellomont then mentions various unjustifiable perquisites taken by Fletcher.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 421-23. See, further, Nov. 28, 1700.
- 9 The common council limits the slaughtering of cattle to "the publick Slaughter houses by the water side." Cattle may not be lauded "but at the Nearest Convenient place to the slaughter houses."—M. C. C., II: 65. See Oct. 15, 1691; Nov. 27, 1725.
- " Mayor De Peyster appoints Enoch Hill to be his marshal and messenger, and states to the common council that "for his Encouragement" he desires that Hill be allowed "A Coat Breeches Hatt Shoes Stockings and A Cloake of y<sup>e</sup> City Livery And A Beedles Staff" at the city's expense. It is ordered that the mayor purchase these, and that the livery "be blew with an Orange List."—M. C. C., II: 65-66. After some delay provision for such a uniform was made by the common council.—Ibid., II: 93. See July 8, 1693.
- A committee of the common council is appointed "to View y<sup>e</sup> Nov.
 Condition of the present City Hall And where itt will be most 9 Convenient for y<sup>e</sup> building of a New One And what Materials will be Necessary for y<sup>e</sup> Same together with an Estimate of y<sup>e</sup> Cost thereof."—M. C. C., II: 66. They reported at the next meeting, Jan. 11, 1699 (q. v.).
- The lords justices of England issue instructions to Bellomont 10 commending him for his diligence. They confirm his removal of William Nicolls, Chidley Brooke, and William Pinthorne; they order the removal of Col. Nicholas Bayard and Frederick Philips, and appoint in their places Col. Abraham Depeyster, James Graham, Dr. Samuel Skaats, Robert Livingston, and Dr. John Corbille. They direct him to punish pirates and discourage illegal trade. They also direct him to use all methods that the law allows to annul the exorbitant grants of land.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 424-25. See Sept. 28, and Oct. 19.
- Bellomont sends to the lords of trade a copy of the charter 12 granted by Fletcher to the Dutch Church, which he thinks "very extraordinary, for it is setting up a petty jurisdiction to fly in the face of the government." Being told that Fletcher "had a bribe for passing this charter," Bellomont states: "I sent to the Church-Masters (so called by the Dutch) which I suppose are equivalent to our Church Wardens, for a sight of their Church Book wherein I was told I should find an entry made of the said bribe." The "Church-Masters" referred Bellomont to "M<sup>r</sup> Selymes," and the latter said he could not show it "till he had called a Consistory," but by "speaking him fair" Bellomont succeeded, and copied the entry referred to, and sent it to the lords of trade.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 426-27. This "bribe" consisted of "a considerable present of plate . . . as appears by their Church Books."—Ibid., IV: 463.

 council decrees that the jurisdiction of the mayor's court does not extend beyond low-water mark.—Cal. Coun. Min., 135.
- Bellomont issues a proclamation (printed by Bradford) directing 23 that all male inhabitants, excepting Indians and slaves, take the oath established by act of parliament in England, instead of the oath of allegiance and supremacy.—Miss Hassé's "Bibliography" in government at New York are delivered to him "at the Board" (Whitehall). These he answered at length on Dec. 24 (q. v.).—N. Y.

- Advices reach England from Bellomont that "he has caused 12 several persons to be arrested there [in New England and New York provinces], accused for corresponding and trading with the pyrates of Madagascar, by which means they have got great riches."—From Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag. (1868), 2d ser., III: 292.
- Fletcher answers the complaints against him regarding fortifications 24 (see Nov. 28): "For at New York I made up all the soddworke anew, the two bastions towards the sea I flagged with free stone, the curtain between those two bastions I built up new from the ground, the well new made, and a very large cistern for receiving water, half the soldiers barracks pull'd down and rebuilt, new carriages for thirty six guns, a paint [pent] house upon collums for securing the field pieces and their carriages from the weather, the chaple new built and all finished to pews. As to the Governour's house it was all new shingled by me, two rooms wainscoted, an addition thereto built from the ground with brick and shingled and secured from the weather, tho' not finished within; a new pump made without the Fort Gate and one thousand and fifty tons of lime paid for and lodged in the new house, for the painting and refitting the Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 450. See also ibid., IV: 513.

1699

- In this year, an interesting coloured map was drawn, entitled "A Map of the English Possessions in North America and New Foundland." It is owned by the Library of Congress, and is reproduced and described in Addenda Pl. 2-a, Vol. III.
  - The Bishop of Bristol sent over, this year, enough "stones as did pave all the Isles of our Church" (Trinity).—From letter of the vestry to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in Eccles. Rec., III: 1768.
  - In a petition relating to the excise, William Appel, innkeeper, referred to "the New Street" as "one of the worst places in New York."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 288.
  - The tavern adjoining the old Stadthuys on Pearl St., which was granted to Lovelace before Jan. 25, 1670 (q. v.), is evidently still under government ownership in 1699, when it is called "The King's house now in the tenure of Joseph Davids."—Liber A, City Grants, 254 (in comptroller's office). Shown on Pls. 17 and 20-b, Vol. I. See Oct. 13, 1698.
  - About this time, the Three Cornish Daws was erected and opened as a tavern at what is now 47 Wall St.—Liber Wills, V: 137; Liber Deeds, XXIII: 194-96; XXVI: 167 (New York). The United States Trust Co. building now covers the site. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
  - Some time during his administration of the government, probably this year, Nanfan issued a license for theatrical performances in New York City.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 284. The original record was destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany; but, fortunately, it had been printed. It was a petition, without date, from one Richard Hunter, an actor-manager (not Gov. Hunter as stated in Vol. I, p. 265), to Nanfan, and read as follows: "To the Hon<sup>ble</sup> John Nanfan, Esq<sup>r</sup> his Maj<sup>ties</sup> Governor and Commander in Chief of the province of New York and territories Depending thereon in America and Vice Admiral of the same. "The Humble petition of Richard Hunter Sheweth, That your hon<sup>rs</sup> Petitioner having been at great charge and expence in providing persons and necessary's in order to the acting of Play's in this City; "Humbly prays your Honor will please to grant him a Lyceance for so doing. "And your hon<sup>rs</sup> petitioner shall ever pray, "Richa<sup>d</sup> Hunter

 "Petition of Richard Hunter
 "Licence issued and Recorded."
 As Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan administered the government from May 16, 1699, to July 25, 1700, in the absence of the Earl of Bellomont at Boston, and again after Bellomont's death, from May 19, 1701, to May 3, 1702, the date may be easily approximated. The endorsement is in the handwriting of Barce Cossens, clerk of the council. "Probably, Hunter came to New York from the West Indies with Nanfan. Be this as it may, his petition conclusively establishes the fact that theatricals were introduced into New York half a century, if not more, before the period fixed by DuRoi."—Hist. Mag. (1865), IX: 118.
- Jan. 9. Thomas Weaver, the agent for the province of New York in England, replies to Fletcher's answer to the charges against him. He points out, regarding Fletcher's extravagant grants, that it is "incredible that Colonel Fletcher did not know that the grant to Colonel Heathcote was part of the King's gardep; for that the words of the grant are, Part of Our Garden." He continues: "The king's farm was leased out by Colonel Fletcher, even when my Lord Bellomont was known to be on his voyage for New York; as most of the other great grants were, after the Earl's designation to the Government. Colonel Fletcher assumes the glory of building churches, which never was imputed to him as a crime, if it was true; but the Church of New Yorke [Trinity] was oot built by him, but by a contribution of severall, even of the French and Dutch churches as well as English; and an allowance of one hundred pounds per annum given to an English Minister by an act of the country, which is levied, a greater part of it, on Dutch and French inhabitants. Therefore there is no necessity to lease this farm to the Church Wardens, nor to call this lease a building of churches, and make that the pretence of hindering a succeeding Governour from the beneficial use of the farme for the conveniency of his family. "Besides Colonel Fletcher收取 a considerable present of

- plate for granting a Charter to the Dutch Church of that City, as appears by their Church Books."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 456-66. For the record of this present, see under July 26, 1696. For the further proceedings of the lords of trade in this case, see ibid., IV: 466-74, 479-86. On March 9, 1699, they made representations to the king concerning the charges against Fletcher.—Ibid., IV: 479-86.
- 11 The common council orders that the ferry between this city and Nassau Island be "Lett to farme" on Feb. 2 (q. v.), for a term of seven years beginning March 25; and that "the money thereof be Appropriated to No Other use then to the building of A New City Hall."—M. C. C., II: 67. See March 9, 1703.
- " The committee, appointed on Nov. 9 last to examine the city hall, reports that "they . . . finde it insufficient and doe think the Upper end of the broad Street A proper place for y<sup>e</sup> Building A new City Hall And believe that the Sum of three Thousand pounds may be Sufficient for the building the same According to the former draft drawn by Mr James Evetts." The report is approved by the board.—M. C. C., II: 68. Regarding the sale of the old city hall and the building of the new, see Memoraries under May 12, 1696, and Oct. 16, 1699. See also *M. C. - " The common council orders that the mayor issue a warrant to the treasurer to pay £15:5; "for making And paving the Street Burgers path."—M. C. C., II: 68. See May 11, 1696.
- " The common council directs the mayor to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay William Bradford £4:10 "for 2 Bookes of Records printing Regulations of the Market and Laws of y<sup>e</sup> Province."—M. C. C., II: 68.
- " The mayor presents to the common council a letter from Bellomont, in which the governour directs, with the approval of his council, that the oath of allegiance be administered to the inhabitants and the "Test and Association" signed by them, in accordance with a proclamation which accompanies the letter. The governour directs that the names and addresses of all who refuse be returned, that a discrimination may be made between "Good and Lowall Subjects" and those that "by ill principles Are prevailed Upon to be Eemies to his Majesties person and Government."—M. C. C., II: 68-69.
- 19 John Peter Melett's account for ironwork in the fort is reported as extravagant; and Thomas Parmyter, master-gunner and supervisor of buildings, is suspended for having certified it as correct. John Ashton, the store-keeper, is appointed supervisor of buildings.—Cal. Coun. Min., 136.
- 24 Pursuant to an order of the common council of Jan. 23 (M. C. C., II: 69), directing a committee "to Examine into the Ancient Rights and Privileges of this City and what Additions will be Needfull to be added thereto for Y<sup>e</sup> Well Rule And Government of the Inhabitants," they prepare the following recommendations: the restoration of the bolting and baking monopoly; that the office of town clerk, water-bailiff, and clerk of the market, and the appointment of coroner should be vested in the Corporation; the extension of the jurisdiction of the water-bailiff "Upon all the Rivers Roads Coves Harbours Inlets and waters Surrounding the said City Mannings Island litle and Great Barnes Islands and from y<sup>e</sup> Bounds of the Said City Upon Hudsons River Soe far as the Mouth of y<sup>e</sup> Same Entring att Sandy hook;" the receipt as formerly of "y<sup>e</sup> Anchorage of all Shipping Riding in this Harbour;" jurisdiction of the landing at the ferry on Nassau Island; the incorporation under the city's jurisdiction of "all the Land from y<sup>e</sup> Eastern End of Nutten Island for halfe A Mile deep to y<sup>e</sup> West point of y<sup>e</sup> Wallabout . . . Saving to Every person there, their freehold. And all the Land from High water Marke to Low water Marke fronting y<sup>e</sup> Same."—From the original report preserved in the metal file labelled "Filed papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. It came before the common council on Feb. 27; no action is recorded on that day.—M. C. C., I: 73-74.
- Feb. 2 Conditions are published for leasing the ferry between this city and Nassau Island for seven years from March 25. Rip van Dam is the successful bidder, at £165 per annum. Among the conditions prescribed are the following provisions: The lessee (or "farmer") shall pay to the treasurer in quarterly payments "what he shall farme the above Revenue att." He shall give security for faithful performance of duty (cf. provisions of Dec. 27, 1700). He shall provide and maintain two great boats or scows for transporting

- 1699 cattle, corn, etc., and two small boats sufficient for passengers. Mar.
 Feb. One great boat and one small boat shall be on each side of the river, and shall go to and fro without either the two great boats or the two small boats being on the same side of the river at the same time. Able men are to be kept to row the boats, and give constant attendance. 31
- The "farmer" shall maintain a pound for the security of cattle to be transported to and from this city. All corn, as well as cattle, brought in the ferry-boats, is to be loaded "withinth the Dock y<sup>e</sup> Slips or Burgers path." Within the first year of the lease, the common council "Shall Cause to be Erected & Built at the ferry on Nassau Island A good sufficient house of Stone and brick of two Stories High forty foot in length And twenty four foot in breadth for y<sup>e</sup> Accommodation and Conveniency of the person that farmeth y<sup>e</sup> said Ferry." Here the "farmer" "shall keep a publick house of Entertainment in Order that Strangers and Travellers & their horses may have good Accommodation at Reasonable Rates." This he shall keep in repair. The city agrees to repair "the Barn at y<sup>e</sup> Ferry" (see Feb. 27), and the farmer is to maintain it. Ferriage rates are prescribed for persons, horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, barrels of rum, sugar, molasses, oil, pork, tubs of butter, bushels of corn or salt, hogsheds of tobacco, etc. "Every single person to pay for going Over Eight Stivers in Wampum or A Silver two pence." The rate is half of this if the person is in company. The rates are double after sunset.—M. C. C., II: 70-72. The original manuscript of these "Conditions for farming the Ferry," and another of Dec. 27, 1700 (q. v.), are filed in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room. See also description of the Burgis View Pl. 25, Vol. I, pp. 245-46.
- " Several merchants and others concerned in the province of New York have written to the lords of trade expressing their uneasiness regarding the changes Bellomont has made in the government, pretending that the preference he has shown to those of the Leisler party has given them "great reason to apprehend lest that party prevailing in the elections of the next Assembly, should aim at reparations for damages suffered in the time of the disorders . . . upon occasion of the late happy Revolution, to the great hazard of their effects and estates." The lords of trade so inform Bellomont; and advise him that no act of assembly be passed by his consent "whereby any retrospect be had to the quarrells or differences between any parties during the aforementioned disorders or for the reparation of damages then suffered on either side, without his Majestys express pleasure first had therein."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 474. For Bellomont's answer, see May 15.
- 21 The ship "Hester" with cargo having attempted to escape customs by landing goods at Perth Amboy is condemned by the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (MS.), Feb. 21, 1698. See April 3, 1685.
- 27 The common council appoints a committee to determine, in connection with the corporation's ferry property at Nassau Island, the necessary materials for repairing the barn, and to arrange for workmen to execute such repairs; also to make an estimate of the cost of building the ferry-house (see Feb. 2).—M. C. C., II: 73. On March 31, another committee was appointed to manage the building of the house (ibid., II: 75), and it was reported, April 22, that Peter Willems Rooome had agreed to build it according to detailed specifications, which were entered under that date in the Minutes.—ibid., II: 76. The house and pound are seen in the right foreground of the Burgis View (Pl. 25, Vol. I). Rooome received his final payment as builder on Jan. 16, 1700, the total for materials and labour being £435.—ibid., II: 97.
- Mar. The governor's council orders that a new custom-house barge be built.—Cal. Coun. Min., 137. See Oct. 15, 1700.
- 16 Bellomont states at a council meeting: "You need not be told to what a degree faction and sedition have taken root in this Town; 'tis a thing so generally known."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 119.
- 22 Thomas Story holds a Quaker meeting at New York. On the 24th, he and his companions "went thence by Water, accompanied by our Friend Dr John Rodman, and some others; and, that Night, lodged with our Friend Thomas Stevenson, on Long-Island."—Jour. of the Life of Thomas Story, 177.
- 31 The common council appoints a committee "to View and<sup>s</sup> Examine the Condition of y<sup>e</sup> Markett house by the bridge and what will be proper to be Added or Rebuilt there, & Upon what Terms they Can have A good house on that Ground whereon it Stands and for what time it will be Convenient to demise the same and make Re-
- porte thereof with all Convenient Expedition."—M. C. C., II: 75. This house had been leased on March 15, 1694 (q. v.), for the term of five years to John Ellison. On Aug. 18, 1699 (q. v.), a committee was appointed "to Draw up Articles of Agreement between the City & John Ellison for the building A house of Brick and stone in the Room & on the Grounds the Old Markett house Stands on for which the Said Ellison is to pay twelve pounds  $\frac{2}{3}$  Annum and to have A Lease for y<sup>e</sup> Same for the Terme of twenty One Years."—ibid., II: 83. On Sept. 6, the committee reported, and the common council made the additional provision, "that the house Shall be two Storys High And that the Mayor Execute A Lease Accordingly" (ibid., II: 84); but, on the same day, inhabitants of the South and Dock Wards "Enter A Caveat Ag<sup>s</sup> the passing of A Lease to John Ellison for the Markett house at y<sup>e</sup> Custom house bridge Untill Such time they are heard."—ibid., II: 85-86. Nevertheless, on Sept. 29, the common council ordered "that the Mayor Execute A Lease to John Ellison for the Markett house by the bridge According to the Reporte of the Committee Appointed to Agree with him on y<sup>e</sup> Terms for farming the same And that the Inhabitants of the south Ward haue Liberty to Erect Any publick building at their Own proper Charge On the Grouod Adjacent thereunto On the south side thereof for the Publick Accomodation And Ornament of the City."—ibid., II: 90. Later, Ellison relinquished his agreement with the city. See Oct. 16.
- " The common council appoints a committee to employ "A Scavenger for the Cleaning of the Streets;" and orders "that the Cryer doe Give Notice to the Inhabitants Every Saturday Morning to Clean y<sup>e</sup> Streets and Sweep y<sup>e</sup> Dirte on heaps before their Respective dwelling houses." The laws for cleaning the streets are to be enforced by the sheriff, constables, and other officers.—M. C. C., II: 74-75. In November the order was renewed. The mayor was to "Agree with some person or persons to be the publick Scavengers of this City in order that the Streets y<sup>e</sup> same be weekly Cleaned And the filth and Soyle thereof be Carried Away for the publick Conveniency & Benefit of the Inhabitants."—ibid., II: 95. See May 6, 1695; June 1, 1711.
- " The Governor and Council think it proper to put the house of Representatives in mind, that it will be much for the Credit and Service of the province, that there be a handsome well contrived Town-house, wherein the Governor, Council and Assembly may hold their Sessions, and also their Inferior Courts of Justice; and where the Mayor of New York may keep or hold his courts;" and "that a good [and] Sufficient goal is also much wanted in this City of New York."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 125, 126.
- 17 Bellomont proposes to the lords of trade the building of a store-house at New York for oaval stores. Its cost may be £1,000. This store-house is to furnish "Naval Stores for the King and the Nation of England."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 506.
- 27 Bellomont reports to the lords of trade: "A bill to enforce the building of publick workhouses (which is another instruction from his Majesty) to employ the poor and also vagabonds I offered to the Assembly, but they smiled at it, because indeed there is no such thing as a beggar in this town or country; and I believe there is not a richer populace any where in the King's dominions than is in this Town."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 511.
- May Bellomont, in a report to the lords of trade, refers to "repairing this fort at New York, which will cost at least £1,000 more." He adds: "This wonderful to me how Coloned Fletcher could pretend to apply the greatest part of the 60*l*. p<sup>er</sup> Cent to the repairs of this Fort and the Governor's house, when I found everything out of repair when I superseded him. The palisades of this Fort are quite decayed and a third part of them destroyed and wanting; one of the bastions crack'd through, which will fall if not speedily rebuilt; the parapet gone to decay and must be renewed; the palisades 'tis computed will cost 600*l*., at least to be well done, and the bastion 200*l*. and the parapet 200*l*.. The roof of the house too is out of repair, so that it rains in, and the lowest floor is decayed and rotten, so that I believe the repair of the House will cost near 200*l*. more. . . . the old part of the house is a comfortable convenient dwelling enough, and might have contented a Governour of much better quality than Col. Fletcher; and the new building will cost first and last about £5000. New York money, so that 'tis plain here is so much money consecrated to his vanity."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 513. See May 20, 1687.
- Bellomont asks the lords of trade to "send over a good Judge or two and a smart active Atturmy Geoeall" to break extravagant 1699 grants made by Fletcher. He needs this assistance to meet the May opposition against his purpose.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 514.

3 In a letter to the lords of trade, Bellomont gives the following reasons for discontinuing Col. Fletcher's officers and appointing new ones: "The country was very uneasy under the authority of Fletcher's officers, and I was mightily importun'd to change the officers. As an instance of the people's aversion to their late officers on the 4th of last November I had the City regiment drawn out among other respects to the King's birthday; the regiment consisted that day but of 200 men besides officers, and on the 13th of last February the anniversary of the King's being proclaimed King, I had the regiment drawn out under the new Officers and they were then 500 men. I also had 'em out on the 11th of Aprill the day of his Majesty's Coronation. The Officers I treat at my own charge, but the Soldiers at the King's. I do not find Colonel Fletcher left me a president [precedent] for this but I think it a usefull piece of ceremony because it helps to affect the people to the King, and puts 'em in mind of their duty to him; for before they had no idea of any thing greater on earth then Colonel Fletcher, and he seemed to be of that mind himself."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 515.

6 Gov. Bellomont "produced his Instructions from the Lords Justices of England Dated the tenth day of November, 1698, whereby he is directed to use all legal means for the Breaking of Extravagant Grants of Land" (made by Gov. Fletcher). In response to the governor's wishes, the council joins in ordering that the attorney-general draw a bill for this purpose. Such bill is to contain a clause "to prevent the Governor or Commander in Chief of this province for the time being from Alienating Nutten Island, the Kings fiarm, the Kings Garden, and the swamp at fresh Water as being the Demesne belonging to the Kings Governor for the time being."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 137. Such bill, having passed the house of representatives, was confirmed by the council on May 13 (Ibid., I: 141; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 51c); and signed May 16 (q.v.). Thereafter, Nutten Island was known as Governors Island.—Smith, Hist. of the Province of N. Y. (1756); Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 497.

8 It is ordered by the governor and council that all persons importing or exporting goods into or out of the province shall use the "Slip at the mouth of Maiden Lane in Queens Street," this being "the most Convenient place at that end of the said City." They are to ship goods at this slip "in like manner as they formerly have done at the Custom house wharf." It is ordered that "a patent issue for the same."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 138.

13 Bellomont again treats the lords of trade to send over "a good Judge or two to sit in Council, and a good Attorney General to advise me in behalf of the King." He desires them to be present at the session of the assembly on Sept. 20. He states: "There is not a day that I do not find the want of an honest able lawyer." He points out where smuggling by way of Nassau Island is carried on, one place of landing goods being Oyster Bay; and explains the refusal of men to serve as inspectors and collectors there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 516-17. He repeated his plea in a letter from Boston on July 22: "The people there [e.g., New York] are so impudent in abetting and sheltering pirates and their goods, that without such assistance as I have now proposed, I can never expect to check that vile practice of theirs."—Ibid., IV: 532.

15 In a report to the lords of trade, before he goes to Boston (on May 16), Bellomont writes, among other things, that "the English here are soe profligate" he "can not find a man fit to be trusted, that's capable of business." He refers to the new clerk of the council and the clerk of the assembly, the latter, named Ludlow, having been convicted "of clipping and coming in this towne." Those "that are honest of the Dutch . . . are very ignorant, and can neither speak nor write proper English."

"I am in hopes the severall reports we have here of Captain Kidd's being forced by his men against his will to plunder two Moorish ships may prove true, and 'tis said that neare one hundred of his men revolted from him at Madagascar and were about to kill him, because he absolutely refused to turne pirate."

He sends to the lords of trade a copy of the Duke of York's letter to Gov. Dongan, to confirm them "in the maintenance of the Port of New Yorke against the pretensions of the Proprietors of East Jersey," by showing that the duke "was tender of the privileges of New Yorke to that respect," and rejected the pretensions of those who wanted "to have freedome of port at Perth Amboy."

"I am glad," he says, "the map of the Province which I sent your Lordships pleases you. But as for a more correct book of the laws which you order me to send, 'tis not to be had. I sent for the printer and spoke to him about it, and he told me there was no remedy for it because he had nobody to correct the presse at the time he printed them." (In this connection see May 1, 1702.)

He complains: "I think we have been barbarously used by the Pay Office. I am forced to lend £20 a piece to the Lieutenants and Chaplain out of my salary, or they must downright starve, and at the same time I am put to borrow money for my own use and am above four hundred pounds in debt in this town, my salary being so mean and insufficient and the perquisites so very inconsiderable."

Replying to the letter of Feb. 2 (q.v.) from the lords of trade, regarding the allegation that he was giving too much favour to the Leisler party, Bellomont says, among other things: "I would be glad to know wherein I favour them beyond the rules of justice. I suffered them indeed to take up the bodies of Captain Leisler & Mr Milburn and give them Christian burial, and I do not repent my doing so since no manner of ill consequence ensued, and if it were in my power I would restore them to life again, for I am most confident and dare undertake to prove it that the execution of those men was as vile and cruell and arbitrary a proceeding as ever was done upon the lives of men in any age under an English government and it will be proved undeniably that Fletcher hath declared the same dislike and abhorrence of that proceeding that I now doe, notwithstanding his doubtless in publishing a book to applaud the justice of it and skreen his sycophant Councillors Nicholls, Bayard, Brooks and the rest of the bloodhounds. . . . Mr Bayard has sent over hither the copy of a petition of some few merchants of London complaining of me for favouring the Leisler party. I have not been able to get a sight of it; but some that have read it tell me it is very spitefull, and that it much applauds the justice of all the proceedings against Leisler and Milburn; which I can not but think an insolence of a high nature in those merchants when the Act of Parliament, that reverses the Attainder of those men, does plainly condemn and explode that whole proceeding against them." He then reviews his relations with the Leisler faction since his arrival in New York. "I have made all the court that a man could do that [has] the soule of a gentleman, to those angry merchants. I have invited them to my table and treated them with all the kindness I was capable of and encouraged their coming often to dine with me, but they would never come near me of their owne accord. I can not imagine the meaning of it unless my drinking King William's health (which is a custome with me always after dinner) frightened them." He relates incidents showing that the factional opposition to the Leisler party (called "Disaffected persons") is still active; that bribery with large sums is attempted both in the council at New York and through Bayard, the New York provincial agent at Whitehall.

Bellomont calls attention to the fact "that their Majesties King William [and] Queen Mary were never yet proclaimed King and Queen in this Province by the Civill Magistrate." He explains that "Captain Leisler was the only man that proclaimed their Majesties; he was in possession of the Fort when the Proclamation came hither from the Secretary of State & he immediately ordered it to be read at the Fort with all solemnity [see June 22, 1689] and then carryed it to a person who was of his Majesty's Council at my coming and still is so, who was then Mayor of this City [Stephen van Cortlandt], and desired him to publish it; but he refused . . . Bayard too, I am told, indeavoured to hinder their Majesties being proclaimed at Albany, in opposition to Captain Leisler's order to the Mayor of that town to do it.

"Some friends write me word from England that Colonel Fletcher and his partisans report me to be the most arbitrary Governour that ever was known . . . I challenge all the people of New Yorke to shew where I have punished or personally ill treated any man, notwithstanding I have been libelled and reflected on at their clubs and other publick meetings. But I thought their abuses fitter to be laughed at then otherwise resented. . . . [Chidley] Brooks writes [from England] to his friends here very confidently that I shall not be long lived in this government, and he uses this expression,—That if villany and falshood do not prevaille, they shall be rid of their Tyrant very soon. My honest endeavours to serve the King are ill rewarded and treated if I must be the marke for such upstarts as Brooks is led fly their insolence and scurrillity at me, a fellow that was bred up in my Uncles family as his dogs were, with licking the dishes and eating the scrapps from his table; and what advancement he has had in the world is owing to my father and my selfe." He accuses Brooks of corruption in his office of collector of customs.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 518-26.

The "House of Representatives" (general assembly) of the province, of which Abraham Gouverneur is speaker, addresses an eloquent petition and remonstrance to Bellomont, reciting the main facts concerning the Leisler rebellion; representing the weak character of Slaughter, the hot-headed conduct of Ingoldesby, and the corruption of Fletcher; expressing praise for the crown and constitution of England, particularly for King William and parliament, and asking Bellomont to intercede for the benefit of the families of Leisler and Milbourn, in applying for reimbursement from the king for money expended by them from their own estates for the public benefit when they had charge of the government at New York.

They ask also "That for y<sup>e</sup> better Administrac<sup>o</sup>n of Justice five able Judges be sent from England (& two or three able Council, who have acquired to that noble profession by study, & not by Usurpation)." They further ask "That Coll. Fletcher's Coat of Arms may be pulled down from y<sup>e</sup> Kings Chappell in y<sup>e</sup> Fort, & Trinity Church in this City; that since he left on monument of Virtue & a Just Administration, those of his Nautious [Naustous] & Insupportable Pride & Vanity may not remain to Posterity; especially since his birth was so mean & obscure as that he was not entitled to bear a Coat of Arms."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 269; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 412-16.

This petition is followed by a deposition of Gouverneur's, dated Aug. 21, that Leisler kept his accounts in a certain book, which he left in the fort with other books and papers when he delivered the fort to Col. Slaughter; but that the book has not been found or heard of since then.—Ibid., 416-17.

Jacob Leisler, 2d, makes his petition, individually, direct to the king, for the reimbursement.—Ibid., 418-19. On Feb. 6, 1700, the Earl of Jersey wrote to Bellomont from Whitehall that the king directed that this petition be transmitted to the assembly by Bellomont with a recommendation that the relief be granted.—Ibid., 419. In 1701, the assembly passed an act "for paying the debts of the government made in y<sup>e</sup> time of y<sup>e</sup> late happy revolution" and Leisler (Jr.) petitioned Naafan to assent to it.—Ibid., 421-22. As late as 1714, however, this account had not been settled.—Ibid., 422-23.

The governor and council publish an ordinance, "For the Establishing Courts of Judicature. For the Ease and Benefit of each respective City, Town and County within this Province of New York."—From one of these printed ordinances bound with a copy of Bradford's Lewis (1710), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. In 1804, an ordinance was published for "further establishing the Supreme Court." A copy of this also is bound with the above.

Gov. Bellomont gives instructions to Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan, to be observed during Bellomont's absence from the province. These relate to the discouragement of unlawful trade, pirates, payments out of the public revenue, etc. Among other things he says: "You are not yourselfe nor any body else whatsoever to lodge in the New Apartments in the King's house within the Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 557-58. See May 19.

Gov. Bellomont signs the bill "for vacating breaking and annulling several Extravagant Grants of Land made by Coll. Fletcher."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 143; Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 79; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 510; also see May 6. Extravagant grants on Manhattan Island are mentioned as follows: The grant to John Evans of land containing the Fresh Water Pond (which is described); the grant of the King's Farm to Trinity Church; the grant to Caleb Heathcote of land in the King's garden "lying without the Stockadoes of the City of New York; near adjoining to the Locust Trees;" and a grant to Heathcote of another piece of the King's Garden, "which lies vacant and unimproved; being bounded by the Stockadoes or Fence of the said Garden, so far as the said Garden in the Rear does extend, and from the said Fence of Stockadoes, so far into Hudson's-River as Low-Water Mark." The law enacts that the record of these grants in the secretary's office be "obliterated, razed, defaced, and the Memory or Record of all and every of the aforesaid Grants" be "reduced into Oblivion and Forgetfulness, as if no such Grants had ever been made, or registered in the said office . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 79. This act was repealed by Chap. 126 on Nov. 27, 1702 (see Col. Laws N. Y., I: 523); but was reaffirmed by Queen Anne, June 26, 1708 (q. v.). For a history of this act, see a manuscript in the Moore Collection, in the N. Y. Pub. Library. On account of the "tumult & Deceit" during the recent election of representatives, the general assembly passes a bill to regulate elections, requiring, among other things, that each elector shall have property, improved and unincumbered, to the value of £40.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 405.

A bill is passed by the provincial legislature to enable the city to pay its debts, erect a new city hall, rebuild the ferry-house, build other necessary public buildings, and defray contingent expenses. It provides for the appointing of overseers of public works and buildings, and for raising money by taxation.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 425-27.

The provincial legislature passes a bill allowing £1,500 to Bellomont and £500 to Nanfan, as an expression of their appreciation of Bellomont's "Extraordinary Diligence" in suppressing piracy and unlawful trade, and as acknowledgment to the king for sending him as governor. The quota to be paid by the city and county of New York is £571.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 396.

Another act is passed by the general assembly for restraining and punishing privateers and pirates.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 389.

A bill is passed for continuing two years longer the "Act for the encouraging a Post-Office."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 136, 143; Assemb. Jour., I: 100.

The act of the legislature of Sept. 30, 1691 (q. v.), entitled "An Act for ye regulating Damages done in ye time of ye late disorders," is repealed (Col. Laws N. Y., I: 386), and the legislature now passes "A Bill for preventing vexatious Suits," etc.—Ibid., I: 393. They also pass a bill for settling the estate of Jacob Milbourn, who was executed with Leisler, and whose attainder was reversed by parliament.—Ibid., I: 395.

Gov. Bellomont is absent on his way to Boston.—Col. Coun. Min., 140. He arrived in Boston on May 26.—See July 24, 1700. Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan is now acting-governor.—See May 15.

The wardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church write to Archbishop Tension, giving credit to Fletcher for establishing Trinity Church, and to Mr. Vesey for largely aiding its growth. They express the fear that Bellomont's opposition to Fletcher aims at the destruction of "this fair beginning," and give their grounds for this belief. They ask that the archbishop take measures for the church's good.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 527-28. The Bishop of London wrote letters of reconciliation, asking Mr. Vesey to submit himself to Bellomont, and asking Bellomont to accept Vesey's submission. Bellomont promised to be Vesey's friend, "provided he demean himself peaceably and discreetly for the future."—Ibid., IV: 766.

The common council resolves "that for the better Carrying On of the building of the New City Hall (see May 12, 1696) that the Materials of the Old City Hall be Exposed to sayle And that the Ground belonging to the same be Lett to farme for the terme of Ninety Nine Years." A committee is appointed "to Manage the farming the same Upon the most Advantagious Terms . . . & that y<sup>e</sup> Clerke do put up publick placades thereof."—M. C. C., II: 78. This committee reported on Aug. 9 (q. v.).

John Rodman, William Huddleton, and John Hutchins petition the common council for a strip of land "lying on y<sup>e</sup> North River fronting their respective purchases between them & Low water Marke."—M. C. C., II: 78. Such a grant is made to Rodman.—Ibid., II: 134, 139. It is the beginning of the grants of water lots on the Hudson River.—See grant to Peter Messer in 1701.—Ibid., II: 93, 127, 134, 138. See also July 23, 1723.

Bellomont entices Capt. Kidd to Boston.—See A, Jan. 24.

Thomas Story, an English Quaker missionary, who travelled through the colonies from the end of 1698 until the beginning of 1709, writes in his journal: "Samuel Jenings and I lodged with Robert Field, and Roger Gill and John Rodman returned to New-York; where, next Day, we had a Meeting, and each of us a good Opportunity therein among the People; who seemed to have good Understandings generally as Men; and Friends were well satisfied, there being pretty many from the Island.

"And, after the Meeting, at my Request, we had another appointed at the House of ome Thomas Roberts, a convinced Man in the Heart of the City. The Room was large, and all about the Doors and Windows were full of People. I had a great weight and Exercise upon my Mind, out Roger Gill stepped in between, and took up most of the reasonable Time, till my Spirit almost sunk under the Load; and while it was working up the second Time after he sat down, Samuel Jenings stood up and took the rest; and then

- 1699 I totally fell under it, and was greatly oppressed in Spirit, though Aug.
 5 I bore it undiscerned, I suppose unto any one."—Jour. of the Life of 17
Thomas Story, 222.
- 6 Capt. Kidd is seized at Boston.—See Feb. 10, 1700. For a detailed account of the circumstances leading to his return to America and capture, and his exploits in eastern waters, see The real Capt. Kidd, by Sir Cornelius Neale Dalton (N. Y., 1911); and Addenda, July 6, 7, and 26.
- 20 The governor's council at New York takes up consideration of the subject of Capt. Kidd's goods, which, it is believed, were taken off by Carsten Luersen and Hendrick van der Heul near Gardner's Island. On July 31, Dorothy Lee, the housekeeper of Mrs. Kidd, was examined; and John Tutbill, justice of the peace of Suffolk, who was accused of having concealed Kidd's treasure, was ordered to appear before the council. On Aug. 9, orders were issued to arrest members of Kidd's crew; and goods seized were ordered stored in the custom-house.—Cal. Coun. Min., 141. See Aug. 16, 1699.
- 22 Bellomont writes from Boston: "All the while I was at New York I was perpetually in business from five in the morning till ten at night (except dinner time)." He has been without a competent secretary, and now asks the lords of trade to employ one George Tallet in England, whom he thus describes: "he was Secretary to the Commissioners of Accounts, and they value him as a jewel. He is an excellent mathematician and no man in England a readier accountant. He is a very honest man, very judicious, and of great application in business."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 536.
- Aug. "The lords of the admiralty have ordered a man of war for New York, and another for New England, to serve as guard ships to those colonies, and cruise upon the pyrates, if any happen to come to those coasts."—The Hist. Mag., 2d ser., III: 293, citing the "Diary of Narcissus Luttrell (MS.," in All Souls' College, Oxford.
- 9 The common council orders "that if Any Children Youth or Other persons doe fire Any Gun or Pistoll at Any Marke or Att Random Against any fence poles or within Any Orchard Garden or Other Inclosure or in Any place where persons frequent to walke on the South Side of the fresh water of this City [they] Shall for Every Such offence forfeite the sum of twenty Shillings."—M. C. C., II: 79.
- "The committee of the common council appointed May 25 regarding the city hall reports that they cannot find anyone to "farm" the building on the terms proposed, and they are of the opinion that if "it might be sold for Ever it would Produce A Considerable sum of Money which would be A Great Assistance towards the building the New City Hall." The common council orders that it "be sold for Ever by Publick Outcry," and a committee is appointed "to sell the same On such Conditions as they Shall thinke most Requisite & most Beneficial for the City."—M. C. C., II: 7. See, further, Aug. 17.
- "The common council grants the petition of Elsie Leisler (widow of Capt. Jacob Leisler) for "Land fronting the Petitioners Ground before the trees near the Slip at Burgers path from the water Side to low water marke." A committee is appointed to lay out, with the aid of the surveyors, "and make A Draft of what Grund is desired to be Granted to the Petitioner to Range with the Other wharfs," and also to determine what compensation she shall make.—M. C. C., II: 80. On Sept. 6, this committee, "Appointed to Agree with M<sup>r</sup>s Leisler for the Ground between Burgers path [later called Old Slip] & Running up Queen Street [Pearl St.] &c.," reported that "in Consideration of the two Streets Allowed to the City out of y<sup>e</sup> Land of the said Widow Leisler that she haue A Grant from High water to low water Marke fronting her Patent," except what lies before the houses of Lenoard Huygen and Jacob Telter. It is ordered "that the Mayor Execute A Grant Accordingly."—Ibid., II: 85.
- 16 The companions of Capt. Kidd offer to turn informers if assured of their own safety; but, on Aug. 23, a letter received from Sec. Vernon directed the governor and council to seize both Kidd and his crew.—Cal. Coun. Min., 142. News had reached England that Kidd "was lately at Nassau Island, near New York, and sent for Mr. Lillington [Livingston], one of the council there, to come on board; accordingly he went to him, and he proffered 30,000*l.* to give the owners who first fitted out the Adventure galley, and 20,000*l.* for his pardon; but it presumed the same will not be accepted." Also, the same authority in England stated: "There are letters which say, the famous pyrate captain Kidd has surrendered himself to the lord Bellomont."—Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag. (1868), 2d ser., III: 293. See, further, Sept. 7.
- The slip fronting the city hall (see May 11, 1696) "Shall Remaine Continue & Abide for Ever A Publick Slip for y<sup>e</sup> Publick use & Benefit of the City."—M. C. C., II: 81. This was a part of the agreement when the first city hall (see Pl. 20, Vol. 1) was sold.—See Aug. 17.
- "The committee of the common council (see Aug. 9) meets to sell the old hall, "with all and singular y<sup>e</sup> Appurtenances belonging there unto (the Bell Kings Armes & Iron works belonging to the prison Excepted)." It was "Exposed to Sayle by Publick Outcry or Vendue to the highest bidder." Among the conditions of sale were the following: "That the Cage Fillory and Stocks Standing before y<sup>e</sup> Same be Removed within the Space of twelve Months Next Ensueing & y<sup>e</sup> the Slip fronting the said City Hall Shall Remaine Continue & Abide for Ever A Publick Slip for y<sup>e</sup> Publick use & Benefit of the City;" and that "the City have the Liberty and Benefit of the Goale within the said City Hall for y<sup>e</sup> Space of One Month Next Ensueing." The hall is purchased by John Rodman, in fee simple, "with the Ground & all the Appurtenances thereunto belonging According to the Draft thereof;" for 1920.—Ibid., II: 81-82; City Grants, Liber A, 254. Although the Minutes show the sale took place on Aug. 17, Ledger No. 1 of the chamberlain's office (pub. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1909, p. 104) shows credit to Rodman for payment of the purchase price on Aug. 9.
- The old (first) city hall was situated at the present 71-73 Pearl St. (N. W. corner of Coenties Alley). The building was demolished in 1700.—Liber City Grants, A: 254; 387 (comptroller's office). For the date of the original building (the City Tavern), see 1642; and for its occupation as a city hall, see Feb. 6, 1653.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973.
- "Mary D: Lanoy" petitions the common council to be paid 18 £170 which her husband (deceased) expended for the use of the city while he was mayor.—M. C. C., II: 83. The original petition is in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. See also Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 30-31.
- "In a petition of the common council to Naofan, the lieutenant-governour, regarding the appropriation of stone to build the new city hall on Wall St. (see May 12, 1696), it is stated "That the former line of fortifications that did Raage Along the Wall Street from the East to the North River together with the Bastians that were thereon Erected are fallen to decay and the Incroachment of Buildings which have been made Adjacent thereto will Render y<sup>e</sup> Same Useless for y<sup>e</sup> time to Come."—M. C. C., I: 82.
- "The common council orders "that the Coll of the Militia Regiment of this City or Any Other persons Authorized by him doe hire some Convenient Room or Storehouse for y<sup>e</sup> securing the Carriages of the Great Guns belonging to this City & that the great Guns be forthwith dismounted in Order for the preserving the same."—M. C. C., II: 83.
- "In a private letter from Boston to Abraham de Peyster, Bellomont expresses willingness to send a pipe of wine to England. "My Cousin, Nanfan, has the key to the Cellar where the pipe of wine is; it was left by John, my butler, with Robert [Robert] the Coachman's Wife." He asks "whether the battery which Coll. Fletcher sold, or granted away to Ebenezer Wilson, be entirely built on in N. York, and whose land it was he made batteries on in the war time." He adds: "Mr. Leisler I believe was one, and I think a quaker another—George Heathcote is the Quaker's name, as I thinke. New York is an unhappy place, that there is not better choice of men to serve the King and their country."—De Peyster, Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellomont (1879), Appendix, vii. The original letter is preserved with the De Peyster Papers, 1695-1710 (red half morocco), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. The reference to his coachman implies that Bellomont kept a coach, and helps to confirm the opinion "that all the Governors [since Colve] were thus provided."—Coaches of Colonial N. Y. (1890), 9.
- 24 Bellomont writes to the lords of trade: "Piracy does and will prevail in the Province of New Yorke in spite of all my endeavours unless three things be done out of hand, vizt good Judges and an honest and able Attorney General from England, a man of War commanded by an honest stout Captain, and pay and recruits for the four companies. Captain Giles Shelly who came lately from Madagascar with 50 or 60 Pirates has so flushed them at New Yorke with Arabian Gold and East India goods, that they set the government at defiance."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 550-51.
- "Bellomont informs the lords of trade "that the King had but one

- 1699 piece of ground in the City of New York, whereon there was a Aug. Battery of Cannon and a strong Blockhouse which defended both 24 the Town and River on the East Side, and that ground Colonel Fletcher granted away to the late Knavish Sheriff of New York Ebenezer Wilson, and that in the very heat of the War. And Willson sold it for £550 to persons that have since built on it, and 'tis said Fletcher had the greatest part of the money. . . . As that Battery and Blockhouse have been described to me, they were a better security to that Town than the Fort is; for the Cannon lay level with the water and pointed horizontally, whereas all the guns in the Fort lay about forty foot above high water mark, and so are capable of little execution."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 555.
- 25 "The Lieutenant Governor in Council producing two several depositions against Cornelius Quick of this City Mariner setting forth that he had been on board Captain Kidd's sloop and had loaden and taken from thence into his own sloop severall Bales of Goods and merchandise with Several Baggis of money and that he putt the same on shore on the Island Nassau. It is therefore ordered that the said Cornelius Quick be committed to the custody of the high sherife of the city of New York for his offense aforesaid."—Council Minutes (MS.), VIII: 130 (Albany). See further Sept. 11.
- Sept. In a letter of this date, written by Gov. Bellomont to Col.
4 Abraham de Peyster, he says: "I writ to my Cousin Nanfan last post To Let the City of N. york have y<sup>e</sup> Stones of the old bastions or batteries To build their Town-house."—Manuscript letter with De Peyster Papers, preserved in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For the beginning of the city hall, see May 12, 1696; and for the superstructure, see Oct. 16, 1699. Regarding the bastions, see Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 944.
- 6 William Beekman applies to the common council for the grant of a piece of ground "between y<sup>e</sup> land of Stuyvesants Bowry and Kipsbury" (Kip's Bay)—M. C. C., II: 84.
- "The common council orders that the mayor issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay Matthew Clarkson £2:8 "for two Books of Records One for A Tax Booke & the Other for y<sup>e</sup> Mayors Courte."
—M. C. C., II: 84. See April 1, 1695.
- "The mayor reports to the common council "that he has Agreed with Mr Teunis DeKey for to fill up King Street [Pine St.] for y<sup>e</sup> Sum of Sixty pounds & A Silver Cup Not Exceeding five pounds."—
M. C. C., II: 84.
- "It is ordered "that the Mayor doe take Effectual Care forth with to haue the Streets of this City Cleaned & Paved & put into Good Order."—M. C. C., II: 84.
- "The common council appoints a committee "to take Such proper Methods for y<sup>e</sup> Removing the Incumbrance of the Ground belonging to the Citty Hall for which Clause Burger has A Grant."
—M. C. C., II: 84.
- "The common council orders that "What Money Shall be disbursed by Mr John Euwarte for y<sup>e</sup> Necessary Repair of y<sup>e</sup> Barne and hridge at y<sup>e</sup> Ferry be Allowed to him On Acc<sup>t</sup> & that A Well be made and the Ground belonging to the Citty be Inclosed within fence."—M. C. C., II: 84.
- "The common council orders "that the Mayor Agree with Some person for the Keeping of An Hospital for the Maintenance of the poor of this City Upon y<sup>e</sup> most Easy Terms "that may be and also that he hire A House Suitable for that Occasion."—M. C. C., II: 85.
- "After securing the landing-place granted by the legislature on May 8, the inhabitants of Queen Street obtain from the common council permission to build a market-house at Countess Key, at their own expense, "for the Conveniency and Ornament of the City."—M. C. C., II: 84. It was not built, however, until nearly seven years later; for, on June 29, 1706 (q. v.), pursuant to this permit of 1699 (as explained in the Minutes), the common council ordered "that such Market house as the said Inhabitants Shall Erect and build at their Own Charge betwixt the houses of Cap<sup>t</sup>. John D: Peyster and Bernardus Smith at the North End of the Slip in Countess Key Aforesaid [later known as the Fly Market slip—see Landmark List, III: 958] be Appropriated and Continued A publick Market and Markett house in this City for Ever."—Ibid., II: 302-3. It was first called the "Market-House at Countess Key;"
but in the Bradford Map of 1730 (Pl. 27, Vol. I), it is called "Fly Market." It stood near the present intersection of Maiden Lane and Pearl St., in the section of the city known as Smith's Fly (or Vlie).
After being enlarged, then torn down in 1796, and rebuilt in 1797, it was finally demolished in 1822.—De Voe, Market Book, 125-241.
- 7 An order is issued, on the petition of the mayor, for the demoli-
- tion of two bastions of the old wall.—Cal. Coun. Min., 142. See Sept.
May 12, 1696, regarding the building of the city hall; also, Aug. 7 18, 1699.
- The news reaches England that, after examination, Capt. Kidd was committed to prison, "and commissioners appointed by his lordship [Bellomont] to inspect the effects he had on board, to the end there might be a true inventory taken thereof; and his lordship sent to the said commissioners the present of jewels which Kidd had caused to be given to his lady, esteemed at 10,000*l*, an account of which his lordship has dispatcht hither to the commissioners of trade, and to know how he [Kidd] shal be disposed of." Soon after, in September, "His majesties ship the Rochester, captain Ellis commander," sailed to New York, "to bring over captain Kidd the pyrate and his crew," to be tried in England.—"Diary of Narcissus Luttrell," in Hist. Mag. (1868), 2d ser., III: 293. See, further, Nov. 2.
- Bellomont informs the lords of the treasury: "The Collector of N. Yorke writes to me that this proves the worst year that ever was known for the Customes . . . The Acts of Assembly w<sup>ch</sup> grant a Revenue to the King are so lame and weakly penn'd y<sup>t</sup> y<sup>e</sup> merchants & others elude them upon all occasions & the Revenue Lessees do that means; and a good many seizures of ships and goods are for the most part lost, by the want of honest Judges and Councill for the King, there is not such a parcel of vile Knaves and Jacobites as those that practice the Law in the province of New York, not one of them a Barrister but so far from that, that one of 'em was a dancing master, another a Glover by trade, a third (and he Coll fletchers Bosome friend favourite & Land Jobber) Condemned to be hang'd in Scotland for Blasphemy and burning the Bible, the rest as bad as those I have describ'd: all Ignorant and usurers of that hon<sup>ble</sup> profession; their only skill Consisting in Chicane, and stirring up the people to litigate the titles of Estates with one another and debauching them from their duty and affection to his Maj<sup>ty</sup> there is not a man in the province professing the Law that I have not proofs of their being Jacobites, and sinister practices, a softer word my Lord Bacon uses for knavish Lawyers. I should not be thus particular in my Character of the Lawyers of N. York, but in order to prevail wth your Ld<sup>ships</sup> to promote wth the rest of the ministers (for I have represent'd this mischief to 'em all) an effectual cure, an honest understanding Lawyer (well vers'd in Exchequer practice Especially) would deserve a 1000 l a Year to be made Cheife Justice of that province, and another good Lawyer to be Attorney General there, would deserve 300 l a year salary, the assembly of N. York are so sensible what a pest the present Lawyers are to the province, that this last session they delivered me a petition, and Remonstrance, wherein among other grievances, they Complain of the Lawyers as one grievance, and desire that the Administra<sup>o</sup>n of the publique Justice of the province may be put into better hands and they will be at the Charge of it."—From transcript in Library of Congress, box 63, of the original letter which is with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A, 272, fo. 63b) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.
- The governor's council orders that Thomas Clarke be arrested 11 for his connection with Capt. Kidd.—Cal. Coun. Min., 143.
On Oct. 18, he denied having received goods from Capt. Kidd's sloop, but admitted that Cornelius Quick delivered to him, such goods from Mrs. Kidd.—Ibid., 144. On Feb. 28, he swore that everything on board Kidd's sloop had been delivered to the governor with an inventory.—Ibid., 164.
- John Champante, of London, is commissioned by Bellomont to 18 be agent for the province of New York at the court at Whitehall and elsewhere.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 587.
- The common council grants a petition of the inhabitants of 20 Harlem that they "may Annually Choose three persons of the said Town to have the Determination of all petty Trespasses Under y<sup>e</sup> Value of fourty Shillings According to former Custom." Their complaint is that "Coming to New Yorke Upon Every frivolous Occasion is A Grievous Prejudice to them." The election shall be on September 29 (the feast-day of St. Michael the Archangel), and the successful candidates shall come to New York on October 14 to be sworn in by the mayor.—M. C. C., II: 86-87. The original of this petition is filed in the city clerk's record-room. The document states that the inhabitants of Harlem "are Chiefly Adicted to y<sup>e</sup> Improvement of Husbandry and had by their Patent Granted to them the Privilege of holding A Base Courte for y<sup>e</sup> Determining of Petit Prossasses [small law cases] which might Arise Among them

1699 which Privilege is likewise Confirmed by their Charter and was continued in Practice until of late Interrupted by y<sup>e</sup> Revolution. The manner of Determining of those Differences was by three persons Chose by the Major parte of the Inhabitants of the Town once in Every Year which if Approved by y<sup>e</sup> Mayor and Aldermen of y<sup>e</sup> City were then Sworne to Execute their Office for one Year duly and faithfully, and y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants fioding for want of Such Officers they are Much Injured and prejudiced in their time and Affairs to Come to New Yorke for Every Little Difference that is to be Decided the loss of their time being more then y<sup>e</sup> Damage Done." They therefore petition that they "may Annually Chose such officers to be approved by the Mayor and Aldermen for the Determination of all petit Prossesses under the value of fourty shillings and for y<sup>e</sup> Calling of their Town Meetings as formerly Accustomed."

They also ask in this petition for a grant of "the River between Kings bridge and Hudsons River with Liberty to erect A Mill or Mills therefor for y<sup>e</sup> Benefit of the Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> said Town of Harlem, & that all other persons be Restrained from erecting Any Mill on y<sup>e</sup> said River." The common council grants the petitions of the inhabitants of Harlem "to Erect one or two Mills at one place" on the river between Kingsbridge and the Hudson River, "Provided that they doe Not hinder the passage of Boats and Sloops Round Manhattans Island."—M. C. C., II: 87. On Jan. 16, 1700, a committee was appointed to investigate the convenience of the location, Jasper Nespeott being the one who intended to build.—Ibid., II: 97. On Feb. 19, the committee reported favourably, "On Condition that he take out of the way the Stones and Rocks On the Other Side thereof that the same may not hinder the Passage of Boats and Canows and when Any is to pass at their Reasonable Request he is to shutt his Sluces & On the Other side of the bridge Erect A post in the water and have A Rope ready to Assist them in passing." Permission was also granted to John Marsh (who claimed to be the original projector of the mill), to build jointly with Nespeott.—Ibid., II: 98-99. In Jan., 1701, Nespeott acquired full title on settling with Marsh (Ibid., II: 113, 127, 134); and the city conveyed the mill to him on Jan. 29, 1701.—See Jan. 25, 1701.

The common council orders "that the Mayor Issue his Warrant to the Treasurer for the paying the Expences which was made at the Laying y<sup>e</sup> foundation of the City Hall."—M. C. C., II: 86. The foundation was completed about this date.—See May 12, 1696.

Richard Willett, Isaac de Forest, John Crooke, John Willemsse, Matthew Clarkson, and Tennis Dekey are appointed by the common council to be overseers of public works and buildings, pursuant to the act of assembly "for y<sup>e</sup> Enabling the City of New Yorke to Defray their publick Charge."—M. C. C., II: 86.

Part of the custom-house is leased to Michael Howdon.—Cal. Coun. Min., 143. Four years before he had leased the cellar.—See Jan. 17, 1695.

Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan in council appoints Capt. David Provost mayor. The new mayor was inducted into office on Oct. 14.—M. C. C., II: 90. For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Con. (1853), 396; Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 54.

Isaac de Riemer, having given "Sufficient Sureties for the due Execution of that Office," is appointed "Chamberlain or Treasurer" of the city. He is to receive "one pound ten Shillings & Cent" (see Oct. 19, 1685) for Receiving and Paying.—M. C. C., II: 89. He held the office for only one year (see Sept. 29, 1700), having been then appointed mayor.—Ibid., II: 117.

The city grants to John Hutchins, John Rodman, and William Huddleston, the water front to their laod along the Hudson River and between the present Cortlandt and Cedar Sts, with the obligation that they shall build a wharf 40 ft. in width and level the banks so as to make the highways accessible.—City Grants, Liber A: 362. This is the beginning of grants of water lots on the North River, and the consequent development of that shore front. See, further, March 29, 1701.

The governour's council takes under consideration the accounts of Capt. Kidd's ship "Adventure," and an inventory is ordered to be made of the seized goods in the custom-house.—Cal. Coun. Min., 144.

A merchants' exchange, or a building having that character, is for the first time proposed for this city. The inhabitants of the South Ward petition the common council for permission to erect

"A Publick Market house for the Ornament and Benefit of y<sup>e</sup> City on the Ground Whereon the Old Market house Stands on in which John Ellison lives, he said John Ellison having Relinquished his Agreement [see March 31] with the City."—M. C. C., II: 92. The original petition, which is not entered in full in the Minutes, reveals its true purport:

"Whereas Sr Edmund Andross Kn<sup>t</sup> late Gov<sup>r</sup> of this Province did order [see Jan. 29, 1677; and description of Castello Plan (Frontispiece), II: 244-46] a Certain building to be erected near the bridge in this City which has Since been called the Market house & Whereas Yo<sup>r</sup> Petition<sup>rs</sup> have been Informed that the same was by this board to be let out for some term of years to one M<sup>r</sup> Ellison on condition to erect a new Building on the same ground & pay as a rent Twelve Pounds a year to the City.

"Yo<sup>r</sup> Petition<sup>rs</sup> therefore humbly Pray that the said Agreement may be quashed and that the same ground may be allowed to yo<sup>r</sup> Petition<sup>rs</sup> for the use of this City, they offering to erect there a Convenient place for the meeting of Merch<sup>ts</sup> on their own Costs & Charges, it being a very Convenient place for the Same being nigh the Custome house & will be of Ornament to the City & also pay Twelve pounds a year to the City they having the benefit of the Stow money of merch<sup>ts</sup> goods allowed them."—From the original undated petition (which has 83 signatures), in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

The common council appoints a committee the same day "to Consult with the Inhabitants of the said South Ward What building they propose to make On the premises And What Yearly Rent they will Pay for the same."—M. C. C., II: 93. This committee reported on Feb. 19, 1700, and the common council ordered "that the said Market house be Granted to the said Ward for the Terme of fifty Years they the said Inhabitants in two Years time Erecting A Publick building According to the Modell Exhibited to this Courte they Yielding the Yearly Rent of twelve pounds & keeping And delivering the same in good Repair at the Expiration of the Said Terme . . ."—Ibid., II: 99. It appears from a memorandum, entered in the Minutes under date of April 13, 1700, that "the Inhabitants of the south Ward or their Assigns have Liberty to Erect A Building On the West Side of y<sup>e</sup> Custom house Bridge between the Street into the Docks," 127 feet in length and 70 feet in width.—Ibid., II: 105. It should be observed that the above petition, as transcribed from the original MS., seeks permission to erect "a Convenient place for the meeting of Merch<sup>ts</sup>;" and that the common council granted permission to erect "A Publick building." This therefore appears to be a proposal to erect a merchants' exchange. But the location is not the same as that of the "Exchange" shown on the Burgis View (1717), and the conclusion is that the specifications proposed in the above petition were never executed. This conclusion is confirmed by the fact that, on June 30, 1701, it was ordered "that the Old market house near the Custom house bridge be for Ever hereafter Appropriated for A publick Market house for the Benefit and Conveniency of all persons that Shall Resorte thereunto in as full and Ample maner as any Other Market house or markett place within this City now is or Lawfully Ought to be."—Ibid., II: 146. The old market-house remained until 1720 (q. v.). For the inauguration of the first merchants' exchange, see March 24, 1670; for the next, see June 10, 1752.
